2. The power of the legislature to determine whether to impose a succession tax or an excise tax upon the right of inheritance, as well as its right to determine upon which heirs or legatees of a decedent such a tax shall be imposed, was held in Re Wilmerding's Estate, 117 Cal. 281, 49 Pac. 181, to be plenary; and any statute enacted for this purpose may be amended equally with any other statute. The legislature has the same power to add other classes to those who are to be exempted from the tax by an amendment to the original act as it would have had to exempt them from the tax in the original statute. The respondent does not controvert the effect of the amendment upon the estates of persons dying subsequent to its enactment, but insists that the provision in the second section of the act extending the exemption to cases arising prior to its enactment, when the tax has not been already paid, is in violation of subdivision 16 of section 25 of article 4 of the constitution of this state, by which the legislature is prohibited from passing local or special laws "releasing or extinguishing in whole or in part the indebtedness, liability or obligation of any corporation or person to this state, or to any municipal corporation therein." The right of the legislature to repeal the entire act cannot be questioned, and upon such repeal without any saving clause there would be no statute authorizing the collection of any portion of the tax then unpaid, and the tax could not be collected.

If the legislature was of the opinion that the tax ought not to have been imposed upon nephews and nieces, it had the same power to repeal that portion of the statute authorizing the collection from them of the tax then imposed as it had to exempt them from the payment of the tax. Such a statute is neither a local nor a special act. It extends to every part of the state, and applies to every person within the class. A classification of the persons thus to be exempted from the collection of the taxes previously imposed is no more a special act than the same classification of those upon whom the tax is to be imposed, or who are to be exempt from its payment; and whether the legislature takes away the power of collecting the tax by direct words to that effect, or by a declaration that the persons in the class shall be exempt from its payment, is immaterial. In Montague v. State, 54 Md. 481, the legislature of Maryland had, by an amendment to the statute, included the "husband" in the exempted classes, and provided that the exemption should apply in all cases where the tax had not been actually paid. In passing upon the question here presented, the court reached the same conclusion as above, saying: "If the legislature is satisfied that a given tax is no longer necessary, that it is unjust, that a change of circumstances requires its repeal, that public policy demands that the repeal should be prompt, should give instant relief, and should therefore extend to all who had not yet actually paid, the legislature has in its discretion the constitutional right so to enact, without being at the same time compelled to embarrass the treasury by a sweeping restitution to all who had paid the tax from the time of its imposition. Under some circumstances such a retrospective exemption might be highly expedient, and under others not. The question is one of policy for the legislature, and not one of law for the courts." It was further objected in that case, as by the respondent here, that the tax claimed from the appellant had become a specific, ascertained debt due from him to the state, and that the act exempting the husband from its payment was void under a provision of the constitution of that state similar to the above subdivision of section 25, forbidding the general assembly from passing local or special laws releasing persons from their debts or obligations to the state; but it was held that this provision of the constitution did not apply to a public general law releasing persons from their debts or obligations to the state, but that the inhibition was directed to "local" or "special" laws, and that the law under consideration was neither local nor special.

3. Of the nephews and nieces who are appellants herein, seven are residents and citizens of other states, and it is contended on their behalf that the provision in the statute, as amended in 1897, which purports to exclude them from the exemption given to resident nephews and nieces, contravenes the provisions of section 2, art. 4, of the constitution of the United States, which declares, "The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states," and is, therefore, invalid. The charge imposed upon the inheritance by the statute under consideration is in the nature of an excise tax (In re Wilmerding's Estate, supra), but, by whatever name it is designated, the power to impose the charge is referable to the power of taxation, and the above provision of the constitution guaranties to the citizens of each state an immunity in any other state from the burdens of taxation upon their persons or property or occupations which that state does not impose upon the persons or property or occupations of its own citizens. Mr. Cooley says (Const. Lim. p. 490) that this provision "secures in each state to the citizens of all other states the right to be exempt in property and person from taxes or burdens which the property or persons of citizens of the same state are not subject to." In Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, it was held that a statute imposing a higher license tax for the sale of goods within the state of the nonresident than was imposed upon the resident of the state was in violation of this section, and invalid. In defining the words "privileges and immunities," as used in the constitution, the court said: "Beyond doubt, those words are words of very comprehensive meaning, but it will be sufficient to say that the clause plainly and unmistakably secures and protects the right of a citizen of one state to pass into another state of the Union for the purpose of engaging in lawful commerce, trade, or business without molestation, to acquire personal property, to take and hold real estate, to maintain actions in the courts of the state, and to be exempt from any higher taxes or excises than are imposed by the state upon its own citizens." In Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 268, it was held that a statute of Massachusetts which required corporations to reserve from each of their dividends one-fifteenth part of whatever was payable to holders of stock residing out of the state, and to pay it into the state treasury, was violative of this provision of the constitution; the court saying: "It is obvious that the power of a state to impose different and greater burdens or impositions on the property of citizens of other states than on the same property belonging to its own subjects would directly conflict with this constitutional provision. By exempting its own citizens from a tax or excise to which citizens of other states were subject, the former would enjoy an immunity of which the latter would be deprived." See, also, Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 381, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; Campbell v. Morris, 3 Har. & McH. 554; Crandall v. State, 10 Conn. 344; Wiley v. Parmer, 14 Ala. 627. Section 1978 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides: "All citizens of the United States shall have the same right in every state and territory as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold and convey real and personal property." If, however, the state imposes upon the citizens of another state a tax upon their right of inheritance which it does not impose upon its own citizens, they do not have the "same right" to inherit property as is enjoyed by the citizens of that state. It must be held, therefore, that it is not within the power of the state, while exempting its own citizens from a tax upon their inheritances, to impose such tax upon the inheritances falling to citizens of other states.

4. It is then contended on behalf of the respondent that, by reason of the invalidity of this clause in the amendatory statute, the entire provision for exempting the succession of nieces and nephews from the tax must fail. A comparison of the statute as amended with the original statute makes it very evident that the purpose of the legislature was to include nephews and nieces with other relatives of the decedent whose inheritances should not be liable to the tax. The position in the section of the added clause—being placed in connection with other near relatives of the decedent—implies that the legislature intended them to be exempt from the tax equally with the other enumerated relatives. The clause "when resident in this state" was intended as a limitation upon the extent of the exemption, and not as a condition upon which the exemption should be extended to any of the nephews and nieces. That the legislature intended that the exemption should extend to nephews and nieces resident in this state is evident from its language, and that it did not intend that the exemption should extend to nephews and nieces not resident in this state is equally evident. But its intention in this latter respect fails by reason of its want of power to make such discrimination between the two classes. The statute is, therefore, within the rule of construction that, if the objects of a statute are so severable that one is not dependent upon the other, effect will be given to the object which is valid, while that which is invalid will be rejected, and the statute construed as if the invalid part had never been enacted. Mr. Cooley says

(page 211): "If, when the unconstitutional portion is stricken out, that which remains is complete in itself, and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, wholly independent of that which was rejected, it must be sustained." See, also, People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 433; Hale v. McGettigan, 114 Cal. 112, 45 Pac. 1049; People v. Kenney, 96 N. Y. 294; Com. v. Hitchings, 5 Gray, 482; Ratterman v. Telegraph Co., 127 U. S. 411, 8 Sup.Ct. 1127.

5. It is not contended by the respondent that the bequest to the Leland Stanford, Jr., University is subject to the tax, if the provision making such exemption applicable to past cases is valid. The order is reversed, and the superior court is directed to make its order for the payment of the tax in conformity with the foregoing opinion.

KERRY v. PACIFIC MARINE SUPPLY CO. (S. F. 818.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 26, 1898.)

APPEAL—JUDGMENT—MODIFICATION—DAMAGES.

Finding of damages in excess of amount averred in complaint established damages to amount claimed, so that judgment for the excessive amount need not be reversed, but merely modified.

On rehearing. For former opinion, see 54 Pac. 89.

PER CURIAM. Upon further consideration, we are of opinion that a reversal of the judgment in this case is not necessary, and that a modification will meet the ends of justice. The finding of damage is for an amount greater than the complaint avers. Still, the finding necessarily establishes that plaintiff was damaged to the amount which he claims. The judgment may, therefore, be modified, and it will still be supported by the finding in question. All other propositions having been resolved in favor of plaintiff and respondent, it would be a hardship to compel a new trial, if that result could properly be avoided. We think this may be done, for the reasons indicated, which reasons find support in many cases. Fischer v. Blank, 138 N. Y. 669, 33 N. E. 1040; Cox v. Railway Co., 77 Iowa, 478, 42 N. W. 429; Miller v. Wilkins, 79 Ga. 675, 4 S. E. 261; Frankhouser v. Cannon, 50 Kan. 621, 32 Pac. 379; Winter v. Fulstone, 20 Nev. 260, 21 Pac. 201, 687. The two final sentences of the opinion are therefore eliminated. The judgment of reversal is vacated. The court below is directed to modify its judgment by reducing the same in the sum of $239, or one-half of one cent per lineal foot for all of the piles. It is further ordered that appellant have his costs upon this appeal.

DEVINE v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Sac. 518.)

COUNTY ROADS—BONDS.

The levying of a tax for county road purposes on property in a city in which work and improvements on the street are done by virtue of laws relating to street work and improvements therein, being prohibited by St. 1883, p. 20, so that the road fund is one to which only part of the county contributes, and which is to be expended for the benefit of such part only, the county's bonds cannot be issued for construction of a road.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by James H. Devine against the board of supervisors of Sacramento county. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank D. Ryan and J. Chas. Jones, for appellants. James B. Devine and H. G. Soule, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to restrain the defendants from levying a special tax for the current year to create an interest and sinking fund to provide for the payment of the principal and interest of certain so-called Folsom road bonds. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and, defendants declining to answer, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendants appeal.

The only question to be determined is the validity of the bonds, and this depends altogether upon the power of the board of supervisors to issue them; for, so far as the proceedings leading to their issuance are concerned, they seem to have been perfectly regular in form. The issuance of the bonds in question was no doubt designed as a means of co-operation in carrying out the purposes of an act approved March 29, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 239), entitled: "An act to provide for the construction of a state highway or wagon road from Sacramento city to Folsom, in Sacramento county, and appropriating crushed rock and granite or stone blocks for drains and culverts for same." By the terms of this act, the governor was authorized to appoint three commissioners, whose duty it should be to construct a model road between the designated termini. No money was appropriated to pay the expense of building the road, but the directors of the Folsom prison were authorized and directed to furnish, free of cost, the necessary crushed rock for macadamizing, and cut stone for culverts, drains, etc. The act contains no invitation to Sacramento county to contribute funds to pay expenses, but prohibits the doing of any work on the road until the title to the lands upon which it is laid shall have been conveyed to the state. In October, 1897, the defendants, the board of supervisors, ordered a special election for voting upon a proposition to issue the bonds of the county to the amount of $75,000, "for the purpose of improving and macadamizing the public road, to wit, the highway in Sacramento county which is now situated and runs closely to the line of the Sacramento & Placerville Railroad, which now extends between said Sacramento city and the town of Folsom." At the election duly held in pursuance of this order, the proposition was carried by a large majority, and thereupon the board duly passed an ordinance providing for the issuance of the bonds, and for the creation of an interest and sinking fund to pay them. The bonds were subsequently issued, and sold at a premium. The ordinance makes no reference to the Folsom road act, or to the commission appointed thereunder. It does not appear that the two propositions have any necessary or legal connection, and it is seriously doubtful, to say the least, whether the board of supervisors could lawfully put the proceeds of county bonds at the disposal of the state commissioners, even if it had been so expressly provided in the ordinance, and the authority to issue the bonds were unquestioned. For these, and for other reasons which need not be stated, the question of the validity of these bonds must be determined without any reference to the Folsom road act. The inquiry is, merely, whether the board of supervisors of Sacramento county can issue bonds of the county to raise funds for the construction of a county road. There is, of course, no such authority, unless it is conferred by statute, and the only claim of statutory authority is based upon a clause of subdivision 13 of section 25 of the county government act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 460), as follows: "And any county may incur or refund a bonded indebtedness for any purpose for which the board of supervisors are herein authorized to expend the funds of the county."

It is claimed that the board of supervisors of Sacramento county are authorized in the county government act, and in statutes to which it refers, to expend funds of the county in constructing county roads. This is not true in the sense of the clause above quoted. In a county like Sacramento, in which there is an incorporated city like the city of Sacramento, wherein work and improvements upon the streets is done by virtue of laws relating to street work and improvements within such municipality, no tax can be levied for county road purposes upon any property in such city. St. 1883, p. 20. The road fund, therefore, is a fund to which the whole county does not contribute. It is a special fund levied upon a portion of the county, to be expended exclusively for the benefit of that portion of the county upon which it is levied. But the bonds of a county—the bonds in question here—are the bonds of the whole county, and must be paid, if held valid, by means of a tax levied upon all the property of the county, including that within the city of Sacramento. The county government act does not countenance such a result. The board of supervisors cannot borrow money on bonds of the whole county to expend upon an object for which they are only authorized to expend the funds of a part of the county.

In the case of People v. Counts, 89 Cal. 15, 26 Pac. 612, there was no suggestion that the road tax in that county (Mariposa) was not levied upon the entire county. The point upon which this decision turns was not presented, and we do not know that it could have been made. But, however that may be, we are satisfied that, since the board of supervisors are prohibited from taxing the city to pay for county roads, they cannot do indirectly, by issuing bonds, what they are forbidden to do directly; and, although it clearly appears that a very large majority of the citizens of Sacramento are in favor of the issuance of the bonds and of the construction of the road, the plaintiff, who is a taxpayer of the city, cannot be denied the relief which he asks. The judgment is affirmed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE, deeming himself disqualified, did not participate in the decision of this case.

MORE v. MILLER et al. (S. F. 897.)

APPEAL—PREMATURITY.

An appeal from a final judgment before its entry is premature, inasmuch as the time within which such appeal may be taken does not begin to run until the entry.

In bank. On petition for rehearing. Modified.

For former opinion, see 53 Pac. 1077.

PER CURIAM. In this case appellants took the view that they were entitled to appeal from the order denying a motion for leave to intervene within one year after the entry of final judgment in the action. In the opinion heretofore rendered in this case, the appeal was dismissed, upon the ground that the order striking out the intervention was a final judgment, and an appeal should be taken from it as from a final judgment. It was further said that the appeal here in question was taken more than 13 months after final judgment denying leave to intervene was made and given. Upon petition for a rehearing, this court's attention is directed to the fact that the judgment striking out the intervention and denying leave to intervene has not been entered as a final judgment. An appeal taken from a final judgment before entry is premature, and the time within which an appeal may be taken from a final judgment does not begin to run until entry of the judgment. Under these circumstances, and for this reason, the judgment rendered in this case, is modified, and the appeal is hereby dismissed, upon the sole ground that it has been prematurely taken.

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 19, 1898.)

In bank. For opinion in department, see 53
Pac. 805.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. The principal question involved in this case is a new one in this state, and on that account I desire to state my reasons for dissenting from the order denying a rehearing before the full court. The action is to foreclose a mortgage, and the plaintiff, in addition to the allegations usual in such cases, charges in his complaint that the defendants, who are husband and wife, fraudulently represented that, if he would send them the note and a release of the mortgage to the place where they were sojourning in New York, they would pay him the amount due; that, relying upon their promise to that effect, he sent them the note and release, but they have never paid the debt, or any part thereof. The defendants in their answer admit their promise to pay upon surrender of the note and delivery of the release, and allege that they did pay accordingly. The only issue in the case, therefore, was upon the defense of payment. It was found by the superior court that the note had been paid, and that the defendants had practiced no fraud upon the plaintiff in obtaining the release. These findings were attacked by the motion for a new trial, based upon a statement containing all the evidence in the case; and the only question for this court to determine is whether the evidence in the record before us sustains the findings of payment and release. In regard to the evidence, it may be remarked that it consists mainly of written documents, including the depositions of the defendant Barrett and his witnesses, that it all came in without objection, and that it proves conclusively what the opinion of the court expressly concedes, viz. "that Barrett adopted the plan of having this money paid to Ambrose in the state of New York for the particular purpose of giving the sheriff an opportunity to levy upon it in the action contemplated by him against Ambrose." It may not be improper to refer to the evidence to show that this concession goes none too far, and that in fact it but faintly portrays the deliberate contrivance by which the defendant Barrett, acting for himself and wife, sought to bring the property of the plaintiff within a foreign jurisdiction, in order that he might be compelled to defend there against a claim which, under the laws of this state and of the United States, he was entitled to have litigated in California. At the time of the execution of the note and mortgage, all the parties were in California. Ambrose had been here many years, and the defendants for three or four years, engaged in various kinds of business. It is not expressly stated that any of them were residents of California, but the facts prove that all were residents here. The note was made payable at a San Francisco bank, and secured by a mortgage of lands in Fresno county. Within a few days after the date of the note and mortgage, the defendants went to New York, where they had formerly resided, and from there remitted the interest as it accrued. But when the note was about to fall due, instead of remitting the amount, Barrett wrote first to the San Francisco bank where it was payable, and next to plaintiff, requesting that the note, with a proper release, might be sent by express to New York, with leave to examine, and under a commission to the express company to deliver the papers upon payment of the money. In asking this favor of plaintiff, not the slightest hint was given by Barrett that he had any claim against him. On the contrary, the existence of his claim was studiously concealed. Indeed, concealment was essential to the success of Barrett's scheme, for it cannot be supposed that plaintiff would have voluntarily placed his property within reach of a New York attachment if he had had any reason to suspect Barrett's intention to sue him there, or that he was asserting a claim upon which an attachment might be based. Plaintiff, then, having no suspicion of Barrett's scheme, fell into the trap which had been laid for him. He sent the note and release by express, to be delivered upon payment of the amount due. The defendant went through the form of paying the money, received the papers, and then immediately took the money back under a writ of attachment issued in a suit which he had taken the precaution to commence in advance in a court of New York. The question is whether this transaction amounted to payment. The superior court has found that it did, and this court has sustained that conclusion upon grounds which, in my opinion, are untenable.

It seems to be assumed that the whole question is solved when it is determined that the express agent, at the moment of the attachment, held the money as the agent of the plaintiff, and that the case is the same as it would have been if he had been robbed by a third party. But the slightest reflection will show that this is a false analogy. The money was not taken from plaintiff's agent by a third party, but by the party himself who had pretended to pay it; for the writ of attachment was Barrett's own contrivance, and the officer who levied it was his agent. If I pay my debt, and my creditor is despoiled by a robber, he, of course, must suffer the loss; but if I hand my creditor the amount due upon a note secured by mortgage, and, as soon as I get possession of my note and a release, make a forcible recaption of the money, the debt is not paid, nor the lien discharged; and the result is the same whether the creditor is despoiled of all benefit of payment by force, or by a fraud deliberately contrived for that purpose. This proposition, I assume, will not be controverted, and I am thus brought to the question upon which the case depends,—the question, that is to say, whether Barrett's contrivance was a fraud. Upon that point the opinion of the court is expressed as follows: "It may appear inferentially that Barrett adopted the plan of having this money paid to Ambrose in the state of New York for the particular purpose of giving the sheriff an opportunity to levy upon it in the action contemplated by him against Ambrose; and we find nothing in the record indicating any deeper scheme than this. In conceding that to be the fact, such concession would not operate to set aside and nullify the payment of the money to the agent of Ambrose. There would be no fraud in the transaction which could possibly compass that result. Looking at the case from all sides, we do not see a great injustice done to Ambrose by the judgment of the trial court. If Barrett's claim against him was a fraud and a myth, he should have pursued and recovered his money. If Barrett's claim was legal and just, the money has been well applied. If the claim was a fraud and a myth, the carelessness of Ambrose in neglecting to stamp its baseness with the seal of the courts of the state of New York leaves him now where equity will not greatly concern herself in securing for him a return of the money." It is from these views that I wish to express my dissent. There is no right of property more substantial or more meritorious in the eyes of the law than the right of a citizen not to be wrongfully subjected to a foreign jurisdiction in the litigation of claims against him; and the books are full of cases in which it has been held that judgments and other proceedings and orders based upon service of process upon persons or property forcibly or fraudulently brought within reach of the process are voidable for that reason. And these decisions do not rest upon merely technical grounds, but upon substantial reasons, which are well illustrated by this case. It is assumed in the extract above quoted from the opinion of this court that the plaintiff is entitled to no consideration, and that equity will not greatly concern herself in his behalf, because he did not go to New York, and there contest the merits of Barrett's claim, as if it were a matter of no moment that a citizen of California should be compelled to leave his home and his business, and travel some thousands of miles and back, to litigate a claim which it was his right to have litigated here. It is safe to say that he would in that case have been subjected to a heavy pecuniary loss, direct and indirect, and, if he could not legally or justly be compelled to submit to such loss, where is the difference between that and any other fraud?

The case seems to be plain enough on principle, but there is no lack of authority to sustain the view I have indicated. A case very closely in point is Dunlap v. Cody, 31 Iowa, 260, which was an action in Iowa upon a judgment obtained in Illinois. The defendant in that case, while residing in Iowa, had been decoyed into Illinois by a false representation that some parties were about to erect a costly elevator there, the site of which he was requested to examine. As soon as he arrived, he was served with summons, and the judgment followed. The only difference between that case and this is that there it was the person, while here it was the property, which was decoyed into the foreign jurisdiction, and there the fraud was accomplished by the suggestio falsi, while here it was only a suppressio veri. The decision of the case, however, went upon grounds which cover broadly all frauds upon the jurisdiction. The court in its opinion reviewed the authorities very fully, and, as a result of its investigation, held that the fraud in obtaining jurisdiction vitiated the judgment, and that it was not incumbent upon the defendant to appear in the foreign jurisdiction to defend, or even for the special purpose of moving for a dismissal of, the action. In the course of its opinion the court said: "Do the means used to obtain jurisdiction of the person of the defendant in the courts of Illinois amount to fraud? It would seem that this question scarcely needs discussion. Fraud consists in the suggestio falsi or the suppressio veri. Both exist here. The false statement was made to defendant by plaintiffs' attorney that Hiatt and others were about to erect an elevator in Hancock county, Illinois, to cost between thirty thousand dollars and forty thousand dollars; and the defendant, being a carpenter, was induced to go to Illinois to look at the site of the proposed structure. The truth—that the object in getting defendant into the state of Illinois was to obtain jurisdiction of his person in an action against him, and avoid the bar of the statute of limitations of the state of Iowa—was suppressed. It cannot be supposed that if the real facts and purpose had been made known to defendant, he would voluntarily have gone to Illinois, and subjected himself to an action upon this demand, long since barred by the statute of limitations of the state in which he resides. Counsel representing plaintiff in this court, and who, it is but justice to say, were not concerned in obtaining the judgment in Illinois, do not seriously controvert the position that the mode of obtaining jurisdiction was fraudulent. They concede that it 'smells somewhat of fraud.' The only palliation which they are able to offer is the suggestion of a doubt whether it may not be considered a 'pious fraud,' in which 'the end justifies the means.' We do not think that it is entitled even to that small measure of charity. An enlightened and just administration of the law, no less than sound public morals, condemns such practices, and demands that the client whose cupidity could sanction, and the attorney whose venality could execute, such a purpose should alike be disgraced. * * * Now, in view of these authorities, we apprehend it would be admitted that if the plaintiff had seized the defendant, and carried him by force to Illinois, and there caused him to be served with a summons, the jurisdiction thereby acquired would be wrongful. Yet the only difference between the case supposed and the one under consideration is that in that case the volition would be overcome by physical force, while in this the will was rendered passive by false and fraudulent suggestions. Had the truth been known to the defendant, he would have been just as unwilling to have gone to Illinois in one case as the other, and we are unable to perceive why the cases should not be followed by similar consequences. It is claimed that the defendant should have appeared in pursuance of the summons, and there moved the court to dismiss the proceedings in consequence of the fraud. It may well be doubted whether such appearance, even for the purpose of objecting to the service, would not have placed him within the jurisdiction of the court for all purposes connected with the trial. Such, certainly, would be the effect of such appearance in this state. Revision, § 2840. But conceding that he would not be visited with such consequences in the courts of Illinois, and that there the defendant might be relieved from the effects of an insufficient service, such relief, in this case, could be predicated only upon the fraud of plaintiff in procuring the service. Why drive a defendant to the necessity of traveling, it may be, a thousand miles, to put in an appearance at court, and suggest to the court that it has no jurisdiction in consequence of the fraudulent act of plaintiff in procuring service? Under such a construction, it would, in many cases, cost more to make defense than to allow judgment to be taken, and permit the fraud to triumph."

The principles of this decision are approved in Durringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 498, and I have not found anything that conflicts with it, except in one case in Arkansas. In that case January sued Peel in Arkansas, where he resided, and gave notice that he would take depositions in St. Louis, Mo. Peel voluntarily went to St. Louis to attend at the taking of the depositions, where he was served with summons in an action commenced there on the same claims. Plaintiffs recovered judgment in the Missouri court, and upon that judgment brought suit in Arkansas, which Peel defended upon the ground that the jurisdiction of the Missouri court had been obtained by fraud. The court held that the jurisdiction had been fraudulently obtained, but disallowed the defense, partly because it had not been properly pleaded, and partly because the defendant had not appeared specially in the St. Louis court, and moved to dismiss the action there. They did not hold, however, as is suggested here, that he was bound to defend on the merits in the foreign jurisdiction. On the contrary, they held that he was only bound to appear specially, and move to dismiss, because such an appearance would not be a submission to the jurisdiction.

These cases relate to frauds in obtaining jurisdiction of the person, but the same principles apply to questions regarding property. Ilsey v. Nichols, 12 Pick. 270, was a suit for damages for breaking outer doors to levy an attachment. It was conceded that the officer was liable for the damages caused by the breaking of the doors, but it was contended that the levy was good nevertheless, and that no damages should be awarded for the goods taken. The court held otherwise, and Chief Justice Shaw, after reviewing the authorities, states his conclusion in these words: "These cases, therefore, seem to establish the general principle that a valid and lawful act cannot be accomplished by any unlawful means; and, whenever such unlawful means are resorted to, the law will interpose, and afford some suitable remedy, according to the nature of the case, to restore the party injured by these unlawful means to his rights." This language applies directly to the case in hand. If a sheriff in Massachusetts cannot make a lawful levy on goods, otherwise subject to attachment, when he breaks an outer door to get access to them, a sheriff in New York cannot make a valid levy on the property of a citizen of California, in behalf of a citizen of New York, who has by a deliberate fraud procured the property to be brought within that state for the express purpose of having it attached there; and the courts of California could easily interpose, and afford a suitable remedy in this case, by simply disallowing a plea of payment, founded upon a mere formal transfer of money, which was immediately retaken in pursuance of a fraudulent and unlawful design. Instead of affording to our own citizen this entirely suitable remedy, we deny him any relief, and give full effect to a fraud upon our own jurisdiction.

GAROUTTE, J. Owing to the many live and pressing matters now pending before the court, I have no time to devote to a further consideration of this case; but, in view of the dissenting opinion now filed, and in fairness to the court that denied the petition for a rehearing, I feel compelled to say a few words.

1. Barrett testified that the attachment of the money in New York was based upon an indebtedness of Ambrose to him upon an express contract. Ambrose testified in detail at the trial, but by no word intimated that such indebtedness did not exist. Hence we assume that it did exist, and therefore the contention of Ambrose in this case is more technical than substantial, as far as any question of justice is concerned.

2. As to the question of fraud practiced by Barrett upon the jurisdiction of the courts of this state or of New York, or the question of Barrett's fraud in obtaining jurisdiction over the person or the property of Ambrose in New York, matters so largely dwelt upon in the opinion of the Chief Justice, it is sufficient to say there is nothing in the pleadings suggesting such a defense. No such question was raised at the trial. The briefs of counsel filed in this court do not intimate it, and the petition for a rehearing does not advert to it. For these reasons, it is not a question in the case.

3. The transaction of paying the money at the home of Barrett in New York, through an express company, after an examination of the papers of release by the attorneys of Barrett, was an everyday, ordinary business transaction, and it is only by the barest inference that it can be said Barrett, with the then intent to attach the money, induced Ambrose to send the papers to New York. There is no evidence to that effect in the record, and the trial court substantially found the fact the other way.

4. If the transaction here involved had occurred between these parties at different points in the state of California, I do not believe the judgment of the trial court could have been other than it was; and this case, upon the pleadings, the trial, and the argument, stands exactly as though the dealings between the parties had all taken place within the confines of this state.

KNIGHT v. TRIPP. (S. F. 735.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 23, 1898.)

GIFTS CAUSA MORTIS—DELIVERY—TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION.

1. Delivery of an instrument in form of bill of sale, intended as a gift causa mortis of articles present and capable of delivery, is not a sufficient delivery.

2. Deceased, in contemplation of death, said to defendant that she wanted to give her property to him, or place it all in his hands, and tell him whom she wished to have it, and at the same time she requested him to take the key to a secretary in her room. Thereafter, on giving him instructions as to persons to have her property in case of her death, she indorsed notes in the secretary, and he put them back, and retained the key. Held not a sufficient delivery.

3. Where deceased attempted to make a gift causa mortis of all her property, defendant to distribute it, and pay debts and expenses, in case of her death, and have anything remaining, the gift is defeated entirely by a part only of the property being delivered to defendant.

4. There is a testamentary disposition, void because oral, where deceased transferred money in bank to defendant, with instructions as to persons he should give it to in case of her death, he to have anything remaining after her instructions were carried out.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Knight, administrator of Elizabeth Cook, against W. G. Tripp. From an order granting a new trial after judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

F. E. Whitney and Reed & Nusbaumer, for appellant. Cary Howard and Wells Whitmore, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff, as the administrator of the estate of Elizabeth Cook, deceased, seeks by this action to recover from the defendant certain personal property, or its value, alleged to belong to said estate. The defendant claims the property under title derived from the deceased in her lifetime. Mrs. Cook had been ill for several months, and, with the purpose of seeking relief, was about to undergo a surgical operation, from which she apprehended danger. On the morning of May 30, 1895, the defendant came to her house by previous appointment, to see her, and she informed him of this purpose, and stated that she wanted to dispose of her property; that she had once made a will, but had destroyed it, and had made up her mind that she might as well give her property away while she was living, saying to him: "I want to give it to you, or place all of it in your hands, and tell you those whom I want should have it." Upon the defendant's suggestion she consulted an attorney in the matter, under whose advice she acted, and on the next day signed the following instrument, which had been prepared by the attorney, and delivered it to the defendant: "For and in consideration of one dollar, to me in hand paid by W. G. Tripp, and other considerations to me moving, I do hereby sell, assign, transfer, and deliver to said W. G. Tripp all my household furniture, wearing apparel, and all other personal property owned or held by me in that certain house in the city of Oakland known and designated as '680 Tenth Street.' Dated May 31, 1895. Elizabeth L. Cook." This instrument is in form a bill of sale, but defendant testified that no consideration was given therefor. On the same day she assigned to the defendant three bank books representing money deposited by her in certain savings banks in Oakland, and which he immediately caused to be transferred to his account in the banks. On the next day she indorsed to him certain promissory notes held by her, and also assigned to him two certificates of stock for five shares each in the Equity Building & Loan Association. She underwent the surgical operation on the 12th of June, and in two days thereafter died. The present action was brought to recover the above property. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and upon motion of the defendant a new trial was granted. From this order the plaintiff has appealed.

It is claimed by the defendant that by this transaction the property was transferred to him absolutely as a gift inter vivos, while the plaintiff contends that Mrs. Cook intended no more than to transfer it as a gift causa mortis, and that her intention failed of ef-feet for the reason that the property was not delivered by her to the defendant. The circumstances attending the transaction very clearly preclude it from being considered as a gift of the property inter vivos. Mrs. Cook was an invalid, 54 years of age, and it must be assumed that she had at least a hope that she would come safely out of the surgical operation that she was about to undergo, and that her life would be prolonged thereby. Under these circumstances it would require very clear evidence to authorize a conclusion that she intended to divest herself absolutely of all her property in favor of one who had no claim upon her estate, and who was under no obligation to supply her wants. There is no direct evidence that such was her intention, or that anything to that effect was said by her. Her disposition of the property was evidently made in contemplation of her death under the surgical operation, but it was not necessary for her to state that fact as one of its terms. If the circumstances under which it was made were such as to authorize such conclusion, it will be treated the same as if it had been so stated by her. Civ. Code, § 1150. At the interview between them on May 31st the defendant prepared the following memorandum of the disposition that Mrs. Cook desired to be made of the property to be transferred to him: "May 31, 1895. Instructions of Mrs. E. L. Cook as to the disposal of her property in the event of death. W. G. Tripp is to have the house and lot and contents of the house at 680 Tenth street, and all other real estate, and is to pay all debts and funeral expenses, for permanent care of the cemetery lot, and such monuments as he may choose for herself and husband. To pay E. A. Jenner, of Belvedere, two thousand dollars; Fred B. Kimball, Webster City, Iowa, one thousand dollars; Fred W. Cook, New York, one thousand dollars; C. F. Nicklaus, Oakland, Cal., two thousand dollars; Mrs. Fannie Hilton, Oakland, five hundred dollars; Miss Grace Hilton, five hundred dollars; Miss Carrie Hilton, five hundred dollars; Mrs. Pierce, Oakland, one thousand dollars; Miss Maggie Gates, Oakland, two hundred dollars. Any property remaining after these instructions are carried out is to belong to W. G. Tripp." The following addition appears to have been afterwards made to this memorandum: "June 8, 1895. Trunk and contents in closet under the back stairs is to be delivered to Mrs. Hilton." This memorandum is not signed by any one, nor does it appear that Mrs. Cook ever saw it, or knew its contents, but the defendant testified that he prepared it in her presence, in the course of the conversation between them in regard to the disposition of the property, and that it contains the substance of what was said to him by her. By this memorandum the disposition of the property is limited to the event of death, and the defendant was to have the property "remaining after these instructions are carried out." He also testified that the money was to be paid to these persons only in the event of her death. It is very clear, therefore, that it was not intended by Mrs. Cook to make a present, irrevocable gift of the property to him, and that she did not intend that he should, in any event, have all of the property for himself.

Whether the transaction constituted a valid gift causa mortis must depend upon what was said and done by Mrs. Cook at the time of the alleged transfer. Gifts causa mortis are not regarded in the law with favor, since they are in contravention of the general rules prescribed for the testamentary disposition of property, and therefore should in all cases be established by clear and convincing proof of the requisites of such a gift. For the purpose of preventing frauds and perjuries, the statute requires a testamentary disposition of property to be made by a written instrument, executed with certain formalities; and, while a gift causa mortis is testamentary to the extent that it is made in contemplation of death, and becomes absolute only upon the death of the donor, it is at the same time subject to the rules governing a gift inter vivos. The actual delivery of the thing given is made the substitute for the formal writing required for a testamentary disposition, but without such delivery the words of the donor are unavailing to constitute a gift. "Donatio perfectur possessione accipientis." All gifts are necessarily inter vivos, for a living donor and a living donee are indispensable to a valid gift; but when the gift is made in contemplation of impending death, and as a provision for the donee in the event of such death, it is called a gift causa mortis. This designation of its character does not, however, change the elements requisite for rendering the gift complete. There can be no gift without an intention to give, and a delivery, either actual or constructive, of the thing given. Civ. Code, § 1146, defines a gift to be a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration; and the rule that mere words of gift are ineffective unless accompanied by a delivery to the donee of the thing given, if it is capable of delivery, is reproduced in section 1147. There must be both a purpose to give and the execution of this purpose. The purpose must be expressed,—either orally or in writing,—and it must be executed by the actual delivery to the donee of the thing given, or of the means of getting possession and enjoyment thereof. A written instrument may be available for designating the property intended to be given, as well as to show the intention of the donor, but by itself it no more establishes the gift than would the same words orally delivered by the donor. "A gift causa mortis is not aided by the execution of the written instrument, except so far as that may contribute to greater certainty in the proofs. Such gifts cannot be effected by formal instruments of conveyance or assignment. They are manifested by, and take their effect from, delivery." McGrath v. Reynolds, 116 Mass. 556. It is the fact of delivery that converts the unexecuted and revocable purpose into an executed and complete gift. Miller v. Jeffress, 4 Grat. 472; Cutting v. Gilman, 41 N. H. 147; Emery v. Clough, 63 N. H. 552; Yancey v. Field, 85 Va. 756, 8 S. E. 721; Walsh's Appeal, 122 Pa. St. 177, 15 Atl. 470; Newman v. Bost (N. C.) 29 S. E. 848; Hart v. Ketchum (Cal.) 53 Pac. 931. Only Mrs. Cook and the defendant were present at the interview between them, and the defendant is the only witness who gives any account of what was then said. None of the writings introduced have any reference to a gift, and, as there was no one else present at the conversation between the defendant and Mrs. Cook, the character of the transaction must be determined from his testimony alone. At the interview of May 30th she did not make any disposition of the property, but postponed her action until after she had consulted an attorney. Her statement at that interview, "I want to give it to you, or place all of it in your hands, and tell you those whom I want should have it," indicates merely a purpose which is not fully disclosed, and the second clause of the statement is to be regarded as signifying the meaning which she attached to the word "give" in the first clause, and is to be construed as her desire to make the defendant her agent for the disposition of her property, rather than that he should himself be her beneficiary. What the advice of her attorney was is not shown, but under his advice the above assignments and instruments of transfer were prepared and were executed by her. It is not shown that anything was said by her at the time she signed these instruments, or on the next day, when she indorsed the promissory notes and the certificates of stock. The defendant, when requested to state fully all that she said at the time she made the transfer of the bank books to him, testified: "She said she wanted to assign this money to me; she wanted to give me this money, with all the rest of her property, under certain conditions that she had given in regard to its disposal." These are all the expressions shown to have been made by Mrs. Cook of her intention in thus transferring the property to the defendant, and it must be held that they are insufficient to sustain the claim of a gift.

The promissory notes and the certificates of stock were kept by Mrs. Cook in a tin box, which was locked, and placed in a secretary, which was also kept locked. This secretary stood in the room which was occupied by Mrs. Cook during her illness, and remained there until after her death. There was also in the secretary some jewelry, which does not appear to have been mentioned by her, and which the defendant says he did not have in his hands at any time until after her death, when he took it out of the secretary. On the 30th of May, at her first interview with the defendant, Mrs. Cook handed to him the key of the secretary, but as she did not on that day determine the disposition she would make of her property, no significance can be attached to this act. No use appears to have been made by him of the key until June 1st, when he took the notes and certificates of the stock from the secretary, and, after Mrs. Cook had signed the indorsements thereon, he put them back into the box, locked it up, and put it into the secretary, where it remained until after her death. He appears to have retained the key to the secretary, and after her death he took from it the tin box with its contents. At the time Mrs. Cook gave him this key she did not accompany it with any words of gift, and her request to him to take it is more consistent with her desire that he should be merely its custodian than with a purpose to give him the secretary, or any of its contents. The subsequent placing of the notes and certificates in the secretary, or in the tin box, after their indorsement by Mrs. Cook, would not, in the absence of words to that effect, constitute a delivery of these instruments to the defendant. As the secretary, as well as all the household furniture, continued to remain in the possession of Mrs. Cook until her death, the above instrument of transfer is not available to the defendant to establish a delivery of the articles mentioned therein. A constructive delivery which will satisfy the statute is limited to such property as is not capable of actual transfer or immediate delivery. A delivery of the key to a receptacle, which is itself present and capable of delivery, will not, of itself, constitute a delivery of the contents of the receptacle. Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324; Keepers v. Deposit Co., 56 N. J. Law, 302, 28 Atl. 585; Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462, 3 N. E. 532; 2 Schouler, Pers. Prop. § 163; Newman v. Bost, supra. In Debinson v. Emmons, 158 Mass. 592, 33 N. E. 706, it appeared that the donee was a joint occupant with the donor of the room in which the trunk was placed, and the opinion of the supreme court was rested upon the decision of the trial court that the evidence established an actual delivery of the trunk. It is evident that it was the intention of Mrs. Cook to dispose of her entire estate for the purposes mentioned in the memorandum of May 31st, and that the payments therein named were not to be made by the defendant unless he should receive the whole of her estate. It was clearly her intention that he should not have the whole of her estate, and, as he would not be required to make any of the payments in case he should receive only a portion of it, it must follow that by reason of his failure to obtain the property, other than the money, for want of a delivery in her lifetime, her entire purpose must fail. Unless the gift can be maintained as a whole, the failure of the principal part must defeat it entirely.

See McGrath v. Reynolds, supra. The moneys in the bank at the time of the assignment of the bank books to the defendant amounted to $8,702.53, and by the memorandum of instructions made by the defendant he was directed to pay out $8,700, aside from all debts and funeral expenses. The value of the entire personal property received by him is $10,802, and he testified that he has already paid $1,800 for debts and expenses. The character of the assignment of the bank books is not shown, but as it was sufficient to enable the defendant to obtain the money represented thereby, it may be considered with the same effect as if the deceased had drawn the money herself, and placed it in his hands, to be disposed of as directed in the memorandum, and that the moneys named in the memorandum were only to be paid to the persons therein mentioned in the event of her death. She did not, by this act, make a gift of the money to the defendant, but constituted him her agent to make the payments for the purposes and to the persons named in the memorandum, "in the event of [her] death"; and only after the "instructions" thus given by her had been carried out was any property remaining to belong to the defendant. Such disposition of her estate was testamentary, and could not be made orally. The defendant was merely her agent to carry out her instructions, and upon her death his agency terminated, and the money remained a part of her estate subject to administration. Hart v. Ketchum, supra. The order granting a new trial is reversed.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MIN. CO.
et al. v. FOX et al. (S. F. 1,330.)

SUPERSEDEAS—APPEAL.

Motion for supersedeas will be granted, the superior court having proceeded to enforce order appealed from, pending motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the order was not appealable.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William R. Dangerfield, Judge.

Action by the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company against M. W. Fox and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appealed, and now move for writ of supersedeas. Granted.

Wm. T. Baggett and E. S. Pillsbury, for appellants. Deal, Tauszky & Wells, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Motion for a writ of supersedeas. A motion heretofore made to dismiss the appeal in this cause, upon the ground that the order appealed from is not appealable, was continued until the hearing of the appeal upon its merits, for the reason that the motion could not be determined without an examination into the merits of the appeal. 52 Pac. 1131. Thereafter, upon the superior court proceeding to enforce the order appealed from, the present motion for a supersedeas was made in behalf of the appellants, and was resisted at the hearing, upon the ground that the order is not appealable; thus presenting the same question whose hearing had been continued.

This question cannot be determined by a mere inspection of the order appealed from, but, as was held upon the former motion, involves the merits of the order, and a judicial consideration of the facts and averments upon which the order was made. It would therefore be in contravention of the practice of this court to determine the question in advance of the hearing of the appeal. If the order is appealable, the appeal deprived the superior court of the power to enforce it while the appeal is pending; and whether it is appealable is a question to be ultimately decided by this court, and is now pending here upon motion to dismiss, and while that motion is undetermined it is the duty of the superior court to refrain from its enforcement. Rugles v. Superior Court, 103 Cal. 125, 37 Pac. 211. The application for the writ is granted.

SHERMAN v. WRINKLE. (L. A. 411.)

In bank. For opinion in department, see 53 Pac. 1090.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied, but, as our attention has been called by the petition for rehearing to the fact that the court below failed to directly find that the land in contest is not suitable for cultivation, the judgment is hereby modified by directing the court below to make a finding on that subject, and that, if it finds that the land is not suitable for cultivation, then to enter judgment for defendant, as directed in the opinion hereinbefore filed.

SAN JOSE SAFE-DEPOSIT BANK OF SAVINGS v. BANK OF MADERA et al. (Sac. 438.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 26, 1898.)

MORTGAGE—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where one borrows money with which to redeem from a foreclosure sale, and, as security therefor, assigns to the lender all his right, as redemptioner or otherwise, by reason of the redemption, and authorizes him to obtain from the sheriff a deed of the property in his own name, the borrower does not convey the land absolutely, but only hypothecates his interest in it, and the lender holds the sheriff's deed as a mortgage.

Modified opinion. For former opinion, see 54 Pac. 83.

PER CURIAM. The opinion heretofore rendered in the above-entitled cause is modified by striking from the fourth paragraph thereof the words "inclusive of the right under the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 707) to receive the rents from the terre tenant"; and also that portion of the opinion commencing with the words "What has been said," at the beginning of the fifth paragraph, and extending thence to and including the words "decision of the trial court," in the last paragraph.

MEYER v. HEGLER. (S. F. 563.)

NOTES—PARTNERSHIP OR INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Plaintiff, on application of J., a member of the firm of H. & J., made a loan on the note of J. to the firm, indorsed by latter, being told by J. that the money was being borrowed to diminish the firm's indebtedness, and the check for the loan was drawn in favor of the firm, and used in payment of the debt. Held, that this was not a loan to the firm, so as to make it liable on the note otherwise than as an indorser, though plaintiff was not told that the loan was to pay J.'s share of the indebtedness.

Harrison, McFarland, and Van Fleet, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by Daniel Meyer against John H. Hegler and another. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant Hegler appeals. Reversed.

H. C. Firebaugh and Henning & Bowen, for appellant. Rosenbaum & Scheeline, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The defendants, Hegler and Johnson, constitute the firm of Hegler, Johnson & Co., and this is an action upon a promissory note made by Johnson to the firm, and by him indorsed in the firm name, with waiver of protest, etc. The cause was tried in the superior court without a jury, where it was found, among other things, that the note was indorsed by the firm of Hegler, Johnson & Co., and that the consideration for it was the sum of $10,000, theretofore loaned by the plaintiff to the firm. The defendant Hegler, appealing from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, attacks these findings as unsupported by the evidence, and this presents the only question we are called upon to consider; for, under the facts here disclosed, there can be no serious contention that either Hegler or the firm would be bound by a note executed in this form by Johnson alone, in discharge of his individual obligation, or for money borrowed for his individual purposes. The note in suit was executed by Johnson in August, 1893, in renewal of a note for the same amount ($10,000), which was executed in May, 1892; and the real and only question to be determined is whether the former note constituted a firm obligation. There is no substantial conflict in the evidence bearing upon this question. At the date of the former note, May, 1892, the firm of Hegler, Johnson & Co. was indebted to the Pacific Bank in about the sum of $20,000, payment of which was being pressed. Hegler was able to provide for his half of this indebtedness, and did so, but Johnson was compelled to borrow $10,000 in order to contribute his share towards the payment of the firm debt. He applied to the plaintiff for a loan of that sum, and the plaintiff agreed to advance it on a note indorsed by the firm, with certain collateral security furnished by Johnson. The note of May, 1892, was thereupon drawn up under the direction of plaintiff, and by its terms Johnson promised to pay to the order of Hegler, Johnson & Co. $10,000 on demand. This note was indorsed by Hegler in the firm name, and delivered to plaintiff, who drew his check in favor of the firm for $10,000. The check was deposited in the firm name, and the proceeds applied upon the firm debts. The question is, what obligation was assumed by the firm in this transaction? Did it become indebted to the plaintiff as for money loaned to the firm, or did it assume merely the obligation of an indorser of Johnson's paper? Did the plaintiff loan $10,000 to the firm, or did he merely discount the note of a third party held by the firm? Looking only to the face of the transaction, there can be but one answer to these questions. The plaintiff bought Johnson's note from the firm, and paid the firm for it, and the firm assumed the ordinary liability, and only the liability, of an indorser. But it is contended that, although this was the form of the transaction, and the form prescribed by the plaintiff himself, the substance was something entirely different, and that the firm became indebted to plaintiff directly and unconditionally, because plaintiff gave his check to the firm, and the proceeds were used to pay firm obligations. This conclusion, however, does not seem to follow. The holder of a note who indorses it and procures it to be discounted always receives, and is entitled to receive, the value of the note, and to use the proceeds in his business; but he does not for that reason become directly and unconditionally indebted to his indorsee.

There is a further contention on the part of the plaintiff that the firm was bound as a maker of the first note, because plaintiff was told by Johnson that he was borrowing the money to diminish the firm's debt to the bank, and because he would not otherwise have loaned it. I cannot see that this evidence strengthens the case for the plaintiff in the slightest degree. It is entirely consistent with all the other uncontradicted evidence in the case, which clearly shows that Johnson applied for a loan, not to the firm, but to himself individually, in order that he might pay his share of the firm debt; in order, in other words, that he might contribute his share to the necessary increase of the firm's capital. He was borrowing the money for himself, and all plaintiff required was the indorsement of the firm, and the assurance that the money was to be used in reducing the firm indebtedness. With this understanding, and with this object in view, the transaction was put in a form exactly corresponding to the situation and circumstances of the parties. Johnson, having no ready money, gave his note to the firm for his share of the firm debt. Plaintiff discounted the note for the firm, and very properly and naturally drew his check in favor of the firm, which, with equal propriety and perfect right, used the proceeds in its business. The liability on the part of the firm for which the plaintiff chose to contract was that of an indorser, and I do not see how, under the facts of this case, it can be held otherwise liable. This being so, the finding of the superior court that the consideration of the note in suit was the sum of $10,000 loaned to the firm cannot be sustained, nor is it true, in a legal sense, that the note in suit was indorsed by the firm. More than a year had elapsed from the date of the former note, without any demand or notice of nonpayment, and the liability of the firm as indorser was at an end. The only obligation remaining in force was that of Johnson alone, and he had no authority to use the name of the firm in renewing his own note.

Some reliance is placed upon the fact that installments of interest falling due on the first note were sometimes paid by means of checks drawn in the firm name of Johnson, Hegler & Co. The claim seems to be that this was an acknowledgment by Hegler that the first note was given for a firm debt. I do not think such conclusion would necessarily follow, even if the checks had been drawn by Hegler himself; but the evidence shows without contradiction that they were drawn by Johnson, or by the bookkeeper under his direction, and without the knowledge of Hegler. The judgment against Hegler and order appealed from are reversed.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

HARRISON, J. I dissent. There was evidence to justify the court in finding that the consideration for the note sued upon was the sum of $10,000 theretofore loaned by the plaintiff to the firm of Hegler, Johnson & Co. The original note was signed by the defendant Johnson, and was indorsed to the plaintiff in the firm name by the defendant Hegler, and was taken by the plaintiff upon the representation that the money received thereon was to be used in payment of certain indebtedness of the firm. A check for its amount was drawn to the order of the firm, and deposited by it to its credit with the Pacific Bank, and on the same day the greater portion of the money was drawn out by the firm, and used in the payment of its promissory note. As the consideration of the note was used for the benefit of the firm, and as both partners joined in executing it in the form required to enable the firm to obtain this consideration, it became the obligation of the partnership. This evidence tended to sustain the above finding, and, the superior court having determined that it was sufficient therefor, this court cannot review its weight for the purpose of overcoming the decision of that court. The note in suit was executed in renewal of this former note, and in the same form, but the name of the maker and the indorsement of the firm were both written by the defendant Johnson. As the consideration for the original note was given and used for the benefit of the firm, and as both members of the firm united in its execution to the plaintiff, in order to receive this consideration, it became an obligation of the partnership to him, irrespective of any private agreement between the partners, and irrespective of the form in which the obligation was made. The plaintiff testified that when he took the original note he had no knowledge of any such agreement, or that the money was to be used for any other purpose than that of the partnership. At the time of the execution of the note in the suit there was nothing to put him upon notice that it was given for the individual debt of Johnson. Nothing had occurred since the original note was given to impair his right to believe that the debt evidenced by it was a partnership transaction, and he had the right to assume that the firm regarded the note as a partnership obligation, and that the form adopted for this note had been agreed upon by them for all notes to be executed for its obligations. The defendants had continued their partnership relations and business at the same place. As a member of the firm, Johnson had authority to bind it by a renewal of its obligations. If he had taken up the old note, and given a new one in the name of the firm, there would be no question of the liability of the firm thereon. It is equally bound by his renewal, made in the same form which had been adopted by the partners when the debt was originally created.

CERTIORARI—WHEN LIES.

Certiorari does not lie to annul proceedings of a board before it has made a final order in the matter.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Charles W. Slack, Judge.

Application by George G. Gauld for writ of review directed to the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco. Demurrer to petition was sustained, and petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. Harry T. Cresswell, City Atty., Robt. A. Friedrich, and Crittenden & Van Wyck, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The present litigation was inaugurated upon application for a writ of review to annul the proceedings of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco looking towards the future granting of a franchise for the conduct of the telephone business. A demurrer was sustained to the petition of Gauld, and the case is now before the court upon the sufficiency of the facts set forth in that petition to justify the issuance of the writ. The sufficiency of the petition is attacked from many points, and we need notice but a single one. At the time this proceeding was inaugurated no franchise had been granted by the board of supervisors. The matter was in fieri. No final action of the board had been had, and for this reason certiorari was not the remedy. The office of this writ is in no sense that of a restraining order. It is not the purpose of the writ to restrain or prohibit, but to annul. And until the proceedings of the inferior tribunal or board have culminated in a final order, there is nothing to annul. Conceding, for present purposes only, that the writ of review would lie to annul an order of the board of supervisors granting a franchise, we have no such case here, for no franchise had been granted when the application was filed, and it necessarily follows the application for the writ is premature. There is an abundance of authority in this state supporting these views. Wilson v. Supervisors, 3 Cal. 386; People v. County Judge, 40 Cal. 480; Lamb v. Schottler, 54 Cal. 321; Sayers v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 645, 24 Pac. 296. For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

SAVINGS BANK OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY
v. CENTRAL MARKET CO. et al.
(L. A. 418.) 1

NOTES—MAKERS—PAYMENT—MORTGAGES—PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

1. A note reciting, "We promise to pay," and signed by a corporation and by several persons, with the words "as stockholders" after their names, and the word "trustee" after the names of some of them, is the note of such persons as well as of the corporation, their signing not being in a representative capacity, or in ratification of the act of the officers of the corporation.

2. A note is not paid by the taking of another in place thereof, unless received by express agreement as payment.

3. A second mortgagee may maintain an action for personal judgment, the mortgaged property having been exhausted by foreclosure of the first mortgage, though he was made a defendant in the suit by the first mortgagee, and did not appear therein.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by Savings Bank of San Diego County against the Central Market Company and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. T. McNealy and Withington & Carter, for appellant. M. A. Luce and W. J. Hunsaker, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff, a savings bank now in liquidation, to recover $25,000 and interest upon a promissory note, in words and figures as follows: "November 11, 1891. $25,000. San Diego, Cal. One year after date, without grace, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of Savings Bank of San Diego County, at their banking house in the city of San Diego, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, with interest thereon from this date until payment at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, and, if not so paid, then to become part of the principal of this note, and to bear like rate of interest till paid; both principal and interest to be paid in United States gold coin. And we further agree that, in the event of suit being brought against us, then there shall be added to any judgment against us rendered in said suit, as counsel fees, an additional sum of three per centum in like gold coin, upon the amount of the principal and interest hereof accrued at the time of the entry of such judgment, or, if paid before judgment and after action commenced, then on the amount at the date of payment. The Central Market Company, by J. H. Barbour, Pt. Bryant Howard, Secretary. Bryant Howard, J. H. Barbour, Trustee, M. H. Howard, M. H. Howard, Trustee, F. W. Stewart, Chas. S. Hamilton, J. H. Barbour,—As Stockholders."

It is alleged that the note was secured by a second mortgage upon certain real estate; that the first mortgage, which was given to secure the payment of the sum of $50,000 and interest, had been foreclosed in an action in which plaintiff was made a party defendant; that under said foreclosure the property was sold for the amount due on the first mortgage, and, there having been no redemption within the time allowed by law for a redemption, a deed had been executed to the purchaser, and the security had become valueless without any fault on the part of plaintiff. Plaintiff therefore demands judgment for the amount due on the note against all of the defendants.

The defendants Bryant Howard and M. H. Howard denied the execution of the note by them, and averred that they signed the note merely to ratify the action of the officers of the Central Market Company, which was the true debtor and maker of the note; that the note had been paid by the giving of another note, which was accepted in lieu of the note sued upon; and that plaintiff is precluded from maintaining the action by its failure to appear in the foreclosure suit mentioned in the complaint, and to obtain a deficiency judgment therein. At the conclusion of the testimony on the part of plaintiff the court granted a motion for a nonsuit as to the individual defendants, which was based upon the grounds: (1) The complaint does not state a cause of action, and shows that the note sued upon was not executed by them as their note. (2) The evidence shows that the said defendants did not execute the note to bind themselves individually, but signed the same merely as stockholders, for the purpose only of ratifying and giving authority to the acts of the officers who signed on behalf of the Central Market Company. (3) It appears that the note was secured by mortgage, which has not been foreclosed. Also, that the right of plaintiff to maintain the action was barred by the foreclosure of the first mortgage. (4) The note was paid by a new note before the action was brought. And (5) a novation is shown by which the plaintiff accepted a new note, guarantied by certain parties, in lieu of the note sued upon.

The first two propositions may as well be considered together. The case went off upon defendants' motion for a nonsuit, and there was really no evidence of the intent of the individual defendants in signing the contract, nor of knowledge of such intent on the part of the payee, except such as may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances. These amount to little beyond the fact that a mortgage was given to secure the note by the corporate defendant. All these matters are, however, immaterial if, as I think, the question must be determined from a mere inspection of the instrument. The question is argued on both sides as though it involved the question whether the individual defendants signed the contract in a representative capacity or not,—whether they intended their signatures to be taken as the signing of the contract by the corporation or not. And hence many cases are cited in which the court has been called upon to determine whether one who has affixed to his signature the word "agent," "president," etc., is personally bound. But in all of those cases the construction was that the signature of the agent or other representative was intended to be and should be considered the signature of the principal, whereby the principal made the contract. It is not, and never has been, contended that Howard put his personal signature to this note for any such purpose. Such a contention is inconsistent with the defense made by the defendants, and with the grounds upon which the motion for nonsuit was made and granted. The defense is that they signed the note as stockholders for the purpose of ratification. Before they could ratify, there must be something to ratify. The idea implies at least a formal contract, and generally, and certainly in this case, that those who ratify do not sign in a representative capacity. If they intended to ratify, they signed for themselves as stockholders, although the addition to their signature of the phrase "as stockholders" was of no consequence. If that was their intent, then the purpose was to confirm the act of the officers in the execution of the contract, and not to formally execute it for the corporation by their signatures. It is obvious that the individual defendants did not sign the note in a representative capacity, and there is nothing on the face of the note which indicates any such intention, and, notwithstanding the earnest and able argument of their attorneys, such is not now their real contention. Now, what is their contract? It reads, "We promise to pay," and if we substitute "The Central Market Company promises to pay" then the signature of Bryant Howard as stockholder becomes meaningless. It now is, in effect, "We, the Central Market Company and Bryant Howard, as stockholder, promise to pay" (making the first named represent all). By what process, sanctioned by law, can this contract, which is entirely unambiguous, be divided and changed, and made to read that the corporation promises to pay, and Bryant Howard as a stockholder ratifies the contract made in the name of the corporation for the purpose of making it a valid corporate act? The contracts to pay and to ratify are radically different. That which was signed is an agreement to pay only. It must be kept in mind that no question has ever been or could be raised as to the execution of the note by the corporation. Its mode of signing in order to make it a valid corporate note is beyond criticism. It does not appear that the power of its president and secretary has ever been doubted, or that it could be. There has never been a reason for such ratification, and, since it is not claimed that the signers were all the stockholders, they could not have ratified the execution of the note had it been necessary that it should have been ratified. Furthermore, had all the stockholders signed the note in the same way, it could not have been deemed a ratification, for the writing expresses no such intention, but, on the other hand, an unambiguous promise to pay. That they promised to pay as stockholders is as unimportant as it would have been had they promised as citizens of the United States. That may show why they promised to pay this debt, but it cannot affect their liability. The addition of "trustee" to some of the names is also immaterial. Brewster v. Sime, 42 Cal. 139.

2. The fourth and fifth points are substantially identical. There is no evidence which tends to show an express, or any, agreement that the new note should be received as payment. The action of the bookkeeper and his statements as to what Howard or Barbour said upon the subject do not even tend to prove such express agreement. In Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 317, Judge Field said: "Unless received by express agreement as payment, it did not extinguish the debt." This language is quoted with approval in Comp-toir D'Escompte v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28, where the subject is again considered and the authorities cited. The last case is cited upon this point in Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 530, 39 Pac. 922, and the same doctrine is there announced. See, also, Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 380, 44 Pac. 727. It will not help the defendants to call the transaction a novation. If it were a novation, then the new note was accepted as a discharge of the old one. It might as well be called payment. It still required an express agreement that one obligation shall be substituted for the other.

3. The note was secured by mortgage, and the mortgage has not been foreclosed. Moreover, there was a prior mortgage upon the property, which was foreclosed. The plaintiff was a party defendant, and duly served with summons. It did not appear in the action, and the prior mortgage was foreclosed as against it, and the property sold for the debt secured by the first mortgage, and a deed had been made to the purchaser before this action was commenced. It is contended that under the provisions of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure the only mode in which plaintiff can obtain a personal judgment is to foreclose, and take a deficiency judgment if the security proves insufficient. And, further, that as the plaintiff, through its own neglect, failed to apply for and obtain such judgment in the action brought to foreclose the first mortgage, but allowed judgment to go against it, it is barred of any action whatever for the recovery of its debt. Doubtless it was upon this ground that the learned judge of the trial court granted the motion for a nonsuit, basing its decision upon the ruling in Brown v. Willis, 67 Cal. 235, 7 Pac. 682. That case differs from this mainly, if not solely, in that there the defendant appeared, and set up his second mortgage, and then allowed judgment to go against him, which did not recognize his lien, or give him judgment for his debt. It was said he might have had his rights adjudged, and did not, and is barred. In the opinion authority is quoted to the effect that a defendant in an action is bound by a judgment against him as to defenses which he might have made. I am unable to comprehend the rationale of the decision, unless it was upon the theory that the second mortgagee had made himself an actor in the case, had put his rights as a mortgagee in issue, and had then, through his neglect, allowed judgment to go against him, adjudging that he had no lien or claim upon the premises. The only issue tendered to the junior mortgagee, by merely making him a party to a suit to foreclose brought by the prior mortgagee, is in the allegation that the right or claim of the junior mortgagee is subject to the lien claimed by the plaintiff in the foreclosure suit. As to any possible defense he may have to that issue so tendered, he is concluded by the decree whether he appears in the case or not. The doctrine appealed to does not and cannot go beyond that.

Aside from the legislative policy declared in section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, plaintiff was under no obligation to intervene, file a cross complaint, and set up his mortgage, and obtain a foreclosure in that action. Conceding that the individual defendants were merely sureties or guarantors, to the effect that the security was sufficient to pay the debt, the question would be, has plaintiff, by his neglect or otherwise, lost any part of the security to their injury? The failure to obtain a decree foreclosing its mortgage did not have that effect. The question, then, is whether section 726 or the decisions of this court prohibit a suit of this character under the circumstances. It has been held that a mortgagee cannot waive his security and bring a personal action. Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal. 154, 23 Pac. 1086. And in the same case it was held that he cannot maintain a personal action even if the security is worthless because of prior liens. It has also been held that, if he loses his right to foreclose through his negligence, he cannot then bring a personal action to recover his debt. Society v. Thornton, 109 Cal. 427, 42 Pac. 447. On the other hand, it has been held that, after the mortgage security has been exhausted, a personal action may, under some circumstances, be maintained for the deficiency. In Vandewater v. McRae, 27 Cal. 596, after foreclosure, a sale, and judgment for a deficiency, plaintiff was allowed to sue an indorser of the note. In Blumberg v. Birch, 99 Cal. 416, 34 Pac. 102, one who had foreclosed his mortgage against an absent mortgagor, where a personal judgment could not be entered, was allowed afterwards to maintain a personal action to recover the debt still unpaid. It was there said that it does not follow that, "after the mortgage security has been exhausted, leaving a deficiency which is no longer secured, no new action on the note can ever be maintained." In Bank v. Casaccia, 103 Cal. 641, 37 Pac. 648, suit was brought to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a note which had been assigned as additional security for another note, which was also secured by mortgage. The principal note had been foreclosed, and a subsequent suit to foreclose the mortgage given to secure the note assigned as collateral. It was contended that plaintiff could not maintain this second suit, but should have brought one suit to foreclose both mortgages. It was held that, having foreclosed the principal mortgage, and having exhausted the security, plaintiff could maintain this action on the second mortgage. It was said: "The obvious purpose of the statute is to compel one who has taken a special lien to secure his debt to exhaust his security before having recourse to the general assets of the debtor. When he has done this, or when, without his fault, the security has been lost, the policy of the law does not prohibit a personal action." See, also, Donaldson v. Grant (Utah) 49 Pac. 779. Was not the security lost in this case without fault on the part of plaintiff? It was the fault of the mortgagor, and not of the junior mortgagee, that default was made in the payment of the first mortgage, and that it became necessary to foreclose it. I know of no rule of law or equity which required the second mortgagee to bring suit to recover his debt when the first mortgagee saw fit to do so. It is apparent that, had he foreclosed, he would have received nothing. I cannot conceive upon what theory the mortgagor or any of the payors can complain that he did not do so. Plaintiff has no longer a lien upon the property, and his debt is not now secured by mortgage. He did not voluntarily release his security. He has not waived nor lost it by his negligence. It was lost by the fault of the mortgagor in not paying the first mortgage. If there had been a surplus, and the plaintiff had failed to get it by his neglect, it might be different. I see no difference now between this case and the case suggested in Toby v. Railroad Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 Pac. 550, of a mortgage upon a ship which had been burned. Plaintiff has no security or lien, and it has not been lost through its neglect.

The particular mode of entering the personal judgment for the deficiency is not an important matter in the policy inaugurated in section 726. The important matter was to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and to compel the creditor to first exhaust his security. The mode provided for the entry of the judgment is a mere matter of convenience; is, in fact, a privilege given to the mortgagee. As we have seen, where this cannot be done, a separate personal action may be had. Here, if plaintiff had filed a cross complaint in the action to foreclose, other parties would have been necessary. I see no difference in principle, or any injury to defendants, in the course pursued. Under these views the evidence which was excluded by the ruling complained of does not seem important. The judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—AMENDMENTS—NOTICE.

ceptions are served, "the proposed bill and amendments must, within 10 days thereafter, be presented by the party seeking the settlement of the bill to the judge * * * upon 5 days' notice to the adverse party," requires the notice to the adverse party, as well as the presentation to the judge, to be within the 10 days.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to enforce payment of an assessment for street work. Judgment was given for defendants on motion for nonsuit, from which, and from the order granting defendants' motion, plaintiff appeals. The judgment was filed and entered June 26, 1896, and notice of judgment was served June 27th. The record shows the following: July 6th plaintiff served his proposed statement on appeal. On July 11th defendants served proposed amendments to statement. July 15th plaintiff delivered to the judge the proposed statement and amendments. July 30th plaintiff served notice on defendants that the statement and amendments were presented to the court July 15th for settlement; and on August 1st, he served notice on defendants that the statement would be presented to the judge for settlement on August 8th. At the hearing defendants' attorney filed written objections to the settlement of the statement. The court overruled the objections, and settled the statement, to which defendants excepted. Plaintiff did not move for a new trial, and no notice of such motion was necessary to entitle him to have the errors reviewed of which he complains, if he had pursued the statutory course. Plaintiff presented for settlement what he termed "a proposed statement on appeal." The Code makes no provision for the settlement of a statement on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 950), and, as he did not serve a notice of motion for a new trial, he is not entitled to have "a statement of the case" to be used on an appeal from the judgment. But he was entitled to a bill of exceptions, and, as there is no substantial difference between a statement and a bill of exceptions, he should not be deprived of the fruits of his appeal because he called the document presented a statement, rather than a bill of exceptions. People v. Crane, 60 Cal. 279. See, also, Jue Fook Sam v. Lord, 83 Cal. 159, 23 Pac. 225. Treated as a bill of exceptions, section 950, Code Civ. Proc., requires it to be settled as provided in sections 649 or 650, Code Civ. Proc. It is provided by section 650, supra, that when the proposed amendments to the bill are served "the proposed bill and amendments must, within ten days thereafter, be presented by the party seeking the settlement of the bill to the judge who tried or heard the case, upon five days' notice to the adverse party, or be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge." In this case plaintiff delivered the proposed statement and amendments to the judge within the time required, to wit, July 15th, but he did not serve at that time any notice on defendants. Plaintiff did, however, on July 30th, notify defendants that he had presented the statement and amendments to the judge for settlement on the 15th day of July. Later—August 1st—he notified defendants that the statement and amendments would be presented to the court for settlement on August 8th, and on that day the matter came up, defendants objecting as before stated. The statute plainly required that the statement and amendments should be presented to the judge within ten days "upon five days' notice to the adverse party." The notice to the adverse party was as necessary as the presentation to the judge. The subsequent notices came too late. It was error for the judge to settle the statement against the objection of defendants. Henry v. Merguire, 106 Cal. 142, 39 Pac. 599, and cases there cited; Gallardo v. Telegraph Co., 49 Cal. 510; Jue Fook Sam v. Lord, supra; Hayne, New Trial, § 260. The judgment should be affirmed.

SMITH v. JORDAN. (L. A. 399.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 2, 1898.)

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—TIME OF PRESENTATION.

In case of appeal from order made before final judgment, bill of exceptions presented 20 days after the order is too late, as, though Code Civ. Proc. § 649, expressly allows, in such case, presentations of bill for settlement only at time of ruling complained of, appellant is, after analogy with the provisions of section 650 allowing 10 days after judgment for presentation of bill, entitled to 10 days after the order therefor, he is entitled to no more.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by William R. Smith against May Agnes Jordan. From order dismissing attachment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Mulford & Pollard, for appellant. Chas. Wellborn, Geo. J. Denis, and A. W. Hutton, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. This is an appeal from an order dissolving plaintiff's writ of attachment. The order was made and entered February 18, 1897. The proposed bill of exceptions, by which the appeal comes here, was served on defendant's attorneys March 10, 1897, and was not presented to the judge or filed with the clerk until March 22d, at which time it was presented to the judge for settlement, no judgment having been rendered in the action. Defendant objected to the settlement on the ground that it was not prepared, proposed, served, or presented to the court or counsel within the time allowed by law. The court, however, settled the bill, and defendant now renews the objection, which he may do. Gumpel v. Castagnetto, 97 Cal. 15, 31 Pac. 898.

It was said by this court in Flagg v. Puterbaugh, 98 Cal. 134, 32 Pac. 863, that where the case falls under section 649, Code Civ. Proc. (as this case seems to do), the bill of exceptions should be allowed and settled within a reasonable time, "and that the analogy furnished by sections 650 and 651, Id., should determine what is a reasonable time." Section 650 requires the party, within 10 days after entry of judgment, etc., to prepare draft of a bill and serve the same, and within 10 days after such service the adverse party may file amendments, and the bill and amendments must within 10 days thereafter, upon 5 days' notice to the adverse party, be presented to the judge. The proposed bill here was not prepared and served until 20 days after the order was made.

Under the practice pointed out in Flagg v. Puterbaugh, it was plaintiff's duty to prepare and serve his proposed bill within 10 days after the order was made. This court said in that case that it "should lean in favor of giving to litigants every reasonable opportunity of presenting their cases on the merits"; and the court accordingly gave a construction to section 649 which would have served the purpose of plaintiff in the present instance had he pursued the course indicated. It was there said, also, that a bill of exceptions to an order such as we have here was necessary only because of rule 29 of this court, and litigants were told to follow the practice prescribed by sections 650 and 651. To sustain the trial court in settling the bill of exceptions, under the circumstances of this case, would require us to remove all limit of time in the steps to be taken, and leave the courts practically without any guide. This view of the matter makes it unnecessary to pass upon the merits of the questions involved in the appeal. The order dissolving the writ should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order dissolving the writ is affirmed.

BLAIR v. BLAIR. (S. F. 1,386.)

DIVORCE—JUDGMENT—REVIEW.

Where the result of two considerations of a case by a trial court is a refusal in each instance to grant a divorce on the ground of mental cruelty, and the evidence is conflicting in all substantial matters, a new trial will not be ordered.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Wm. R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by Alice J. Blair against Walter B. Blair. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. Thompson and W. W. Barrows, for appellant. Dunne & McPike, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action for divorce, plaintiff claiming that defendant has practiced upon her extreme cruelty. The trial court found against the allegations of the complaint, and appellant is now prosecuting an appeal from the judgment and order denying her motion for a new trial. The single question presented by the record is, does the evidence support the findings of fact? No sound purpose would be subserved by an extended review in this opinion of the evidence. It is sufficient to say that the case is one of conflicting evidence. The cruelty relied upon to support the complaint is largely mental cruelty, and in such cases especially it is for the trial court to weigh and measure the evidence in order that the ultimate fact may be properly determined. The evidence may be said to be conflicting in all substantial matters. The trial court had it under consideration twice, and in each instance held against plaintiff's contention. Under well-settled rules, we will not order a new trial under the circumstances here disclosed. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BEACH et al. (Cr. 422.)

INFORMATION—COMMITMENT—CRIMINAL LAW.

1. An information cannot be set aside on the ground that defendant has not been "legally committed," in that there was not evidence before the magistrate to show an offense, where evidence was heard by the magistrate.

2. Defendant, moving to set aside the information on the ground that there was no order of commitment, has the burden of showing this.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Information of Ben Beach and another was set aside, and the people appeal. Reversed.

W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and Henry E. Carter, for the People. Farrall & Carroll, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This appeal is from an order setting aside an information on the ground that defendants had not been legally committed. It is contended that the defendants had not been legally committed, because the evidence before the magistrate did not show that a public offense had been committed. If the magistrate had no power or jurisdiction to hold the examination, if no complaint had been made charging the defendants with a public offense, and perhaps if no evidence at all was taken by the magistrate, and there was no waiver by the defendants, it might be held that the defendants had not been legally committed. People v. Howard, 111 Cal. 655, 44 Pac. 342. The phrase "legally committed" refers to the examination of the charge and holding the defendant to answer by the magistrate. Ex parte Baker, 88 Cal. 84, 25 Pac. 966. If a magistrate, upon a complaint duly made, and charging a public offense, has heard the evidence, and has committed the defendant, that ends the matter so far as concerns this motion. The question here is not, as upon habeas corpus, whether a person is illegally deprived of his liberty, but whether he can legally be tried upon a criminal charge. A preliminary examination and commitment by a magistrate are required before an information can be filed, and an examination by a grand jury before an indictment, not so much to protect the liberties of the citizen as to protect him from being prosecuted upon slight evidence or mere suspicion, or at the instigation of private malice. A trial before a jury must still be had before a final judgment can be made depriving an accused person of his liberty. These precautions are entirely conventional, although since the days of the star chamber they have been deemed of the highest importance. The guaranty of a speedy trial to an accused person has made such precautions of less importance than formerly as affecting the liberty of the people. The right to have a charge dismissed is regulated by statute, and, as we have seen, the phrase "legally committed" means only that the accused has been committed by a magistrate who has jurisdiction to hold the examination, and who has actually heard the evidence, and determined that probable cause exists for holding the defendant. The point was decided in People v. More, 68 Cal. 500, 9 Pac. 461. Counsel attempt a distinction on the ground that the alleged defect there was that venue was not shown, but the difference is not obvious. If the point was founded in fact there as here, the evidence failed to show an offense for which the magistrate could legally hold the accused person. The decision was a construction of section 995 of the Penal Code, and holds that on the motion to set aside the information the superior court cannot review and overrule the finding of the magistrate that the evidence taken before him was sufficient.

The point is also made by the respondents that it does not appear that an order for the commitment of the defendants was indorsed on the depositions, or in fact that any such order was made. It is a sufficient reply to this suggestion that it does not appear that such order was not regularly and properly made. On a motion by the defendant to set aside an information on the ground that the defendant has not been legally committed it is certainly incumbent upon the moving party to establish his contention. The presumption is that official authority has been regularly and legally exercised, until the contrary is shown. The bill of exceptions purports to show what evidence was submitted to the superior court, and it shows no attempt to attack the information upon that ground. The order appealed from is reversed.

BOOTH et al. v. OAKLAND BANK OF SAVINGS et al. (S. F. 1,046.)

TRUST—COMPLAINT—DEPOSIT IN BANK.

1. A trust is created where one having a deposit in a savings bank stated to its teller that she wanted it so either of her two sisters could, in the event of her death, draw the money without probate proceedings, and thereupon gave an order to the bank to pay to either of them or herself, and furnished their signatures, and the bank added their names to the pass book, and in like manner changed the account in the ledger.

2. A complaint claiming money deposited in a bank by B., as to which she created a trust in favor of plaintiffs, is sufficient where it states that B. made the deposit, and that plaintiffs are the owners of it, and entitled to receive it, without stating that B. owned it, this being a matter of evidence to show plaintiff's ownership.

3. In the absence of a claim by a third person, a bank is estopped to deny the ownership of one who makes a deposit in her own name.

4. A statement in an answer cures the omission thereof from the complaint.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Cornelia E. Booth and another against the Oakland Bank of Savings and others. Judgment of nonsuit. Plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

M. M. Estee, Chas. A. Shurtleff, and F. E. Whitney, for appellants. John Yule, E. M. Gibson, and Benj. F. Woolner, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is by the plaintiffs from a judgment of nonsuit and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The action was brought to recover from said bank certain moneys originally deposited by Frances A. Bell, and her executors were made parties because of a claim made by them of a right to receive and control said money as a part of her estate. The bank does not question its liability to some one, and therefore its counsel does not appear upon respondents' brief.

Frances A. Bell died in the city of Oakland January 27, 1895, in which city she had resided for many years. She was a widow, and, so far as the record shows, without children, or any relatives except her two sisters, Cornelia E. Booth and Aurelia L. James, both of whom resided in the city of Chicago. Aurelia L. James, originally a plaintiff in this action, died during its pendency, and her administrator was substituted. The defendants Taggart and Montgomery are the executors of the will of said Frances A. Bell, deceased. On and prior to May 17, 1893, Mrs. Bell had on deposit with said savings bank $8,503.99, and on that day she drew out $3,300, leaving on deposit $5,203.99. Samuel Breck, Jr., teller of the bank, called for plaintiffs, testified: That he saw Mrs. Bell in regard to her savings account on the date last above mentioned. That she was desirous of adding the names of her sisters, so that, in the event of her death, they could draw the money without probate proceedings. That he asked her if she wanted the account, in the event of her death, made payable to her sisters jointly, and she said she wanted it so that either one could draw it after her death. That he immediately prepared a blank for her to sign, and she signed it in his presence. Said instrument or order is as follows: "To Oakland Bank of Savings, May 17, 1893: In re savings deposit 7,041, in my name. Pay to the individual order of either Cornelia E. Booth, or Aurelia L. James, or myself. [Signed] Frances A. Bell." That Mrs. Bell furnished the signatures of her said sisters from letters which she had at that time, and pasted them in the signature book, and the bank added said names to the pass book, and on the same day, in like manner, changed the account in the ledger. That as to her reason for changing the account, he could not recall the language she used, but the substance was that she wanted to fix the account so that, in the event of her death, her sisters, who were in the East, could draw her money without the estate being probated, and that she said nothing about who was to draw the money during her life. That he told her at the time in putting these names in that they could draw the money in her lifetime, and that she answered it made no difference; they would not do it. The evidence further shows that Mrs. Bell was greatly attached to her sisters; that for several years she had been afflicted with heart disease, having frequent "spells" or acute attacks; that she frequently stated to her friends that she had but a short time to live; that she expected to die in one of these attacks, and desired to so arrange her money then in said savings bank that her sisters could have the immediate benefit of it without waiting for administration upon her estate. She was a woman of deep religious convictions, a regular attendant at church, and died upon the street, while returning from church, in the manner and from the cause which she had anticipated. Mrs. Bell informed her sisters of the disposition she had made of the money in the savings bank by a letter, which reads as follows: "Dear Sisters Aurelia and Cornelia: By putting your names on my bank book, and giving your signatures to the bank, I find that, if anything should happen to me, you can draw the money that may be to my credit, dividing equally between you two. This seems the better way for me to arrange matters; otherwise all money, with mortgages, would have to pass through probate, making a delay of months before you could get anything. You will see the advantage of having money in savings bank rather than in investment it would take so long to realize upon. It will be necessary to leave bank book here. No one can draw money without order from me, and only you two in the event of my death. Mrs. Beeny will take charge of the book. I have all confidence in her attending to my request. I cannot tell what may be in bank. Whatever it is, just divide it equally between you two. My will provides for others. You can communicate with Mrs. J. H. Beeny, Centennial, 14th street, Oakland, and she will tell you what to do." In the fall of 1893 Mrs. Bell visited her sisters in Chicago, and then stated to them "that she had but a short time to live, and had deposited the said sum of money with the said bank to the three names jointly, for the use of her sisters, Aurelia L. and Cornelia E., and then and there stated that it was subject to the check of either sister on demand," and "that she had another account in some bank in San Francisco, which was in her own name only." Other evidence of a similar character was given, but need not here be repeated. The ground of the motion for nonsuit was that plaintiffs have failed to prove by competent testimony either an absolute gift to her said sisters, or a gift made by her in view of death.

There can be no doubt of the intention of Mrs. Bell in this matter, and that intention should be consummated if the law will permit it; and, if there is any ground upon which the evidence would justify a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the motion for a nonsuit should have been denied. The evidence falls far short of establishing a completed gift from Mrs. Bell to the plaintiffs; and, although there are features in the case resembling a gift causa mortis, there are other features which distinguish it from such a gift. But these need not be discussed, as there was evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiffs to show that Mrs. Bell purposed to create a trust for the benefit of the plaintiffs, and that the trust was accepted by the bank. It is well settled that a trust in personal property need not be in writing, and it is equally well settled that no set form of words is necessary to create a trust. The Civil Code (section 2221) provides: "Subject to the provisions of section 852, a voluntary trust is created, as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any acts or words of the trustor indicating with reasonable certainty: (1) An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust; and (2) the subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust." The bank teller testified that Mrs. Bell wanted the deposit made payable so that "either one of her sisters could draw it after her death." The substance was that she wanted to fix the account so that, in the event of her death, her sisters, who were in the East, could draw her money without the estate being probated. She said nothing about who was to draw the money during her life. "I told her at the time in putting these names in that they could draw the money during her lifetime. She answered it made no difference; they would not do it." This testimony, and the transaction between Mrs. Bell and the bank, taken with the letter addressed to the plaintiffs, informing them of what she had done, and what they could do, and where they could obtain the pass book, would have authorized the court, in the absence of any other evidence, to find that it was her purpose to create a trust in their favor. Blasdel v. Locke, 52 N. H. 238; Institution v. Hathorn, 88 Me. 122, 33 Atl. 836; Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134; Mable v. Bailey, 95 N. Y. 206; Cunningham v. Davenport, 147 N. Y. 43, 41 N. E. 412; Gerrish v. Institution, 128 Mass. 159. The Code does not require that the beneficiary shall be informed of the trust, or shall express an acceptance. If an acceptance is necessary, the demand made by these beneficiaries upon the bank, and this action to compel the execution of the trust, are certainly sufficient. That as to the trustee a trust was created, and accepted, is clear. Civ. Code, § 2222. "The mutual consent of a trustor and trustee creates a trust of which the beneficiary may take advantage at any time prior to its rescission." Id., § 2251. This trust was not rescinded. The circumstance that Mrs. Bell retained the power to withdraw the deposit does not affect the validity of the trust. Section 2280 of the Civil Code provides: "A trust cannot be revoked by the trustor after its acceptance, actual or presumed, by the trustee and beneficiaries, except by the consent of all the beneficiaries, unless the declaration of trust reserves a power of revocation to the trustor, and in that case the power must be strictly pursued." I do not think it necessary to determine whether the control over the fund reserved by Mrs. Bell is to be regarded as a power of revocation, or whether the whole transaction is to be regarded as a trust in her favor of so much of the fund as she might see proper to withdraw in her lifetime, and of the remainder for her sisters. In either case the practical result is the same; for a power of revocation as to the whole may be exercised as to a part, and, when so exercised, does not affect the remainder. The court, therefore, instead of granting a nonsuit, should have determined whether the evidence was sufficient to create such trust, and rendered its judgment accordingly.

I think the view I have taken of this case, and the conclusion reached, is fully sustained by this court in the case of Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 449, 11 Pac. 659. That action was brought to determine whether the estate of Eli W. Hawkins, deceased, or his minor children, were entitled to certain money in the hands of the plaintiff. In September, 1879, there was due to Hawkins from the Odd Fellows Savings Bank the sum of $14,334, evidenced by a pass book of said bank, which was then in liquidation. Hawkins made a verbal assignment of said money to Hellman for the use and benefit of the minor children of Hawkins, but reserving to himself the right to draw such sums of said money from the trustee as he might deem proper for his own use. To facilitate the collection of the money from the bank, Hawkins, at Hellman's request, made a written assignment of said claim to the Bank of California, and said bank collected and paid over to Hellman $8,959.20, of which sum Hawkins drew at different times prior to his death $6,271.44, leaving in the hands of Hellman $2,687.76, and remaining uncollected $5,375.53. The court below found there was a trust, and that the children were entitled to the money remaining in the hands of Mr. Hellman, and that remaining uncollected from the Odd Fellows Bank; and the judgment was affirmed. In the case at bar two or three small amounts were withdrawn, and other deposits made, by Mrs. Bell, but the amount on deposit at the time of her death exceeded that on deposit on May 17, 1893, and no new direction appears to have been at any time given to the bank. The possession of the bank book from the time the deposit was changed to the time of Mrs. Bell's death is immaterial. The bank had full knowledge of the transaction, and that it held the deposit after her death solely as trustee for the plaintiffs.

It is contended by respondents that the complaint does not state a cause of action. A demurrer upon that ground was interposed and overruled. The point made by respondents is that it is not alleged that Mrs. Bell "was the owner of the money at the time it was deposited, or at any time." The complaint alleges that Mrs. Bell made the deposit, and that plaintiffs are the owners of it, and entitled to receive it. The ownership of the plaintiffs is all that is material to be alleged. As to the former ownership, that is only a matter of evidence, which need not be directly alleged. Besides, the presumption is that the money Mrs. Bell carried to the bank and deposited in her own name was her money, and the bank is estopped to deny it, unless a claim is made by another, who shows a better right; and the executors, in their answer, admit that they claim that the deposit was the property of Mrs. Bell at the time of her death, and now belongs to her estate. If the complaint were defective in the particular claimed, the defect is cured by the answer. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

(122 Cal. 3)

PLASS v. PLASS et al. (S. F. 1086.)<sup>1</sup>

RESULTING TRUST—TENANTS IN COMMON—RIGHT IN INCOME—EVIDENCE—LACHES—HARMLESS ERROR—IMPEACHMENT.

1. Testimony of plaintiff that C. told him that the purchase price of a piece of land he was purchasing was $6,000, and that plaintiff could have a third interest in it, and that plaintiff gave C. $2,000, and that C. then paid for it, is sufficient, as against the mere recital of $4,000 in the deed and the receipt for purchase money, to support a finding that $6,000 was the purchase price.

2. Plaintiff's right by reason of a resulting trust to a third interest in property bought by C. is not affected by the fact that C. paid only $4,000 for the property, and all of it was his own money, though he told plaintiff the purchase price was $6,000, and that plaintiff could have a third interest therein; plaintiff having given him $2,000 with which to pay for such interest.

3. There is shown no resulting trust in favor of plaintiff for a third of the land bought of B., and taken in the name of C., merely because, with the knowledge of plaintiff, it was paid for with income from land which plaintiff and C. owned in common, and in the proportion of one to two, and worked together; there being no presumption that plaintiff's interest in the income, as in the land, was one-third.

4. A resulting trust in favor of plaintiff for a third of the land bought in the name of C. is not shown by the testimony of a third person that C. told him plaintiff had such an interest therein; plaintiff, when called as a witness, not having so testified, but merely that he supposed he was to have an interest, as it was bought with income from land which he and C. owned and worked together.

5. Suit to establish a resulting trust is not barred by laches, however much time has lapsed; the cestui que trust having been in possession of the property, or in joint possession with the trustee, the latter admitting his rights.

6. It is harmless error, in an action to establish a resulting trust in land bought in the name of C.,—part from H., with money of plaintiff and W., and part from B., with income from the land bought from H.,—to reject evidence that thereafter C. bought land which plaintiff did not know of, and claimed no interest in; such evidence, offered to show C. was dealing with the incomes of the other two tracts as his own, and to rebut the claim of W. that C. always consulted with him about his business affairs, being too inconsequential to require reversal because of its rejection.

7. A question, to lay foundation for impeachment, whether, at certain time and place, witness had a certain conversation with P., need not state that P. was present, or that no one else was present, though Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, requires such a question to state the "persons present."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; E. D. Ham, Judge.

Action by William Plass against Catherine Plass, executrix of Charles W. Plass, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Reversed in part.

P. S. King, A. J. Hull, John T. York, and F. E. Johnston, for appellants. M. M. Estee, C. A. Schurtleff, and T. B. Hutchinson, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. This action is brought to obtain a decree that Charles W. Plass, deceased, held an undivided one-third of the premises described in the complaint in trust for plaintiff, and that plaintiff is the owner of an undivided one-third of said property. Plaintiff had judgment, from which the defendants Phillip Plass, as executor and individually, and Charles Plass, Jr., appeal upon bill of exceptions. Briefly stated, the court found that a resulting trust arose in favor of plaintiff in the property first described in the complaint, known as the "Haskell Ranch," by reason of plaintiff's having paid one-third of the purchase price thereof, and a like trust in the property next described, known as the "Goodrich Ranch," by reason of its having been purchased with the income of the "Haskell Ranch," of which income plaintiff was one-third owner.

1. Appellants contend that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court, for the reason that certain findings upon which it rests are unsupported by the evidence:

First, that the purchase price of the Haskell ranch was found to be $6,000, whereas the evidence showed that it was $4,000; and, second, that plaintiff furnished $2,000 of this money with which to make the purchase. Appellants rely upon the fact that the consideration mentioned in the deed and in a contemporaneous receipt given by a temporary custodian of the money (one Calhoun) was $4,000. The evidence apart from the deed and the receipt tended to show that Charles (now deceased) represented to his brother William (plaintiff) that the purchase price of the Haskell ranch was $6,000, and when plaintiff was asked by his brother, "How much do you want of it," he replied, "I said I would take one-third of it." Plaintiff further testified: "The next day * * * I gave him two thousand dollars, and he says, 'I ain't got quite enough,' and I loaned him eight hundred dollars [which latter sum was afterwards repaid], and he ran right up and paid the money to Calhoun. When he came back he said, 'All right; that he had bought the land.' * * *" Again: "He told me Judge Grant [the owner] told him he could have it for six thousand dollars. * * * I counted out two thousand dollars, and gave it to him. * * * He took the two thousand dollars from me to buy a one-third interest in the property for me. * * * He told me that he had bought the property with that money." This evidence, uncontradicted except by the receipt and deed, certainly tended to support the finding as to the price paid, which we cannot now disturb. Furthermore, we cannot see how the finding could injure defendants, for, even if it should have shown the consideration to be $4,000, and the cause of action was otherwise supported by the evidence, plaintiff had a one-third interest in the purchase, and that is what he now claims. If he paid $2,000, which the evidence tended to show he did pay, and the property cost but $4,000, it supports his claim to one-third interest in the purchase. The most that can be claimed is that the deed and the receipt tend to discredit plaintiff's evidence, which is a question we cannot take away from the trial court, or review here. And this disposes of appellants' second point, that, as the consideration paid was but $4,000, it follows that Charles did not use William's money in the purchase at all, but had enough of his own, and used it. The evidence tended to show that he took William's money for the purpose of making the purchase on the basis of $6,000, in which William was to have a one-third interest. If Charles in fact made the purchase for $4,000, after having so represented the cost to William, it might be good ground for William to claim a half interest, instead of a third, but it surely cannot be urged in support of a claim that William had no interest whatever in the purchase. Charles could not take the money of William, under the circumstances shown here, to be used for a particular investment on his and William's joint account, and make the investment, and afterwards treat the money as a loan. To hold that he could do so would violate the plainest principles of equity and fair dealing. William answered on cross-examination, when asked whether he knew that his brother Charles used his (William's) money in making the purchase: "No, sir; I can't swear to it." Nor was it necessary that he should see the money paid. He gave the money to his brother Charles for the purpose of being invested in this particular property, and the investment was made by Charles in accordance with the mutual understanding. His representatives, who stand in his shoes, cannot, nor could Charles if he were alive, now be heard to defeat William's interest by claiming that the purchase was made wholly with the money of Charles, and that he kept William's money for other uses. Neither is the fact, if it be the fact, that Charles was able to buy the land on his own account, at all inconsistent with his making this particular purchase for the mutual benefit of himself and his brother. There is much evidence tending to corroborate the testimony of plaintiff as to his interest in the property. It is not without conflict with defendants' evidence; it may be "suspicious, if not highly improbable," in some particulars, as claimed by defendants; but there was sufficient evidence to support the findings, and under the rule well settled we cannot disturb them. We think that, as to the Haskell ranch, the evidence tended to establish a resulting trust, within the principles stated in Woodside v. Hewel, 109 Cal. 481, 42 Pac. 152.

Third. It is contended that the evidence does not support the finding that the Goodrich ranch was purchased from the incomes of the Haskell ranch for the sum of $3,000, and that one-third of the purchase price was paid by respondent, William Plass, and from his own money and property, and that "up to the time of his death the said Charles W. Plass held the legal title to an undivided one-third" of said property "in trust for plaintiff." It appears from the evidence that after the purchase of the Haskell ranch, October 11, 1856, it was leased until 1858, when Charles moved onto it with his family, and his brother William (plaintiff) also went into possession with him, and remained there until Charles died, and until the present time. Plaintiff testified: "As to the income from the ranch during the time me and my brother were on it, I do not know how much it amounts to. I never kept run of it." He testified that they made money every year farming the Haskell place. "I never kept any accounts between myself and my brother Charles W. Plass. Whenever I wanted money, I would ask him for it, and he would give it to me. Neither myself or my brother ever received any money, as salary, wages, or monthly wages, for our work there. * * * We both went to work, we gathered the crop, it was put in the sack, and whenever it was on the market he would come to me and say, 'We can get so much for it.' Always asked my consent to sell. Always consulted me to sell. As to buying things for the ranch, I would go and get what I wanted on the ranch for it, and he same. We never got anything that amounted to anything, but what we consulted with one another." He testified that he did not know how much wheat was raised on the ranch, nor the prices received between the time of purchase of the Haskell ranch and the Goodrich ranch, which latter was purchased July 3, 1863. In speaking of this purchase, plaintiff testified: "We had a transaction relating to the purchasing of the Goodrich ranch, being the second tract described in the complaint. We had money loaned over to Suisun. My brother Charles came to me and said: 'They want eighteen hundred dollars on that ranch. Do you think it's worth it?' Says I, 'Yes; it is worth that.' 'Well,' says he, 'we will let them have eighteen hundred dollars.' and he sent right over to Suisun, where he had loaned this money to Mr. Dollerhide; and there was three thousand dollars of it. * * * We paid twenty-two hundred dollars on it. Well, after that we paid off a couple of his hired men, and he deeded the place to us. * * * It was deeded to Chas. W. Plass. He did the business. * * * The money that was paid for the Goodrich property came from the Haskell ranch, where it was made. * * * After we purchased the Goodrich place, by brother consulted with me about it all the time. * * * We farmed it up till four years ago, when we (Chas. W. Plass and I) leased it." One of the tenants was Frank Alexander. He was a witness, and testified that he leased the Goodrich ranch "the first time five years ago, this fall." "I called at the house, and Chas. W. Plass was not very well at that time, and he told me to go out and bring William in; that William had as much to say about the matter as he did; that he would have to consult William; and I went out to the barn, and we went back and talked it over, us three; and the result of it was that they told me they would let me know in a few days; and in three or four days William Plass came over, * * * and told me I could have the place." The witness testified to other instances relating to the planting of wheat, when Charles told him William would have to be consulted; that Charles signed all the leases; that William "could not write; said he didn't have any education, if I remember just right." Again he testified, when asked if Charles had ever told what interest William had in the place, that William owned or had a third interest in the place. To several other persons it appears that Charles stated that William was interested in this place; that once, when a right of way was to be obtained over it, Charles stated that William would have to be consulted, and he was consulted, and consented; likewise as to the sale of pasturage on the place, and its management in other particulars. One witness testified that Charles and William had money loaned on the Goodrich place, and had to take the place, as a witness learned from Charles Plass; the price being about four thousand dollars. Plaintiff on cross-examination also stated that the Goodrich place "came from a mortgage"; that William had loaned the Goodriches some money, and, on settlement of the indebtedness, Goodrich deeded the property to Charles. Plaintiff testified: "At the time the Goodrich deed was taken I certainly supposed that I was to get a portion of the Goodrich ranch, because it was the money that we had made together. * * * I heard him [Charles] tell Goodrich that, if he would make the ranch over to him, he would pay off the accounts of the men." He was asked, if he knew that the Haskell deed was taken in Charles' name, "if he didn't feel anxious about having the Goodrich deed made all right," to which he answered: "No, no, sir; he told me, and I trusted it all to him." Several witnesses testified to the fact that, in the general management of the business of the two places, Charles represented that William was interested, and would have to be consulted; such as matters of sale of grain, insurance, payments of money, etc. In speaking of the Goodrich deed, plaintiff testified: "There was no understanding or agreement between myself and my brother as to whose name this deed should be taken in. I did not know in whose name it was taken in, and never made any inquiry. My brother said to me: 'All right. Dolan has got the papers.' He never said anything to me about it, or any interest I claimed in it, and I never asked him for it. The money that paid for the deed was made on the ranch, and the way I know this is that he had no other money that I could see; and, if he had other money, I might not have known it. I kept my eyes open to see what my brother was doing generally, but not in the way of money matters. I left that all to him. When he sold crops, he took the money and put it in the bank, and did what he pleased with it. He did not have to consult me about it." The defendants introduced the deeds to the property, showing that Charles was the grantee; also, the right of way referred to executed by Charles; also, the mortgage of Goodrich to Charles, and its satisfaction by Charles; also, deeds to certain lands adjoining and forming part of the Goodrich place. Defendants Phillip and Charles Plass, Jr., testified in effect that plaintiff never, so far as they knew, assumed any control of the property, or claimed any interest in it, and in other respects gave evidence contradictory of plaintiff's evidence. No other witnesses were called by defendants. The will of Charles was introduced by defendants, from which it appears that deceased devised all his property to his wife, Catherine, and his brother William (plaintiff), during their natural lives, and at their death to go to defendants,—four-fifths to Phillip, and one-fifth to Charles.

The foregoing is the principal evidence bearing upon the claim of plaintiff to one-third of the Goodrich place. The evidence, fairly interpreted, indicates that William had some interest in the Goodrich ranch. That interest, however, depends entirely upon the interest he had in the incomes of the Haskell ranch. The evidence as to his interest in that land showed the exact amount of money paid by him towards its purchase, its purchase price, and the precise quantity of his interest. But as to his share or interest in the incomes, out of which it is claimed by him the Goodrich ranch was paid for, there is no evidence whatever; nor is there any evidence as to the quantity of interest William was to have in the Goodrich ranch, nor as to what proportion of the incomes used in its purchase he was entitled to. There never was any accounting between the brothers, and William had no knowledge and gave no evidence as to the amount of the incomes, gross or net. We do not think a presumption should be indulged that his interest in the incomes was one-third, or any given proportion, and that one-third of the money paid for the Goodrich place belonged to him, in order to help out what the law requires to be made certain and unambiguous and beyond conjecture. His ownership of a one-third interest in the land is not inconsistent with his ownership of a less interest in the income, or no interest at all. The brothers lived together under the same roof, and contributed their labor; but Charles was evidently the managing man, and was possessed of the superior ability to conduct the business. Their relation must have been the subject of some agreement as to the division of the proceeds of the ranch, and the terms of that agreement ought not to be left entirely to presumption. Where the tenant out of possession sues the tenant in possession for rents, issues, and profits, it is essential to be averred that the latter occupied the premises upon an agreement with the former as receiver or bailiff of his share of the rents and profits. It is essential to recovery that this circumstance exist. Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 414; Howard v. Throckmorton, 59 Cal. 79. If the incomes had been received by Charles as rentals paid by third persons while William was out of possession, he would have had a claim, and the law would presume his interest to be commensurate with his interest in the land. But we do not think this rule as to presumptions would apply where the two were engaged in producing the crops in an action to establish a resulting trust. It was as much the duty of William to prove his interest in the incomes as in the land, inasmuch as he claims an interest in the Goodrich ranch because of his ownership of part of the incomes. If this were an accounting for the incomes, we do not think he could rest alone upon the presumption of his ownership. In a case such as we have here, neither his joint ownership in the lands, nor his joint possession, nor both together, can give rise to the presumption that he owned one-third of the incomes. The rule under which resulting trusts are created has its origin in the natural presumption that he who supplies the money means the purchase to be for his own benefit rather than that of another; and it has been held that the burden of proof rests upon the nominal purchaser to show that the party from whom the consideration moved did not mean the purchase to be in trust for himself, but a gift to a stranger. Dudley v. Bosworth, 10 Humph. 9; Perry, Trusts, § 139. But this presumption cannot aid or produce the presumption that the money belonged to, and was furnished by, the person claiming as cestui. He must first prove that the money was his, and was used to make the purchase. And the burden of proof on the whole case rests on the one who seeks to establish a resulting trust to show by clear evidence the necessary facts. Perry, Trusts, § 139; Johnson v. Quarles, 46 Mo. 423, approved in Philpot v. Penn, 91 Mo. 44, 3 S. W. 386. The evidence discloses no relationship as partners in the incomes, for there was no evidence of an agreement to share the profits of the business, from which is implied also an agreement to share losses. Civ. Code, §§ 2395, 2404. Plaintiff testified that Charles could do what he pleased with the money, and did not have to consult him about it. But if William was entitled to some part of the incomes, either as co-tenant or partner, and the Goodrich ranch was purchased from these incomes, that property would, at most, belong to each in the proportion they held their interests in the incomes,—it would be income in a new form. But until there was an accounting it would not be possible to ascertain the interest of William in that ranch. William testified that they made money each year on the Haskell ranch, and that the Goodrich ranch was purchased with money “from the Haskell ranch, where it was made”; but, as no accounting was ever had between the brothers, it is pure conjecture that of the earnings of the Haskell ranch, which went to purchase the Goodrich place, William was entitled to one-third on an accounting, or any particular proportion, and it is also conjecture that he was to have a one-third interest in this purchase. One witness testified that he heard Charles say that William had a third interest in the Goodrich place, but that is not enough to establish a resulting trust, as against the deed to Charles, where the beneficiary of the trust cannot, or at least does not, testify, when called as a witness, to any such interest. His interest in the Goodrich place must necessarily depend upon facts as yet unascertained. To infer from this evidence that he had a one-third interest in these incomes, and that his one-third interest would on an accounting amount to one-third the cost of the Goodrich place, would do violence to the principles governing resulting trusts heretofore laid down by this court in Woodside v. Hewel, supra, and the cases there cited. The court there said: “It is a familiar rule that it is incumbent upon him who would claim that a trust exists in his favor to establish the fact by clear, convincing, and unambiguous testimony; that the presumption that the person in whose name the legal title to land is vested is the absolute owner thereof is not to be overcome by surmise or conjecture, or by any evidence that fails to afford satisfactory proof of the fact to the tribunal before which it is presented; * * * and that, if he would claim an interest pro tanto according to the proportion of the consideration furnished by him, he must show the precise amount paid by him, as well as the amount for which the purchase was made, in order that the court may determine the respective rights of the parties in the property purchased. The presumption of ownership arising from the legal title will not be overcome, unless the interest of the claimant can be determined; and the testimony presented in support of the equitable claim must clearly show, not only the existence of the trust, but also the extent to which the property is held in trust; otherwise the legal title will prevail.” Tested by these principles, we do not think that plaintiff has sufficiently established a trust in his favor as to the Goodrich ranch. There is no breach of trust or fraud alleged. Plaintiff knew of the investment, and consented to it. No question of bad faith arises. It is clearly the case of an investment of funds which, if held and invested by Charles for the benefit of both himself and William, it must have been upon some mutual agreement, the terms of which were certain and definite, and should not be left to mere conjecture or implication. And yet there is no evidence of any agreement; and the most that William testified to is, “At the time the Goodrich deed was taken, I certainly supposed that I was to get a portion of the Goodrich ranch, because it was the money that we had made together.” But he testified to no portion, nor to any definite interest in the purchase money. It was said in Baker v. Vining, 30 Me. 121: “No case has been found where a resulting trust has been held to arise upon payments made in common by the one asserting his claim and the grantee in the deed, wherein the grantor acknowledges the receipt of the consideration from him alone, when the amount belonging to one and the other is uncertain and unknown even to those who make the payments, and no satisfactory evidence is offered exhibiting the portion which was really the property of each. The trust springs from a presumption of law, because the alleged cestui que trust has paid the money. Such presumption must be attended with no uncertainty. The whole foundation is the payment, and this must be clearly established." Assuming that the payment here was out of the common funds, there is lacking the essential element of proof as to plaintiff's interest therein. It must not be overlooked that plaintiff made no claim for many years after his rights accrued, and not until after his brother's death; and although his laches alone did not bar his claim, as we shall presently show, this fact should make the court more cautious in scrutinizing the evidence, and furnishes strong ground for applying the rule that all the elements of the trust should be clearly proved.

2. It is contended that plaintiff is barred by his own laches; citing 1 Perry, Trusts, § 141; Harris v. Hillegass, 66 Cal. 79, 4 Pac. 987; Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 285, 14 Pac. 791; Speidel v. Henrici, 120 U. S. 377, 7 Sup. Ct. 610; Douglass v. Douglass, 72 Mich. 86, 40 N. W. 177. Harris v. Hillegass, supra, was a suit for an accounting of the affairs of a partnership which had been dissolved 20 years prior to the commencement of the suit. Bell v. Hudson, supra, was a similar action brought 26 years after the death of one of the partners by the administrator of his estate. Speidel v. Henrici, supra, was a suit to enforce a trust, and was brought 50 years after plaintiff's rights, if he had any, had accrued, during all which time he took no steps to follow up his rights, or to demand an account of the trustees. Douglass v. Douglass, supra, was an action to set aside certain deeds, one of which was made 27 years and the other 30 years prior to the commencement of the action, and of the facts upon which the complainant relied she had full knowledge for more than 20 years. It is undoubtedly true that courts of equity uniformly decline to assist a person who has slept upon his rights, and shows no excuse for his laches in asserting them. Where conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence are wanting, the court is passive and does nothing, and its equitable powers will not be called forth into activity. But we have no such case here. Speaking of the statute of limitation, Mr. Justice Temple said in Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547: "I have never yet met with a case, whatever the character of the trust, where the statute has been held to bar the rights of the beneficiary in favor of the trustee, when the beneficiary has continued in possession according to his right, and no adverse claim made by the trustee. Such a case would be at variance with the fundamental idea of statutes of limitation, that possession draws to it, or rather extinguishes, all adverse claims and titles." What is here said is equally true where, under like circumstances, the rights of the beneficiary are sought to be barred by his laches. And I understand the rule to be that laches cannot be invoked to defeat a resulting trust in favor of one who has been in continuous and undisputed possession of the property in which it is sought to establish a trust, or is in joint possession with the trustee,—the latter admitting the rights of the beneficiary. Neglect to assert his rights for a long period of time while in joint possession with the trustee may be evidence tending to show that the beneficiary has no rights, but such neglect cannot of itself constitute a bar. So long as the rights of the cestui que trust are admitted, laches cannot be set up. Appellants cite 1 Perry, Trusts, § 141, quoting: "Courts will not enforce a resulting trust after a great lapse of time, or laches on the part of the supposed cestui que trust, especially when it appears that the supposed nominal purchaser has occupied and enjoyed the estate." It is, however, stated in the same section by the learned author that "if the trust is admitted, and there has been no adverse holding, lapse of time is no bar"; and, again, "Any excuse for delay that takes hold of the conscience of the chancellor, and makes it inequitable to interpose the bar, is sufficient." See cases there cited. The facts in this case make the rule relied upon by appellants inapplicable.

3. It is claimed that the court erred in its rulings at the trial. But two assignments are urged. One relates to the exclusion by the court, upon the offer of defendants, of a deed made to Charles Plass by one Easterby to certain lots in the city of Napa in 1868, after the purchase of the property in question. Plaintiff makes no claim to any interest in these lots. Defendants claimed that this purchase tended to show that Charles was dealing with the incomes of the Haskell and Goodrich ranches as his separate property; thus rebutting the claim that these incomes were the joint property of Charles and William, and also tending to rebut the claim of William that Charles always consulted him about his business affairs, while of this one William admitted entire ignorance. It seems to me that this evidence should have been admitted, but at the same time it was so light in weight and inconsequential in character that a reversal should not be ordered because of its rejection. The other ruling complained of related to a question put by plaintiff to the witness Phillip Plass for defendants, for the purpose of laying the ground for impeachment. The objection now is that the question did not embody in it the names of the persons present at the alleged conversation. The question was whether or not the witness did not directly after his father's death, at Ingall's store, in Napa, in the evening, "have the following conversation with T. R. Parker, to wit:?" (Then follows the conversation.) No names of persons present, other than that of Parker, are given, and his name only by implication as the person to whom the witness addressed himself. The court, upon objection being made, said if any other persons were present the question would be refused, and, it appearing there were none others, it was admitted. The point would seem to be whether, when no other persons than the witness and the person to whom he addresses himself are present, is it necessary to state in the impeaching question "no other persons being present," or some equivalent, and is it necessary to name this person to whom the witness has spoken "as being present"? We do not think the rule given in section 2052, Code Civ. Proc., requires more than that the statements must be related to the witness, "with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present," and this does not mean that counsel must state negatively that no other persons were present. We think, also, that, where only the two are present, it is quite superfluous to require a statement that the person spoken to was present. Presumably, he was present, or he could not have been spoken to. Much the same point was decided in People v. Bosquet, 116 Cal. 75, 47 Pac. 879.

We do not think the evidence sufficient to support the judgment that a resulting trust was created in favor of plaintiff to an undivided one-third interest in the so-called "Goodrich Ranch," and for that reason the judgment, so far as it relates to the real property known as the "Goodrich Ranch," should be reversed, and a new trial ordered; and as to the other real property, known as the "Haskell Ranch," the judgment relating thereto should be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment appealed from, so far as it relates to the lands described in the complaint, and known as the "Haskell Ranch," is affirmed, including judgment for costs; and, so far as it relates to the lands described in the complaint and known as the "Goodrich Ranch," the judgment is reversed, and as to the latter lands a new trial is ordered; such trial to be had upon the evidence already taken, and such other evidence as may be presented by either party.

ADMINISTRATORS—ISSUE OF LETTERS—SALES OF REALTY—ACTION TO SET ASIDE—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE—LIMITATIONS—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

1. The omission of a seal from letters of administration cannot be called in question in proceedings by heirs attacking a sale by an administratrix, duly confirmed, where the administratrix acted as such, and the letters recite that the seal was affixed, and the court repeatedly made orders recognizing the administratrix.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1573, requires an action to set aside an administrator's sale to be commenced within three years from the discovery of grounds invalidating the sale. Held, that where the matters relied on to impeach the sale had been of record more than 10 years, and there was adverse possession of the land, the complaint should explain the failure to acquire earlier knowledge.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 1573, provides that an action for the recovery of real estate sold by an administrator must be commenced within three years next after the settlement of the administrator's final account. Held, that where the estate is in condition to be closed, the statute will commence to run from a time thereafter reasonably necessary to obtain a settlement of the account. Per McFarland, Garoutte, and Van Fleet, JJ. Beatty, C. J., contra.

4. Where an administrator neglects to bring an action to recover property of the estate until it is barred by the statute, an heir, though a minor at the time the cause of action accrued, is also barred, since the administrator's relation to the heir is that of trustee. Per McFarland, Garoutte, and Van Fleet, JJ.

5. Code Civ. Proc. § 1573, provides that no action for the recovery of real estate sold by an administrator can be maintained by an heir unless it be commenced within three years next after the settlement of the administrator's final account. Section 1574 provides that this limitation shall not apply to minors or others under legal disability to sue at the time the right of action accrues, but that all such persons may sue at any time within three years after the removal of the disability. Held, that as to minor heirs their right to sue is barred in three years after they reach their majority, irrespective of the settlement of the administrator's account. Per Beatty, C. J.

6. An administratrix's deed was defective, and on being told of the fact she authorized an attorney to institute a suit to quiet title in her name against the purchaser, so as to cure the defect. She received full value for the property, and the title was defective through her own fault. The proceedings in the suit were regular in form, and resulted in a judgment for defendant. Held, that in an action by the heirs to have the administratrix's sale set aside for the defect, the judgment would not be disregarded as collusive and fraudulent. Per Beatty, C. J.

Harrison, Henshaw, and Temple, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Frank H. Dennis, Kitty N. Whittemore, and Willard W. Dennis against Ira Bint and others. Demurrers as to plaintiffs Frank H. Dennis and Kitty N. Whittemore on the ground of the bar of the statute of limitations were sustained. Demurrer as to Willard W. Dennis was overruled, and the court, in its findings at the trial, sustained said defendants' plea of the statute of limitations. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

T. E. Gibbon and C. O. Whittemore, for appellants. McLachlan & Cohrs, H. R. Metcalfe, W. E. Arthur, and W. S. Wright, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. When this case was in department the opinion hereto attached was prepared by Mr. Commissioner BRITT. After full consideration of the appeal in bank, we are satisfied with that opinion, and with the conclusion there reached, and for the reasons therein given the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

"BRITT, C. Action to recover possession of a tract of land in Los Angeles county, and to set aside a sale thereof made in probate. Defendants, more than a hundred in number, deraign through one Turner, who was the purchaser at said sale. Plaintiffs assert title as heirs of their father, Charles J. Dennis, who owned the land at the time of his death. Against the validity of the sale they claim that the person who was appointed administratrix of the estate of said deceased sold the land without having qualified as administratrix, and without right to act in that capacity; also that the petition and notice on which the court ordered the sale were insufficient to confer jurisdiction to make the order. There is no charge of actual fraud in the sale. It appears that the purchaser paid full value for the property. Defendants, in whose favor judgment passed below, rely on several lines of defense. Our examination of the case leads us to doubt whether any of them has much merit, excepting only their plea of the statutes of limitation; and to this defense alone we shall direct our attention.

"The action was begun February 8, 1893. Afterwards an amended complaint was filed, to which a demurrer was sustained as to the plaintiffs Frank H. Dennis and Kitty N. Whittemore, and as concerns them the question argued by counsel is whether, on the showing made by their pleading, the action was barred by lapse of time. It appears from said complaint that Charles J. Dennis died December 2, 1881, and that on January 9, 1882, on the petition of his surviving wife, Clotilda J. Dennis, mother of the plaintiffs, the superior court of said county ordered that letters of administration of his estate issue to her 'upon her taking the oath and filing a bond according to law.' It seems that she filed a bond, but it is alleged that she failed 'to take and subscribe the oath required by law and the said order of the court.' There is an averment that 'no letters of administration upon the estate have been issued.' There is, however, annexed to the complaint as an exhibit, and made part thereof, a copy of a document filed in the court in the matter of the estate of said deceased, purporting to be letters of administration issued to said Clotilda on February 1, 1882, signed by the clerk, and in the form prescribed for such letters by section 1362, Code Civ. Proc., except that the seal of the court was not impressed thereon. Similarly, a copy of the petition for an order to sell the land, wherein said Clotilda made oath that letters of administration on the estate had been duly issued to her, is exhibited with the complaint; also several orders of the court are set out, reciting acts done by her as such administratrix. Altogether, the allegations and exhibits of the complaint show that letters, such as they were, did issue to said Clotilda, and that she acted as administratrix thereunder. Upon her petition the court made an order on May 15, 1883, purporting to authorize her to sell the land. For present purposes we may allow that this order was void for want of the notice required in such proceedings by sections 1538, 1539, Code Civ. Proc. However, pursuant thereto the administratrix sold the land, and on August 27, 1883, after obtaining an order confirming the sale, she executed a deed to the purchaser. He and those claiming under him thenceforward had possession of the premises. There has been no settlement of the final account of the administratrix. When the action was begun, both the plaintiffs Frank H. Dennis and Kitty N. Whittemore were more than four, but less than five, years past the age of majority. Plaintiff Willard W. Dennis was still a minor some five months under that age. There is an allegation in the complaint in general terms that the grounds of the action and the facts alleged concerning the invalidity of the sale were not known or discovered by any of the plaintiffs until within one year of the commencement of the action.

"The special statute of limitations contained in the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to sales of property of decedents is as follows:

"Sec. 1573. No action for the recovery of any estate sold by an executor or administrator, under the provisions of this chapter, can be maintained by any heir or other person claiming under the decedent, unless it be commenced within three years next after the settlement of the final account of the executor or administrator. An action to set aside the sale may be instituted and maintained at any time within three years from the discovery of the fraud, or other grounds upon which the action is based.

"Sec. 1574. The preceding section shall not apply to minors or others under any legal disability to sue at the time the right of action first accrues; but all such persons may commence an action at any time within three years after the removal of the disability."

"It is contended that according to the allegations of the complaint the land was never sold by an executor or administrator, and hence that said section 1573 can have no application. The question is, in effect, whether the heirs can be permitted to say in this collateral proceeding that there was no administration of their father's estate at all. It is clear that the court had jurisdiction of the estate of the deceased, and to appoint the administratrix. Therefore, if the letters issued had been duly attested, it is unquestionable that, as against any collateral attack, they would have been conclusive evidence of her due qualification, and of her authority to act as administratrix. Westcott v. Cady, 5 Johns. Ch. 342, 343; Moreland v. Lawrence, 23 Minn. 84; Trust Co. v. Beebe, 40 Minn. 7, 11, 41 N. W. 232; Duson v. Dupre, 32 La. Ann. 896; Insurance Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 243; Woerner, Adm'n, § 266; 1 Williams, Ex'rs (7th Am. Ed.) 676, note; Ryan v. Mort- gage Co., 96 Ga. 322, 23 S. E. 411. This seems to have been conceded in one of the cases most relied on by appellants,—Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 399: 'The letters of administration may indeed, when issued, be evidence of the regularity of the previous proceedings,' etc. The purpose of the seal is to authenticate the document, show that it actually emanated from the court. Here the letters recited that the seal was affixed, and Mrs. Dennis acted as administratrix, claiming to hold valid letters. The court recognized her as administratrix, and repeatedly made orders reciting that she was such. The authenticity of the letters having been thus postulated and presumed in the quarters where duty and interest combined to require the truth of the matter to be known, it would seem that the presumption should be deemed conclusive against the present attack; and, in our opinion, the absence from the letters of the impress of the seal does not impair their effect, in this action, as evidence of her authority as administratrix. In Whyler v. Van Tiger, 14 Pac. 846, this court upheld, against the suit of a minor, a lease of lands made by one who had been appointed his guardian, and had given bond as such, but who had taken no oath and had not received letters of guardianship. That case well illustrates the tendency of the law to discountenance the collateral impeachment of the authority of such officers, but it has not the controlling importance supposed by respondents, because of differences in the statutes concerning the qualification, etc., of guardians and administrators. See, further, Ganahl v. Soher, 68 Cal. 95, 8 Pac. 650; Gallagher v. Holland, 20 Nev. 167, 18 Pac. 834; Baldwin v. Standish, 7 Cush. 207; People v. Dunning, 1 Wend. 16; Amblar v. Leach, 15 W. Va. 677; Van Fleet, Coll. Attack, § 353. We have given careful attention to the cases urged by plaintiffs upon the attention of the court,—Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388; Staples v. Connor, 79 Cal. 14, 21 Pac. 380,—in which it was held that a sale of lands made in probate by one who, although acting as administrator, had not qualified by taking the oath and filing a bond, was void, and might be successfully impeached by the heirs in an action like the present. But in those cases, as well as in Re Estate of Hamilton, 34 Cal. 464, there had been no issuance of letters of administration; and we are not satisfied that their doctrine is so clearly salutary that it should be extended beyond the facts on which it rests.

"It is further claimed that the case is taken from the operation of the statute by the averment that the grounds of the action were discovered within one year next before the commencement of the suit. Aside from other considerations which may bear on this point, the statement of the complaint is insufficient for the purpose claimed because unaccompanied by any explanation of the failure to acquire knowledge earlier,—so as regards the adult plaintiffs at least. The matters relied on to impeach the sale were patent of record, and there was adverse possession of the land. Mere ignorance of the facts, therefore, without some valid excuse for ignorance, was of no consequence. Hecht v. Slaney, 72 Cal. 363, 14 Pac. 88; Moore v. Boyd, 74 Cal. 167, 15 Pac. 670; Commissioners' note to section 1573, Code Civ. Proc., Ed. 1872. The minor plaintiff is in no better position for reasons presently to appear.

"Lastly, it is insisted that because there has been no settlement of the final account of the administratrix the statute has never begun to run. Formerly said section 1573, which was drawn from section 190 of the probate act of 1851, required an action to recover estate sold by an executor or administrator to be brought within three years next after the sale; and following it then, as now, was the provision of section 1574—section 191 of the probate act—that the preceding section should not apply to minors or others under legal disability, who might sue within three years after removal of the disability. The result of the cases involving or illustrating the effect of these sections, in their original form, is that, if the administrator failed to sue to recover the land or set aside the sale within three years next following the sale,—the administration so long continuing,—then the heirs as well as himself were barred, even though the heirs were minors; this on the ground that under our system the administrator represents the heirs,—he the trustee, they the cestuis. McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 329, 342, 14 Pac. 879; Staples v. Connor, 79 Cal. 15, 21 Pac. 380; Patchett v. Railway Co., 100 Cal. 505, 35 Pac. 73; Meeks v. Olpherts, 100 U. S. 564; Meeks v. Vassault, 3 Sawy. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 9,393; Cunningham v. Ashley, 45 Cal. 485. But in 1880 section 1573 was amended so as to provide that the action cannot be maintained unless commenced within three years next after the settlement of the final account, and the question is whether, under the amendment, the representative may, by refraining from procuring the settlement of his final account, indefinitely postpone the running of the statute. It may simplify the view somewhat to consider the case as it would have been presented had the administratrix brought the action, as she had the power to do. Meeks v. Olpherts, supra. The complaint shows that there were no debts of the deceased, and that by the sale of the land now in dispute the administratrix received in the month of August, 1883, funds sufficient several times over to pay the expenses of administration and the allowance made by the court for the support of the family. The estate was then in condition to be finally closed, and it was her duty to proceed to a final account, and to obtain a settlement thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 1652. Our whole scheme for settling the estates of decedents 'looks to a speedy close of administration.' Maddock v. Russell, 109 Cal. 423,

42 Pac. 139. In our opinion, the administratrix was allowed, under the amendment of 1880, a reasonable time in which to obtain settlement of her final account, and that, failing in this, the statute began to run; and, were she the plaintiff here, it could be pleaded against her with effect. What is such reasonable time must depend, in general, on the circumstances of each estate; but here it is apparent that much more than a reasonable time expired more than three years prior to the commencement of the action. There is no novelty in this proposition. It follows from the principle of quite extensive application that one cannot avoid the statute of limitations by delay in taking action incumbent upon him. Thus it was held that an executor of a will probated in Illinois, who had unreasonably delayed to take out ancillary letters of administration in New York, was not entitled to the benefit of a statute of the latter state which excepted from the general statute of limitations a certain period 'after the granting of such letters.' Kirby v. Railroad, 120 U. S. 130, 7 Sup. Ct. 430. And see Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 13 Sup. Ct. 466, approving Bauserman v. Charlott, 46 Kan. 480, 26 Pac. 1051; Mickel v. Walraven, 92 Iowa, 423, 60 N. W. 633; Thomas v. Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 Pac. 899. If this be not the correct view of the statute, and if the right to sue can be preserved to the administrator and those whom he represents for ten years by failure—without excuse—to settle his final account, then it may be preserved in like manner for fifty years, or indefinitely. 'The statute of limitations is intended, not for the punishment of those who neglect to assert their rights, but for the protection of those who have remained in possession under color of title believed to be good.' Marshall, C. J., quoted in Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 641. The policy of the statute is to quiet titles to real estate sold by order of the probate courts (Harlan v. Peck, 33 Cal. 521); and we do not feel at liberty to say that the legislature intended to withhold such protection indefinitely from purchasers at probate sales at the option of the representative or of those who might compel him to account. The principle above stated is illustrated in the opinion of this court in Meherin v. Produce Exchange, 117 Cal. 217, 218, 48 Pac. 1074. While the facts there were different from those here, the rule there declared seems to be applicable to the case at bar. That was an action by plaintiffs to have it adjudged that they were members in good standing of the defendant, the defendant having suspended them about eight years before the commencement of the action. The lower court held that the action was barred, and the judgment was affirmed. This court, in discussing the question whether the statute commenced to run before a demand had been made by plaintiffs for reinstatement, said as follows: 'In such a case a party cannot extend the statute of limitations indefinitely by failing to make a demand. Opinion by Beatty, C. J., in Bills v. Mining Co., 106 Cal. 21, 39 Pac. 43; Prescott v. Gonser, 34 Iowa, 179; Baker v. Johnson Co., 33 Iowa, 151; Codman v. Rogers, 10 Pick. 119. In the case last cited the court say: "A party must not be permitted to sleep over his rights to the prejudice of the party to whom he makes the claim, who, by the delay, may be deprived of the evidence and means of effectually defending himself. A demand must be made within a reasonable time, otherwise the claim is considered stale; and no relief will be granted in a court of equity. What is to be considered a reasonable time for this purpose does not appear to be settled by a precise rule. It must depend on circumstances. If no cause for delay be shown, it would seem reasonable to require the demand to be made within the time limited by the statute for bringing the action. There is the same reason for hastening the demand that there is for hastening the commencement of the action; and, in both cases, the same presumptions arise from delay." Since, therefore, the administratrix could not maintain the action because of lapse of time, it follows, in accordance with the authorities already cited, that the plaintiffs cannot maintain it, and the demurrer was properly sustained to the complaint of Frank H. Dennis and Kitty N. Whittemore. A like conclusion applies to the case of Willard W. Dennis, for, although as to him the demurrer was overruled, and the case went to trial, yet the plea of the statute was again interposed against him by answer, and was sustained by the findings of the court. He is included in the effect of the bar of the statute against the administratrix, and the findings are sustained. If it be objected that he is placed thus in worse position than if the administratrix had in due time obtained the settlement of her final account, the answer is that this is the logical outcome of the system which clothes the administrator with the right of action in such cases, and makes him the representative and trustee of the heirs. The laches of the trustee while he holds office as such must be imputed to the beneficiary, and the remedy of the heir is against the administrator. Wheeler v. Bolton, 54 Cal. 302; McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 343, 14 Pac. 879. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed."

We dissent: TEMPLE, J.; HARRISON, J.; HENSHAW, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment. The most important question in the case is whether Mrs. Dennis ever became administratrix of her husband's estate. She certainly never had letters of administration in due form, and expressions have been used in the opinions of this court in several cases which at first glance would seem to imply that without letters regularly issued in due form there is no administration; or, in other words, that letters of administration, instead of being merely evidence of authority to administer, are themselves the only source of such authority. In re Estate of Hamilton, 34 Cal. 469; Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 399; Staples v. Connor, 79 Cal. 15, 21 Pac. 380. But a critical examination of these cases will show that in none of them was the proposition as here stated actually involved. In every instance there had not only been a failure to take out regular letters of administration, but also a failure to comply with one or more of the essential conditions expressly imposed by the order (or, in the last case, the law) authorizing the party to administer; that is to say, he had failed to take the oath, or file the bond, or both. None of those cases, therefore, is necessarily inconsistent with the view that one who has fully complied with all the conditions of the order of appointment by taking the oath, filing his bond, etc., and who has acted as administrator under the orders and direction, and with the sanction and approval of the court, should, as against any collateral attack upon his authority, be held to be the administrator, whether he holds letters in due form or not. And this, in my opinion, is the correct view. Letters of administration do not constitute the authority of the administrator, but are merely evidence of it; and the only object of the statute in requiring letters to issue under the seal of the court, and to be recorded with the oath of office subscribed and attached, is to create and preserve permanent and authentic evidence of the due qualification and authority of the administrator. For this purpose it is highly important that the directions of the statute should be strictly followed, in order to prevent a failure of proof when other evidence has been lost. But this evidence of authority is not exclusive, and when, as in this case, there is other satisfactory evidence, or an admission in the pleadings that all the conditions of the order of appointment have been complied with, and when the appointee has gone on and administered the estate under the direction of the court, receiving, with its approval and sanction, a fair price in exchange for the property of the estate, there is neither reason nor precedent for holding that there has in fact been no administration merely because formal letters of administration have not been issued.

But it may be objected that the statement is not correct that the administratrix in this case is shown to have complied with all the conditions of her appointment, because it clearly appears, not only from the pleadings, but from the evidence, that she never subscribed the oath of office. This is true, but it is also true that the order of the probate court did not require her to subscribe, but only to take, the oath, which she did. It is not charged in the complaint that she did not take the oath, and the order of the court which is set out in the complaint shows that she was not required to subscribe it. On the trial of the action as between the minor plaintiff and the defendants it was also found upon sufficient evidence that the administratrix took the oath. All this may sound extremely technical, but such is the nature of the case. The plaintiffs here are endeavoring, upon the ground of purely technical defects in a probate sale, to recover land for which their natural guardian, while assuming to act as administratrix of their ancestor's estate, received full value from bona fide purchasers, who, as we may infer from the large number of defendants, have subdivided and improved it, thereby adding immensely to its value. To such a contention a technical objection, if sufficient, is all that is required. My conclusion is that Mrs. Dennis must, in this proceeding, be held to have been the duly-authorized administratrix of her deceased husband's estate. But, although she must be held in any collateral proceeding to have been the duly-authorized administratrix, it must be conceded that the order of the superior court for the sale of the land in controversy was void for want of the notice required by sections 1538 and 1539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, this being so, it is necessary to inquire whether the defect in the title of defendants has been cured by lapse of time or otherwise.

As to the bar of the statute of limitations I do not concur in the commissioner's opinion that the time prescribed by section 1573 of the Code of Civil Procedure commences to run from the time when the final account of the administrator ought to be settled. The principal argument in favor of this proposition is that upon any other view the right of action might be indefinitely prolonged by the mere fault of the administrator in failing to present his final account. But this argument loses all its force when it is considered that the period of limitation prescribed by sections 1573 and 1574 is not the only limitation upon which purchasers at probate sales may rely. They, like all other holders of land, have the benefit of the general statute making five years' adverse possession a bar, and it is not possible, therefore, that the neglect of an administrator or executor to account could perpetuate any infirmity of their title. As against minor heirs, they have the additional protection of section 1574, which, upon what I deem to be its proper construction, bars the right to sue in three years, after such heirs reach their majority, irrespective of the settlement of the administrator's account. Under this section I think it appears from the complaint that the action of the two plaintiffs herein, who were more than three years past their majority when the original complaint was filed, was barred, and that the ruling of the court sustaining the demurrers as to them was correct, and that the judgment as against them should be affirmed upon this ground alone. They are not saved by their allegation that the facts upon which their action is founded came to their knowledge within three years of the commencement of the action, because they offer no explanation or excuse for their ignorance. But the minor plaintiff is not, in my opinion, affected by either section 1573 or section 1574 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, if his action is barred by any period of limitation, it must be by the five-year period prescribed in section 318 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court, indeed, finds that his action was barred by these sections, but this finding is attacked, and I can discover in the record no evidence of adverse occupancy or payment of taxes to support it. Of course, if Mrs. Dennis was administratrix,—as we hold she was,—a right to maintain this action accrued to her as representative of the heirs and creditors immediately upon the execution of her deed,—i. e. in the year 1883,—and this right of action, without reference to the provisions of sections 1573 and 1574 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was barred by five years' adverse possession and payment of taxes under the general statute of limitations. But, as above stated, proof on these points is lacking, and, if the judgment against the minor plaintiff could not be sustained upon other grounds, I should be compelled to hold the order denying a new trial erroneous.

But the defendants did not rely alone upon the statutes of limitation. They rely also upon a judgment quieting their title to the lands in controversy. It seems that three or four years after the sale of the land in controversy by the administratrix the defect in the proceedings was discovered, and she was informed that legal proceedings were necessary to cure the infirmity in the title. The exact nature of the defect was not disclosed to her, and was perhaps purposely concealed; but with full knowledge that the title was defective by reason of some irregularity of procedure, and without making any inquiry as to the extent to which it affected the title, she authorized the employment of an attorney to take steps to cure it. He, for that purpose, commenced an action in the name of the administratrix against her vendee and her successors to quiet the title. The proceedings in that case, which are entirely regular in form, resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendants, and upon that judgment the defendants herein rely. It is contended in behalf of the plaintiffs that they are not bound by that judgment, because it was collusive and fraudulent. There can be no doubt that the object of all parties to that action was simply to cure the defective title of the defendants, and that there was no real controversy waged between them. But there is equally little doubt that the object was entirely commendable. The plaintiff had received the full value of the land, and by her fault the title of the purchasers was defective. It was her duty to do what lay in her power to perfect the title, if she intended to keep the price of the land. This duty she seems to have recognized, and her agent and attorney were given authority to proceed accordingly. What they did in suffering a judgment in favor of the purchasers was precisely what they were expected, and, in effect, instructed, to do. The result accomplished was equitable and just, and there is no equity in the demand of the plaintiffs that it be set aside.

J. M. GRIFFITH CO. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 390.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 3, 1898.)

SEWER CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—GENERAL INTENT—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CHARGES FOR EXTRAS—QUANTUM MERUIT.

1. A contract with a city for constructing a sewer provided that the city should withhold a certain sum from the contract price for six months after the completion of the work, to make any repairs necessary, and at the end of such period should pay the contractors said sum, or so much thereof as had not been paid, for the repairs. Part of said sum was expended for repairs made before the expiration of the six months, and the additional expenditures for repairs within the succeeding two months exceeded the sum retained. The city began the work of repairs well within the six months, and the good faith of its acts was in no way questioned. Held, that the contractor could not recover the balance in excess of the cost of repairs expended at the end of the six months, within the rule that particular clauses of a contract are subordinate to its general intent. Civ. Code, § 1650.

2. A contract with a city for constructing a sewer provided that no extras were to be allowed, except in case of a change in the route or appliances, and then only when the valuation of the changes should be agreed on between the parties, and indorsed on the contract, or, if unable to agree, when the valuation fixed by the city engineer should be indorsed on the contract. On the request of the city engineer, steel bands were used for the pipe, which constituted a change in the contract. The city council had no knowledge of the change until after the pipe was laid, and no indorsement respecting the bands or the price was made on the contract. The contract did not give the city engineer authority to act for the city in making the agreement. St. 1889, p. 506, provides that the city shall not be liable on a contract, unless in writing, and by order of the council. Held, that the contractor could not recover the value of the bands.

3. The city was not impliedly liable as on a quantum meruit, since it had no opportunity to elect whether or not to accept the sewer with the bands; it being imbedded below the surface of the earth at the time payment for the extras was demanded.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from: superior court, Los Angeles county; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by the J. M. Griffith Company against the city of Los Angeles to recover the balance due under a sewer contract. From a judgment for plaintiff for only part of the money sued for, it appeals. Affirmed.

C. K. Holloway and J. S. Chapman, for appellant. W. E. Dunn, for respondent.

BRITT, C. On April 24, 1893, the city of Los Angeles, defendant here, and certain persons, who may be called the "contractors," executed several instruments in writing, which for present purposes we may regard as a single contract, whereby the contractors agreed to construct (at their own cost for labor and material) sections 3 and 6a of an outfall sewer leading from said city to the Pacific Ocean, for which construction the city agreed to pay them the aggregate sum of $77,450. Said contractors constructed said sections of sewer, and received most of the compensation provided in the contract. They assigned to the plaintiff, a corporation, their claims against the city for some unpaid balances, and for the value of certain alleged extra materials used by them in the work aforesaid. This is an action on the claims so assigned. Plaintiff had judgment below for some hundreds of dollars, but failed as to the bulk of its demand.

1. By the terms of said contract the conduit in said sections of sewer was to be a pipe constructed of redwood staves bound with steel bands, and it was provided that the city might retain 10 per cent. of the price specified in said contract for the space of six months after the completion of the work and its acceptance by the city, "during which time the contractors are obliged to keep the pipe in repair," and that in case of their default in that particular the city should make the repairs, using so much of the sum retained as might be necessary for that purpose. On February 23, 1894, the city and said contractors made a further agreement in writing, reciting that said sections 3 and 6a of the sewer were completed and ready for acceptance by the city, and providing that in lieu of retaining 10 per cent. of the contract price for application to repairs after acceptance, as allowed in the prior contract of April 24, 1893, the city should withhold the sum of $5,000, and that if at any time during such period of six months after acceptance of said sections any repairs should, in the opinion of the city council, become necessary on said sections, or either of them, the council might at once make the same, and deduct the cost thereof from said sum of $5,000; also, "that at the expiration of six months the city shall pay the said contractors the said sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as has not been paid for the purposes above mentioned." The city retained said sum, and has never paid the same to said contractors, or to the plaintiff, their assignee. The court found that the city expended for repairs on said sections of the sewer to August 23, 1894, inclusive, the sum of $1,894.35, and prior to October 7, 1894, its expenditure in that behalf exceeded $5,000; also, that work on such repairs was begun by the city on July 10, 1894, and continued until February 20, 1895. Plaintiff contends that it should recover the sum of $3,105.65, which is the excess of the amount retained by the city above the payments made for repairs up to August 23, 1894; plaintiff claiming this date to mark the end of the period of six months, during which the city could rightfully expend for repairs any part of said sum of $5,000 withheld as aforesaid. This contention is founded mainly on the clause of the instrument of February 23, 1894, that "at the expiration of six months the city shall pay to the contractors the said sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as has not been used for the purposes above mentioned." Particular clauses of a contract are subordinate to its general intent (Civ. Code, § 1650), and the contracts before us afford a clear case for the application of the principle. The plain object of said instrument of February 23, 1894, understood in connection with the cognate provisions (which it modified) in the contract of April, 1893, was to indemnify the city, to the amount of $5,000, for the cost of repairing defects which might be disclosed in sections 3 and 6a of the sewer during six months next following acceptance thereof by the city, and which the city should at once proceed to make good. The city began the work of repairs well within the period of six months. The continued prosecution thereof involved a cost exceeding the sum retained by it under the several contracts. The good faith of its conduct is in no wise impugned. We think, therefore, that the general intent of the indemnifying provisions of the contracts ought not to be overridden by the particular clause that at the expiration of six months the city should pay to the contractors so much of the sum withheld "as has not been used for the purposes above mentioned." On the theory urged by plaintiff, if the whole line of pipe had collapsed on the last day of the six months during which the city was allowed to repair at the contractors' expense, the city would still have been obliged to pay over the indemnifying fund, unless it could on that day actually expend it in replacing the ruin. We conclude that the judgment denying plaintiff's claim to any part of said sum of $5,000 was right.

2. Said contract of April 24, 1893, contained the following: "The amount herein agreed to be paid for said work is in full for said sections of sewer complete. No extras are to be allowed, except in case of a change in route or plans, and in that case the payment of the same shall be as stated in the specifications hereto attached." In the specifications referred to it was provided that: "The city engineer reserves the right to make any desired change in the plans, but the changes so made, with the price to be added to or deducted from the contract price, shall be agreed upon between the parties hereto and indorsed upon the contract; and, if they shall be unable to agree upon a price for such alterations, then the city engineer shall fix a fair and reasonable valuation upon such work, and this valuation shall be indorsed upon the contract, and when so indorsed shall be binding upon the parties thereto.

If not so indorsed, then the original price shall be neither increased nor diminished." On the request of the city engineer, who had direction of the work, the contractors used in the construction of said sections of sewer a large number of steel bands for the pipe, in addition to those required by the specifications. It may be admitted, without deciding, that such action of the engineer was a change of plans, so far as his authority in that behalf extended. It does not appear that the city council had any information of the use or intention to use the additional bands until after said sections of sewer were completed, when the contractors presented an account against the city for the same as extras, at the rate of 85 cents each, amounting to $4,012. The city engineer certified that 70 cents each was a just price for them. No indorsement respecting such bands or the price was made on the contract. The court found that they were worth $3,304, the value certified by the engineer. Plaintiff claims that it should have had judgment therefor. Occasion for said additional material seems to have arisen through no fault of the contractors. The contract, however, was plain that no extras should be allowed except on change of route or plans, and, in case the engineer should change the plans, still no extra payment was provided for, unless the changes so made, with the price to be added to or deducted from the contract price, "shall be agreed upon between the parties hereto," viz. the city and the contractors. If they could not agree on the price, then the engineer should fix the same. These provisions evidently mean that no changes of plan should become a part of the contract, to be paid for by the city, unless it should agree thereto. The contract does not purport to clothe the engineer with authority to agree for the city. The city charter (section 207) provides "that the city of Los Angeles shall not be bound by any contract, or in any way liable thereon, unless the same is made in writing, by order of the council," etc. St. 1889, p. 506. The course pursued by the engineer and the contractors, however just may have been their intentions in fact, ignored any right of the city to determine either the extent or the price of changes in the work then under contract. If it could be effectual to charge the city against its will for the additional bands, then it is not perceived that the contract afforded any protection whatever to the city against the indefinite expansion both of the plan and the cost of the sewer at the pleasure of the engineer and the contractors. In our opinion, the terms of the contract do not support plaintiff's claim for the value of said bands. Nor is the city impliedly liable as upon a quantum meruit. It never had opportunity to elect whether it would or would not accept the sewer with the double bands, if that circumstance be material. When the contractors demanded payment for the bands, they had already received far the greater part of the contract price, and the sewer was imbedded below the surface of the earth, in the right of way provided by the city for its reception. Moreover, as we understand the charter of the city (section 207, above referred to), no liability of that amount can be incurred by the city except in virtue of its written contract. See Zottman v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 96, 107; Pavement Co. v. Broderick, 113 Cal. 628, 45 Pac. 863; McDonald v. Mayor, etc., 68 N. Y. 23. The judgment should be affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW—JURISDICTION—PROPERTY STOLEN ELSEWHERE.

1. Pen. Code, § 789, providing that the jurisdiction of an action for stealing property in another state and bringing it into California is in any county into which it has been brought, does not apply to property stolen in Canada.

2. Under Pen. Code, § 497, providing that one stealing property in another state or country, and bringing it into California, "may be convicted and punished" in the same manner as if such larceny had been committed in California, the superior court of the city and county to which the property was brought had jurisdiction of the accused and the offense.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

John Black was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Hoff Cook and Eugene N. Deuprey, for appellant. Wm. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and W. H. Anderson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant has been convicted of a felony, based upon an indictment framed under section 497 of the Penal Code. This section reads: "Every person who in another state or country steals the property of another, or receives such property knowing it to have been stolen, and brings the same into this state, may be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny or receiving had been committed in this state." It is charged that the defendant committed grand larceny in stealing certain articles of jewelry in the dominion of Canada, and bringing said articles into the city and county of San Francisco, state of California. Upon this state of facts it is insisted that the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, had no jurisdiction to try the defendant for such offense. Indeed, it is insisted that there is no statutory authority vesting any particular superior court in the state of California with jurisdiction to try such an offense. By section 789 of the Penal Code it is provided that the jurisdiction of a criminal action for stealing in another state the property of another, or receiving it knowing it to have been stolen, and bringing the same into this state, is in any county into or through which such stolen property has been brought. It will be perceived that this section only covers cases arising in two different states, and is not broad enough to include those cases arising between a state of the United States and a foreign country, as the dominion of Canada. It is contended upon the part of the people that the word "state," as used in this section in the first instance, should be given a broader construction, and should be held to include any and all foreign territory, but we cannot agree with this contention; for, in the second instance, it is plainly apparent that the word "state" refers to a particular territory within the boundaries of the United States, and, such being the fact, by elementary rules of construction it must be held that the word "state," as used in the first instance, nothing appearing in the statute to the contrary, should bear the same signification.

By section 497, supra, it is declared that a defendant doing the acts outlined by that section shall "be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny or receiving had been committed in this state." Upon a fair and liberal construction of this language, we conclude there is no force in defendant's position that there is a lack of jurisdiction in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to try him. The word "punished," as used in the section, refers plainly to the penalty to be affixed to the crime, but the word "convicted" is much broader in meaning. And when the statute says, "convicted as if such larceny * * * had been committed in this state," the word "convicted" includes the accusation and the trial. And, if the statute in terms had said such a defendant may be charged, tried, convicted, and punished in the same manner as if such larceny had been committed in this state, the error of defendant's contention as to lack of jurisdiction would be palpable; yet such is the fair significance of the word "convicted," as used in the section of the Code. If the defendant is to be charged, tried, and convicted as though the larceny had been committed in this state, then he should be charged, tried, and convicted as though the larceny had been committed in the city and county of San Francisco. It necessarily follows that the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco had jurisdiction, by virtue of the foregoing section of the Code, of the person of the defendant and the defense charged.

Under the great weight of authority, if the defendant had been charged with the crime of grand larceny committed in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, it would seem the evidence introduced at this trial showing the commission of the larceny in the dominion of Canada, and the felonious bringing of the stolen property into the jurisdiction of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, would support an indictment in said city and county charging larceny. See Bish. New Cr. Law, § 136 et seq. But in the present case the form of the indictment does not justify the consideration of that somewhat interesting question.

The court has examined with care the many alleged errors of the superior court occurring during the progress of the trial of the case. Many of these alleged errors are technical in the extreme, and, after a full consideration of all the matters relied upon for a reversal of the judgment and a retrial of the defendant, we find nothing in the record demanding such a result. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

In re WILLIAMS' ESTATE. (S. F. 1490.)

APPEAL—RIGHT TO REVIEW.

An executor cannot appeal from an order of distribution, where the court had jurisdiction, since he is not "aggrieved" thereby, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1666, making such order conclusive on the heirs and legatees, subject only to be reversed or modified on appeal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

After settlement of the final account of the executor of the last will and testament of James Williams, deceased, an order of distribution was made, from which the executor appealed. On motion to dismiss appeal. Granted.

A. Boyer, for appellant. Evans & Meredith, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The final account of the executor of the last will and testament of the above-named decedent was settled February 23, 1898; and after its settlement the superior court, upon the petition of the respondents herein, made an order distributing to them the estate remaining in the hands of the executor. From this order the executor has taken the present appeal. The respondents have moved to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the executor has not the right to appeal from the order, for the reason that he is not an "aggrieved" party. At the hearing upon the motion it was conceded on behalf of the executor, and it also appears from the bill of exceptions which was taken by him to the granting of the order, that jurisdiction to hear the petition for distribution had been acquired by the superior court before making the order appealed from. The ground upon which the executor claims the right to present the appeal is the insufficiency of the evidence before the court to authorize it to find that the petitioners are entitled to the estate. The executor has no interest in the distribution of the estate, further than to be protected, if he shall dispose of the property in accordance with its terms; and, if the court had jurisdiction to hear the petition, the order or distribution will be a complete protection against any claim that may be made against him by reason of his compliance therewith. The statute declares that the order is "conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees or devisees, subject only to be reversed, set aside or modified on appeal." Code Civ. Proc. § 1666. The persons here enumerated are the only ones who could claim any portion of the estate, and consequently are the only ones who can be "aggrieved" by an order of the court made in a matter in which it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties entitled thereto. The motion to dismiss the appeal is granted.

This is an original proceeding by mandamus to compel the city clerk of Los Angeles to countersign certain improvement bonds of that city, which he has hitherto refused to sign, upon the sole ground that section 6 of the act of March 19, 1889, entitled "An act authorizing the incurring of indebtedness by cities, towns and municipal corporations," etc. (St. 1889, p. 399), as amended by act of March 1, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 61), has been repealed by the act of March 9, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 75). The case has been submitted upon demurrer to the petition, and it is conceded by counsel for respondent that it is his duty to countersign the bonds if section 6 of the act of 1889, as amended in 1893, has not been repealed by the act of 1897. In view of this admission, we confine ourselves to the single question here stated; and, if there are any other questions which might arise upon the facts alleged in the petition, we do not decide them.

The title of the act of March 9, 1897 (page 75), is as follows: "An act authorizing the common council, board of trustees or other governing body of any incorporated city or town, other than cities of the first class, to refund its indebtedness, to issue bonds therefor, and to provide for the payment of the same." The provisions of the act seem to be generally such as are germane to its title; but section 4, which purports to repeal conflicting laws, enumerates, among others, chapter 48 of the Statutes of 1893. Chapter 48 of the Statutes of 1893 is the act of March 1st, amending section 6 of the act of March 19, 1889. The subject of the repealing act, as expressed in its title, is entirely foreign to the subject of the section attempted to be repealed; and the question to be determined is whether an act or part of an act can be repealed when the title of the repealing act announces no such intention, and when the repeal of the existing law would have no effect one way or another upon the operation of the new law. We think it very clear that in such a case no repeal is effected, because the repealing clause is in conflict with that part of section 24 of article 4 of the constitution which reads as follows: "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in its title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed in its title." Our conclusion is that section 6 of the act of 1889 remains in force, and that the writ of mandate should issue as prayed. It is so ordered.

DRISCOLL v. WINTERS et al. (S. F. 788.)

GUARANTY—CHANGE IN PRINCIPAL CONTRACT—LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR.

Civ. Code, § 2819, providing that a guarantor is exonerated if by any act of the creditor without the consent of the guarantor the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, applies to a guaranty of payment under a contract whereby the principal was to take and pay for a certain amount of milk daily, though the contract, as modified without guarantor's consent, provided that the principal should purchase a less amount daily.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Action by William Driscoll against Andrew Winters on a contract, and against Joseph S. Myers on a guaranty of such contract. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed as to defendant Myers.

Welles Whitmore, for appellants. Galpin & Zeigler and Chas. S. Peery, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Winters contracted to purchase of Driscoll 16 3-gallon cans of milk daily for the period of one year. He agreed to pay Driscoll therefor 45 cents per can. Myers entered into a writing guarantying the performance of this contract upon the part of Winters. A short time after this guaranty was given, by the mutual consent of Winters and Driscoll, and without the knowledge of Myers, the contract was modified to the extent that Winters should purchase only 13 cans of milk daily. Upon the expiration of the year, Winters failing to pay for the milk furnished, Driscoll brought this action against both him and Myers for the agreed price of the milk furnished, and judgment was rendered against them for the amount claimed. They have now appealed from that judgment, and also from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

As to the guarantor, Myers, the judgment is wrong. He was released from all liability upon his undertaking when the original contract between Driscoll and Winters was changed without his consent. Section 2819 of the Civil Code declares: "A guarantor is exonerated * * * if by any act of the creditor without the consent of the guarantor the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, or the remedies or rights of the creditor against the principal in respect thereto in any way impaired or suspended." This section is but a restatement of a common and elementary principle of law. In the present case the obligation of the principal (Winters) was altered in a material and important respect. If the two contracting parties could alter the contract without the consent of Myers by reducing the number of cans of milk to be furnished, and still Myers be bound, then they could for the same reasons increase the number of cans of milk to be furnished, and likewise bind him for the price of the increase. The obligation of the principal is altered in either case, and such alteration is prohibited by the law. Respondent, in his brief, declares that Myers has no reason to complain that he is only charged with the price of 13 cans of milk daily, rather than 16 cans; but Myers has the right to declare that it is not nominated in his bond that he should be bound for 13 cans of milk. Such was not his contract. The contract, the performance of which Myers guarantied, has been set aside and displaced by a second contract, and the performance of that contract was not guarantied by him. It is claimed that only those alterations in the original obligation which tend to increase the liability of the surety or guarantor operate as a release. The authorities are all the other way. It is not for a court to say that the alteration of the obligation redounds to the benefit of the guarantor. No one has authority to make contracts for his benefit, and courts cannot enforce such contracts against him, for he in no sense is a party to them. We find this question extensively discussed by the code commissioners in the annotated edition of the Code. See note under section 2819. The views there expressed are all opposed to respondent's contention. There is nothing in the record which demands a reversal of the judgment as to defendant Winters. It therefore follows that as to defendant Myers the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and that as to defendant Winters the judgment and order are affirmed.

COONAN v. LOEWENTHAL. (S. F. 1,343.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 2, 1898.)

APPEAL—DISMISSAL—BOND.

An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that the undertaking was filed before service of the notice of appeal, where the affidavits of the parties as to whether it was so filed are contradictory.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; Z. W. Wilson, Judge.

Action by J. T. Coonan against J. Loewenthal. Defendant appeals. Heard on motion to dismiss the appeal. Denied.

Chamberlin & Wheeler, for appellant. J. F. Coonan and Buck & Cutler, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the undertaking on appeal was filed before the notice of appeal was served. The notice of appeal shows by indorsement that it was served, but the particular day upon which it was served does not appear thereon. The material question is, was this notice of appeal served upon the 27th day of January, or upon the following day? Upon this question the affidavits of various parties who were acquainted with the fact are before the court. Those affidavits squarely contradict each other, and under such circumstances we will not order the appeal dismissed. The motion to dismiss is denied.

SHEAD v. HINMAN et al. (L. A. 377.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 2, 1898.)

CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—COLLECTION FEES.

Under an agreement for collecting a claim, which, after describing the claim, stated that the "collection charges on above will be 25 per cent.," the collector was not entitled to the stipulated percentage on the face of the claim, but only on the sum actually collected.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by L. A. Shead against C. L. Hinman and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. O. Collins, Del Valle & Munday, and Edwin A. Meserve, for appellants. Wm. J. Variel, for appellee.

CHIPMAN, C. This is an action to recover money from defendants as plaintiff's agents, to which they make claim for commissions. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from the order denying motion for new trial, this appeal is prosecuted, and comes here on a statement of the case.

Plaintiff held a promissory note for $5,000, principal, against one Parsons, then living in Detroit, Mich. The court found that defendants, as collectors, undertook to collect this note upon the terms and conditions of a certain written contract, the body of which reads as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., June 4, 1894. Received from L. A. Shead, via E. Densmore, 1840 E. 2nd street, city, for collection, subject to the terms and conditions specified on the back hereof, the following: No. 4,692. L. B. Parsons, note $5,000.00. Graves & Pile.

"Our collection charges on above will be 25 per cent."

On the back of the contract were several conditions printed, one of which provided for payment of a reasonable attorney's fee and court costs if suit is brought.

Upon the face of the contract, defendants contend that they were to receive all costs and expenses, including attorney's fees, and in addition 25 per cent. of $5,000, whether that amount was collected or not. Plaintiff claims that defendants were entitled only to 25 per cent. of the amount actually collected. It appears that the note was sent by defendants to an attorney in Detroit, who brought suit upon it. Pending the action the maker of the note paid $2,500 on compromise, in discharge of the indebtedness. The court allowed defendants for the Detroit attorney $450 as fees, and $50 for court costs and expenses, and $5.80 for telegrams paid out by defendants. The court disallowed the claim of $325 claimed as fees for attorneys in California, and allowed defendants $625 commissions, being 25 per cent. on the sum collected, to wit, $2,500, making $1,130.80 in all, and gave plaintiff judgment for $1,369.20. Defendants claim that they should have recovered $325 for fees of attorneys in California, and 25 per cent. of $5,000, leaving due plaintiff $419.20, which they tendered plaintiff before suit. We do not think there can be any doubt that the true meaning of the contract, to be derived from its terms alone, is that plaintiff was to pay 25 per cent. of the amount collected. The note was given to defendants for collection, and the charges were for collection, to be measured by the amount collected at the per centum named. It would be an unreasonable construction of the contract to say that by its terms plaintiff agreed to pay $1,250 for the collection, whether more or less than $5,000. There was accumulated and accumulating interest on the note. If it had been paid in full, principal and interest, defendants would have been entitled, by a reasonable construction, to the stipulated per cent. upon the whole amount collected; and a like reasonable construction would give them only the per cent. upon the amount collected if less than the face of the note. Some claim is made by defendants that the contract was changed by subsequent oral agreement, made at the time of the compromise, by which plaintiff agreed to allow them $1,250 net, and attorney's fees and costs, and also that the evidence showed that they were entitled to $325 to pay the California attorneys. But the court found that there was no new agreement as to commissions, and that defendants had never paid out any money to California attorneys, and that no services were rendered by any California attorneys. Upon these points the evidence is conflicting. There was evidence tending to support the findings, and, under the oft-repeated rule, they cannot be disturbed. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

GRAND v. DREYFUS. (L. A. 414.)

SLANDER—COMPLAINT—INDUCEMENT—INNUENDO—CHARGING A CRIME.

1. A complaint in an action for slander setting forth the alleged slanderous language as, "If he (meaning plaintiff) continues to sell (meaning steal) my hogs, I will send him (meaning plaintiff) where he was another time (meaning the state's prison of the state of California)," without any statement of extrinsic facts showing the words charged to have been used in an offensive sense, different from their ordinary meaning, does not state a cause of action, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 460, provides that it is not necessary to state extrinsic facts for the purpose of showing the application to plaintiff of the defamatory matter out of which the cause of action arises, since it does not dispense with the averments necessary at common law to show the meaning of the words.

2. Where the words spoken are not slanderous per se, the innuendo cannot introduce a meaning broader than the words naturally bear, unless connected with proper introductory averments.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by Gerard Grand against Louis G. Dreyfus for slander. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Richards & Carrier, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for appellee.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for slander. Plaintiff had the verdict of a jury, with damages assessed at $300. Defendant appeals from the judgment on bill of exceptions. The pleadings are verified. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled. The alleged slanderous words were spoken in the French language to Frenchmen, and are set forth in French, with their meaning in English, to wit: "If he (meaning the plaintiff) continues to sell (meaning steal) my hogs, I will send him (meaning plaintiff) where he was another time (meaning the state's prison of the state of California). I have had many other occasions to have had him arrested." And it is alleged that the words so spoken in the French language were understood by the persons to whom spoken as above translated and explained in English. The answer does not specifically deny using the language concerning the selling of the hogs, nor that the language was intended to convey the meaning as alleged, nor that the words were understood as translated; but it is denied that any of the words were falsely or maliciously spoken, or were understood to mean "that defendant had had many occasions to have had plaintiff arrested." Defendant also sets forth that he held a chattel mortgage on the hogs, executed by plaintiff, and that while it was in force plaintiff sold certain of the hogs so mortgaged, without obtaining the consent of defendant, and without notifying him of such sale, and without his knowledge, and without notifying the vendee that the hogs were mortgaged to defendant; and defendant claims that he had reference to these facts when speaking the words stated in the complaint. Defendant also alleges that plaintiff had been guilty of the charge alleged in the complaint to have been made against him by defendant, of unlawfully selling hogs in which he (defendant) had an interest as mortgagee, and that whatever defendant said of and concerning plaintiff was said in the belief of its truth and verity, and as a warning to others, and not from any motives of malice towards plaintiff.

Defendant moved for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence, and he now urges error in overruling his motion. The points presented are: (1) That the complaint does not state sufficient facts, because there is no statement in the nature of a colloquium of the extrinsic facts showing the words charged to have been uttered or used in an offensive sense, different from their ordinary meaning and import; and (2) the language does not state a slander per se, and there are no allegations as to the tendency of the language to directly injure plaintiff in his trade or business, and there are no allegations as to what constitutes his trade or business, and there is no allegation of actual damage caused by the natural consequence of the slander. The alleged defamatory matter here charged falls under subdivision 1, § 46, Civ. Code, reading: "Slander is a false and unprivileged publication other than libel, which: (1) Charges any person with crime, or with having been indicted, convicted or punished for crime. * * *" Section 460, Code Civ. Proc., provides that: "In an action for libel or slander it is not necessary to state in the complaint any extrinsic facts for the purpose of showing the application to the plaintiff of the defamatory matter out of which the cause of action arose; but it is sufficient to state, generally, that the same was published or spoken concerning the plaintiff. * * *" It is beyond dispute that the word "sell," regarded in its ordinary meaning, does not carry with it the impression conveyed by the word "steal." It was held in Harris v. Zanone, 93 Cal. 59, 28 Pac. 845, that "the statute dispenses with the colloquium and innuendo only so far as they show that the defamatory words applied to the plaintiff, and goes no further. The averments necessary in common-law pleading to show the meaning of the words must still be made." It was also there held that where the words spoken are libelous in themselves, and were uttered in the vernacular of those to whom they were addressed, it is not necessary to make any averment other than that they were spoken of and concerning the plaintiff, nor to allege that they were understood by the hearers to apply to the plaintiff. Where the words are not libelous in themselves the rule is different. Townsh. Sland. §§ 308, 310. The office of the innuendo is merely to interpret the meaning of the language used. Indeed, the word "meaning" is the synonym of the word "innuendo," and so is the phrase "that is to say"; and hence it is held that, where the words spoken are actionable, an innuendo undertaking to state the same in other words is superfluous; if not actionable or libelous per se, the innuendo cannot introduce a meaning broader than the words naturally bear, unless connected with proper introductory averments. Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. 220; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225; Young v. Cook, 144 Mass. 41, 10 N. E. 719; Townsh. Sland. §§ 308, 335. Mr. Townshend says: "It [the innuendo] may serve for an explanation, to point a meaning where there is precedent matter, expressed or necessarily understood or known, but never to establish a new charge. It may apply what is already expressed, but cannot add to nor enlarge nor change the sense of the previous words. If the words before the innuendo do not sound in slander, no meaning produced by the innuendo will make the action maintainable, for it is not the nature of an innuendo to beget an action." Id. § 335. It has been held that words like these,

"You swore false," "You took a false oath," "He swore false before Esquire Andrews," "He swore to a lie," will not sustain an action, unless the declaration contains a colloquium showing that the words referred to a trial or other legal proceeding. Cases cited in Pike v. Van Wormer, 5 How. Prac. 171. It was stated in this case that "the reason is that the words, standing alone, do not, as matter of law, impute a crime punishable in a temporal court. A man may swear false without having taken an oath in any court; and he may swear false in a court of record, in a point not material, without incurring the guilt of perjury." There is no hardship in requiring the plaintiff to state in his complaint those circumstances which point the meaning of the words and the intention of the speaker. As further illustrations: "She is sick (innuendo, she has had a child);" "She is a bad girl (innuendo, a prostitute);" "He had corn from B.'s farm (innuendo, that he had stolen corn from B.),"—were held to be unwarranted, there being no inducement to support them. Townsh. Sland. § 341. The innuendo cannot perform the office of the colloquium or inducement. Id. § 335. It is the office of the inducement to set forth the extrinsic circumstances which, coupled with the language uttered, affect its construction and make it actionable, where, standing alone, the language used would appear not to affect the plaintiff injuriously. As was said in Taverner v. Little, 5 Bing. N. C. 678, "Inducement is the statement of facts out of which the charge arises, or which are necessary or useful to make the charge intelligible." It has been frequently held that the inducement is necessary where the language does not naturally and per se convey the meaning which the plaintiff would attribute to it, and where reference to some extrinsic fact is necessary to explain it. For example, where the language is ironical it must be so alleged in the inducement. Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. 206.

It is not material where the matters of inducement appear in the complaint,—whether before or after the statement of the language published,—although logically they should precede the words spoken. In the complaint before us no facts by way of inducement appear before the statement of the language used. The only allegations that cast any light upon the meaning intended to be conveyed are the following: "I have had many other occasions to have had him arrested." As to this language, none of the witnesses to whom defendant spoke testified to having heard it, and it may be dismissed from the case. The only other allegation is, "I will send him where he was another time (innuendo, state's prison)." We cannot regard this as in any sense explaining the situation of and circumstances surrounding the parties, or as explaining what the defendant meant by saying, "If he continues to sell my hogs." It is alleged that the hearers understood defendant to mean "steal my hogs"; but does the complaint disclose enough extrinsic facts from which alone to warrant us in holding that the hearers had a right to put such construction on the language used, or that as matter of law his language had such meaning? We think not. It certainly cannot be the law that a defendant must answer to the charge of slander whenever, without reason, some bystander attributes to his language a meaning wholly different from the natural import of the language used. There should be sufficient inducement alleged somewhere in the complaint from which, when proven to be true, it would be fair and reasonable to say, as matter of law, that defendant intended, in using the language, to charge that the plaintiff was guilty of the crime, or the act giving rise to the alleged slander. The language, "I will send him where he was before," can by no possibility be held to mean, "I will send him to state's prison," except it be aided by the allegation of some extrinsic facts or circumstances, and it cannot be held to cast any light upon the meaning of the word "sell" without some such explanation. The complaint is wanting in allegations of any facts or circumstances which interpret the language used, except the innuendo alone. But, as we have seen, the innuendo cannot introduce a meaning broader than the words naturally bear, unless connected with proper averments. It is manifest from the evidence, as well as from the answer, that the language used grew out of the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties in respect of the hogs, and from plaintiff's having sold some of these hogs. The covert allusion to the state's prison had reference, no doubt, to plaintiff's previous commitment. But these facts and circumstances we are asked to import into the complaint by means of the innuendo alone, which we think the rules of pleading do not warrant. The witness Levy, to whom the words were spoken, testified as to defendant's meaning: "I understood that he should not sell any hogs any more. Q. What did you understand the words to mean, 'send him where he had been before'? A. It means Mr. Grand had the misfortune to be in state's prison, and he would send him there again. Q. What did you understand him to mean, 'selling the hogs'? A. I understand Dreyfus had a mortgage. I knew that." He also testified that he knew plaintiff had sold some of the mortgaged hogs. "He said, 'If he don't stop selling these hogs.' The language was addressed to me." "The object was to warn Mr. Grand to discontinue selling hogs. That is how I understood it. I have been a sort of adviser for both of the parties. When Mr. Dreyfus spoke to me about this,—made use of this language,—he expected me to repeat it to Mr. Grand." The witness Loustalot overheard some of the conversation. He testified that the word used was "sell," but he said nothing about his knowledge of any mortgage. He had heard of plaintiff having been in state's prison before, and hence understood the language, "where he had been before," to mean state's prison. The only other witness, Daguerre, except plaintiff, testified to the language used, but was not asked as to its meaning, or how he understood it. Plaintiff heard the language, but immediately stepped out of hearing. He does not testify as to its meaning. I mention this evidence because it seems to me to show the wisdom of the rule as we have given it, and to show that, failing to set out some at least of the facts as inducement or averment or colloquium, the complaint does not state a cause of action. This view of the pleadings makes it unnecessary to pass upon other alleged errors. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: BRITT, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

McGINTY v. MORGAN. (S. F. 899.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1898.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE—PLEADING—APPEAL.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, provides that notice of a claim to a mechanic's lien shall contain a statement of the "terms, time given, and conditions of the contract." A claimant to such a lien for the construction of a house filed his notice, stating "that said house was to be erected, to consist of five rooms, and to be finished in a workmanlike manner, for the agreed price of $740." Held a sufficient compliance with the Code to entitle claimant to his lien.

2. A notice of a claim to a mechanic's lien recited that, in addition to the work required under the contract, extra work for the agreed price of five dollars was performed, which claim was set out in plaintiff's petition, and was not denied by the answer. Held, that such admission supported the statement in the notice of the claim for extra work.

3. In a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, a new trial was granted defendant on the ground of the insufficiency of the notice of his lien. Held, that defendant would be precluded from contending that the order may have been granted upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by one McGinty against one Morgan. From an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Will M. Beggs and W. C. Kennedy, for appellant. Wm. P. Veuve, for respondent.

HARRISON J. The superior court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien upon certain property of the defendant, and afterwards, upon motion of the defendant, granted a new trial. From this order the plaintiff has appealed. The motion was made upon several statutory grounds, but in its order the court limited the ground upon which it was granted to the insufficiency of the notice of lien which was filed with the county recorder, in that it failed to contain a statement of the "terms, time given, and conditions of the contract." The plaintiff contracted directly with the defendant for the erection of a one-story, five-roomed cottage upon a lot of land belonging to the defendant, for the sum of $740, of which $500 was to be paid as the work progressed, and the balance when the house was finished. The defendant paid to the plaintiff $250 during the progress of the work, and the further sum of $300 at its close; and, upon his refusal to pay the remainder, the plaintiff, within 30 days after the completion of the building, filed with the county recorder his claim of lien, which contained the following statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of said contract: "That said house was to be erected, to consist of five rooms, and to be finished in a workmanlike manner, for the agreed price of $740. That, in addition, extra work for the agreed price of five dollars was performed." The respondent contests the sufficiency of this notice, upon the ground that it does not state that the plaintiff agreed to furnish all material and labor for the house (except painting), and does not state that the contract price was to be paid in installments as the work progressed.

The provision of section 1187, Code Civ. Proc., that the notice of lien shall contain a statement of the "terms, time given, and conditions of the contract," is not to be construed as requiring a statement of all the details of the contract, but is to receive a reasonable construction, in view of the purpose for which it is manifestly required. The statute is a remedial statute, and, for the purpose of carrying into effect the object for which it was enacted, is to receive a liberal construction, and the notices which under its provisions are required to be given have regard to substance rather than to form. Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 184, 41 Pac. 873. In Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 104, 37 Pac. 195, it was said: "The purpose of the record and statement must be to inform the owner, in case of a contractor and laborers rendering services under such contract, as to the extent and nature of a lienor's claim, to facilitate investigation as to its merit." The present case is not one where the owner is brought into relation with the claimant by reason of labor performed for or materials furnished to another person, of which he has only such knowledge as is given by the notice of lien which is filed. Here the owner contracted for the improvement directly with the person claiming the lien, and therefore had full knowledge of the terms of the contract. It is not contended that the claimant made an erroneous statement of the terms of the contract in his notice of lien, or that there was any time given, or condition thereto, other than as stated in the notice; the claim being that he did not set forth that the contract price was to be paid in installments as the work progressed. He did, however, state the correct amount of the contract price, and the amount that had been paid thereon, and this exceeded the amount of these installments. We are of the opinion that this was a substantial compliance with the above provision of section 1187, and entitled him to enforce the lien. See Jewell v. McKay, 82 Cal. 144, 23 Pac. 139.

It is alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff performed extra work for the agreed price of five dollars, and this allegation is not denied by the defendant in his answer. This admission supports the statement in the notice of the claim for extra work.

The express limitation of the ground upon which the order granting a new trial was made, to the insufficiency of the notice of lien, forecloses the defendant from contending that the order may have been granted upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings. The errors of law presented by the respondent need no consideration. The order is reversed.

CHRISTIAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (L. A. 309.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1898.)

SUPERIOR COURTS — JURISDICTION — AMOUNT INVOLVED — INTEREST.

Const. art. 6, § 5, giving the superior courts jurisdiction of cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to $300, does not give them jurisdiction of an action on a note originally for less than $300, but which, by compounding the interest, has created a new principal, amounting to more than $300.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Proceeding on a writ of review by H. T. Christian against the superior court of San Diego county. Judgment of the superior court set aside for want of jurisdiction.

Gibson & Titus and J. C. Hizar, for appellant. J. B. Mannix, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is a proceeding upon a writ of review, wherein it is contended by the petitioner that a certain judgment entered by the superior court of San Diego county is void for want of jurisdiction. On the 4th day of April, 1895, an action was commenced in the superior court of the county of San Diego against the petitioner and one E. Dougherty to collect the amount due upon a promissory note in the words and figures following: "\$200. San Diego, Cal., Oct. 10, 1890. Six months after date, without grace, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of W. P. Walters the sum of two hundred dollars, with interest thereon from this date until payment at the rate of one and one-quarter per cent. per month, payable quarterly, and, if not so paid, then to become part of the principal of this note, and to bear like rate of interest till paid. Both principal and interest to be paid in United States gold coin. And we further agree that in the event of suit brought against —, then there shall be added to any judgment against us rendered in said suit, as counsel fees, an additional sum of twenty per centum in like gold coin, upon the amount of principal and interest hereof accrued at the time of the entry of said judgment; or, if paid before judgment, and after action commenced, then on the amount at the date of payment. E. Dougherty. H. T. Christian." In the complaint it was averred that the only payments which had been made upon the note were the following, on account of interest: May 12, 1891, \$15; November 7, 1891, \$15; and February 25, 1893, \$10. It was also alleged that there was due on the note as principal the sum of \$200, with interest, compounded monthly, from the 10th day of May, 1893, at the rate of  $1\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. per month. The amount due on the note when the action was commenced, for principal and interest which had been thus compounded, was \$309. In section 5 of article 6 of the constitution superior courts are given jurisdiction of cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to \$300, and in section 11 of the same article it is provided that the powers and duties of justices of the peace shall not trench upon the jurisdiction of other courts, except as there specified, which exception does not affect this contention. The question, therefore, is whether the superior court or justice's court has jurisdiction in an action upon a note originally for less than \$300, but which, by compounding the interest, has created a new principal (if it can be so regarded), amounting to more than \$300. What induced those who framed the constitution to provide that interest shall not be considered for the purpose of determining jurisdiction? I can conceive of nothing except that those who loan such small sums may be more willing to do so if, upon default, they are afforded an expeditious and cheap means of collection; and it was intended that they would not lose this advantage if the loan were allowed to continue until the sum due should exceed \$300. Perhaps, too, it was deemed of some consequence that the jurisdiction should not depend upon a computation in regard to which there might exist a difference. I can see no difference in principle whether the increase is by simple or compound interest. The amount sued for and in controversy in either case may exceed \$300. In each case, also, the excess of \$300 accrued on that contract as interest. The terms "principal" and "interest" are correlative. Each implies and excludes the other. That which is principal cannot be interest. Yet we contract for compound interest, and necessarily this is an agreement that the installment of interest which is compounded shall be made a principal, and bear interest. But the term "principal" applies to the new sum only in relation to the interest upon it. It is still true that this new principal itself accrued upon the contract sued upon as interest. If we were to speak of it with reference to the original principal, or in regard to the mode in which it accrued on the obligation,—became a part of the debt,—we should call it interest. So, too, if the lender were asked how much he received as compensation for his loan, he would necessarily include all except his original loan. This is interest. Civ. Code, § 1915. Within the purview of this constitutional provision, I think, when suit is brought to recover a debt, the question is, what portion of the debt became such—upon the obligation, contract, or liability sued upon—as interest? In regard to an express loan, this seems obvious, and the same rule must be extended to all cases. Counsel have not found any authority upon the precise point. Howard v. Bates Co., 43 Fed. 276, is like this in some of its features. In that case the interest was not compounded, but coupons were attached to the bonds, representing the interest, and it was contended that the coupons bore interest after maturity. Suit was brought upon two bonds of \$1,000 each, and upon certain interest coupons which were attached to the bonds. The circuit court did not have jurisdiction unless the subject-matter of the suit "exceeded, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of two thousand dollars." It was contended that, the coupon being a separate obligation, and itself bearing interest after maturity, the court had jurisdiction. The amount due on each coupon, it was said, made a new principal. But the court replied that it made no difference though the coupon bore interest, and could be detached, and separately sued upon. It represented the interest due on the bond, and, as to it, was interest, and should be so regarded, under the federal statute, in determining the jurisdiction of the court. The case is not exactly like the case in hand, but the principle is the same. The constitution evidently directs the court to regard the debt sued upon as divided into two parts, one of which, in reference to the other, is the principal; one represents the original debt, the other interest upon such debt. The jurisdiction must be determined by excluding all that portion which accrued as interest. The judgment of the superior court is, therefore, without jurisdiction, and void, and the same is annulled and set aside.

MAXSON et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF MADERA COUNTY. (L. A. 382.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1898.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—APPEALS—TRIAL DE NOVO—REMAND OF CAUSE.

1. On appeal from a default judgment of a justice of the peace, whether on questions of law or of fact, there cannot be a trial de novo.

2. On appeal from a justice court, the superior court has no jurisdiction, on reversing, to remand the case to the justice; the effect of an order vacating a justice's judgment being to dismiss the action without prejudice.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Petition by B. A. Maxson and another for a writ of review to review a judgment of the superior court of Madera county entered in an action appealed to that court from a justice court. Judgment annulled in part.

W. H. Larew, for petitioners. Francis A. Fee, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. An action was commenced in the justice's court by one Roberts against Maxson & Harris, petitioners in this proceeding. Defendants in that action appeared by general demurrer. A day was fixed for hearing the issue of law raised by the demurrer, and defendants duly notified. They failed to appear, and after waiting one hour the demurrer was overruled. Plaintiff thereupon demanded judgment for the sum specified in the summons, and the court entered judgment as prayed for in the complaint, after first entering the default of defendants. In due time defendants gave notice of and perfected their appeal from the judgment "on questions of law alone." Defendants filed a statement of the case setting forth the facts as above, and stating the grounds for the appeal, namely, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that defendants had no notice of the overruling of the demurrer, nor of the trial of the case, other than the notice of the trial of the issue of law raised by said demurrer; that the justice had no jurisdiction to enter a judgment, and it is void. When the appeal came up for hearing, the superior court ordered "that the judgment of the lower court be, and the same is hereby, reversed, with directions to the said lower court to sustain the demurrer of the defendants to the complaint of plaintiff, with leave to the said plaintiff to amend his complaint, if so advised." To which ruling ordering any further proceedings in the lower court after the judgment was reversed, defendants excepted.

The justice had jurisdiction to enter judgment upon failure of defendants to answer. They were not entitled to previous notice of the overruling of the demurrer. Code Civ. Proc. § 872; Stewart v. Justice's Court, 109 Cal. 616, 42 Pac. 158. The question as to the sufficiency of the complaint was presented by the statement of the case, and could have been heard without a statement. Rossi v. Superior Court, 114 Cal. 374, 46 Pac. 177. The court had jurisdiction to hear and determine it. Section 980, Code Civ. Proc. But whether the complaint did or did not state a cause of action cannot be reviewed in this proceeding. Sherer v. Superior Court, 94 Cal. 354, 29 Pac. 716; Id. 96 Cal. 653, 31 Pac. 565. The superior court, however, did not sustain the demurrer, but manifestly grounded its order remanding the case to the justice upon the insufficiency of the complaint.

Petitioners contend (1) that there is no distinction between appeals on questions of law alone and appeals on questions of law and fact, and that the court ought to have ordered a new trial in the superior court; and (2) that the court had no jurisdiction to correct the rulings of the justice, and remand the case with instructions how to proceed. Respondent contends (1) that the appellate court has jurisdiction to try only such issues as were raised in the lower court, and that as no issue of fact was there raised the superior court could not try the case anew; and (2) that, having no authority to try the case, the superior court made the only order it could make, when it reversed the judgment, and remanded the case to the court of original jurisdiction.

The effect of an appeal from a justice's court is to set aside and vacate the judgment in that court, and only the superior court thereafter has jurisdiction. Bullard v. McArdle, 98 Cal. 855, 33 Pac. 193. And this is true, whether the appeal be on questions of law alone or of both law and fact. The appeal here was not from the order overruling the demurrer, as suggested by respondent, but was, and necessarily must have been, from the final judgment, and brought up all the proceedings of the justice. And that an appeal may be taken from a default judgment there can be no doubt. Fabretti v. Superior Court, 77 Cal. 305, 19 Pac. 481.

1. It is the settled law in this state that on appeal from a judgment properly entered in the justice's court by default to answer, there being no issue of fact raised in the justice's court, the appellate court cannot try the case de novo; and this is true whether the appeal is upon questions of law alone, or on questions of both law and fact. People v. County Court, 10 Cal. 19; Funkenstein v. Elgutter, 11 Cal. 328; Rickey v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. 661; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Superior Court, Id. 471; Curtis v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 435; Myrick v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 98, 8 Pac. 648; Fabretti v. Superior Court, 77 Cal. 305, 19 Pac. 481; Code Civ. Proc. § 980.

In Curtis v. Superior Court, supra, defendant had answered, denying all the allegations of the complaint, but failed to appear at the trial. The appeal was on questions of law alone, and the superior court reversed the judgment, and ordered a new trial in that court. Held proper. But in the case here there was no answer and no issue of fact presented in the lower court.

2. If the appellate court cannot in such case order a new trial, what can it do? Respondent cites Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8, from which he quotes as follows: "When an appeal from a justice's court is regularly taken, the superior court not only has jurisdiction to try the case upon its merits, but it has entire and complete jurisdiction of the cause for any and all purposes." And it is hence claimed that the action of the superior court in the present case cannot be reviewed, because it had jurisdiction to make the order. That case has been often cited to the well-settled proposition that, however grave the error committed by the court, its judgment cannot be annulled by means of the writ of certiorari, if it had jurisdiction. But we do not think it was intended to hold that by merely assuming jurisdiction the court could acquire it, nor that, by perfecting an appeal from a justice's court to the superior court in a case where the record showed a default judgment in the lower court, the superior court could order a new trial in that court, and try the case de novo, or remand it to the lower court for trial. In Buckley v. Superior Court the appeal was dismissed on motion. It was held that the court had jurisdiction to do this, and its action could not be reviewed, however erroneous. If the court had jurisdiction in the present case to remand it with directions to the justice how to proceed, then Buckley v. Superior Court is undoubted authority, and we cannot review the error, if it was error only. But to hold that the court had such jurisdiction would be to ingraft upon our practice in justice courts a system unknown to the statutes, and would recognize a power never before exercised in this state in any reported case of which we have knowledge. It would practically inaugurate the system governing appeals to the supreme court, with all its complexity, to carry out which the law provides no machinery, and points out no procedure. The cases all treat an appeal duly perfected from the justice's court as finally and forever removing the case from that court, and vesting jurisdiction thereafter in the appellate court. In Myrick v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 100, 8 Pac. 649, Commissioner Foote remarked: "The superior court should have reversed that judgment, and sent the case back for trial on the issues tendered by the pleadings." This expression is seized upon by respondent as authority for the order of the court in the present case remanding it to the justice with directions. In Myrick v. Superior Court there was a change of venue obtained, and defendant moved to dismiss, before the justice to whom the case was transferred, on the ground that the justice before whom the action was originally brought failed to mark the complaint "Filed," as required by law; and, although the defendant had answered and demurred, the motion was granted. Plaintiff duly appealed on "law and facts," and the superior court tried the case de novo, and gave judgment for plaintiff. It was here held, on writ of review, that the court had no power to try the issue of fact, because no such issue had been tried in the lower court, and that the action of the superior court was beyond its jurisdiction, and its judgment void, and it was ordered annulled. The suggestion of the commissioner that the case ought to have been sent back to the justice for trial was not necessary to the decision, and was not carried out in the order made by this court. That case decided but the one point, to wit, that, there having been no issue of fact tried in the lower court, no such issue could be tried in the superior court; and it is cited to that proposition in Fabretti v. Superior Court, supra. We have found in no case touching the practice in justices' courts, and appeals relating thereto, any intimation that the course suggested in Myrick v. Superior Court could be resorted to in a case like the present one; and it is because the superior court lacks jurisdiction to make such an order. It was said in Sherer v. Superior Court, supra: "The superior court can acquire appellate jurisdiction of a cause pending in a justice's court only in conformity with the steps prescribed by the statute for taking an appeal from that court; nor can it, after such appeal has been taken, exercise any other jurisdiction in the cause than has been authorized by statute." And it is only within the limits thus prescribed that the exercise of its jurisdiction, as the opinion aptly adds, "must be submitted to as a part of the sacrifice which every individual is compelled to yield to the infirmities of human government." In the case of Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, at the suit of Wells against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, defendant was served with summons, but not with copy of the complaint. Defendant appeared specially by motion to set aside the service. The motion was granted, and judgment entered against plaintiff, who appealed. In the superior court defendant appeared specially to move the dismissal of the appeal. The court, without disposing of the appeal, ordered the defendant to answer and proceed to trial. It was held in this court, on application for writ of prohibition, that the superior court had jurisdiction only to affirm or reverse the justice's judgment, and that the order to try the case was in excess of the jurisdiction of the superior court. Our conclusion upon the point is that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in remanding the case to the justice's court. It had jurisdiction to annul and vacate the judgment. It had not jurisdiction to try the case de novo, nor to remand the case to the lower court. The effect of the order vacating the judgment of the justice of the peace was to dismiss the case, leaving the plaintiff the right to begin another action in the justice court. This may seem a hardship, and it is; in some cases amounting to a denial of any remedy,—for example, where the statute of limitations has intervened. But plaintiff took judgment with the admonition that, if his complaint was insufficient, the superstructure built upon it might be torn down on appeal. So much of the judgment here upon review as directs the justice's court to sustain the demurrer or to take any further proceedings in the case is annulled.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion so much of the judgment as directs the justice's court to sustain the demurrer or to take any further proceedings in the case is annulled.

SANGER v. RYAN et al. (L. A. 439.)

ASSIGNMENTS FOR CREDITORS—RECOVERY OF PROPERTY BY ASSIGNEE—RIGHT OF DEFENDANT TO COUNSEL FEES.

Defendant accepted stock from a partnership without consideration, not in the usual course of business, and within 30 days prior to insolvency proceedings against it, but ignorant that the transfer was in fraud of creditors. When sued by the assignee for the stock, he denied the assignee's right to it, but did not set up the right of any one else except the partners, and he was not requested by them to defend their titles as partners or as individuals. Held, that he was not entitled to counsel fees, on rendition of a judgment for plaintiff, because of being in doubt whether it was individual or partnership property, nor because an individual creditor of one of the partners had attempted to attach that partner's interest in the stock.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Jud Sanger, assignee of J. B. Myer & Co., insolvent debtors, against Thomas C. Ryan and another. From so much of a judgment for plaintiff as awarded counsel fees to defendant Ryan, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part.

Parsons & Sherer and S. J. Parsons, for appellant. Edwin A. Meserve, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to have plaintiff declared to be entitled, as assignee in insolvency, to certain shares of defendant corporation. The court found that J. B. Myer & Co. were declared insolvents August 7, 1896, and plaintiff is the duly-elected assignee of said insolvents. The shares in question (of which there were 100) were of the value of $100 each, and had been assigned by Myer & Co., owners, on August 3, 1896, to defendant Ryan, within 30 days prior to insolvency proceedings. The assignment was without consideration, and not in the usual course of business, but Ryan then had no knowledge of Myer & Co.'s insolvency. He had no beneficial interest in the stock or its dividends. The court further found that "under the circumstances in which said stock was intrusted to the defendant Ryan, he had doubt whether it was partnership property of the said firm or the individual property of said Myer and Merrill, each being the owner of fifty shares," and that "an individual creditor of said Merrill, in an action against him, attached, or attempted to attach, fifty shares of said stock as the property of said Merrill, and said Ryan has in good faith made defense herein for the purpose of having the ownership of said stock judicially determined, and to relieve himself from liability as such trustee." As conclusion of law the court found plaintiff entitled to the shares and dividends, "less, however, the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, hereby allowed to the said defendant Thomas C. Ryan for his reasonable expense incurred in the employment of counsel and otherwise in the litigation concerning said trust property." Judgment was accordingly rendered. The appeal is from so much of the judgment as awarded counsel fees to defendant Ryan, and comes here by bill of exceptions. It is claimed that the findings are not supported by the evidence, and the judgment is not supported by the findings.

It is contended that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that, under the circumstances in which the stock was intrusted to Ryan, he had doubt whether it was firm property or individual property of the firm's members; that an individual creditor of Merrill (one of the partners) attached, or attempted to attach, 50 shares, and that Ryan in good faith made defense in the present action to determine the ownership of the property. The only evidence submitted by defendant was that of his attorney, who testified that when Ryan was served with summons witness was employed by Ryan "to protect him as trustee, and to make such showing to the court as would reveal the fact that he held this stock as trustee for Mr. Myer and Mr. Merrill, and that he had no interest in it whatever other than as a trustee; and to put in such showing as would show that he held it in good faith, and to save him from the charge of having received it with any intent to defraud anybody; and to put in an answer in this case, and to make such showing as I thought was right and proper in order to protect the trust and to protect him from any claims against Mr. Myer and Mr. Merrill." The action was brought September 2, 1896, and summons was served October 27th. There was no evidence showing a trust further than as already stated by the witness, and there is no evidence showing "the circumstances in which said stock was intrusted to the defendant," as found by the court, other than as stated by the witness. There is no evidence tending to show upon what facts Ryan based his doubt as to whether the property, when assigned to him, was individual or partnership property. There is no evidence of any claims to the property, adverse to plaintiff, made upon Ryan, until some time after he was served with summons. We think it doubtful whether the findings challenged are sustained by the evidence; but, if they were, we do not think they justify the conclusion of law or judgment that defendant should recover attorney's fees. He was not a trustee in such sense as were the persons in the numerous cases cited by him, in some of which it was held that, "if the title to the property is assailed, he must defend it in court and out, as though it were his own, and may expend the trust funds in the employment of counsel for this purpose." Glide v. Dwyer, 83 Cal. 477, 23 Pac. 706, and Floyd v. Davis, 98 Cal. 591, 33 Pac. 746, are cited among other cases. The case in 83 Cal. 477, 23 Pac. 706, was that of foreclosure of mortgage by trustees holding the mortgage in trust to secure the holders of certain indebtedness. The case in 98 Cal. 591, 33 Pac. 746, related to the Lick trust. These cases are widely different from the one before us. Section 1021, Code Civ. Proc., provides as follows: "The measure and mode of compensation of attorneys and counselors at law is left to the agreement, express or implied, of the parties. * * * " The Code expressly provides for payment of attorney's fees in foreclosure and contested election cases, enforcing mechanics' liens, partition cases, and probate matters, and some others; and it was held in Miller v. Kehoe, 107 Cal. 340, 40 Pac. 485, that counsel fees may be allowed in equity in an action for the preservation or distribution of a fund, where all the parties have a common interest; but it was also said that the general rule is that even a successful party cannot recover counsel fees in an action either at law or equity except in enumerated instances where they are expressly authorized by statute,—citing Williams v. McDougall, 39 Cal. 85, and Salmina v. Juri, 96 Cal. 418, 31 Pac. 367. In the case we have here, defendant admitted that the property belonged to the insolvents, but denied the right of plaintiff to it. He did not set up any right in any one except the insolvents, and this he did in the face of the adjudication that they were insolvents, and in face of the fact that their property had been transferred to plaintiff. Defendant's ignorance of the fact that the assignment to him was in fraud of the creditor cannot, we think, avail him. When the complaint was served upon him he then knew, if not before, that under the insolvent act the assignee was entitled to the possession of the property if it belonged to the insolvents. He was not called upon by Myer and Merrill to defend their title as the owners in their individual capacity or otherwise, and his doubts, if he had any, as to whether they owned the stock as partners or otherwise, cannot affect the question. He chose to act as volunteer in a wholly unnecessary litigation without instructions or authority from the alleged beneficiaries,—unnecessary, for he could have answered and deposited the property with the court without any breach of trust on his part, where he would have been fully protected, and where Myer and Merrill could have claimed it as their individual property if such it was. We do not see that the findings stand in the way of correcting the error without a new trial, and therefore advise that so much of the judgment as allows counsel fees to defendant Ryan be reversed, and otherwise the judgment stand as rendered.

We concur: BRITT, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment, so far it allows counsel fees to defendant Ryan, is reversed; and otherwise the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MILLER. (Cr. 394.)<sup>1</sup>

CRIMINAL LIBEL—WHAT CONSTITUTES—CORPUS DELICTI—PROPRIETORSHIP OF PAPER—VENUE—EVIDENCE—CONFESSIONS—TRIAL—OBJECTIONS—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. The corpus delicti of the crime of libel is not the editorship or proprietorship of the paper in which the libel was published, but the malicious publication.

2. Acts and admissions of one charged with criminal libel tending to show his proprietorship of the paper in which the libel was published are not confessions, in legal contemplation.

3. On an issue whether defendant was proprietor of the paper in which a criminal libel was published, a witness testified that he himself was the proprietor, and that defendant had nothing to do with it. The foreman of the paper testified to facts tending to the same effect, but the only way he knew the first witness was proprietor was because nothing had been told him to the contrary. Opposed to this were many acts and admissions of defendant tending to show ownership. Held, that the issue was for the jury.

4. In a prosecution for criminal libel, where venue is laid in a county other than that in which the article was issued for circulation it need not be shown that defendant took the article to the former county, or directed it to be sent there, and there circulated it or caused it to be circulated, since Pen. Code, § 252, makes it sufficient to show that accused knowingly parted with the immediate custody of the libel under circumstances which exposed it to be read or seen by others.

5. Defendant objected to a question, and his objection was overruled, and he excepted. The question, however, was not answered. Subsequently the same question was asked and answered without objection by defendant. Held, that an objection thereto could not be urged on appeal.

6. When the record fails to show that exceptions were taken to a ruling, the ruling will not be reviewed.

7. Under Pen. Code, § 252, making it sufficient to sustain a charge of libel to show that accused knowingly parted with the immediate custody of the libel under circumstances which exposed it to be read or seen by others, it is not necessary to show that defendant personally wrote or printed the libelous article, nor that he personally or by personal direction circulated it.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

W. W. Miller was convicted of libel, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. V. Morehouse and F. J. Hamblar, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and C. N. Post, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, C. Defendant was informed against in the county of Santa Clara for the crime of libel, alleged to have been committed December 5, 1896, and was by the jury convicted. Judgment was accordingly entered, and the defendant was sentenced to be imprisoned in the county jail for the term of one year. Defendant appeals from this judgment, and from the order denying motion for new trial. The charge was that defendant, being the "author, editor, and proprietor of a newspaper * * * called * * * the 'Illustrated World,' * * * printed in the city and county of San Francisco, and published and circulated in said city and county, and circulated in said county of Santa Clara, upon Saturday of each week, * * * in one of the regular weekly issues of said paper did willfully and maliciously print, * * * publish, and circulate * * * the following malicious defamation, * * * to wit: 'If the conversations of Chas. W—t and Judge R. could be heard, how much crooked work would it reveal?' 'Would it not be well for those having cases before the judge to employ Attorney W—t?' " It was alleged that "the terms and names 'Judge R.' and 'the judge' meant, and were intended to mean, and were by the public understood to mean and refer to, Judge John Reynolds, who was * * * superior judge of the superior court for Santa Clara county, and the terms 'Chas. W—t' and 'Attorney W—t' * * * were intended by defendant to mean, and were by the public understood to mean and refer to, Charles Wright, who was then and there a reputable attorney at law, a practitioner in said county." It is averred that the language was intended to mean, and was understood by the public as charging that "said Superior Judge John Reynolds was dishonest and corrupt in his office as such superior judge, and that in concert with said attorney at law, Charles Wright, he, the said John Reynolds, as superior judge, did connive to defraud and cheat by dishonorable means those litigants that came before him in the trial of causes, and * * * was led and guided, against the law and in conflict with justice, to decide causes in his (said Reynolds') control in favor of said attorney, Charles Wright." Allegations follow that the publication was false and malicious, and tended to impeach the integrity of the judge, and thereby expose him to public contempt, etc. The sufficiency of the information is not questioned, nor that the language published was libelous, nor that it was published in Santa Clara county concerning the persons named at the time charged. Evidence upon these points need not, therefore, be noticed.

1. It is contended by defendant that the corpus delicti in this case was either that he was editor, proprietor, or publisher of the Illustrated World; that there is no proof of the corpus delicti, except the admissions of defendant; and that it cannot be established by extrajudicial admissions or statements. Counsel's position seems to be that a confession includes more than an admission, and that, if by the former the corpus delicti cannot be established, neither can it be by the latter. We cannot regard the editorship or proprietorship of the newspaper as the corpus delicti in this case. The essence of the crime is the malicious publication of the libelous language, and does not necessarily lie in the authorship of the article, or the ownership of the press that prints it. But, even if these facts enter into the question of guilt, it does not follow that an admission of ownership would be a confession of the crime. The acts and admissions of the defendant tending to show that he was the proprietor, either in himself or jointly with some other person, are not confessions, in legal contemplation. The law makes a wide distinction between confessions and admissions. This was pointed out in People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151: "A confession, in criminal law, is the voluntary declaration made by a person who has committed a crime or misdemeanor, to another, of the agency or participation he had in the same. The word 'confessions' is not the mere equivalent of the words 'statements or declarations.'" The term "confessions" is restricted to acknowledgments of guilt. 1 Greenl. Ev. 170. This court said in People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632: "An admission of a fact not in itself involving criminal intent is not to be rejected as evidence (without the preliminary proof) merely because it may, when connected with other facts, tend to establish guilt." See People v. Le Roy, 65 Cal. 613, 4 Pac. 649.

The alleged libel was published December 5, 1896, in the Illustrated World. It appeared from the evidence that this was a weekly journal published at 623 Montgomery street, San Francisco, and was circulated in Santa Clara county. The article in question was read in Santa Clara county by several witnesses on the day of the issue, and soon thereafter. The heading of the article read, "What Our Country Friends Would Like to Know;" and under the subhead "San José" appeared the alleged libelous publication.

The witness Bishop, who had read the article, in reply to the question, "State what you understood by it in reference to any person," answered: "I understood by the use of the word 'crookedness' that, if anybody should have a case that was to come before Judge R., it would be to his interest to employ Mr. Chas. W—t, because he would probably get the best of it when it came to the trial. * * * I understood by the language and the word 'crookedness' that if Mr. Wright, or the attorney mentioned in his paper, and some other attorney were to have a case on trial before the judge, that the opposite counsel would not get a fair shake; that, if there was any possible way for him to decide it in favor of Mr. C. D. W—t, why, he would do it. * * * I understood the words, 'Would it not be well for those having cases before the judge to employ Attorney W—t?' to mean that, if a man wanted to win that had a case to come up before the judge mentioned, that he better employ the attorney mentioned. I gave it no other meaning." The witness Macaran testified to the same effect. Judge Reynolds testified: "I never had any conversation with Mr. Wright that I would not be perfectly willing to have anybody hear, while I was on the bench, in reference to any business matters. There was nothing venal or corrupt or crooked either contained in or alluded to in conversations, or existing in fact, between us."

The question of fact chiefly discussed by counsel is whether the evidence showed that defendant was the editor or proprietor or publisher of the paper; and it is insisted that he was not shown to have had any business connection whatever with the paper, but that the sole owner, editor, and proprietor was one A. S. Burroughs. A lease of the premises 623 Montgomery street, San Francisco, where the paper was published, executed by defendant and Burroughs July 23, 1896, and by the trustees of the Floyd estate, was in evidence. In it Burroughs and defendant were described as "proprietors of the Illustrated World Publishing Company, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, parties of the second part." The lease was "for the term of twelve months from the tenth day of August, 1896." It contained the following provision: "And said parties of the second part will use and employ said premises solely for the purpose of their business as publishers of the Illustrated World Publishing Company." The evidence is that Burroughs and defendant both signed the lease as the parties of the second part. John Duckel was pressman for Francis, Valentine, & Co., in San Francisco, December 5, 1896. He was shown a copy of the paper of that date. He testified: That either he or the assistant foreman did the work of printing it. It was done under witness' directions. He received the forms from the World office, on Montgomery street; delivered the edition, when printed, to the Bus-well Company, binders. The Francis-Valentine Company printed the Illustrated World a couple of years for Bartlett, and about a year for Miller. Was printing it for defendant, Miller, on December 5, 1896. Sometimes received orders from defendant, and sometimes another person. On cross-examination he testified: "I should judge that I printed it for Miller, from the way he talked when he came down about the forms. He would come down and want to know why it wasn't printed in red this week. He would want it red one week, and then again he would want it in purple, and of course he talked about 'my paper.'" Witness did not see Burroughs at these times. "I have no knowledge that Miller was the proprietor of that paper, other than that he came down and said it was 'my paper.' * * * I am positive I had a conversation with Mr. Miller in reference to his saying that this was his paper, prior to December 24, 1896. I cannot state the positive date of this conversation. It was both before and after the 5th day of December." Witness Buswell testified: That his business was that of binding and mailing newspapers. He bound the issue of December 5th. He delivered some papers to the news company December 5th. He first met defendant in July, August, or September, 1896. He was introduced to witness by some of the World people as the new proprietor, who said his orders were to be followed. He thought Mr. Burroughs introduced him. He was asked if he did not know that Burroughs was the editor and proprietor from July, 1896, to January, 1897: "A. As a positive fact, I always understood Mr. Miller was. Q. By what did you understand it? A. By what Miller told me. Q. What did Mr. Miller tell you? A. He told me he bought the paper. Q. When was that? A. In July, August, or September, 1896. I understood that Mr. Miller was the proprietor of the paper from July, 1896, to January, 1897. He told me he bought the paper. That was in July, August, or September, 1896." Witness Watson, of the San Francisco News Company, testified that his business was handling and distributing papers, weeklies and monthlies. He testified: "We handled the edition of the World of December 5, 1896. I know Byron Millard, of San José. He is one of our regular customers. Mr. Millard got ten copies of the Illustrated World of date December 5, 1896, from our company. These papers came from Buswell's bindery to our office. I understood that W. W. Miller did the business of the World with our company during December, 1896." Witness settled with the World January 7, 1897, and gave in evidence a receipt signed by Miller of that date for $47.53, balance due Illustrated World at that time. Witness Walmer was bookkeeper of Francis, Valentine & Co., on December 5, 1896. He testified: That they commenced to print the Illustrated World on May 30, 1896, and ceased on April 6, 1897. There was an interval of a month between December 24, 1896, and January 26, 1897. He never talked with defendant about printing the paper, but did talk with him about the payment of the bills. That he came about once a week,—sometimes not for two weeks. He was not positive as to the dates when Miller spoke to him, and could not fix a date before December 5th. Miller ordered some postal cards printed on December 17, 1896, and witness said he thought they related to the business of the World. Rosalio Salmon testified for defendant: That he was foreman of the Illustrated World from March, 1896. Burroughs became proprietor about July 6, 1896, and he continued his proprietorship the rest of the year. Witness said: "I only know from what he told me that he was proprietor of the paper on the 4th, 5th, and 6th days of December, 1896. He ran the paper up to the end of the year; Mr. Miller then appeared as proprietor about the first of the year 1897. I received all my orders from the beginning of the 6th of July, 1896, up to and including 5th day of December, for making up the paper—cuts and everything—from Mr. Burroughs. I received them from him alone, for I recognized him as the only person authorized to give me orders. * * * Mr. Miller was at the office occasionally between July and December. I didn't know who he was. I knew him as Mr. Miller for about three months. He gave me no orders between July and December. He was not recognized by any of the employés of the paper as the manager, editor, or proprietor. I suppose he had a friendly interest towards Mr. Burroughs, and that is why he was around there." Witness A. S. Burroughs, for the defense, testified very positively that he was the sole and only proprietor, editor, and manager of the paper from July to January, and that defendant had no interest in or connection with it whatever. Upon cross-examination he testified that he was convicted in the federal court at Los Angeles in 1889 for mailing an improper letter, and was sentenced to two years in San Quentin, and served out his time. He also testified that he was convicted of the crime of forgery in Napa county, and that he had passed under the name of W. W. Wyman while there. No other witnesses were called for defendant.

We have given substantially all the evidence in the case, for the reason that it is earnestly contended that there is nothing in any way tending to establish defendant's guilt, except his own admissions, and that he cannot be convicted on these alone, and furthermore that the positive, undisputed evidence of Salmon and Burroughs is that defendant had no interest whatever in the paper on December 5th, and took no part in its management. It is manifest, we think, that the facts, in their nature admissions tending to show that defendant had an interest in the paper as proprietor or manager, do not come within the category of confessions, as understood in criminal law. The lease is in itself strong evidence that defendant was a proprietor with Burroughs; for he therein so describes himself, and he agrees over his own signature that they "will use and employ said premises as publishers of the Illustrated World Publishing Company." The admission made by defendant in this lease was not of a fact in itself involving criminal intent. There was nothing in the admission which showed an intention to engage in the publication of a paper containing libelous charges against reputable citizens, and yet the admission was such as, connected with other facts, tended to establish guilt, and was admissible. People v. Parton, supra. And the same may be said of other admissions and conduct in the nature of admissions. They were not confessions of guilt. As to the lease, Burroughs explains why it was signed by defendant; and, if his evidence is to be received as conclusive, it would appear therefrom that defendant was wholly blameless for the crime committed, and punishment should fall upon Burroughs, and not upon defendant. But the jury did not believe Burroughs, and we cannot say they were wrong in rejecting his evidence. Salmon's evidence tended to show that defendant had no connection with the management of the paper. But he testified that the only way he knew that Burroughs was the editor and proprietor was because nothing was told him to the contrary, and that this was the only way he knew it. He does not appear to have known anything about the lease, nor does he state anything in any wise contradicting the evidence of witnesses as to what defendant did on the outside in the way of manifesting an interest in the paper. We think there was evidence sufficient to support the verdict, and, if the jury erred in accepting that which was incriminatory and rejecting that which was exculpatory, it was an error not within our province to correct.

2. It is claimed that the venue was not proved, although it is admitted that the article was published in Santa Clara county, because there is no evidence that defendant published it in Santa Clara county. Defendant concedes that a person may be prosecuted for libel in any county where the paper is circulated by him or through his agency, but it is claimed that it must be shown that he circulated or caused it to be circulated in the county where the prosecution is conducted; citing Odgers, Lib. & Sland. star pp. 580, 581, where it is said that "it is necessary to further prove, in a criminal case, that the prisoner published the libel in the county in which the venue is laid." If defendant means that it must be shown that he took the paper to Santa Clara county, and there circulated or caused it to be circulated, or that he must be shown to have directed the paper to be sent there, before he can be convicted, we think he mistakes the law. If defendant, being the proprietor, parted with the immediate custody of the paper in San Francisco under circumstances such as exposed it to be read by other persons, it matters not how it reached San José. When he parted with control of the libel, it was deemed to be published, so far as the defendant was concerned, wherever it found its way, unless it passed into the immediate possession and control of the person or persons affected by it. It was not necessary to show that defendant took the paper, or directed it to be taken, to the printers, and again directed it to be taken to the binders, and afterwards directed it to be sent to the news company, to be mailed to San José. It is sufficient if he is shown to have had control and management of the paper, and parted with control under circumstances such as implied an intent to give it circulation. Pen. Code, § 252. The jurisdiction to try the case in Santa Clara county, though the paper was published in the city and county of San Francisco, is given by article 1, § 9, of the constitution. See In re Kowalsky, 73 Cal. 120, 14 Pac. 399.

3. It is claimed that the court erred in overruling defendant's objection to the question: "Q. What did you understand by the language of the paper in relation to Judge Reynolds and Attorney Wright?" The court overruled the objection, and defendant excepted. The district attorney thereupon reframed his question, the answer to which was, on motion of defendant's attorney, stricken out. The record then shows: "Mr. Beasley [district attorney]: Don't state to whom you understood it to refer, but state what you understood by it in reference to any person. A. You are trying to get the word 'crookedness,'—what it means? Q. Yes; that is what I am trying to get at." The witness then gave what he understood by the word "crookedness." Defendant made no objection to the question or answer, and we think cannot now be heard to object.

4. The next errors assigned (paragraphs 4 and 5 of defendant's brief) cannot be considered, because the record fails to show that defendant took an exception to the ruling.

5. Finally, it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, because there is no testimony whatever that the defendant wrote or printed or published the article, or was manager of the paper. We have already seen that there was evidence sufficient to justify the jury in finding that defendant was a proprietor of the paper at the time the libel was published. It was not necessary to prove that defendant personally wrote or printed the article, nor that he with his own hands or by his personal direction circulated it. It was sufficient upon these points to show that he knowingly parted with the immediate custody of the paper containing the libel, under circumstances which exposed it to be read or seen by any other person than himself. Pen. Code, § 252. It is implied by the verdict that the jury found defendant guilty of doing this, and, as there was evidence to support such finding, it cannot now be disturbed. See Odgers, Lib. & Sland. pp. 157, 158; Townsh. Sland. & L. § 115. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

TODD v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 446.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1898.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—WRITTEN OBLIGATIONS.

An entry in the minutes of a school board which merely shows that building plans submitted to it had been adopted expresses no contract, and hence an action for the value of the plans, brought two years after their acceptance, is barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, requiring an action not founded on a written obligation to be brought within two years.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Hugh Todd against the board of education of City of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Kemp and Theodore Martin, for appellant. W. E. Dunn and Albert Crutcher, for respondent.

BRITT, C. On November 21, 1892, plaintiff submitted to the defendant board certain architectural plans and specifications for an addition to a school building in the city of Los Angeles. So far as appears, the only action taken by said board at any time concerning said plans, etc., was evidenced by the following entry in its minutes, made on the day aforesaid: "Dr. Barber [a member of the board] moved that the plans of H. Todd for the enlargement of the Spring street building be adopted. Carried." More than two years thereafter plaintiff commenced this action to recover the alleged reasonable value of said plans and specifications, stated at $500. The court below held that his suit is barred by the provision of the statute of limitations, requiring an action upon a contract, etc., "not founded upon an instrument of writing," to be brought within two years after the cause of action accrues. Code Civ. Proc. § 339. Plaintiff contends, as we understand the argument, that said minute entry is an "instrument of writing," so that his case is not within said section of the statute. If said entry is in any legal sense an instrument of writing, it is yet one expressing no contract or obligation to pay plaintiff anything. Therefore it is not, and cannot be, of itself the foundation of an action to compel payment. We forbear discussion, which could hardly make the conclusion plainer. McCarthy v. Water Co., 111 Cal. 340, 43 Pac. 956; Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 Pac.

SAN DIEGO LAND & TOWN CO. v. LA PRESA SCHOOL DIST. IN SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (L. A. 394.)

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT OF TAX—RECOVERY—MISTAKE OF FACT.

Where property was assessed in a district in which it was not situate, and the owner, having the means of discovering the mistake, voluntarily paid the tax, he could not recover it back, as being paid under a mistake of fact, under Civ. Code, § 1577, defining a mistake of fact as one not caused by the neglect of a legal duty.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by the San Diego Land & Town Company against La Presa school district in San Diego county. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Works & Works and Works, Works & Ingle, for appellant. Chas. Wellborn, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover $525, claimed to have been paid by plaintiff and received by defendant as special school tax under a mistake of fact. At the close of plaintiff's evidence the court gave judgment of nonsuit for defendant, from which, and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It appeared from the evidence that "Sweetwater dam—that is, the masonry structure, the retaining wall—is not, nor has it ever been, within La Presa school district, * * * and is not on tract G, Jamacha ranch." But it appeared that "a portion of tract G, Jamacha ranch, is in the lake formed by Sweetwater dam, and is covered by the water of the lake." The description of the property given in the receipt is as follows: "Sweetwater dam, on tract G, Jamacha ranch." Under the head of values is, "Improvements, $75,000." The general manager of plaintiff company testified that when the tax was paid he believed the property described in the receipts was inside La Presa school district; that it was the custom of the company to hand a statement of the company property to the county assessor, and probably it did so in this instance, but he did not know. The appeal is urged on the ground that money paid under a mistake of fact is recoverable back; citing

City of Indianapolis v. McAvoy, 86 Ind. 587; Strusburgh v. Mayor, etc., 87 N. Y. 452; Woolley v. Staley, 39 Ohio St. 354; Diefenthaler v. Mayor, etc., 111 N. Y. 331, 19 N. E. 48. It is claimed by defendant that there was in fact no mistake because the description, "Sweetwater dam, on tract G, Jamacha ranch," had no reference to the masonry structure or retaining wall, but to that portion of tract G, Jamacha ranch, which the evidence showed "is in the lake formed by Sweetwater dam, and is covered by the lake," and which was owned by plaintiff. Plaintiff replies to this that the receipt shows that the tax was for improvements, and that it is absurd to think that the taxing authorities could have believed that the reservoir above the school-district line was an improvement to real estate in any sense of the term. We do not think it necessary to determine what the description includes or excludes. The evidence is that the payment was made voluntarily, and with full means of knowledge of the facts. The first payment was made in November, 1892, the next in April, 1893, the next in November, 1893, and the last in April, 1894, and it was after this last payment the manager of plaintiff company "was informed by a man in the employ of the company that the property was outside the district." The authorities are generally agreed that a tax voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back. Mr. Cooley says: "Every man is supposed to know the law, and, if he voluntarily makes a payment which the law would not compel him to make, he cannot afterwards assign his ignorance of the law as the reason why the state should furnish him with remedies to recover it back. Especially is this the case when the officer receiving the money, who is chargeable with no more knowledge of the law than the party making payment, is not put on his guard by any warning or protest, and the money is paid over to the use of the public in apparent acquiescence in the justice of the exaction. Mistake of fact can scarcely exist in such a case except in connection with negligence, as the illegalities which render such a demand a nullity must appear from the records, and the taxpayer is just as much bound to inform himself what the records show, or do not show, as are the public authorities. The rule of law is a rule of sound policy also; it is a rule of quiet as well as of good faith, and precludes the courts being occupied in undoing the arrangements of parties which they have voluntarily made, and into which they have not been drawn by fraud or accident, or by any excusable ignorance of their legal rights and liabilities." Cooley, Tax'n, p. 809. Our Code defines mistake of fact to be one "not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake." Civ. Code, § 1577. It is the legal duty, we think, of the owner of property to see that it is properly assessed; and ample provision is made for correcting mistakes in the roll or list. The manager of the company did not testify that he paid the tax under mistake of fact, but that when the tax was paid he believed the property was inside the district. Conceding, however, that plaintiff made a mistake of fact in paying when it was not liable, the mistake was caused by its own neglect of duty, and, the payment being voluntary, the law will furnish no relief.

In 1858 the legislature of this state passed an act imposing a stamp tax upon shipments of gold out of the state. Stamps were placed on sale with the county treasurers. In Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265, plaintiff sued the county treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco to recover back money paid in the purchase of these stamps. The act was held to be unconstitutional and void. Recovery depended upon the character of the payment—whether voluntary or under compulsion or coercion. It was held that “the rule is well settled that moneys voluntarily paid upon claim of right, with full knowledge of all the facts, cannot be recovered back merely because the party at the time of payment was ignorant of or mistook the law as to his liability. The illegality of the demand paid constitutes of itself no ground for relief. * * * It is the compulsion or coercion under which the party is supposed to act which gives him a right to relief. * * * If he voluntarily pay an illegal demand, knowing it to be illegal, he is entitled to no consideration; and if he voluntarily pay such demand in ignorance or misapprehension of the law respecting its validity, he is in no better position, for it would be against the highest policy to permit transactions to be opened upon grounds of this character.” This case has been many times cited with approval. We can see no reason why the rule should be different, and we do not understand that it is different, where the mistake is one of fact, if the mistake is such that with ordinary diligence it could have been discovered. The law imputes knowledge to one who has the means of knowledge. The assessment was notice to plaintiff as to how its property was described. It had the means of knowledge, and was put upon inquiry as to the facts. Civ. Code, § 19. It is not claimed that plaintiff owns no land in tract G, Jamacha ranch. The description at most is ambiguous, and we think is such that plaintiff might reasonably have made the mistake claimed. In such case the court will not relieve. Kerr, Fraud & M. p. 412. It was held in Maxwell v. San Luis Obispo Co., 71 Cal. 466, 12 Pac. 484, in an action to recover back an illegal tax, that the complaint must show affirmatively that the payment was not made voluntarily; and the fact must be proved, or there can be no recovery, for it was said “all payments are supposed to be voluntary until the contrary appears.” In Cooper v. Chamberlin, 78 Cal. 450, 21 Pac. 14, the action was to recover back the money paid under protest upon an alleged assessment which failed to identify by proper description the plaintiff's property. It was conceded that the complaint showed that plaintiff's property was not assessed because it was not described. It was held on demurrer that the proceedings of defendant in the premises were void, and his threat to sell constituted no duress, and the payment, under the circumstances, was not recoverable, because voluntary. It was held in the case of City of Indianapolis v. McAvoy, supra, cited by plaintiff, that money paid under mistake of fact may be recovered, notwithstanding a negligent failure to use the means of knowledge. The case overruled Railroad Co. v. Pattison, 41 Ind. 312, where it was held “that the appellee had the means of knowing the location of her lots in respect to the city boundaries, and consequently she was not entitled to relief”; but in examining the rule there laid down the court in the later case intimated that the rule would apply “if the means of knowledge are present, or so easily accessible and convenient that the failure to use them would constitute negligence, and such negligence as, under the circumstances, ought to preclude relief.” In the case of Jackson v. City of Atlanta, 61 Ga. 228, plaintiff sued to recover back certain taxes collected by the defendant upon lots supposed to be within the city, but on survey were found to be without its boundaries. The court said: “The plaintiff paid his tax to the city without objection or protest that his property was not subject to taxation by the city, and that, the tax having been paid into the city treasury, and expended for the common benefit and protection of those who were recognized as being within the limits of the city, including the plaintiff, he is not now entitled to recover it back from the city.” Whatever may be the differences of opinion existing upon the question, we think the better rule is to deny relief in such cases as this. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

RISDON IRON & LOCOMOTIVE WORKS
v. CITIZENS' TRACTION CO. OF SAN DIEGO. (L. A. 355.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 10, 1898.)

APPEALABLE ORDERS—RAILROADS—ENFORCEMENT OF LIABILITIES AGAINST PROPERTY.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, allowing an appeal from an order “dissolving * * * an attachment,” applies to an order releasing attached property on the ground of nonliability to seizure.

2. Movables of a street-railroad company, even though necessary to operation under the company's franchise, are not exempt from forced sale.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by the Risdon Iron & Locomotive Works against the Citizens' Traction Company, of San Diego. From an order discharging a writ of attachment issued against defendant's property, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Withington & Carter, for appellant. J. B. Mannix, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Respondent is a street-railroad corporation, organized under the laws of this state, and on January 9, 1897, in virtue of certain franchises to it granted by the city of San Diego, it was engaged in operating a line of street railway in said city for the transportation of passengers, electricity being used as the motive power. This is an action by appellant, which is also a corporation, on a promissory note of respondent. On the day aforesaid appellant caused a writ of attachment, issued in the action, to be levied on certain cars, trucks, electric goods, and supplies, fire-proof safes, etc., the property of respondent, then used and necessary to be used in and about the business of operating said line of street railway. Thereupon respondent moved the court to discharge the attachment on the ground (we state it generally) that, considering the nature of respondent's business as a carrier of passengers, and the uses of the attached property in that behalf, the same was not subject to attachment for respondent's debt. The court ordered that "said attachment be discharged in respect of said property." Plaintiff appealed from the order.

Respondent makes the point that no appeal lies from said order. Section 963, Code Civ. Proc., provides that an appeal may be taken from an order (among others mentioned) "dissolving or refusing to dissolve an attachment." It is argued that this applies only to orders made under section 556 of the Code, which provides for discharging the writ of attachment where "the same was improperly or irregularly issued." Respondent claims that an order for the release of attached property on the ground that it is not liable to seizure under the writ is not an order dissolving the attachment. To us, however, it seems that, as regards the property released, the attachment is as effectually dissolved by such an order as if the writ were quashed. The provision of section 963, giving the right of appeal, is in terms directed to an order dissolving an attachment. The words "an attachment" in this connection are quite broad enough to include seizure and custody under the writ as well as the writ itself. Thus, it is common to say that final judgment for defendant has the effect to dissolve a prior attachment; and this has no regard to any question whether the writ was properly or regularly issued. We think the order was appealable.

As to the merits of the order, in our opinion the quality of the exemption from execution which pertains, except when otherwise provided by statute, to the franchise of a corporation such as the respondent (Gregory v. Blanchard, 98 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 199), does not extend also to property of the kind attached in this action, although it may be proper, or even necessary, to operations under the franchise. Such property does not emanate, immediately or immediately, from the state, like the privileges embraced in a franchise; it has no character of personal trust, as in the case of the franchise; and, in our opinion, it is subject to attachment or execution in like manner as other property not exempt by statute. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 540, 688, 690; Lathrop v. Middleton, 23 Cal. 257; Humphreys v. Hopkins, 81 Cal. 551, 22 Pac. 892; 1 Freeman Ex'ns, § 146a; Coe v. Railroad Co., 10 Ohio St. 372; State v. Rives, 27 N. C. 297, 307. There are respectable authorities which hold a different doctrine, but we are disposed to think they are not supported by the better reason. See Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 593. Whether the rule of liability to attachment or execution should extend to lines of railway, or to parts of other similar aggregation of property susceptible of use only as a unit, need not be decided. The cars, trucks, iron safes, and other movables seized under the writ in this action are not such property. The order appealed from should be reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BELCHER, C

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is reversed.

WATER COURSES—ADVERSE USER—CONTRACTS—ARTIFICIAL WATERS—JUDGMENTS.

1. A contract between the owner of a cañon containing a natural stream and an adjoining landowner gave the landowner the right to use the "waters flowing in said glen" for irrigating his lands, and in consideration the waterowner was given a right of way across the lands for an irrigation ditch, subject to the landowner's right to use for irrigation the waters flowing in the ditch, "or in any water ditch, flume, or aqueduct used, dug, or erected" on the land. Held, that the contract gave the landowner no right to use the waters developed artificially after the making of the contract and turned into the stream.

2. In an action to determine rights under said contract, it was decreed that plaintiff landowner had the right to use the waters of the stream, and also any waters flowing out of it in any ditch across his land. Held, that the judgment conferred no right to use artificial waters added thereto after the commencement of the action.

3. A water right is not barred by acquiescence in an impairment thereof for less time than is required for adverse user.

Action by E. L. Mayberry against the Alhambra Addition Water Company. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Van R. Paterson and Anderson & Anderson, for appellant. A. M. Stephens and Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for respondent.

BRITT, C. In the year 1860 one B. D. Wilson owned a considerable body of land, which included the source and upper portion of the channel of a stream of water flowing in a cañon or glen on said land, and called the "Mill Stream." Adjacent on the south to Wilson's land, and traversed by the lower course of said stream, was a tract of public land, 154 acres in extent, occupied by one E. J. C. Kewen, to which said Kewen afterwards acquired title. For the purpose of apportioning the flow of said stream between themselves for irrigation and other uses, the said Wilson and Kewen entered into a written contract, of date May 7, 1860, whereby Wilson granted to Kewen the right to enter on his (Wilson's) aforesaid land on the west side of said cañon, and take the water flowing therein through a certain "upper water ditch," and use the same for irrigating the land of him, the said Kewen, during Friday and Saturday of each week. Kewen on his part granted to Wilson the right of way over his said tract of 154 acres for the construction of ditches, flumes, and aqueducts, and to conduct water through the same to such outside points as Wilson might select, subject to the right of Kewen to use for irrigating his land, during two days in the week as aforesaid, the water flowing in said "upper ditch, or in any water ditch, flume, or aqueduct used, dug, or erected" by Wilson on Kewen's land. The contract in terms bound the assigns of the parties thereto. The Alhambra Addition Water Company, a corporation, defendant here, has succeeded by purchase to the lands of Wilson, including the upper part of said cañon, and to all his rights under said contract. In like manner, Mayberry, the plaintiff, has acquired the interests of Kewen in the contract, and the title to said 154-acre tract of land, together also with a certain parcel of 50 acres lying north of Kewen's original tract, and at the mouth of said cañon, which was conveyed by Wilson to Kewen by deed on November 29, 1871. This deed reserved to Wilson all water rights had by him in the 50-acre parcel.

Said contract of 1860, and a statement of the circumstances inducing the same, appear at length in the opinion of the Chief Justice rendered in a former action between the parties here, and reported in 88 Cal. 68, 25 Pac. 1101. That action was begun by the water company (defendant in the present case) on April 18, 1886, against Mayberry (the present plaintiff), and had for its principal object the determination of the rights of the parties in the water which was the subject of said contract. The judgment of the superior court therein was rendered on December 28, 1887, in favor of the water company. It contained the following provisions, among others: That Mayberry is entitled to divert and use, on Friday and Saturday of each week, all, or so much as may be necessary, of the waters of said cañon for the purpose of irrigating, on those days only, any or all of the tract of 154 acres formerly owned by Kewen. "Also the right to divert and use on said days, and for said purpose of irrigating said lands, any water flowing in any ditch, flume, or aqueduct made, constructed, or used by said Wilson * * * or by the plaintiff * * * over or across the said one hundred and fifty-four acre tract of land." That the water company is entitled to the exclusive use of the waters of said cañon, subject to the expressly specified rights of Mayberry; and that it has, and he has not, the right to develop water on that portion of the 50-acre tract lying in said cañon. On appeal taken by Mayberry this court affirmed the judgment, except in the particular last stated, as to which it was determined that Mayberry has the right to develop water on the 50-acre tract by digging wells, running tunnels, and the like, not interfering with the flow of the stream. 88 Cal. 68, 25 Pac. 1101.

Pending said former action, viz. in July, 1887, the water company began a series of explorations for water on its own land in the said cañon above the holdings of Mayberry, and continued the same during the period of some five years, and by means of wells, tunnels, etc., it tapped sources of subterranean supply, and conducted the same into the channel of said stream, thereby adding to the volume of the same a quantity of water which would not naturally flow therein at all. Speaking approximately, and not meaning to decide the fact, the flow of the stream was in this manner about doubled. All the water, when used by the water company, is conducted through a large pipe laid across the said 154-acre tract, the head of the pipe being above the northerly line of that tract and on the said 50-acre parcel.

1. The present action was instituted by Mayberry on July 17, 1894. The main question involved is whether he may use the water added to the stream as aforesaid in the same manner that he uses the natural flow. He claims that right both under the contract of 1860 and the judgment in said former action. The chief privilege secured to Kewen by said contract was the right to enter on Wilson's land, and take, on Fridays and Saturdays, "the water flowing in said glen." These words reasonably denote the then existing natural flow of the stream, and do not reasonably denote water to be in the future artificially developed or imported by Wilson or his assigns and turned into the channel. The right to the artificial increment is quite distinct from the title to the natural flow, and the owner thereof may reclaim it from the channel. Ditch Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 143; Paige v. Irrigation Co., 83 Cal. 84, 21 Pac. 1102, and 23 Pac. 875. It is true that after the description in the contract of the privileges accorded to Wilson of constructing conduits across the land of Kewen, and leading water through them, there followed a clause reaffirming the right of Kewen to use for irrigation the water flowing in the upper ditch, "or in any water ditch, flume, or aqueduct used, dug, or erected" on his land pursuant to the permission of the contract; but we understand this provision to mean that Kewen might use the water whether flowing in the "upper ditch" (which then existed) or in some other aqueduct which Wilson or his successor might thereafter provide for its transmission to lower levels across Kewen's land, and had no reference to an extension of the right of Kewen to water other than that of the stream. Whether the water company has the right to convey the developed water in the pipe across plaintiff's land is a question which does not arise in this case. Whether such use is rightful or not,—a matter on which we intimate no opinion,—the title to the water is not affected.

When said former action was begun the water now in controversy formed no part of the stream, but was as absolutely the property of the water company as were the solid strata through which it percolated or by which it was restrained from emerging in the channel. Gould v. Eaton, 111 Cal. 639, 44 Pac. 319, and cases cited. As we read the pleadings in that suit (which are brought up in the record here), they submitted for adjudication no issues concerning this water. There were some references in the complaint to the right to develop water, but, considered in their context, it is apparent that they were pointed to the acts of Mayberry on the 50-acre tract; the water company claiming in virtue of the reservation of water rights in the deed of November 29, 1871, that Mayberry had not the right to develop water on that tract,—a contention which was overruled in this court. Understanding said judgment in the light of the pleadings on which it rested and the facts then existing, we think it plain that it does not operate to enlarge the meaning of the contract of 1860 in Mayberry's favor. Lillis v. Ditch Co., 95 Cal. 553, 30 Pac. 1108; Caperton v. Schmidt, 26 Cal. 479. We are mindful of the argument founded on what Mayberry appears to consider a cumulation of rights decreed to him in that judgment, it declaring that he is entitled to divert and use for two days of the week all the water of the cañon necessary to irrigate the described land, and "also the right to divert and use on said days and for said purpose * * * any water flowing in any ditch, flume, etc., made, constructed, or used by Wilson or his successors in interest, * * * over or across" the land of plaintiff. This provision can apply only to rights which were sub judice in that action; and, in our opinion, it has substantially the same effect as the corresponding clause of the contract of 1860,—which, no doubt, it was the purpose of the judgment to confirm,—viz. to establish the right of Mayberry, within the stated limits, to divert and use the natural water of the stream from whatever aqueduct may be used for conducting it across his land, but this includes no interest in the artificial flow.

2. Previous to November, 1892, plaintiff was accustomed to divert the water for irrigation on Fridays and Saturdays from the aqueducts of plaintiff into which it flowed from the stream. At that time defendant undertook to apportion to plaintiff the quantity of water which it assumed to be the natural flow, and thereafter measured the same by means of certain weirs into his diverting appliances, retaining in its own aqueducts the residue, which was assumed to be the added or developed water. The amount of water which defendant thus undertook to measure to plaintiff was 50 inches under 4-inch pressure, and the court found that the natural flow during the irrigating season does not exceed that amount. One of the objects of the action is to enjoin defendant from interfering with the use of the water to which plaintiff is entitled. The court found, in effect, that the said conduct of defendant respecting the measurement of the water constitutes no interference with plaintiff's rights, and that he will receive in that manner all the water he is entitled to.

These findings are not sustained by the evidence. There is nothing in the contract of 1860 which fixes the amount of water to be used by Kewen at any quantity less or greater than the whole natural flow on the two specified days, when necessary for the irrigation of his tract. The fact, if such fact there is, that plaintiff does not at present use or need all the natural flow to irrigate the land, as he now cultivates it, does not authorize a restriction of his privileges under the contract. His necessities for use of the water to irrigate his land may increase in the future. The flow doubtless varies with the annual rainfall and with the progress of the dry season. The evidence of defendant's own engineers of a measurement made with great care on June 24, 1887, just before defendant began the work of developing water, shows that 55 inches then flowed in the channel. We do not find that the force of this evidence is avoided by anything else in the record. It seems probable that at times during the irrigating season the natural volume was yet greater, and no doubt it was, at times, less. The mistake of the water company lay in taking charge of the natural flow on Fridays and Saturdays, and assuming to measure to plaintiff a fixed quantity thereof. It had the right to measure and retain for its own exclusive use the amount of added or developed water, but it was the right of plaintiff to take the residue, whether much or little, so far as was necessary to irrigate his land, without interference by defendant. See Ditch Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 143. Of course, if he should abuse that privilege, contrary to the contract and the former judgment, he might be restrained. Defendant dwells somewhat on the fact asserted that Mayberry acquiesced in its apportionment of the water to him from November, 1892, to the commencement of this action. We do not see how this was material, unless as bearing on his claim for damages, which he does not urge on appeal. Such acquiescence could not impair his interest under the contract, unless continued for a time sufficient to bar his right by adverse user.

3. There were certain findings on which was founded a provision of the judgment that defendant is the owner (subject to qualifications not necessary to state) "of all the water rights in said mill stream, and of all the land through which the same flows, from its source to the point where it is conducted into defendant's main pipes." As the 50-acre tract of land conveyed by Wilson to Kewen in 1871 includes part of the channel, and as the flume through which the water is conducted to defendant's main pipes lies also on that tract, the findings and portion of the judgment just mentioned are broader than the facts warrant. They perhaps cast some cloud on the rights of plaintiff in said 50-acre parcel, and should be modified.

Some other points are made by appellant, but, considering the views above advanced, it is believed that they become immaterial. While we are satisfied that upon the main subject of dispute—the use of water developed by defendant—the decision of the court below was right, yet because of the errors in minor particulars we have indicated, and to the end that the same may be corrected, the judgment and order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

WEST COAST LUMBER CO. et al. v.
KNAPP et al. (L. A. 453.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 10, 1898.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—RIGHT TO LIEN—VALIDITY OF BUILDING CONTRACT—PAYMENT—PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS—ESTOPPEL.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, providing that 25 per cent. of a builder's contract price shall be made payable at least 35 days after completion of the contract, and that no payment made before it is due under the contract shall be valid to defeat liens, a contract providing that the last payment shall be made "within 36 days" after completion of the contract is not void.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, relating to mechanics' liens, and requiring a builder's contract to be in writing and filed in the recorder's office, is not complied with by a contract reciting that the drawings and specifications are identified by the signatures of the parties thereto, where the drawings and specifications are not so signed, since parol evidence would be necessary to identify them.

3. In a proceeding to foreclose their liens, material men are not estopped to attack the validity of a builder's contract for failure to identify the plans and specifications because they contracted to furnish material and made out bills with reference to them.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by the West Coast Lumber Company and others against Hannah Knapp and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Haines & Ward, for appellants. Trippett & McNeale, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial in an action brought to foreclose the liens of material men. Two points are made, based upon the following allegations in the complaint: "That said contract does not provide that at least twenty-five per cent. of the whole contract price shall be payable at least thirty-five days after the final completion of the contract, as by statute in such cases made and provided; that the drawings and specifications referred to in said contract were never identified by the signatures of the parties to said contract, as provided in said contract should be done." The contract provides that the last payment "shall be made within thirty-six days after this contract is fulfilled." It is said that under this provision the payment is due at any time within the period of 36 days that the owners may be willing to make the payment, although by the terms of the contract payment could not have been compelled. The materiality of the point arises from provisions in sections 1183, 1184, Code Civ. Proc., requiring the contract to be in writing, and filed in the recorder's office before the work is commenced, and that 25 per cent. of the contract price shall be made payable at least 35 days after the final completion of the contract, and which contain the following: "No payment made prior to the time when the same is due under the terms and conditions of the contract shall be valid for the purpose of defeating or diminishing any lien," etc. Therefore it is contended, according to the terms of the contract, the payments may become due before the lapse of 35 days after the completion of the contract; that such payment would not then be valid, under the provision above quoted; and that the contract, therefore, does not comply with the statute, and is void, and the material men are let in to the full amount of their demands, regardless of the contract price.

So far as the statute has the effect of compelling the owner to pay more than he has agreed to pay, or to pay his debt twice, it is highly penal, and should be strictly construed in his favor. Those who seek to inflict upon him a penalty for his failure to comply with the terms of the law must show clearly that the dereliction has occurred.

The law must be construed against the exaction of the penalty, if in reason it can be. I think a debt cannot be said to be due until the creditor can rightfully demand and insist upon payment. This is the usual and conventional meaning of the language, as applied to deferred payments. Unless the money is put out upon interest, and the creditor is making a profit by having it kept out, it will be presumed that he will accept payment whenever it is tendered. The extended credit in such a case is wholly for the benefit of the payor. The contractor, laborers, and material men in a building contract are presumed to be willing to receive their pay at the earliest possible moment; and, aside from the statute, it would be lawful and proper that the owner should pay at once. Regarding the contract without reference to the statute, therefore, one would say the postponement of payments is solely for the benefit of the owner. Although the Code requires this particular contract to be made that lienors may be protected, still it must be construed as the voluntary undertaking of the parties, and interpreted in the same way. When money is due suit may be brought to recover it, and the statute of limitations begins to run against it. Important consequences also follow in regard to its transference. In regard to these consequences, the money is not due in this contract until after the expiration of the 36 days. In short, when the debtor is allowed a certain period within which to make payment, the debt is not due until the expiration of that period. The words of the statute must be understood in their popular sense, and, so understood, the contract does not violate the statute. See, upon the general question, Helmer v. Krollick, 36 Mich. 371; Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421; Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 626; also, Reed v. Norton, 90 Cal. 590, 26 Pac. 767, and 27 Pac. 426; Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 1111.

By the terms of the contract the contractor was to furnish the material and do the work mentioned in the specifications and shown on the drawings, "which drawings and specifications," it is recited, "are identified by the signatures of the parties hereto." The material which the contractor was to furnish, and the work he was to do, are shown only in the specifications and drawings. In Worden v. Hammond, 37 Cal. 64, it was held that in such a case the plans and specifications are part and parcel of the builder's contract, which by the Code are required to be reduced to writing and filed in the recorder's office before the work is commenced. They may be made such by reference, but the reference must be such that they can be identified by it. No plans or specifications which do not correspond with the reference can be shown to be those intended by the parties. If the writing which is signed by the parties does not of itself determine what constitutes the contract, then it is not wholly in writing, as required, and cannot, as a whole, be filed in the recorder's office. On the other hand, to permit the parties to prove that plans and specifications which do not correspond with the reference are the plans and specifications referred to, is to make a different contract, or at least to open the door for doing so. Worden v. Hammond was approved in Willamette v. College, 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629, and in Donnelly v. Adams, 115 Cal. 129, 46 Pac. 916. In the last case the subject is fully considered. What occurred after the contract was signed, by way of putting it beyond doubt as to what plans and specifications were intended, such as by attaching them together, and filing them as one document, and building a house upon the lots indicated according to the plans and specifications, can have no bearing upon the question whether the whole contract was reduced to writing and signed by the parties. The reference is to specifications signed by the parties. Such specifications were not produced, but certain specifications were produced and circumstances shown, which, we will assume, conclusively proved that the parties referred to as the specifications. Certainly a most material portion had not been reduced to writing. Suppose, in addition to what was shown, other specifications had been produced, actually signed by the parties, as stated in the reference. Then the evidence would not have been conclusive, but would perhaps have shown that the parties had changed their minds, and agreed upon a different building. The trouble is in the making of the contract, and not in its interpretation, as in the case of latent ambiguities. Was the contract entered into as the statute requires? is the question. It must be kept in mind that this is a question as to the compliance with a statute. Under general rules pertaining to contracts, one could make a builder's contract so referring to plans and specifications as to give very little information as to what the contractor had agreed to do, unless the plans and specifications can be found. The material part of the contract may really be in them. Independently of the statute, one might agree to build in San Diego a house which should in all respects be a duplicate of a designated house in London. Such a contract would not help persons who proposed to furnish material or perform labor upon the house. Not much more satisfaction would be afforded by placing on file plans and specifications which, when found, do not accord with the reference made in the written contract. And certainly it cannot be contended that in such case the plans and specifications have been so referred to as to become part and parcel of the contract signed by the parties. I cannot see how any of the material men would be estopped from claiming that the contract was void from the fact that they contracted to furnish lumber and made out bills with express reference to the plans and specifications. They probably did not then know that the contract was void. They have not misled defendants, or induced them to change their position, and it does not appear that they have suppressed knowledge of the invalidity while dealing with the contractor. The judgment and order are affirmed.

CUNHA v. HUGHES. (S. F. 866.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1898.)

ADMINISTRATION—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—CONCLUSIVENESS—HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PARTITION—HOMESTEAD—DECLARATION.

1. A husband devised a life estate in community property to his wife, and a decree of distribution was entered pursuant thereto giving her a life estate only. Held, that she was estopped from claiming one-half of the land in fee, as her share of community property, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1666, making a decree of distribution conclusive on persons interested in the estate.

2. A partition decree allotting lands previously purchased by the husband to him and his wife jointly does not change the community character of the property.

3. Under Civ. Code, § 1263, requiring a married woman's declaration of homestead to state that it is made for the joint benefit of herself and her husband, who has not made such declaration, a wife's declaration, which merely states the value of the land, and that she resides thereon with her husband, is insufficient.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by one Cunha against one Hughes to quiet title. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Black, for appellant. Jackson Hatch and E. M. Rosenthal, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff seeks by this action to quiet his title to an undivided half of a certain tract of land against the claim of the defendant. Judgment was rendered in his favor, and the defendant has appealed therefrom, and from an order denying a new trial. The land in question is a part of the Milpitas rancho, and was conveyed in 1855 and 1856 to Michael Hughes, the father of the defendant, and husband of Ellen Hughes. Upon the conveyance of the land to him, he and his said wife entered thereon, and continued in possession until his death. By his last will and testament he gave to his wife, Ellen Hughes, all of his property for her use during life, with a remainder in fee in the lands described in the complaint herein to two of his grandchildren. February 25, 1887, the superior court of Santa Clara county made its decree of distribution of his estate, by which it distributed the land in question to Ellen Hughes, his surviving widow, for the term of and during her life, with remainder in fee to Willie Hughes and Allie Hughes, the grandchildren of Michael, named in his will. Thereafter Willie Hughes conveyed his interest in the land to the plaintiff, and subsequently the defendant received a conveyance of the same land from Ellen Hughes, the surviving widow, and the two grandchildren, Willie and Allie. The court finds that the land was the community property of Michael and Ellen Hughes, and it is contended by the defendant that for that reason one-half of it descended to Ellen immediately upon the death of her husband, without power in the husband to make any testamentary disposition of the same.

As the surviving widow took her share of the community property by "succession" from her husband (In re Burdick's Estate, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734), whatever right she may have in the estate of which he died seised is to be ascertained by the same means as is the right of any claimant to his estate, whether by succession or by will. Upon an application for the distribution of an estate, the entire world is notified to be present at the hearing, and to make known their claims, if any they have, to the estate of the decedent, or any portion thereof; and the decree of distribution becomes a judicial determination of their claim, which, unless reversed, set aside, or modified upon appeal, is conclusive of their rights, the same as is a final judgment in any other action or proceeding. By giving the notice in the manner prescribed by the statute, the court acquires jurisdiction over all persons entitled to assert any claim to the estate; and, whether they appear and present their claim for adjudication, or fail to appear, and suffer default, the judgment is conclusive upon them. The decree of distribution becomes the measure of the rights of all claimants to the estate, and their rights are to be determined by the terms of this decree. William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 362, 48 Pac. 323; In re Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 51 Pac. 951; Jewell v. Pierce (Cal.) 52 Pac. 132, 658. Upon the hearing before the superior court on the application for distribution of the estate of Michael Hughes, his surviving widow could have presented her claim for an undivided half of his estate; and, if the court had erroneously refused to allow the claim, she could have appealed from the decree, and had the error corrected upon appeal. Her failure to do so renders the decree "conclusive" as to her right now to assert such claim. Code Civ. Proc. § 1666. It was within her privilege to elect to take in accordance with the will, rather than to claim her right as surviving widow to the one-half of the estate; and, for the purpose of sustaining the decree of distribution, it may be assumed that she made such election. See Noe v. Splivalo, 54 Cal. 207. The cases cited by the appellant in support of his contention were direct appeals from the decree of distribution.

The community character of the property was not changed by reason of the decree in the suit in partition brought after its purchase by the husband, wherein the land in question was allotted to Michael Hughes and Ellen Hughes jointly. That judgment conferred no new or additional title, but merely ascertained and allotted to the parties to the suit their respective interests in the land. Wade v. Deray, 50 Cal. 376; McBrown v. Dalton, 70 Cal. 89, 11 Pac. 583.

August 31, 1874, while Michael and his wife, Ellen, were residing upon the land, she filed in the recorder's office a declaration of homestead thereon, in which she stated that she was married to, and the wife of, Michael Hughes, and at the time of making the declaration resided with her family upon the land (describing it), and also stated its cash value, and that she selected and claimed the same as a homestead. Section 1263, Civ. Code, which was in force at that time, declares that, when the declaration of homestead is made by the wife, it must contain a statement "showing that her husband has not made such declaration, and that she therefore makes the declaration for their joint benefit." The declaration of Mrs. Hughes did not contain this statement, and it was therefore ineffective to impress the land with the incidents of a homestead, so as to give to her the right of survivorship. Booth v. Galt, 58 Cal. 254. The judgment and order are affirmed.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — CONSIDERATION — TRUSTS—ESTABLISHMENT BY PAROL—NEW TRIAL—NOTICE OF MOTION—APPEAL.

1. Where a conveyance of two parcels was one transaction, and in an action wherein it was attacked as in fraud of creditors the grantor and one grantee testified that the consideration paid was for the property, without being questioned whether they meant both parcels, a finding that both parcels were conveyed for a valuable consideration will not be disturbed.

2. Parol evidence is admissible to prove a resulting trust in favor of one who furnished the consideration for a conveyance to a third person, under Civ. Code, § 853.

3. The provision requiring an express trust in lands to be in writing has no application after the trust has been executed.

4. Under a notice of motion for a new trial because "the evidence is against the law," the failure to make material findings cannot be considered.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; R. McGarvey, Judge.

Action by one Polk and another against one Boggs and others. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial defendants appeal. Affirmed.

M. S. Sayre and T. B. Bond, for appellants. T. J. Sheridan, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiffs brought this action to restrain a sale by the sheriff of certain lands in satisfaction of a judgment against their grantor. Judgment was rendered in their favor, and the present appeal is by the defendants from an order denying their motion for a new trial, and is presented upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify certain findings of fact made by the court.

The land involved in the action consists of two parcels of about 320 acres, called the "Home Place," and another tract of swamp land of about 29 acres, which Thomas W. Polk, the father of the plaintiffs, conveyed to them on the 18th of June, 1891, making to each a conveyance of an undivided half thereof for the expressed sum of $5,000. The court found that the above conveyances by Polk were for a valuable consideration, and the appellants contend that, so far as the 29-acre tract is concerned, this finding is not sustained by the evidence. In the statement of the case upon which the motion for a new trial was heard, they do not specify the consideration for this parcel of land as one of the "particulars" in which the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, but state that the evidence is insufficient to show that Polk "sold his interest in said lands to plaintiffs for a valuable consideration." See De Molera v. Martin (Cal.) 52 Pac. 825. It is not necessary, however, to rest our decision upon this point, since the record shows that the conveyances of the lands constituted a single transaction, and were made upon a valuable consideration. Polk testified that he gave $12,000 for the home place, and $150 for the swamp land. Of the purchase money for the home place, $6,000 was paid by his wife out of her separate property, and the title to one-half thereof was held by him in trust for the plaintiffs. The conveyances by him to the children of one-half of the home place were made in execution of this trust, and he sold and conveyed to them the other half of the home place and his interest in the swamp land for the sum of $5,000. He says: "I sold my property to my children. I got five thousand dollars for it. I told them, if they would assume a mortgage of four thousand one hundred dollars, which was then on the property, and pay me nine hundred dollars, I would make them a deed to all of it." It was shown by the plaintiffs that they did assume this mortgage, and had paid the $900. One of the plaintiffs testified: "My sister and I bought the property in controversy from my father for five thousand dollars." In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, and in weighing the circumstances attending the transaction, the court was authorized to find that the consideration for the conveyances included the swamp land as well as the home place. If the defendants would have had the court find otherwise, it was incumbent upon them, after this testimony had been given, to call the attention of the witnesses to the point, and make it clear to the court that they did not intend to include the swamp land in their testimony concerning the consideration.

The evidence was sufficient to authorize the court to find that Thomas W. Polk held the title to an undivided half of the home place in trust for the plaintiffs. It was not necessary to show that the trust was created by a writing. The admission by him that one-half of the consideration for the purchase was paid by his wife, and that to that extent the purchase was made for her, showed a resulting trust in her favor. Civ. Code, § 853. Such a trust may be shown by parol evidence, and the subsequent conveyance to the plaintiffs in accordance with her request cannot be impeached by proof that the request was verbal. The provision that an express trust in lands can be created only by writing may be invoked by one who is sought to be charged as a trustee, in order to prevent the establishment of a trust, but has no application after he has executed the trust.

The court finds that, in making the conveyance, Thomas W. Polk did not have any intent to conceal his property from his creditors, or to hinder or delay or defeat them in the collection of their demands, and that he did not make the conveyances to the plaintiffs with any fraudulent intent. Under section 3442, Civ. Code, the question of fraudulent intent is one of fact; and the above finding frees the transaction from the claim of invalidity and deprives the defendants of their right to impeach it.

The objection of the appellants to the failure of the court to make findings of fact upon certain averments in the cross complaint cannot be considered. Such failure, when the findings are material, is held to be a "decision against law" (Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 328, 27 Pac. 186); but, in order that this objection may be considered, it must be designated as one of the grounds in the notice of intention to move for a new trial. The notice in the present case, "that the evidence is against law," precludes a consideration of this objection. Martin v. Matfield, 49 Cal. 42. The order is affirmed.

BANK OF WOODLAND v. HERON et al.
(Sac. 349.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1898.)

PLEADING—AMENDMENTS—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE.

An answer in a foreclosure action admitted the due execution and acknowledgment of the mortgage, and on the trial evidence of the invalidity of the acknowledgment was received without objection. Defendant then asked leave to amend so as to deny the proper acknowledgment, which was denied. Held not an abuse of discretion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, permitting the allowance of amendments in furtherance of justice.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; W. H. Grant Judge.

Action by the Bank of Woodland against Sophia Heron and others to foreclose a mortgage. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Walter H. Linforth (Reece Clark and Johnson, Linforth & Whitaker, of counsel), for appellants. N. A. Hawkins and Craig & Hawkins, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal from the judgment. David Heron executed to the plaintiff bank his promissory note for $9,000, secured by mortgage upon realty. Afterwards he conveyed the land affected by the mortgage to Sophia Heron, his wife. The bank brought this action to foreclose the mortgage. By verified complaint it pleaded its execution, acknowledgment, and certification so as to entitle it to recordation, and alleged that it was forthwith recorded in the records of Yolo county. The verified answer and cross complaint of defendants admitted all of these allegations, but averred payment by defendant Sophia Heron. At the trial it appeared that the certificate of recordation on its face was regular in form, and that the mortgage had been regularly recorded. But, notwithstanding that no issue was joined upon the question of the legality and sufficiency of the acknowledgment, the cashier, while on the witness stand, was permitted to testify that the acknowledgment was taken before him, and that at the time he took it he was a stockholder of the bank, holding 10 shares out of 9,621. Upon this showing, defendants' attorneys moved to strike out the mortgage and the acknowledgment upon the ground that the mortgage, having been acknowledged before a stockholder of the mortgagee, was not entitled to record. The motion was denied. The defendant Sophia Heron then filed a declaration of homestead upon the property, and sought leave of court to amend by setting up this fact, and also by denying the averments of the complaint in regard to the due acknowledgment of the mortgage. The court permitted the first, and refused the second, amendment. The obvious effect of the rejected amendment was to raise on the trial a fresh issue upon a matter which had never been in controversy, and to compel plaintiff to meet it by an entirely new line of proof. The very obvious purpose of the two amendments was to defer plaintiff's lien to the homestead claim, which would result in the impairment of plaintiff's security, and perhaps in the loss of a large part of its debt. It should be added that defendant's plea of payment of the mortgage debt amounted to no more than this: that the bank had accepted her unsecured and unpaid note for $9,000 in payment of the secured mortgage debt. This the bank officers denied, and the court found against the plea.

Appellant complains of the ruling of the court in refusing to allow the amendment. Great liberality, it is true, should be exercised in allowing amendments to pleadings; but that liberality should only be displayed in furtherance of justice. Code Civ. Proc. § 473. This is always the controlling consideration before the trial court. Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409; Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 118, 24 Pac. 867. Plaintiff had parted with its money upon the security of the mortgage. Defendant had acquired the property by deed of gift. No issue upon the question was tendered before trial. The evidence by which the disclosure at the trial was made was entirely irrelevant to any point in controversy. Taking advantage of it, defendant files a homestead declaration, and then asks the court to allow her to amend to impair plaintiff's security, and perhaps to defeat the collection of a just debt. Amendments are within the sound discretion of the court (Sharon v. Sharon, 77 Cal. 105, 19 Pac. 230), but, so far from it having been an abuse of discretion in this case to refuse the one proposed, we should be more inclined to hold that it would have been an abuse to have allowed it. For it is not sufficient that the new defense proposed be a legal defense. It should also be an equitable defense. Harding v. Minear, 54 Cal. 502. This defense, under the circumstances, was highly inequitable. In Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409, the trial court refused to allow the plea of the statute of limitations by way of amendment, and this court upheld the ruling upon the ground that the amendment was not in furtherance of justice. "It was claimed solely as a legal advantage, to which at one time he would have been entitled; but it is a wise conservation that it should have but its day in pleading, and no grace of right after, beyond the extent of justice." Such is precisely the present case. The same ruling was again upheld in Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 373. In Spanagel v. Reay, 47 Cal. 608, defendant, having admitted in his verified answer a deposit of money with the sheriff, by amendment before trial sought to deny it. Said this court: "The application to amend was correctly denied under the circumstances." In Page v. Williams, 54 Cal. 562, defendant to a suit upon a promissory note pleaded payment, and at the trial sought to amend by pleading lack of consideration. Leave was refused, since the plea would raise new issues, and the ruling was sustained. In Harney v. Corcoran, 60 Cal. 314, defendant in an action to foreclose a lien for street work admitted ownership of the property, and afterwards sought by amendment to deny it. Leave to amend in this particular was denied, and this court upheld the ruling as being within the exercise of a fair discretion. To like effect are the cases of Edgar v. Stevenson, 70 Cal. 286, 11 Pac. 704; Shadburne v. Daly, 76 Cal. 355, 18 Pac. 403; Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 27 Pac. 356; Dorn v. Baker, 96 Cal. 206, 31 Pac. 37; Siskiyou Co. v. Gamlich, 110 Cal. 94, 42 Pac. 468; Pacific Rolling-Mill Co.

v. Bear Valley Irr. Co. (Cal.) 52 Pac. 136. Indeed, so well settled is the proposition that it has been declared to be the rule that a party will not be permitted upon the trial to amend by denying a fact admitted in the answer. Bliss, Code Pl. § 430. Nothing in what has been said is to be construed as an expression of opinion upon the legal sufficiency of the proposed amendment as a defense. As to the evidence itself, being addressed to no issue in the case it is without weight or value. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

STANTON v. SINGLETON et al. (L. A. 406.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 23, 1898.)

MINING CONTRACTS—PARTIES—DELIVERY—OP-TIONS—MUTUALITY—SPECIFIC PER-FORMANCE—TENDER.

1. Where a contract granting an option to purchase a mine was signed by two of three co-owners, and an action to enforce it was brought against the signers, the burden was on them to show, as claimed, that the contract was not to be operative unless signed also by the other owner, who was named therein.

2. An allegation that defendants "made and entered into" the agreement sufficiently imports delivery as against a general demurrer. in an action for specific performance.

3. A contract whereby plaintiff was given an option to purchase an interest in a mine for a certain price on performing certain conditions is not void for want of mutuality, so that it cannot be specifically enforced, where plaintiff notified the other parties thereto of his election to perform his part thereof.

4. Under Civ. Code, § 1440, allowing a party to an obligation which the other party repudiates before a default has occurred to enforce the obligation without performing or offering to perform the conditions in favor of the other, the refusal to allow a party to an option contract to perform the conditions of it, together with a repudiation of the contract prior to the expiration of the option, releases the holder of the option from tendering the price to be paid under it prior to suing for specific performance.

5. A mine owner who did not sign an option contract executed by his two co-owners is not a necessary party to an action to enforce the contract, where there is nothing to show that he is not willing to carry out the agreement, and no relief is sought against him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kern county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by O. B. Stanton against John Singleton and others. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rothchild & Ach, J. W. Ahern, J. A. Haralson, and Lloyd & Wood, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff seeks by this action to compel a performance by the defendants of the following contract, which he alleges was made and entered into between him and them on the 22d day of June, 1895: "Agreement made and entered into this 22nd day of June, 1895, between John Singleton, F. M. Mooers, and C. A. Burcham, of Kern county, state of California, parties of the first part, and O. B. Stanton, of Bakersfield, state of California, party of the second part: Whereas, the parties of the first part are owners by location of a certain mineral tract located in the Summit mining district, Kern county, California, and designated and described as follows [giving description], and, being desirous of obtaining capital to work the same, hereby agree with party of the second part that, for and in consideration of one dollar, in hand to them paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, agree to give party of the second part thirty days' option of a one-half interest of the above enumerated claims, now owned by them, in consideration of the party of the second part agreeing to spend—First, ten thousand ($10,000) dollars in opening and developing said property; second, in erecting a ten-stamp quartz mill, modern in every particular, the stamps to weigh not less than seven hundred pounds, or the equivalent, as may be found the most desirous to work the ores. * * * The parties of the first part hereby agree that the party of the second part shall have the privilege any time within six months from the date of this instrument to purchase the aforesaid property for the sum of five hundred thousand ($500,000) dollars. The essence of this contract being time, it is mutually agreed that, should the party of the second part not commence active operations within thirty days, this contract shall be null and void. The party of the second part hereby agrees that, if he should fail to fully carry out this contract, all moneys paid or expended by him shall be forfeited, and the full properties returned to the parties of the first part." This contract was signed by the defendants Singleton and Mooers, and by the plaintiff. It is alleged in the complaint that at the time of its execution the defendants represented to him that they were the owners of an undivided two-thirds interest in said mining claims, and that C. A. Burcham was the owner of the other undivided third interest, and that they had authority from Burcham to act for him in selling said claims, or to make any other contract for working and developing them. The plaintiff also alleges that immediately after the execution of the contract he notified the defendants that he elected to perform his part of said contract, and to thereby acquire the undivided half interest in said mining claims, and that the defendants placed him in possession of said mining claims for the purpose of performing his part of the contract, and that, under the belief that they had the right to act for Burcham, he proceeded to work and develop them, as required under the conditions of the contract, and for that purpose expended about $2,000 as a part performance of his portion of said contract; that on the 9th day of July, 1895, the defendants notified him that they would not be bound by the terms of the contract, and repudiated the same, and refused to permit him to continue the performance of labor on said property, or the expenditure of any more money thereon, and refused to permit him or his employés to enter upon said claims, or either of them, for the purpose of performing his contract, and refused, and still refuse, to execute to him a deed of the one-half interest in said property. It is further alleged that the consideration expressed in the contract for the acquirement of said one-half interest is adequate and reasonable, and that on the day of the execution of said contract, and ever since, the plaintiff has been, and is now, ready, able, and willing to perform all of the conditions on his part to be performed for the acquirement of said one-half interest. He therefore asks judgment that he be let into possession of said premises for the purpose of performing the labor and otherwise carrying out the provisions of said contract to be performed by him, and for general relief. The defendants demurred to this complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and also on the ground that Burcham should have been made a party defendant, and, their demurrer having been sustained, judgment was rendered dismissing the complaint, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

The point chiefly urged in support of the demurrer is that inasmuch as Burcham is named in the contract as a party thereto, and as one of the owners of the mining claims, and as he did not join in its execution, the contract is incomplete, and cannot be enforced against those who did sign it. Whether it was the intention of the parties who signed the contract that it should not be operative until it should be also signed by Burcham is a matter extraneous to the written instrument, and is to be shown by evidence outside of the instrument itself. Upon the face of the instrument, the contract on the part of the defendants is complete, and the burden is upon them to show that they were not to be bound by their execution of it until it was also executed by Burcham. There is nothing on its face to prevent it from being operative upon them without his signature, and it is consistent with its language to assume that such was their intention. Prima facie they are bound by its terms, and, if they would be relieved from this apparent obligation by reason of any facts or circumstances extrinsic to the instrument, they must allege such defense in their answer, and sustain it by evidence. Mr. Bishop, in his treatise on Contracts, says (section 348): "If by parol stipulation, or, a fortiori, if by the writing itself, the contract was not to be deemed complete until other signatures should be added, it without such addition will not bind those who have signed; but, if nothing of this appears, the parties signing will be holden, though even on the face of it the signatures of others were contemplated by the draftsman." "It rests upon the party who has signed and delivered the instrument to establish that the delivery was intended to be in escrow." Chouteau v. Suydam, 21 N. Y. 179. See, also, Haskins v. Lombard, 16 Me. 140; Parker v. Bradley, 2 Hill, 584; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231; Cochran v. Blout, 161 U. S. 350, 16 Sup. Ct. 454; City of Los Angeles v. Melus, 59 Cal. 444; Cavanaugh v. Casselman, 88 Cal. 543, 26 Pac. 515. The allegation in the complaint that the defendants represented to the plaintiff that they were authorized to act for Burcham in making the contract, which for the purpose of the demurrer must be taken as an admission of this fact, tends to refute the proposition that it was the intention of the parties that he should sign the contract before it should become operative. It does not appear that they did not in fact have such authority, or that he is unwilling to abide by its terms.

The allegation that the defendants "made and entered into" the agreement sufficiently imports a delivery. Russell v. Whipple, 2 Cow. 536; Peets v. Bratt, 6 Barb. 662; Smith v. Waite, 103 Cal. 372, 37 Pac. 232.

Under the terms of the contract, the plaintiff had the right to enter upon the mining claims for the purpose of working and developing them. It is evident that the ultimate object of the contract was to give him the right at any time within six months after its date to acquire an undivided half interest in the property for the sum of $500,000. In order that he might intelligently determine whether to exercise this option, he was to have an opportunity of testing the value of the property by an expenditure of money thereon, which, in case he failed to make the purchase, would inure to the benefit of the defendants. The consideration for the defendants' agreement to give him this option was his agreement to expend the sum of $10,000 in opening and developing the property, and building a quartz mill thereon; and for this purpose the right to enter upon the mining claims was necessarily implied. The allegation in the complaint that he was placed in possession of the mining claims by the defendants "for the purpose of performing his part of the contract," was a contemporary construction by them of its meaning; and the further allegation that immediately after its execution he notified them of his election to perform his part of the contract, and thereby acquire the undivided one-half interest in the mining claims, "as in said contract mentioned," was an acceptance by him of what was previously a offer, and created an enforceable obligation on his part to expend the said sum of $10,000. Whatever want of mutuality of obligation existed at the execution of the contract was thus removed, and the contract to this extent became binding upon all parties thereto. Hall v. Center, 40 Cal. 63; Thurber v. Meves, 119 Cal. 35, 50 Pac. 1063, and 51 Pac. 536; Sayward v. Houghton, 119 Cal. 545, 51 Pac. 853, and 52 Pac. 44.

The subsequent refusal by the defendants to permit the plaintiff to perform this obligation is a sufficient excuse for its nonperformance, and their repudiation of the contract prior to the expiration of the period of six months, and declaration that they would not execute him a deed for the one-half interest, released him from the necessity of tendering the $500,000 as a condition of maintaining the action. Civ. Code, § 1440; Sheplar v. Green, 96 Cal. 218, 31 Pac. 42.

It was not necessary to make Burcham a defendant in the action. It does not appear that he participated in preventing the plaintiff from entering upon the property or performing his part of the contract. No relief is sought against him, and there is nothing in the complaint to show that he is not willing to carry out the agreement of the defendants. The judgment is reversed, and the superior court is directed to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

PEOPLE v. COLLUM. (Cr. 384.)

CRIMINAL LAW—ACCOMPLICES—EVIDENCE—CONSPIRATORS—WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT.

1. One not connected with accused in any way until after the deed is not an accomplice.

2. Confession by a conspirator made after the deed is not competent against co-conspirator.

3. A witness for one charged with arson testified that he and accused were a mile away at the time of alarm, and ran to the fire, and helped to put it out, and talked about it next day. Held, that a statement of witness after the fire that "he had never committed a crime in his life, but accused put him into this, and, when they found accused, he would furnish facts that would send him to hell," did not directly contradict his testimony, and was not admissible to impeach him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; E. C. Hart, Judge.

Phillip Collum was convicted of arson, and he appeals. Reversed.

R. Clark, for appellant. F. W. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and O. N. Post, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant and one Shephard were jointly informed against for the crime of arson. Defendant had a separate trial, which resulted in a verdict of guilty of an attempt to commit the crime of arson in the second degree, and now appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is contended that the evidence does not justify the verdict, because it rested upon "the uncorroborated testimony of one Shirley, an accomplice in the commission of the crime." If Shirley was an accomplice, there are strong reasons to be urged in support of this contention of defendant. If Shirley was not an accomplice, and the jury believed his testimony, then, when taken in connection with the other evidence in the case, we are not prepared to say that we would disturb the verdict upon the ground of insufficient evidence. Upon examination of the record, we find nothing therein even tending to establish the fact that Shirley was an accomplice. An accomplice is one who aids, abets, and assists in the commission of the crime, or, not being present, has advised and encouraged its commission. Shirley did none of these things. He was not connected with the defendant in any way until after the crime was committed. Conceding that, under section 32 of the Penal Code, he was an accessory, still an accessory is not an accomplice, under the law of this state. An accomplice at common law may be said to be an accessory before the fact, but in this state an accessory before the fact is not recognized. The law declares such a one a principal.

Shephard, who was jointly charged with the defendant, had been tried and acquitted at the time of the trial of this case. He took the stand, and testified as a witness in defendant's interest. He testified that he and Collum, immediately prior to the alarm of fire, were upon the streets of the city of Woodland, and, upon such alarm being given, ran to the fire (a distance of about one mile), and assisted in extinguishing it. He further declared that upon the succeeding day he and defendant talked to Shirley about the fire. The remaining portion of his testimony was directed to the stock of wool on hand in the mill at the time of the fire, the profits and losses of the business, and matters of insurance. Upon cross-examination, under objection, he was asked this question by the district attorney: "Did you say to me: * * * 'I have always been a good man. I lived in San Jose, and I could have brought many people from there showing that I was a good man, including the district attorney and other people,' and did you not further say that 'this man [meaning Phillip Collum] dragged me into this thing, and that he has now run away and left the whole matter upon me, * * * and when you find him I will furnish you facts that will send him to hell?'" The objection was overruled, and the witness answered that he had made no such statement. In rebuttal the district attorney testified that the witness did make such a statement to him. That this evidence was most injurious to the defendant is apparent. In effect, it is a confession of Shephard that he and the defendant committed the crime.

Even conceding Shephard to have been a co-conspirator, still the evidence was the purest hearsay, for the conspiracy had ended at the time this confession was made. The crime was a thing of the past. People v. Dillwood, 94 Cal. 89, 29 Pac. 420. It follows that its admission can only be supported upon the single theory that it was introduced to impeach the witness. This character of impeachment is allowed when the witness has made previous statements inconsistent with his present testimony. The principles upon which this provision of the statute is grounded, and the occasions when it may be invoked, are considered in the case of People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 623, 44 Pac. 314. Comparing the evidence given by the witness with the evidence given by the district attorney detailing the statement made to him by the witness, the impeaching evidence fails to reach the mark. As already suggested, this evidence was hearsay, entirely inadmissible for the purpose of proving a fact, and was of a most damaging character to the defendant. Under such circumstances, its admission for the purpose of impeaching the witness must find plain and solid support in the law. Applying the test, we fail to find such support. The vicious part of the statement made by Shephard is: "I had never committed a crime in my life, but Phillip put me into this. * * * I will furnish you with facts that will send him to hell." These general and vague statements do not comprise that direct and contradictory evidence demanded by the statute that is necessary for impeachment purposes. To justify the admission of such evidence, the two statements must be directly contradictory and inconsistent with each other. In order that one shall form the basis for the admission of the other, this inconsistency must appear upon their face by a comparison of them. If the inconsistency only appears by inference, and another inference may be drawn in favor of their consistency, then the second statement is not admissible for impeachment purposes. The only line of evidence testified to by Shephard in his examination, which even looks towards supporting the admissibility of the evidence of the district attorney, is his statement as to what he and Collum were doing upon the night of the fire. His impeachment could only extend to the blotting out of this evidence. Yet his evidence in this regard may all have been true, and still his statement have been equally true that "Phillip pulled me into this. * * * I will furnish you with facts that will send him to hell." For these reasons the evidence was not of that character to justify its admission for the purpose of impeachment.

We have examined many other assignments of error relied upon by defendant. The references in his brief to these assignments are made in a somewhat desultory and skeleton manner. Our examination of them has disclosed nothing of a prejudicial character to defendant. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

PEOPLE v. ARRIGHINI. (Cr. 324.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1898.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION—IMPEACHMENT—TRIAL.

1. In a murder trial, evidence of the manner and appearance of accused shortly after the deed is competent against him.

2. Error in permitting the prosecution to anticipate the defense and put in evidence out of order will not ordinarily justify reversal.

3. Where the only testimony of accused was that he did not intend to kill deceased, it was incompetent, in cross-examining him, for the purpose of impeachment, to question him as to his deposition before the coroner's jury, in which he stated he was drunk, and did not remember about the shooting, and to get him to admit that he then perjured himself, and to go into the details of the killing, since such testimony did not contradict his testimony.

4. Under Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that an accused shall not be compelled to be a witness against himself; and Pen. Code, § 1323, providing the same, but that, if he offer himself, he may be cross-examined as to all matters testified to in chief,—one on trial for murder, whose only testimony in chief was that he did not intend to kill deceased, cannot be asked as to the details of the killing.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; F. T. Nilon, Judge.

Jack Arrighini was convicted of manslaughter and he appeals. Reversed.

Thos. J. Ford, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and C. N. Post, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was tried upon a charge of murder, and convicted of manslaughter. The appeal is from the judgment and a denial of a new trial. January 10, 1897, defendant, his brother Dominique, and their uncle Angelo Arrighini dined with one Romori, at the latter's cabin in Truckee. After dinner, at about 6 o'clock p.m., he started to go "uptown." There was some difficulty in finding the key to the cabin, and defendant went off alone towards his cabin, which was about 200 feet away. Soon after, his brother went in the same direction. It seems that defendant went to the cabin occupied by his uncle, his brother, one Rogantini, and himself. In that vicinity, without cause or apparent purpose, he fired two shots from his revolver, and then, meeting his brother, he fired the remaining three shots at him, killing him almost instantly. After the shooting, the defendant exhibited signs of great grief and sorrow, protesting that he thought—in the feeble light—that a tramp was approaching him in an attitude which indicated that he was about to spring upon him. Defendant had been ill for several days, and on that day had taken a large quantity of quinine; according to his testimony, about forty grains. At the dinner the defendant had eaten no food, because of his illness. Dr. Shoemaker testified at the trial that from 40 to 60 grains would be an overdose to one unaccustomed to take quinine; that its effect was greater when taken upon an empty stomach; that it would produce dizziness, indistinct vision, and sometimes blindness, also severe headache, staggering, and vomiting. There was evidence that, shortly after the homicide, defendant staggered, and fell down upon his face, in a severe fit of vomiting. There had been no quarrel between the defendant and the deceased, and there was no evidence of ill feeling or motive shown for the homicide. The uncle testified that there had been occasional misunderstandings about trifling matters, but, on the whole, they had been friendly.

The first point raised by the appellant is that the court erred in permitting the prosecution to ask certain witnesses as to appearance and manner of the defendant shortly after the homicide. They were asked if they saw anything strange or peculiar in his manner. It is contended that this is in conflict with the final conclusion of this court in Holland v. Zollner, 102 Cal. 636, 36 Pac. 930, and 37 Pac. 231, and with Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 406, 29 Pac. 1101; also with the case of Marceau v. Insurance Co., 101 Cal. 338, 35 Pac. 856, and 36 Pac. 813. In Estate of Carpenter, to which the other cases refer, an attempt was made to avoid the rule which allows only intimate acquaintances to testify, by asking witnesses how he appeared mentally, not calling for a description of the manner or conduct of the person concerning whom the inquiry was being made, nor whether he acted rationally or irrationally at any particular time. Their opinions were asked as to his sanity, and it was said that it did not obviate the objection by asking if he appeared to be sane, or how he appeared mentally. In Holland v. Zollner it is said that this is not so much a matter of judgment as of observation. Undoubtedly it is both, and no one disputes that, apart from our statute, witnesses might be asked such questions in regard to other matters, mentioned in the opinion in that case, concerning which opinion evidence is held admissible. In that case, in denying a rehearing, the court reasserted the doctrine in Estate of Carpenter. In People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 255, 46 Pac. 1073, the court held that it was proper to ask a witness whether the defendant acted rationally, or appeared "rational" at a particular time. So, I think any witness may testify to the demeanor of the defendant, whether he was intoxicated, appeared to be excited, was angry, or timid. Nor need such testimony always be confined to a special occasion. A witness may state whether the person was habitually melancholy, morose, peevish, irritable, or the opposite. And, no doubt, other mental habits may be testified to; such as whether he was incoherent, forgetful, or irrational. Any one could tell if a person is totally lacking in mentality, or is a raving maniac. These are not therefore considered matters of judgment. But, where a reasonable doubt can exist as to sanity, and it is made an issue or subject of controversy in a case, the Code prohibits the courts from receiving as evidence the opinions of those who are not intimate acquaintances. I see no objection to the evidence in question here, except that it was put in at the wrong time. The prosecution should not have anticipated the defense, but such error will not ordinarily justify a reversal.

The defendant was a witness for himself. He testified that he and his brother were friendly; that he sent money to Italy to bring his brother to this country; that he had been ill for two or three weeks before the homicide; had taken large quantities of quinine; was sick and dizzy, and his sight obscured; and that on the next morning after the shooting, upon waking, he thought his brother was in bed with him, and tried to call him. On the examination, his counsel questioned him as follows: "State whether you intended to kill him. Ans. No, sir." This was all the testimony given by the defendant for himself. On cross-examination the district attorney produced his testimony before the coroner's jury, and, showing his deposition, proceeded as follows: "Is this what you said (reading): 'My occupation is laborer. I don't remember nothing about the shooting, as I was very drunk?'" Objection was here interposed that it was not cross-examination as to anything concerning which he had testified in his direct examination. He had not testified in regard to the circumstances of the shooting. The objection was overruled, and the witness testified that he did so testify. He was then asked if his testimony before the coroner was true. He admitted in answer to questions that it was not, and proceeded to testify, in effect, that he had deliberately perjured himself, because he was advised that it was necessary to his defense that he should do so. He also, in response to questions, gave a full account of the homicide. He testified: "When I was walking down the street, I see some one coming out just like that (witness staggers forward, bent down, with hands stretched out). He said, 'Ho! Ho! Ho!' (witness imitates peculiar groan); and I pulled out the pistol, and started to shoot like that (turning head away). Then I see it was my brother, and then I picked him up, and kissed him," etc. He further said: "Somebody came out between the two houses, and I have no time to walk back, because I thought he was trying to kill me, and didn't know who it was," etc. He further related what he did after the killing,—what he did with his pistol, and many other circumstances. None of this testimony had any connection with any matter concerning which defendant had been examined in chief, except that all may be said to have been relevant to the issues. The killing was not denied by the defendant. The defense was that the homicide was committed in self-defense, under the doctrine of apparent danger. This position had been already taken, and evidence tending to support it had been introduced, although the defendant had not offered himself as a witness upon the subject. He had simply said that he did not intend to kill his brother. His defense was an admission that he did purposely fire the fatal shot, and the only possible effect of his testimony was that he did not know that the person killed, and who he contended he thought was about to attack him, was his brother, and perhaps, by implication, that he had no malice or ill will towards his brother. There was no attempt to prove express malice, and the jury did not find that there was malice. The verdict was evidently founded upon the proposition that the shooting was reckless, and I think that there was evidence to sustain such conclusion.

I think it obvious that the evidence given at the coroner's inquest did not tend to contradict the testimony of the defendant given at the trial, and therefore was not admissible, conceding that he can be impeached in that mode. Whether he was drunk or not had no bearing upon the question as to whether he knew it was his brother. The obvious purpose was not to contradict his testimony, but to make the witness admit that he had willfully given false evidence upon another matter before the coroner, and to make that fact an excuse for examining him as to all the facts in the case. In People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452, it was held that, for the purpose of impeaching a witness, only those portions of the evidence given before the coroner could be read which showed that the witness had stated as a fact at one time what he denied at another, or had made statements materially different. Now, was it competent to introduce evidence showing that upon another trial, upon a matter concerning which defendant had not testified upon his examination in chief, he had committed willful perjury, for the purpose of impeachment? The answer must be in the negative. Specific bad acts, or specific instances of untruthfulness, cannot be shown for the purpose of impeaching a witness. People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45; Underh. Cr. Ev. § 236. After putting in the evidence given by defendant before the coroner, if that was competent, then it was proper to ask him further if his statement was true. If the evidence had stopped upon simply proving the statement made before the coroner, the ruling, though erroneous, would not, perhaps, have necessitated a reversal, because that statement by itself was so utterly immaterial that no harm could ensue. But, when it was used as the means of the further cross-examination, it became very harmful; and the harm, I think, came legitimately from the erroneous ruling permitting the cross-examination in regard to the testimony before the coroner.

The limitation contained in our Code (section 1323, Pen. Code) was doubtless intended to preserve to defendants the right secured by section 13, art. 1, Const. So limited, confessions which are not voluntary are not obtained, although as to the matter of the direct examination the cross-examination may be full and searching. Other states from which cases are cited do not contain such a limitation. In Massachusetts the provision is that he "shall at his own request, and not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness." It has been held that when, under this statute, the accused offers himself as a witness, he waives all protection guaranteed by the constitution, and becomes a competent witness in the whole case. Under this ruling, confessions are forced from him, under the sanction of law. So, the inquisition of torture is restored, only without the rack and thumb screw. It has been well said that the rule has been reached by silent approaches. I think the constitution prohibits the obtaining of evidence by torture, even when the accused has been induced by the offer of some advantage to consent. Under our statute, there can be no doubt. Here, surely, no evidence can be wrung from him. He can only be examined in regard to the matters concerning which he has voluntarily testified. People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45; People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 35 Pac. 80; People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 429. Missouri and Oregon are the only other states which have this statute. In both, the decisions accord with ours. State v. McLaughlin, 76 Mo. 320; State v. Patterson, 88 Mo. 88; State v. Lurch, 12 Or. 99, 6 Pac. 408; State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 12 Pac. 441. It is not always easy to determine what is cross-examination as to the matters testified in the direct examination. It was practically held in Peo- ple v. Mullings, 83 Cal. 138, 23 Pac. 229, that, when a defendant testified simply that he was not guilty, he could be cross-examined as to the whole case. No other witness could have given such evidence. When defendant testifies to facts which simply have a bearing upon the question of innocence or guilt, the cross-examination must be confined to such facts; otherwise, he is compelled to give evidence against himself. Doubtless the prosecution may seek upon a cross-examination to bring out evidence which tends directly to explain, qualify, or contradict his testimony. I say "directly," because it has been sometimes contended that, when the defendant testifies to a fact which is inconsistent with his guilt, proof of his guilt disproves his statements, and therefore he may be cross-examined as to all matters relevant to that issue. This would, of course, do away with statutory limitations entirely, for such would always be the case when he testified to anything relevant and material. It would always tend to refute the charge.

Witnesses do not testify to guilt or innocence, but to facts from which either may be inferred. These facts, and not the guilt or innocence they tend to prove or disprove, are the "matters about which he was examined in chief." For instance, suppose he testified to an alibi; proof of guilt would tend indirectly to disprove the alibi,—simply because the alibi, if proven, disproves guilt. But this is not the matter concerning which the defendant was examined in chief. Any matter which tends directly to prove that he was not where he said he was may be inquired of, but not, for instance, the possession of stolen goods, though that would tend to prove guilt and therefore, indirectly, would disprove the alibi. The possession of the goods may have been acquired in some other way; and, if the question were allowable, it might open up another part of the case, concerning which the defendant has not volunteered any testimony. Judge Cooley was of the opinion that the privilege could not be so waived as to authorize a court to compel a defendant to testify against himself; that his testimony must be voluntary when given, and no previous waiver or agreement to waive this privilege can be held against him. Cooley, Const. Lim. (5th Ed.) 386. He cannot, then, be cross-examined as to other matters for the purpose of discrediting him by an attack upon his character. Surely, this does not concern the matter about which he testified in chief. A different view was taken in People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571. There, however, the constitutional provision was not considered. This plainly appears. It is said that People v. Brown, 72 N. Y. 571, was not in conflict: "Whether the question had any bearing on the credibility of the witness was not determined, but the objection to it was sustained on another ground, which was distinctly taken,—that of privilege." The privilege was the constitutional provisions referred to, and Chief Justice Church and the court held, with Cooley, that the witness could not be compelled to answer if he claimed his privilege. Under such circumstances, I do not think the authorities sufficient to practically repeal the statute, which, read with the constitutional provision, is capable of but one construction.

It is said a defendant may waive his constitutional right, and does so when he takes the stand. Suppose he may waive the privilege; he cannot bind himself in advance to do so. He may claim his right when the occasion arises. It may be here noted, however, that, until this line of decisions, it was always held that to administer an oath to a defendant was a species of compulsion, which of itself would render his statements inadmissible against him. I think the ruling erroneous, and the judgment is therefore reversed, and a new trial ordered.

BARRELL v. LAKE VIEW LAND CO.
(L. A. 364.)

CORPORATIONS—OFFICERS—ESTOPPEL—MEETINGS—RECORDS—EVIDENCE—BILLS AND NOTES—BONA FIDE HOLDERS—APPEAL—RECORD—REVIEW.

1. After allowing a person to act as its secretary, and causing its records to be authenticated by him as such, a corporation cannot object to the regularity of his appointment, or repudiate its obligations, signed by him under the direction of its board of directors.

2. A party cannot urge an objection to evidence which he failed to make in the court below, especially where it could have been obviated by the party introducing the evidence.

3. Where it is not shown whether a meeting of the board of directors of a corporation was regular or special, there is no presumption that it was special.

4. A corporation claiming that all of its directors were not notified to attend a meeting has the burden of proof.

5. Evidence which is excluded must be incorporated into the record in order to be considered on appeal.

6. It is presumed that the board of directors of a corporation consists of at least five, since the Code requires at least that number.

7. Acts of de facto directors of a corporation cannot be impeached by showing irregularity in their election.

8. In the absence of an issue for that purpose, a corporation cannot show that its records, on the faith of which parties have contracted with it, and which it has not attempted to correct, are false.

9. In a suit on a note by a bona fide holder, it is immaterial what a member of the board of directors of the maker stated to the payee with reference to its execution or the consideration therefor.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by James Barrell against the Lake View Land Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, an order denying a new trial, and an order refusing to discharge a writ of attachment, defendant appealed. Affirmed.

Knight & Harpham and G. E. Harpham, for appellant. Mulford & Pollard, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brought this action upon the following promissory note of the defendant, which had been transferred to him before its maturity: "$2,250. Los Angeles, March 22, 1894. Six months after date (without grace) I promise to pay to the order of Thomas F. Mitchell Co. twenty-two hundred fifty dollars, for value received, with interest at — per cent. per — until paid, both principal and interest payable only in United States gold coin. [Seal.] Lake View Land Co., by F. E. Brown, President. W. A. Main, Secretary." The defendant denied the execution of the note, and alleged that the signatures thereto were without authority from the board of directors of the corporation. The court found in accordance with the averments of the complaint and against the allegations of the answer. The defendant has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

At the trial, when the plaintiff offered the note in evidence, the defendant objected thereto upon the ground that it had not been shown that Main was the secretary of the corporation. It was admitted that at the date of the note Brown was president of the corporation, and he testified that he signed and delivered the note to the payee, and that Main signed the note, and affixed the seal of the company thereto. It was also shown from the records of the meetings of the board of directors, which were produced by the secretary of the defendant, that at a meeting of said board held at Redlands, March 17, 1894, the following resolution was adopted: "On motion of W. A. Main, seconded by E. C. Webster, resolved that this corporation, by its president and secretary, execute its note to Thomas F. Mitchell & Company for twenty-two hundred and fifty ($2,250) dollars, dated March 22, 1894, due July 22, 1894, with interest." It appeared from these records of the board that Main acted as secretary from February 12, 1894, when Fish, the former secretary, resigned, until April 26, 1894, and that the record of the proceedings of March 17th was authenticated by the signature of Main as secretary. Upon this evidence the court was authorized to find that Main was the secretary of the corporation at the time when the note was executed, and that the board of directors had given authority to execute the note in the name of the corporation, and that it was duly executed. The defendant will not be permitted, after allowing Main to act as its secretary, and causing its records to be authenticated by him as its secretary, to object to the regularity of his appointment, or to repudiate its obligations signed by him under the direction of its board of directors.

In its brief herein the appellant presents, as another objection to the above resolution, that the meeting of the board of directors at which it was adopted was held at Redlands, whereas it is alleged in the complaint that the principal place of business of the corporation is Pasadena, and that the directors had no power to act at any other place than at its principal place of business. This objection was not made at the trial in the superior court. When the plaintiff offered in evidence these minutes of the board, the defendant objected thereto on the ground "that it is incompetent. It don't purport to be a regular meeting of the board, and only three directors are present, and it is incompetent until it is shown that it is a regular meeting of the board, or that the other directors were notified and were not present, and until it is shown that W. A. Main was a regularly elected secretary, because until the minutes are signed by the secretary of the company they are incompetent." And in the statement of the case it specifies the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the finding, "for the reason that there was no valid resolution of the board of directors of the defendant corporation introduced in evidence authorizing the execution of the note sued upon, because there was no competent proof to show that W. A. Main was the secretary of the corporation on March 22, 1894, or at any other time."

If the defendant had made this objection at the trial, the plaintiff would have had an opportunity to obviate it, either by showing that the entry in the minutes was an error, or that the allegation in the complaint was incorrect. At another stage of the trial the defendant sought to show that its principal place of business was at Redlands, and, as it must be assumed that this offer was made in good faith, it is evident that, if this objection to the minutes had been pointed out when they were offered in evidence, the plaintiff would have caused the complaint to be amended to conform therewith. The defendant cannot avail itself here of an objection which it failed to make in the superior court, especially when it appears that the ground of the objection could have been removed if it had then been made. Whether the meeting of March 17th was a regular or stated meeting of the directors, or was a special meeting, was not shown. There is no presumption that it was a special meeting. Granger v. Mining Co., 59 Cal. 678; Agricultural Works v. Houser, 109 Cal. 9, 41 Pac. 809. If the defendant would claim that it was a special meeting, or that all of the directors were not notified thereof, it was incumbent upon it to introduce evidence to that effect. Thomp. Corp. §§ 707, 789. When the defendant subsequently offered in evidence the by-laws of the corporation, its counsel did not claim that it would appear therefrom that March 17th was not the day for a regular meeting, but stated that the purpose of offering them was to show that the by-laws had not provided for the waiving of the notice of regular meetings of the board of directors. None of the by-laws are set forth in the record, and therefore it does not appear, nor can it be said, that the court erred in refusing to receive them as evidence. Error must be shown by the appellant, and unless evidence which is excluded is incorporated in the record it cannot be determined that there was error in its exclusion.

For the same reason the refusal of the court to admit in evidence the copy of the articles of incorporation of the defendant is not available to the appellant. It may be said, in reference to this offer, that, upon the defendant's statement that it was offered for the purpose of showing "that the number of directors are five," it was immaterial, inasmuch as the Code requires that there shall be at least five directors for a corporation. So far as the purpose as stated by counsel was to show "who were the first directors, and perhaps to follow that up, showing continuously who were the directors; to show that Mr. Webster, who purports to act here as one of the members who authorized the execution of this note, was not a director,"—the evidence was irrelevant, since the act of persons who were at the time of the authorization of the note in suit the de facto directors of the corporation cannot be impeached by showing any irregularity in their election.

The offer of the defendant to show that no meeting of the directors was had on the 17th of March was properly refused. In the absence of an issue for that purpose, the corporation will not be permitted to show that its records, upon the faith of which parties have contracted with it, and which it has itself taken no steps to correct, are false.

The court also properly excluded the offer to show by Webster what he had stated to Mitchell with reference to the execution of the note or the consideration for it. Such testimony would not affect the rights of the plaintiff, even if it had appeared that Mitchell had assented to the statements or agreed with the proposition of Webster.

The defendant has also appealed from an order refusing to discharge a writ of attachment issued in the action. The application for the discharge was made upon the ground that the note sued upon had been secured by a pledge of personal property. At the hearing the evidence upon this point was conflicting, and, as the court denied the motion, it must have determined the ground urged therefor against the claim of the defendant, and its decision thereon is not open to review here. The defendant presented evidence tending to show that certain stock had been delivered with the note as collateral security therefor, but there was also evidence presented that it was not so intended. The note itself does not purport to be so secured, and there was no direct evidence of any agreement between the parties to the note that it should be secured. The judgment and order denying a new trial, and also the order refusing to discharge the attachment, are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CHAVES. (Cr. 381.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—APPOINTMENT—ELECTION—TERM OF OFFICE—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—HOMICIDE—DEGREES—MANSLAUGHTER—MALICE—THREATS—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT—VERDICT—MOTION IN ARREST.

1. Under St. 1893, p. 346, § 25, subds. 2, 21, authorizing supervisors to create townships and to fill vacancies in township offices for unexpired terms, and section 58, providing for justices of the peace in townships, and that supervisors shall divide the counties into townships for the purpose of electing justices of the peace, and Code Civ. Proc. § 111, requiring supervisors to fill vacancies in the office of justice of the peace, the creation of a township creates the office of justice of the peace, which is then vacant, and must be filled by the supervisors.

2. St. 1893, p. 346, § 25, subd. 21, and Code Civ. Proc. § 111, authorizing supervisors to fill vacancies in the office of justice of the peace for unexpired terms, do not violate constitutional provisions making that office elective.

3. Under Pol. Code, § 879, providing that every officer must continue to discharge the duties of his office, although his term has expired, until his successor has qualified, the fact that no justice of the peace was elected at the first general election following the creation of a township does not invalidate a commitment subsequently made by a justice originally appointed by the supervisors.

4. Pen. Code, § 1121, authorizing the court, in its discretion, to permit separation of the jury pending trial, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 7, providing that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate.

5. Instructions are properly refused where all the law stated therein, as far as applicable and correctly stated, has been given in the court's charge.

6. Where the evidence clearly shows that accused, if guilty, is guilty of murder, a charge on manslaughter should not be given.

7. Introductory statements in a charge commended the jurors for their careful and patient attention to the testimony and arguments, which was said to be an assurance that their remaining duties would be discharged with conscientious fidelity, and were to the effect that no man accused of felony could be tried without counsel, or be convicted except by a verdict of 12 disinterested men chosen from the people; and that no man is denied a fair trial, whether native or foreign; and that the court had the fullest confidence that the deliberations of the jury would be conducted with decorum and propriety. Held proper.

8. A charge defining the degrees of murder in the language of the statute is not improper, though there is no evidence of poison, lying in wait, arson, etc.

9. As used in a charge that the jury might convict of murder of the first or of the second degree, or acquit, "as in your judgment the evidence may warrant," the words quoted are not misleading, as being unrestricted in their application.

10. A charge that accused is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and, in case of reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal, is not confused and contradictory.

11. It is not error for the court to read forms of verdict to the jury, nor in a murder trial to read first the form for murder in the first degree.

12. Accused and deceased, a woman, lived together. They quarreled, and deceased took refuge with a neighbor, accused following, and attempting to stab her with a large pocket knife. He left, threatening to return and take her. He stated to several that he would return and kill her. Several days later he returned, and tried to get her to go home with him, and, on her refusing, drew a knife 13 inches long, and started after her, she screaming and running out of the door, where she fell. Accused cut at her, and she turned over face downwards, whereupon he placed his foot on her, and stabbed her to death, and fled. He afterwards acknowledged the crime to several. His only defense was certificates of good character. Held to justify a verdict of murder, with infliction of the death penalty.

13. Evidence that accused and deceased, a woman, who lived together, had quarreled, the latter fleeing to a neighbor, where accused followed her, and attempted to make a murderous assault on her, and made threats against her, is competent, as showing malice and a motive for the murder, committed a few days later.

14. Evidence of threats by accused against the life of deceased prior to the murder is competent as tending to show malice.

15. Proper foundation being laid, questions put to elicit evidence of confessions by accused are proper.

16. Under Pen. Code, § 1185, permitting motion in arrest of judgment founded on defects appearing on the face of the indictment, such a motion, based on illegality of the commitment, was properly overruled.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Manuel Chaves was convicted of murder, and was sentenced to be hanged, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Omar Bushnell, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and W. H. Anderson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

BELCHER, C. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of murder, committed on the 14th day of May, 1897, in the county of San Diego, by willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously killing a woman named Gregoria Rodrigues. When arraigned, he moved the court to set aside the information upon the ground that before the filing thereof he had not been legally committed by a magistrate, and the motion was denied. He then demurred to the information and his demurrer was overruled, and thereupon he pleaded not guilty. He was afterwards tried, and the verdict returned was: "We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, do find the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree, as charged in the information, and in our judgment he should be punished by the infliction of the death penalty." He moved for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, and, both of these motions being denied, judgment was entered that he be hanged at San Quentin. From that judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial this appeal is prosecuted.

1. It appears from the bill of exceptions that the preliminary examination of defendant was had before one Walter B. Ferguson, who styled himself "justice of the peace, Picacho township, county of San Diego." The order of commitment was signed by Ferguson as such justice of the peace, and dated May 25, 1897. It further appears that on February 4, 1896, the board of supervisors of San Diego county, upon petition of certain citizens, and by proceedings regularly taken, formed or created the "Picacho judicial township" in said county, and appointed Walter B. Ferguson justice of the peace of said township; that thereafter the said appointee duly qualified as such magistrate; that no election for justice of the peace has ever been held in said township; and that said Ferguson was not at the date of his appointment a justice of the peace, elected or appointed to the office in any other township or city in said county, and had not since been elected or appointed a justice of the peace in any other township. Upon these facts it is earnestly contended by counsel for appellant that the action of the board of supervisors in appointing Ferguson to the office of justice of the peace was wholly void; that he was not a justice of the peace either de jure or de facto; and therefore defendant had not been legally committed, and his motion to set aside the information should have been granted. The county government act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 346) contains the following provisions:

"Sec. 25. The boards of supervisors, in their respective counties, have jurisdiction and power under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law: * * *

"Subd. 2. To divide the counties into townships, election, school, road, supervisor, sanitary, and other districts required by law, change the same, and create others, as convenience requires."

"Subd. 21. To fill by appointment all vacancies that may occur in any office filled by the appointment of the board of supervisors and elective county or township officers * * * the appointee to hold office for the unexpired term."

"Sec. 58. The officers of a township are two justices of the peace, two constables, and such inferior and subordinate officers as may be provided by law or by the board of supervisors: provided, that in townships containing cities in which city justices are elected, there shall be but one justice of the peace. The board of supervisors of each county, on or before the first Monday in September, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and thereafter as public convenience shall require, shall divide their respective counties into townships for the purpose of electing justices of the peace and constables: provided, that the board of supervisors shall have power, whenever they may deem it for the good of their county, to allow only one justice of the peace and one constable in any judicial township having a population of less than three thousand inhabitants."

Under these provisions of the statute it is clear that the board of supervisors was empowered to divide the county into townships for the election of justices of the peace,—that is, into judicial townships,—and that each of such townships was entitled to have at least one justice of the peace. And it is also clear that when a township was created the office of justice of the peace for the township was created, and was then vacant, and to be thereafter filled by appointment or election, as provided by law. "An office is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event. A newly-created office, which is not filled by the tribunal which created it, becomes vacant on the instant of its creation, an existing office without an incumbent being vacant whether it be a new or an old one." 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 431, and see cases cited.

The office being thus created, with no incumbent to discharge its duties, the question is, how could the vacancy be filled? This question is clearly answered by subdivision 21, § 25, of the county government act, above quoted, and by section 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares: "If a vacancy occurs in the office of a justice of the peace, the board of supervisors of the county shall appoint an eligible person to hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term." People v. Sands, 102 Cal. 12, 36 Pac. 404. The claim that these provisions of the statutes authorizing boards of supervisors to fill by appointment the office of a justice of the peace are unconstitutional, because in conflict with those provisions of the constitution which make that office an elective one, cannot be sustained. "A statute allowing a particular officer or board to fill a vacancy in an office until the next election is not in conflict with a constitutional provision that such office shall be filled by a popular election." Throop, Pub. Off. § 433, and cases cited. Nor did the fact that no justice of the peace was elected to succeed Ferguson at the first general election following his appointment in any way deprive him of his right to act as such officer. Having been legally appointed to fill that office, it was incumbent upon him to continue to discharge its duties until his successor was elected and had qualified. Pol. Code, § 879. Without stating the facts or considering the matter further, we think it sufficiently appears from what has already been said that Ferguson, at the time the defendant was examined and held to answer by him, was not only a de facto, but a de jure, justice of the peace in and for the judicial township for which he was appointed; and, this being so, it follows that the court properly denied the motion to set aside the information.

2. While the jury was being impaneled, and during the progress of the trial, the court took a recess several times, and at each of such times, after properly admonishing the jurors, permitted them to separate, without the consent of defendant or his counsel. No objection to the separation was made, but it is now claimed for appellant that it was error for the court to permit the jurors to separate; and that section 1121 of the Penal Code, which authorized the court in its discretion to permit the separations, is unconstitutional because it is inconsistent with that provision of the constitution which declares that "the right of a trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate." Article 1, § 7. The section of the Code referred to is not unconstitutional. It in no way violates or interferes with the right that every one has to a fair trial by jury. The matter rested in the discretion of the court, and, as no abuse of that discretion appears, its action was justified and proper. People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 657, 49 Pac. 1049.

3. The court charged the jury very fully, clearly, and correctly upon all the points of law applicable to the facts of the case, and refused to give six instructions requested by defendant. It is claimed for appellant that the court should have given each of the instructions requested by him, and that its refusal to do so was prejudicial error. But all the law stated in the said instructions, in so far as it was applicable and correctly stated, was given in the court's charge; and the rule is settled beyond controversy, by numerous decisions of this court, that the trial court is not bound to repeat itself, and it is not error to refuse to give an instruction which has already been substantially given in its charge or in other instructions.

One of the instructions requested related to the crime of manslaughter. That instruction was properly refused, because, as clearly shown by the evidence, the defendant, if guilty at all, was guilty of murder of the first or second degree, and when such is the case an instruction upon manslaughter should not be given. People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 469; People v. Lee Gam, 69 Cal. 552, 11 Pac. 183; People v. Chavez, 103 Cal. 408, 37 Pac. 389.

Counsel for appellant complains of certain parts of the charge, and says "it is difficult to perceive" what they had to do with the case. The part first referred to is found in an introductory statement in which the court commended the jurors for the careful and patient attention which they had given to the testimony of the witnesses and the arguments of counsel, and said that this was an assurance that their remaining duties would be discharged with conscientious fidelity. The court then said that in this country no man accused of a felony could be put upon his trial without the aid of counsel, or could be convicted, except by the verdict of a jury of 12 disinterested men, chosen from the body of the people of the county; that the law makes ample provision for the selection of jurors who are strictly fair and impartial to try the issue of the guilt or innocence of the accused; that it can never be justly said that under the judicial system of this country a man is denied a fair and impartial trial, whether he be native born or of foreign birth; and that the court had the fullest confidence that the deliberations of the jury in the jury room would be conducted with decorum and propriety, and the result thereof would be a just and righteous verdict, under the law and evidence in the case. Similar preliminary statements in charges are not uncommon, and in all that was said by the court in this way we see nothing which could have operated to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors, or which was at all improper.

The next part of the charge objected to is that in regard to the different degrees of murder. In defining the crime of murder, and the two degrees into which it is divided, the court followed the language of Pen. Code, §§ 187-189. It is objected that "there is no evidence of poison, lying in wait, torture, arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem in the case, nor anything that required explanation why the legislature referred to those matters, or why it had fixed tests for such homicides as occur in connection with such things or those crimes." This criticism has no merit and deserves no particular notice. Obviously it was the right and duty of the court to state the law in regard to the offense, and the degrees into which it is divided as declared by the statute, and such statement did not and could not have prejudiced the defendant.

The court charged the jury that, "under the information in this case, the jury may convict the defendant of murder of the first degree, murder of the second degree, or acquit him altogether, as in your judgment the evidence may warrant, in view of the law to be given you by the court." Counsel quotes only the words, "as in your judgment the evidence may warrant," and claims that they were such as to mislead the jury, being almost unrestricted in their application to the case. The words quoted, when read in connection with the balance of the instruction, are not misleading, and are free from any valid objection.

The court also charged the jury, in the language of Pen. Code, § 1096, that "a defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and, in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal." To this the court added that the presumption of innocence goes with the defendant all through the case, and operates in his favor until a verdict is arrived at. The court then proceeded to state what is a reasonable doubt in the language many times quoted and approved by this court. Counsel say, "The presumption of innocence is not fully and clearly stated in the words" above quoted; and that, "although those portions of the charge may be in the words of the statute, they are contradictory and confused, and should not have been given." Obviously, there is nothing in this point, and it may be passed without further notice.

Finally, at the conclusion of its charge, the court read and handed to the jury five forms of verdict, any one of which they might render, stating that they were sufficient to cover every phase of the case, under the law and the evidence; the first form finding the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree, and that he should be punished by the infliction of the death penalty, and the last form finding the defendant not guilty. It is objected that there was not "anything in the case that made it necessary for the court to read to the jury forms of a verdict, with such forms so arranged and read as to bring the one for murder in the first degree, and fixing the death penalty, first to be read; nor should they be read at all, because such reading might convey to the minds of jurors the idea that the court favored a verdict as expressed in the form first read." We see nothing in this point. It must be presumed that the jurors were men of ordinary intelligence, and, if so, the mere order in which the forms of verdict were read could not have conveyed to their minds the idea suggested.

4. Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict finding him guilty of murder of the first degree, and for this reason his motion for a new trial should have been granted. The facts proved were, in substance, as follows: Defendant and the deceased, Gregoria Rodrigues, had been living together in a mining town or camp in San Diego county. On the night of May 9, 1897, they quarreled, and deceased left him, and sought refuge in the house of a near neighbor, Refugio Ynanes. Defendant followed her, and made an attempt to stab her with a large pocket knife. This attempt was frustrated by Ynanes, who kept defendant back with a dagger, and made him desist. Defendant left, saying: "Now, you will see I will be back shortly. I will take this woman out. I am a man, wherever you find me." He came again the next morning, and tried to persuade deceased to return home with him, but she refused to do so, and he went away, remarking that he would get even with her some time. He returned again about noon of the same day, and conversed with Mrs. Ynanes, and then left, saying he was going to Yuma. About the same time he stated to several other persons that he was going to Yuma, but that he would return in a few days for the purpose of killing deceased. Defendant returned on May 14th, and went to the home of Ynanes, where deceased had been staying since she left him. He found there Mrs. Ynanes and deceased, and, after talking with Mrs. Ynanes for a few moments, he turned to deceased, and handed her a letter, saying, "Answer it promptly." She read the letter, which was to the effect that he wished her to return to him. She asked for paper and ink with which to answer it. He said: "No, no; you don't want ink. I want the word of mouth. What do you say? Are you going to come together with me?" She replied: "Well, sir; the only reply that I can make to you is that I cannot remain with you one moment longer." Then he said, "All right;" and stuck his hand in his breast, and pulled out a knife about 13 inches long, and started towards deceased. She retreated, taking refuge behind Mrs. Ynanes, who tried to reason with and restrain him. He struck at deceased over Mrs. Ynanes, cutting her right hand across the wrist. She then screamed, and ran, and defendant, although Mrs. Ynanes was trying to keep him back, pursued and overtook her just outside the door of the house, where she had stumbled and fallen. There he cut at her, wounding her superficially at first, and she turned over face downwards. He then placed his foot upon her, stabbed her to death, and fled. Subsequently defendant acknowledged his crime to several persons. The only evidence offered in defense consisted of two certificates, made by officials in the Mexican town in which defendant was born and brought up, certifying to his previous good character. The above statement, we think, shows clearly and beyond controversy that the evidence introduced was amply sufficient to justify the verdict of the jury.

5. Appellant also contends that the court erred in admitting certain evidence against his objections that it was immaterial, incompetent, and irrelevant. All the questions objected to which were propounded to Mrs. Ynanes, and the first question objected to which was propounded to Mr. Ynanes, related to what occurred at their house on the night of May 9th. It is said: "The subject of the testimony had nothing to do with the killing on the 14th of May, 1897, and did not relate to the crime charged in the information." In our opinion, the evidence elicited in answer to these questions was clearly material and competent. It showed that defendant and deceased while living together had quarreled, resulting in her leaving him and fleeing to a neighbor's house for protection, in his following her, and attempting to make a murderous assault upon her, and in his making threats against her when his assault was frustrated. This tended to show malice and ill will on his part and a motive for the murder committed a few days later. Such evidence was admissible. People v. Kern, 61 Cal. 244; People v. Brown, 76 Cal. 573,

18 Pac. 678. The question objected to which was propounded to the witness Downey was entirely proper. It elicited evidence of threats made by defendant against the life of deceased prior to the murder. Such evidence was admissible as tending to show malice. People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676; People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387. The questions objected to which were propounded to Mr. Hodges, Mr. Jones, and Mr. Ynanes, except the first, were for the purpose of eliciting evidence of confessions made by defendant. Proper foundation for the introduction of such evidence was laid, and there was no error, therefore, in admitting it.

6. The last point made is that the court erred in overruling appellant's motion in arrest of judgment. The contention is "that, as there was no legal commitment before the filing of the information, the trial court had no jurisdiction." This matter has already been considered and decided against appellant's contention. Besides, the motion in arrest of judgment can only be founded on defects appearing upon the face of the information or indictment, and not on the ground here urged. Pen. Code, § 1185. We conclude that the record discloses no ground for reversal, and advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

WIGMORE v. BUELL. (L. A. 381.)

STATUTES—GENERAL LAWS—UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION—EXEMPTIONS—TRESPASSING ANIMALS—ATTACHMENT—COMPLAINT—BOND—WRIT.

1. St. 1877-78, p. 176, concerning damages done by animals trespassing on private lands, is not in violation of Const. art. 1, § 11, providing that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," because the act applies to certain counties only.

2. St. 1877-78, p. 176, concerning damages done by trespassing animals, and allowing an attachment to issue in actions thereunder on the filing of a verified complaint without the statutory affidavit, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation, in that it allows an attachment for a trespass and without an affidavit, thus introducing a remedy different from that pointed out in the Code, since the power to pass special laws includes the power to make them apply to special objects, without their trenching on the operation or resulting in the repeal of previously existing laws.

3. The fact that St. 1877-78, p. 176, concerning damages by trespassing animals, and allowing attachments to be issued in suits thereunder, denies the exemption under the general laws, does not render it unconstitutional.

4. St. 1877-78, p. 176, § 3, gives a right to attach trespassing animals to better secure any judgment which the landowner may recover for the trespass, and makes all provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to attachment, except sections 538 and 866, applicable to proceedings under the statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 537, denies an attachment as against property of a resident debtor, where the creditor holds a lien. St. 1877-78, § 13, gives an option to distrain for two days without instituting legal proceedings, in order to determine which remedy must be pursued; and section 15 gives the right to compensation for feed and care of animals "lawfully distrained * * * during the time of such lawful distraint." Held, that since the right to distrain continues only for two days, and the lien for feed and care for a like time, the statute is not in conflict with section 537 of the Code.

5. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 539, providing that, before issuing a writ of attachment, the clerk must require an undertaking in a sum not less than $200, and not exceeding the amount claimed by plaintiff, the fact that the undertaking recited that the claim of plaintiff was $500, whereas the complaint prayed for $500 damages, besides $153 for costs and expenses of plaintiff for keeping certain distrained animals, and further costs at the rate of $76 per day, is immaterial, where the undertaking was for the sum of $1,000.

6. Where a writ of attachment of trespassing animals states the amount in suit to be $653, and the complaint prays for $500 damages and $153 for certain costs and expenses incurred, besides costs incurred for feed and care of the animals after they were attached, the writ substantially conforms to Code Civ. Proc. § 540, requiring the writ to direct the sheriff to satisfy plaintiff's demand, "the amount of which must be stated in conformity with the complaint," since the last-named charge is part of the costs and not of plaintiff's claim.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by John Wigmore against R. T. Buell. From an order refusing to dissolve an attachment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Richards & Carrier, for appellant. Boyce, Taggart & Kellogg, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Appeal from an order refusing to dissolve an attachment issued in favor of plaintiff in an action brought under the act entitled "An act concerning trespassing animals upon private lands in certain counties of the state of California," approved March 7, 1878 (St. 1877-78, p. 176). The appeal is here by bill of exceptions, which contains the complaint, writ of attachment, undertaking on attachment, motion to dissolve attachment, order of refusal, and notice of appeal. The complaint avers that plaintiff is the owner and was in the lawful possession of certain land in Santa Barbara county; that defendant is the owner of certain live stock (describing it); that prior to November 24, 1895, said animals, without plaintiff's consent, entered and trespassed upon the said lands of plaintiff, to his injury in the sum of $500; that the value of said animals is $2,500; that, pursuant to the act above referred to, plaintiff "did distrain and take into his possession said trespassing animals, and has kept the same since November 24, 1895, and in pursuance of said act plaintiff has now sought legal proceedings under said act to recover damages," etc.; that "upon taking up said animals * * * plaintiff made the necessary inquiries as to the ownership of said animals, and * * * that said animals are the property of * * * defendant"; avers the cost of keeping to be $76.50 per day, and that they are now in plaintiff's possession; and prays judgment for damages and cost of keeping and of suit. The complaint was verified, and filed November 26, 1895. On the same day, an undertaking was filed, and a writ of attachment was sued out and was served by the sheriff on the 27th by levying on the animals mentioned in the complaint. No affidavit in attachment was filed.

The act of 1878 declares it to be unlawful for any animal, the property of any person, to enter upon the land of another. Section 1. The person entitled to possession of the land, trespassed upon in violation of the act, may recover from the owner of the trespassing animals "all damage sustained by reason of such trespass, together with costs of suit." Section 2. "For the purpose of allowing the plaintiff a better security for the payment of any judgment he may recover in actions brought under the first two sections of this act, all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state relating to attachment process shall apply to such actions, subject only to the modifications herein contained, to wit: Instead of filing the affidavit required by sections 538 and 866 of said Code, the plaintiff is entitled to the issuance of a writ of attachment against the property of the defendant upon filing his complaint stating a cause of action, verified according to the law concerning the verification of pleadings." Section 3. The act declares that no trespassing animal shall be exempt from attachment or sale, etc. Section 4. If the ownership is unknown, "then in that case the trespassing animals shall also be liable for all damage done by such trespass," and points out how the right may be enforced by an action in rem. Sections 5-9. "The plaintiff may procure an attachment against the property defendant in an action in rem under this act, in the same manner as in cases where the owner is sued, and the undertaking on attachment shall enure to the benefit of the owner of the property defendant if the plaintiff fail to recover in the action." Section 10. "Any person injured by a violation of section one of this act may, at his option, distrain and take into his possession any trespassing animal, * * * and keep the same two days without instituting legal proceedings under this act, so that he may have proper time in which to make the necessary inquiries as to the ownership of the animals and determine which remedy given herein he is entitled to;" and provision is made for the owner of the distrained animals to take the property upon giving a bond upon certain conditions. Section 13. "In all other matters than those in which a different rule is herein prescribed" the Code of Civil Procedure shall govern. Section 14. It is provided by section 15 that "whenever any animal is distrained under section thirteen * * * the distrainer shall be entitled to recover reasonable compensation for care and feed of such animal * * *; and in actions brought under provisions of this act, when the plaintiff recovers, then a reasonable sum for keeping any animal levied upon by attachment process or under execution shall be allowed as costs of suit." Section 15. The act is made to apply to certain counties only, among them Santa Barbara.

1. Appellant contends that the act is unconstitutional, as violative of article 1, § 11, Old and New Const., which declares that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." The contention is that the act is special legislation, in that "it seeks to amend the Codes, which do and must, to be constitutional, act uniformly as to all territory and all persons or classes of persons.

There is nothing in the old constitution which forbids the legislature from passing either local or special laws, except in respect of the formation of corporations other than municipal. Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366. The eleventh section of article 1, referred to by appellant, was held in Brooks v. Hyde to mean that every law shall have a uniform operation upon all citizens or persons or things of any class upon which it purports to take effect, and that it shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens. In City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604, we find nothing to support appellant's contention; for it was there said that a law is general and constitutional when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction, and the case of People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 436, 18 Pac. 413, was referred to, where it was said: "In order to constitute the uniformity of operation specified in the constitution, it is not necessary that the general law must operate alike upon all the subjects or persons to which it applies, independent of all other considerations, but that it shall operate uniformly upon all persons standing in the same category, and upon rights and things in the same relation." Our statutes are full of instances of the exercise of the power of the legislature to enact special laws under the old constitution.

The act is not unconstitutional because it gives an attachment for a trespass and without an affidavit, thus introducing a remedy different from that pointed out in the Code of Civil Procedure subjecting animals, also exempt by general law from execution, to the attachment. The power to pass special laws must necessarily include the power to make them apply to special objects without their trenching upon the operation or resulting in the repeal of previously existing laws. Brodhead v. City of Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624. The fact that the act disregards the exemptions claimed under the general law we do not think renders it unconstitutional. The remedy given by the act would in some cases be of little value if the animals could be reclaimed as exempt. We know of no reason why the legislature could not, nor why it should not, have given the remedy against the trespass of animals exempt from execution as well as those not so exempt. Wilcox v. Hemming, 58 Wis. 144, 15 N. W. 435.

2. Appellant contends that the complaint does not state such cause of action as entitles plaintiff to the process of attachment. The point made, as we understand appellant, is that, except as to the provisions of sections 538, 866, Code Civ. Proc., all the other provisions of the Code relating to attachment are expressly made applicable by section 3 of the act. For example, section 537, Code Civ. Proc., provides in the case of a resident debtor that it is a condition to the existence of the cause of action which will support the attachment that the demand be not secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property, or pledge of personal property, etc. It is contended that, at most, the act of 1878 "simply added another character of action to that of contract for the direct payment of money (to wit, for trespass), but in no way dispensed with the condition that the demand should not be secured by another lien." We are cited to Hill v. Grigsby, 32 Cal. 56, to show that the lien referred to in section 537 is any valid lien, and that the courts are unauthorized to discriminate in favor of or against any particular kind of lien. It is contended that the lien continues beyond two days under section 13; and can only be discharged by tendering the amount claimed as damage or by an undertaking; and that no fair construction of the law gives both the lien by distraint and the attachment also.

Appellant's construction of the statute is that the act gives the right to sue either the owner of the animals in personam or the animals in rem, and gives as a collateral remedy the process of attachment as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure. In addition to these actions, any person injured may distrain the animals and take them into possession, and within two days must elect whether to proceed in personam if he knows the owner, and if not he must proceed in rem. If he acquires a lien by distress, he may enforce this lien in whichever action he is entitled to bring, whether in personam or in rem, and may recover in addition to his damages the expense and cost of his distraint. If he does not distrain, then, and only then, is he entitled to invoke the statutory process of attachment, and in such case he may recover the expense of keeping the animals as part of the costs.

Respondent claims that the act gives the landowner a right to distrain animals taken damage feasant, and detain them two days only, at the expiration of which time he must commence his action. He can then attach the animals in whichever form of action he brings, and thereafter his right of detention by distraint expires, and the animals are in the custody of the law under the attachment only.

The obvious purpose of the act is to afford the owner of land trespassed upon a speedy and somewhat summary remedy by giving an action both against the owner, if known, and against the animals, if he is not known, and the attachment against the property may be given in both cases. Sections 3, 10. An act should be given a construction, if it can be done within the rules of law, to carry out this obvious purpose. The right to distrain is an option given to the landowner which he may exercise for two days without instituting any legal proceedings whatever, the declared purpose being to enable the landowner during that period to ascertain the owner of the animals, and to determine which remedy given by the act the landowner will resort to. We cannot find any authority in the act for distraining the animals beyond the two days; nor can we find any lien given upon the animals by the distraint to secure any claim of damage except as given in section 15, under the provisions of which "reasonable compensation for care and feed" may be recovered "whenever any animal is lawfully distrained under section 13, * * * during the time of such lawful distraintment." This lawful distraintment, we think, is confined to two days. It seems to us that if the legislature had intended to give the landowner authority to hold under distraint for an indefinite time, and until he could obtain judgment in his action, there would have been no occasion for introducing the attachment feature of the act, and the limit of two days would seem to exclude the idea that any greater time was to be given for distraining the animals. The purpose of the attachment was to give the "plaintiff a better security for the payment of any judgment he may recover in actions brought under the first two sections of this act"; and we must presume that the same purpose was in the minds of the legislature in enacting section 10, and that the attachment in actions in rem was to better secure any judgment obtained under section 5 et seq. It may not be always convenient for the landowner to take upon himself the care and custody of the animals pending suit in personam or in rem; and the statute would seem to afford him the opportunity in both forms of action to relieve himself of that responsibility by resorting to attachment, in which case the animals would then pass into the custody of the law. There is in this state no common-law right in the owners of land to recover for the trespassing of animals on their land. Merritt v. Hill, 104 Cal. 184, 37 Pac. 893. The owner of land may ignore the trespass, and turn the animals out upon the highway, or return them to the owner without distraining or attaching, but he is not bound to do this in order to avoid the care and custody of the animals. When, however, he seeks the relief of the act, he must keep within its provisions, and cannot be given any relief beyond them. Having no continuing lien by the distraint, the act in no wise conflicts with the Code provision referred to by appellant, denying an attachment when there is a lien. Appellant's contention would compel the landowner, where the owner of the animal is known as well as where not, to personally hold in his possession the trespassing animals under the distraint or lose his lien, which we do not think comports with the purpose or language of the act.

Appellant urges that it is oppressive and unjust to give an attachment with its attendant costs as auxiliary to the lien of distraint. We cannot see that there would be much more cost to the owner of the animals in the one case than in the other. But the difficulty with the argument is that the statute does not give a continuing lien by distraint and does give the attachment. We think the more just and reasonable construction of the statute, keeping in mind its object and purpose, is as we have given it.

3. It is claimed by appellant that the undertaking is not in conformity with the provisions of section 539, Code Civ. Proc., for the reason that the claim recited therein is different from the amount claimed in the complaint. The bond recites that the plaintiff is about to commence an action for damages, costs of keeping, and costs of suit, etc., claiming that the sum of $500 is due from defendant. It then proceeds: "Now, therefore, we * * * do * * * undertake, in the sum of one thousand dollars, * * * that, if the said defendant * * * recover judgment in said action, the said plaintiff will pay all costs that may be awarded the said defendant, and all damages he may sustain by reason of the said attachment, not exceeding one thousand dollars." The complaint prays for $500 damages, $153 costs and expenses of keeping the animals (for two days), and for $76.50 per day for keeping the same hereafter. We are referred to Hisler v. Carr, 34 Cal. 641, which holds that when the penalty is too small it is a fatal objection to the issuance of the writ. But this objection would not hold good if the bond is for a greater sum than required by law.

4. The objection that the writ states a different amount than that claimed in the bond we do not think well taken. Section 540, Code Civ. Proc., requires the writ to direct the sheriff to attach sufficient property to satisfy plaintiff's demand, "the amount of which must be stated in conformity with the complaint," etc. The writ states the amount to be $653, besides costs of suit, which is the amount of damage claimed ($500), and two days' expense of keeping ($153). Whatever claim plaintiff would recover beyond this would be as costs of suit, for the sheriff, and not the plaintiff, has the legal custody of the animals. The amount of these costs is to be ascertained by the court. We think there is a substantial compliance with the statute in the bond and writ. If plaintiff continues his possession of the animals after the statutory two days, it must be as keeper for the sheriff, who has served the writ and has taken the property, as appears in the record. The order refusing to dissolve the attachment was correct, and should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order refusing to dissolve the attachment is correct and is affirmed.

represented that he was the owner of and in the possession of certain land, and, by reason of such ownership and possession, had full authority to let the same, and that, at the time defendant made such representations, he was not the owner of and in the possession of such land, and had no authority to let the same, etc., is insufficient, as it does not deny that defendant owned the land in question, nor that he was in possession thereof, but avers that he was not the owner "and" in possession.

2. Where the representations on which a prosecution was based were made in letters transmitted by mail, and there was no evidence as to where any of them had been mailed or received, jurisdiction did not appear for want of proof of venue.

3. Defendant was guilty of no crime, if he acted in good faith, according to what he believed was his right, in representing that he was the owner of and in possession of land which he had conveyed to a trustee, where the question whether the beneficiaries under the conveyance had agreed to take the land in payment of a debt or as security was in controversy.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; Albert G. Burnett, Judge.

F. W. Sawyer, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant, W. G. Griffith, was convicted of the offense of obtaining money by false and fraudulent representations, and appeals from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial.

The indictment was demurred to, and, among other points made, it is contended that it does not charge an offense because, after stating what the representations were, it does not contain a sufficient allegation that such representations were false. The representations are stated to have been: "That he, the said W. G. Griffith, was the owner of and in the possession of a certain tract of land situate, lying, and being in the county of Sonoma, known as the 'Robert Miller Mountain or Hill Ranch'; that he, W. G. Griffith, by reason of his said ownership and possession of said Robert Miller Mountain or Hill ranch, had full authority and right to let, lease, and demise the said Robert Miller Mountain or Hill ranch to the said C. B. Petray." The falsity of the representation is alleged as follows: "At the time that the said W. G. Griffith represented and pretended to the said Petray that he was the owner of said Robert Miller Mountain or Hill ranch, and had full authority and right to let, lease, and demise the same to C. B. Petray, he, the said W. G. Griffith, in fact and in truth, was not the owner of and in the possession of the said Robert Miller Mountain or Hill ranch, and had no authority or right to let, lease, and demise the same to the said C. B. Petray, all of which was then and there well known," etc.

The representation that defendant had a right to lease the land is not only a conclusion of law, but was represented to depend upon the fact that he was the owner and in possession. Now, the denial of the truth of the representation is a negative pregnant. It does not deny that defendant owned the land, nor does it deny that he was in possession, but it avers that in truth the defendant was not the owner and in possession. This might be so, and yet the defendant might have been the owner, and as owner have the right to lease the land, although not in possession. In such case possession would be immaterial. Or the defendant may have been rightfully in possession, and entitled to the possession, in which case the matter of ownership would be immaterial. The indictment must negative the presumption of innocence. If the allegations can be true, and the defendant still be innocent, the presumption still prevails, and a verdict of guilty as charged would not constitute a conviction of a crime. This indictment must therefore be held insufficient.

It is also contended that there is no proof of venue. The offense, if committed at all, was accomplished by representations made in certain letters written by defendant in response to letters written by one C. B. Petray. The note which constitutes the property—which, according to the charge, defendant obtained by fraud—was sent through the United States mail. The evidence is positive that all these letters were sent and received through the United States mail, but there is no evidence in the record as to where any of them were mailed, or were received. On their face, defendant's letters are dated at San Francisco, and addressed to Petray, at Geyserville, Sonoma county. The directions upon the envelopes do not appear. It is assumed that the letters written by defendant were mailed in San Francisco, and that Petray received them from the post office at Geyserville, Sonoma county; but the record makes no showing upon that subject. A motion for a new trial was made on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. This seems to be the only specification required, and makes it incumbent upon the people to see that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence, or at least some evidence tending to prove every material fact for the prosecution. The venue may have been conceded at the trial, or there may have been proof, but, if either supposition be true, the record should have shown it. The presumption here is that the record contains all material evidence, but oversights such as suggested often exist. See People v. McGregor, 88 Cal. 140, 26 Pac. 97. However reluctant we may be to reverse a case for an apparent lack of jurisdiction which may result from the fact that that question was conceded, and therefore overlooked in making up the record, we are helpless in the matter. We cannot say the defendant was not injured, for apparently he was convicted of a felony in a case which the court had no jurisdiction to try.

It is contended that Griffith, on the evidence, must be considered as the owner of the property leased, and as such was authorized to execute the lease. It is admitted that he was not the legal owner, but it is contended that the conveyance to Mrs. Cook was a mortgage only, and that the beneficial owner was Griffith. Mrs. Cook testified that she claimed no beneficial interest in the land, but thought she held the title as trustee for the Etchells heirs. The Santa Clara property which was exchanged for the Miller ranch was incumbered by a mortgage to secure a debt due to the Etchells estate. Whether the heirs had agreed to take the Mountain ranch in payment of their debt, or as security, seems to have been a matter in controversy. But, even if Griffith was entitled to the property after the payment of the debt, his right to possession of the land prior to that time is not made to appear. The deed was absolute on its face, and, though intended as security, still, under the circumstances, the title must have passed to Mrs. Cook. Presumptively she would take the rents, as well as the title, for the security of the Etchells heirs. Still, if Griffith was acting in good faith, according to what he believed was his right, he was guilty of no crime. This was a matter, however, for the jury to determine. Other points are made, but, even in case of a new indictment, I do not think they will be material. The judgment and order are reversed.

WOOD et al. v. ETIWANDA WATER CO.
et al. (L. A. 37.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 22, 1898.)

APPEAL—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—LIMITATIONS—JUDGMENT AND PLEADING.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, making the time to appeal from a judgment run from "entry" thereof, but declaring that an exception to the decision or verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, unless appeal is taken within 60 days after "rendition" thereof, where the entry is more than 60 days after the rendition (the filing of the findings and order for judgment), the sufficiency of the evidence cannot be reviewed or looked at to explain or make clear the findings.

2. The right to appropriate water as against the state and United States being given by Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2339, 2340, and Civ. Code Cal. § 1410 et seq., the right of the appropriator depends on the statute of limitations, as against a purchaser of land from the government, only as to acts subsequent to such purchase.

3. The judgment in a suit to enjoin the diversion of water is not authorized by the pleadings, in so far as, after enjoining the diversion of water through a pipe line on plaintiff's land, which it is found was constructed without right on the line of a flume previously used by defendant, but abandoned and destroyed on the construction of the pipe line, it adjudges that defendant has the right to maintain a dam and flume, the flume to be on the line of the pipe line; no reference being made in the pleadings to the reconstruction of the flume, while the answer alleges a right to maintain the pipe line, and prays judgment to that effect.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by F. W. Wood and others against the Etiwanda Water Company and others. From part of the judgment in favor of said company, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed in part.

Curtis & Curtis and J. S. Chapman, for appellants. Goodsell & Leonard and R. E. Houghton, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Plaintiffs are the owners, as tenants in common, of several parcels of land described in the complaint, through which a stream known as "East Canyon Creek" flowed in its natural course. The Etiwanda Water Company is a corporation, and for convenience will be treated as the sole defendant, inasmuch as the court found and decreed that the other defendant had no interest in the litigation, and no question is made upon that part of the judgment. In the year 1882 the defendant diverted water from said stream upon one of the parcels of land now owned by plaintiffs, but which was then public land of the United States, by means of a dam and flume, and conveyed it over other parcels of plaintiffs' land, and used it for irrigating purposes upon lands owned by the stockholders in the defendant corporation. Plaintiffs afterwards diverted water from the same stream below defendant's dam, and used it for irrigating their lands. In June, 1892, the defendant removed the flume, and laid a pipe line over plaintiffs' lands, through which the water was conducted to defendant's stockholders. It was claimed by plaintiffs that the quantity of water diverted through the flume did not exceed 50 inches, leaving a large quantity for their use, and that the pipe line diverted the whole of it in the ordinary stages of water during the irrigating season; and the relief sought is that plaintiffs are entitled to have the water of said stream flow undiminished in its natural channel, that defendant be adjudged to have no rights therein as against the plaintiffs, and no right to divert the water through the pipe line, and that it be enjoined perpetually from diverting the water of said stream or any part thereof from flowing through the lands of plaintiffs, and from using said pipe line.

The foregoing will be sufficient to make the findings intelligible, while the findings will sufficiently disclose the line of defense, aided, if found necessary, by reference to the pleadings during the discussion of the questions presented for decision. The findings are very long, and in some respects not entirely clear, but in substance the court finds that plaintiffs are the owners as tenants in common of the lands described in the complaint, and the dates at which the government title was acquired; that plaintiffs have diverted below defendant's dam all the surplus water over and above the amount diverted and carried away from the stream by defendant; that the amount diverted and used by defendant and its grantors for more than 20 years before the commencement of the action was 125 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure; that the pipe line was constructed substantially upon the line of the flume, and without right, and diverted all the water, and thereby deprived the plaintiffs of the whole and every part of the water, but that "said defendant has not diverted the water of the East Canyon creek in excess of its right thereto"; that in the year 1882 the flume was constructed by the defendant, and the ditch was discontinued, and has never since been used; that "in June, 1892, the pipe line was constructed and the flume abandoned, and ever since disused, and was for the most part destroyed; that a few feet of the old flume is still used immediately at the point of connection to divert the waters from the stream into the head of the pipe line, and by means of the said pipe line, and the dam and portion of the flume aforesaid no greater amount of water during the irrigating season is diverted from the said stream, and carried off, than was formerly done by said flume"; that plaintiffs' cause of action, so far as it relates to the said pipe line, is not barred by the statute of limitations, but, so far as it relates to the right of the defendant to divert the waters of said stream to the extent above stated it is barred.

The judgment perpetually enjoins the water company from using the pipe line, adjudges that plaintiffs own and are entitled to divert all the water of said stream in excess of 125 inches; and, as to the defendant, the judgment is as follows: "It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the Etiwanda Water Company, one of the defendants herein, is the owner of the right to maintain the dam and flume described in the pleadings, and referred to in the findings of fact filed herein, and to divert the waters of East Canyon creek thereby, to the extent of one hundred and twenty-five inches, measured under a four-inch pressure; said flume to be maintained substantially upon and along the line on which said pipe line was constructed, and in place of said pipe line; and said dam be maintained at the head of said flume." The appeal is from this part of the judgment. The transcript contains a bill of exceptions setting out the evidence touching the date at which title to the several parcels of land owned by the plaintiffs was acquired from the government, the diversion of the water, and change of place of diversion, etc., as affecting respondent's right to maintain the flume and dam by which the judgment authorizes the water to be diverted. There was no motion for a new trial, and this appeal is from the judgment, which was not entered until more than seven months after the findings were filed; and it is now contended by respondent that the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions cannot be looked to upon this appeal, inasmuch as the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment.

Under section 336 of the former practice act, the time for appeal ran from "the rendition of the judgment"; and the "rendition" of the judgment is held to be its announcement by the court, and entry upon the minutes of the clerk, or the filing of the findings and order for judgment. Thomas v. Anderson, 55 Cal. 45; Schurtz v. Romer, 81 Cal. 247, 22 Pac. 657; Painter v. Painter, 113 Cal. 375, 45 Pac. 689. Section 939, Code Civ. Proc., changed the time for appeal from the judgment so as to run from the entry of the judgment; and, under this provision, it is held that an appeal from a judgment will not lie until after the judgment is entered, and, if taken before, will be dismissed. Lorenz v. Jacobs, 53 Cal. 25; McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519; Home of Inebriates v. Kaplan, 84 Cal. 488, 24 Pac. 119; and many other cases. The same section (939) provides, however, as follows: "But an exception to the decision or verdict, on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment, unless the appeal is taken within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment." And it is held that the word "rendition," as here used, must be given the same meaning that was given to it under the practice act, and that, therefore, the evidence could not be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, unless the appeal is taken within 60 days after the findings are filed. Schurtz v. Romer, 81 Cal. 247, 22 Pac. 657; Painter v. Painter, 113 Cal. 374, 375, 45 Pac. 689. The result is that a party in whose favor the judgment is "rendered" (by the filing of findings and order for judgment) may effectually prevent a review of the facts upon an appeal from the judgment by delaying its entry for 60 days. These rulings are not inconsistent, as might appear at first glance, but necessarily result from the construction given to the word "rendition" in the former practice act, and retaining that word in the Code provision relating to the review of questions of fact, while changing it to "entry" in other appeals. The amendment of said section (St. 1897, p. 55) has not changed it in this respect. We see no reason for the distinction made by the statute, and commend it to the consideration of the legislature. Appellants suggest that the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions may be looked at to explain or make clear the findings, but we think the findings must speak for themselves. Other questions are made, however, which must be considered.

1. Appellants contend that the findings show that their right to contest defendant's title to the waters of East Canyon creek is not barred by the provisions of sections 316, 318, and 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure, notwithstanding the express finding (No. 26) that it is so barred. This contention is based upon another finding (No. 15), setting out their source of title to the different parcels of land owned by them, and the dates of the patents therefor issued by the state and the United States, some of which were issued within five years before the commencement of this action, and before said pipe line was constructed, said lands being also riparian. Some of these lands were embraced in the grant made by congress to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and as to these the statute began to run from the date of the grant if the water was appropriated before the grant was made, or from the date of the appropriation if it was made afterwards, and not from the date of the patent issued many years later. Jatunn v. Smith, 95 Cal. 154, 30 Pac. 200. As to the lands owned by the plaintiffs which were not within the grant to the railroad, and which were public lands of the United States at the date of the appropriation under which defendant claims the water, the act of congress of 1866 (Rev. St. U. S. § 2339) operated as a grant by the United States of the water so appropriated and diverted, and of the right of way for ditches and canals by which the water is conveyed; and by the next section (2340): "All patents granted, or pre-emptions or homesteads allowed, shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may have been acquired under or recognized by the preceding section;" so that, as to plaintiffs' lands acquired from the United States after the water now claimed by the defendant was appropriated, defendant's right rests upon the statute, and not upon adverse possession. As to plaintiffs' lands in section 16, which were acquired from the state of California, the answer admits that said stream, in its natural course, runs through them; and the court finds that two parcels in that section were granted by the state to plaintiffs' grantor on September 19, 1889, which was less than five years before the commencement of this action. Said section 16 was granted to the state by the United States long before the act of 1866 was passed, granting to settlers upon the public domain the right of appropriating and diverting water, and hence the right of the state as a riparian proprietor was not affected by said act. It is also true that title by prescription or adverse possession cannot be acquired against the state unless it consents to become subject to some statute of limitation. Whether there is such a statute need not be considered, inasmuch as the Civil Code (section 1410 et seq.) confers the right to acquire the use of water flowing in a river or stream, or down a cañon or ravine, by appropriation, without any reservation protecting the riparian rights of the state attached to its lands then remaining unsold; so that, at least from the time the Civil Code took effect, a prior appropriator acquired a good right to the water, to the extent of the appropriation, as against a subsequent purchaser from the state of lands lying upon the stream below the point of diversion. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 374, 376, 10 Pac. 674. As the state could not object to an appropriation made by its permission, it is obvious that a subsequent purchaser from the state could not; and hence the statute of limitations can only have application to acts of the appropriator performed after plaintiffs' title was acquired, whether from the state or the United States.

2. Appellants' second point cannot be sustained. The court found that the flume was constructed in 1882, and used in lieu of an open ditch which had been used long before, and until the construction of the flume, and was not a new or original diversion; while appellants contend that in 1882 the place of diversion was changed so materially as to constitute a new diversion. But such change appears only from the bill of exceptions, and not from the findings, and therefore cannot be considered. Besides, if it were a new diversion lawfully made, as it might be, it would not affect the defense of the statute of limitations.

3. It is further contended by appellants that the flume having been voluntarily abandoned and destroyed by the defendant, and the court having perpetually enjoined the defendant from using the pipe line which it had without right substituted for the flume, the court erred in its conclusion of law and judgment that defendant has the right to maintain said dam and flume, "said flume to be maintained substantially upon and along the line upon which said pipe line was constructed, and in place of said pipe line." It was found by the court that the pipe line was laid "substantially along the course of the old flume"; that it was constructed against the wishes and without the consent of plaintiffs, and without right; and that the defendant claims the right to maintain the dam and pipe line. The pleadings make no reference to the reconstruction of the flume in any event, while the answer alleges that defendant claims the right to maintain the dam and pipe line, and prays judgment that it has the right to do so. Appellant contends that this judgment is outside of the issues, and, if sustained, concludes the parties upon a matter that was not litigated; that the destruction of the old flume and the construction of the pipe line was an abandonment of the flume, and, now that the defendant is enjoined from using the pipe line, it has no right to a judgment that it can go back upon the premises, and reconstruct that which it had voluntarily destroyed. The finding upon this point is as follows: "In the year 1882 the said flume was constructed, connecting with said stream, and the waters were diverted by means of the said dam and flume, and the old ditch was discontinued, and has never since been used; and subsequently, in June, 1892, the pipe line was constructed, and the flume abandoned, and ever since disused, and was for the most part destroyed. A few feet of the old flume is still used immediately at the point of connection, to divert the water from the stream into the head of the pipe line." In respondent's brief it is said: "The respondent, accepting the judgment as a whole, removed the pipe and restored the flume before the appeal was taken. Having no right to the pipe under the decree, its right to maintain the flume is of vital importance." The fact that the "right to maintain the flume is of vital importance" would seem to be a cogent reason why it should not be determined unless it was litigated; nor do we see how it could be litigated unless the question as to that right was in some sufficient way presented by the pleadings. Was it so presented? It is argued by respondent that it is not alleged that the maintenance of the flume from 1882 to 1892 was without right, or that such right had been waived or lost or abandoned; that, therefore, there was nothing for respondent to deny as to the flume, and no right to be asserted. But the flume had been abandoned and destroyed, and the right of respondent to maintain and use the pipe line was assailed by the plaintiff, and issue was joined thereon, the defendant alleging its right to maintain and use it. The plaintiff was not bound to anticipate that the defendant, if defeated as to its right to use the pipe line, would desire to restore or construct a flume, and deny a claim or right that had not been and might not be asserted. The defendant, by its failure to appeal, has acquiesced in the finding and judgment that the pipe line was constructed without right, and that it be perpetually enjoined from using it,—a contingency that might have been anticipated by the defendant, and the question made as to its right to construct a flume to take its place. Besides, it may well be questioned whether there is any finding that will support that part of the judgment appealed from. The court found that the flume had been used from 1882 to 1892; that it was then "abandoned" and destroyed, except a few feet next the dam; and unless it can be said as a conclusion of law that the flume, having once existed, and having been voluntarily destroyed and abandoned, may be rebuilt, and the servitude upon plaintiffs' lands be re-created or renewed at defendant's will, there would seem to be no basis for the judgment appealed from.

In McGuire v. Brown, 106 Cal. 660, 672, 39 Pac. 1060, the plaintiff had a prior right to the water of a certain stream, and to convey it in a ditch across defendant's land. The plaintiff changed the point of diversion some distance up stream, and a new ditch was dug across defendant's land. This, it was held, he had no right to do. The question as to his right to use the old ditch upon being prohibited from using the new one did not appear to have been litigated. This court said: "Whether he abandoned his property in the former ditch, and the right to lead water through the same, is a question which has not been argued here or apparently litigated below, and ought not to be now decided; but the parties should be allowed, if they so desire, to amend or supplement their pleadings, and to have determined in the trial court the issue just suggested, and any other necessary to the adjustment of their relative rights." In the case at bar the question of defendant's right to reconstruct the flume has been argued in the briefs, but as the question was not raised upon the pleadings, and the judgment in that regard being outside of the issues, and apparently not litigated upon the trial, that part of the judgment appealed from should be reversed, with leave to both parties to amend or supplement the pleadings as they may be advised.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, that portion of the judgment appealed from is reversed, with leave to both parties to amend or supplement the pleadings as they may be advised.

AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
CO. et al. (S. F. 1,495.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1898.)

CRIMINAL LAW — BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — SETTLEMENT — WRITTEN NOTICE — SERVICE — ATTORNEY'S CLERK — WAIVER.

1. Under Pen. Code, § 1171, requiring an accused to serve a two-days notice on the district attorney of an intention to apply for a settlement of a bill of exceptions, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1010, declaring that "notices must be in writing," and Pol. Code, § 4480, requiring the Codes to be construed together, the judge is justified in refusing to settle a bill of exceptions, where no written notice was served on the district attorney.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1010, authorizing the service of a written notice on an attorney's clerk, does not enable the clerk to bind the attorney by a waiver of the notice.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Application for a writ of mandate, on the petition of James D. Page, against the superior court of city and county of San Francisco and W. T. Wallace, judge thereof, to compel the settlement of a bill of exceptions. Denied.

J. N. E. Wilson, for petitioner. A. P. Black, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Application for a writ of mandate. The petitioner, having been convicted in the superior court of San Francisco of the crime of embezzlement, was on April 15, 1898, sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for eight years, and on the 23d of April appealed from this judgment and an order denying him a new trial. April 25, 1898, his attorney presented to the judge,

Hon. W. T. Wallace, one of the respondents herein, who had presided at the trial, a proposed bill of exceptions, which he subsequently asked to have settled, and, the judge having refused to comply with his request, the petitioner has applied to this court for a writ of mandate commanding him to settle and sign said bill. In answer to the application the respondent avers as a reason for not having settled the bill, and why the writ should not issue, that the petitioner did not give to the district attorney the notice required by section 1171 of the Penal Code. It was shown by an affidavit of the clerk of the petitioner's attorney that on the 23d day of April, when he served the notice of appeal upon the district attorney, he gave a verbal notice to the clerk of the district attorney, who admitted service of the notice of appeal, that "upon the Monday following, to wit, April 25, 1898, he would on behalf of the defendant present the proposed bill of exceptions to the judge." It was also shown by the affidavit of the assistant district attorney, who had conducted the trial of the petitioner, that no notice was ever given to the district attorney, by or on behalf of the petitioner, that he would present the bill of exceptions for settlement, either on the 25th of April or at any other time, and that it was not known by him, or in the office of the district attorney, that a bill of exceptions would be presented or had been presented to the judge for settlement until several days after the 25th of April, when he was informed of that fact by the judge, and that he then objected to its settlement upon the ground that no notice thereof had been given on behalf of the petitioner; and it is contended on behalf of the respondent that upon this showing the judge of the superior court was not authorized to settle the bill, and that the application for the writ should be denied.

Section 1171 of the Penal Code declares: "When a party desires to have the exceptions taken at the trial settled in a bill of exceptions, the draft of a bill must be prepared by him and presented, upon notice of at least two days to the district attorney, to the judge for settlement, within ten days after judgment has been rendered against him, unless further time is granted by the judge or by a justice of the supreme court, or within that time the draft must be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge." Section 1010, Code Civ. Proc., declares that "notices must be in writing"; and section 4480 of the Political Code declares that "the provisions of the four Codes must be construed as though all of such Codes were parts of the same statute." Under these legislative declarations it must be held that the objection of the district attorney to the settlement of the bill of exceptions was well taken, and that the judge of the superior court was authorized to refuse to settle the bill. People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 422; People v. Hill, 78 Cal. 405, 20 Pac. 862. See, also, Witter v. Andrews (Cal.) 54 Pac. 276.

The case of Van Eman v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 643, 40 Pac. 14, has no application to the facts of the present case. It was there held that the facts before the court showed a waiver by the people of any notice of the proposed settlement of the bill. The draft of the bill had been presented to the counsel for the people several days before the day proposed for its presentation to the judge for settlement, and while it was in his possession he was engaged in preparing amendments thereto, and at his request the hearing upon its settlement was continued several times. In the present case, however, the district attorney did not receive the proposed bill, or know of its preparation or existence, until several days after the day upon which it was presented to the judge. It is not claimed that the clerk of the district attorney to whom the verbal notice was given assumed to accept it as equivalent to a written notice, or that he had any special authority to bind his principal in this mode, and, although the statute authorizes the service of a written notice to be made upon an adverse party by leaving it with the clerk of the attorney at his office, or with a person having charge thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 1011), such person has no implied authority to bind his principal by any agreement in reference to the case. The application for the writ is denied.

FOX v. HALE & NORCROSS SILVER-MIN. CO. et al. (S. F. 683.)

APPEAL—DECISION—RIGHT TO COSTS.

1. A judgment based on two causes of action was reversed as to one, and the case remanded for a new trial as to that cause, with instructions to enter judgment as to the other. A new trial was had, and judgment entered as directed, and also on the other cause, and the same parties again appealed. After the hearing of the appeal, respondent moved in the supreme court to dismiss as to the cause previously reversed, and to affirm as to the other. Held, that the motion should be granted.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, entitling the prevailing party to costs, whether his recovery be for the whole or a part of his claim, appellant is not entitled to costs, where respondent dismisses as to the part of his claim contested in the supreme court, and takes judgment as to the balance.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by M. W. Fox against the Hale & Norcross Silver-Mining Company and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified.

W. F. Herrin, for appellants. W. T. Baggett, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The facts in this case were fully recited in the opinion given upon a former appeal (106 Cal. 369, 41 Pac. 308), and need not be repeated. Under the complaint a recovery is sought from the appellants in behalf of the corporation upon two distinct claims or causes of action,—one for the difference between the amount paid by the corporation for the milling of the ores and the actual cost thereof, and the other for damages sustained by reason of imperfect and fraudulent milling of the ores. At the former trial of the cause, the superior court found that upon the first of these claims the corporation had paid $210,197.50 for milling the ores in excess of the actual cost thereof, and that upon the other cause of action it had sustained damage to the amount of $789,618, and rendered judgment against the appellants for these amounts. Upon the appeal therefrom this court affirmed the decision of the superior court upon the first issue, but reversed its decision upon the second, and remanded the cause, with directions to the superior court to enter a judgment against the appellants herein, as of the date of its former judgment, for the amount of $210,197.50, with interest from that date. Upon the issue presented by the claim for damages sustained by reason of the imperfect and fraudulent milling of the ores, the order denying a new trial was set aside, and the superior court was directed to retry that issue, and make its findings of fact in accordance with the views expressed in the opinion of this court. After the cause had been remanded to the superior court, that court, in obedience to these directions, proceeded to take evidence upon the second of the above issues, and made its findings of fact thereon, in which it found that the corporation had sustained damage in the sum of $417,683 from the fraudulent and imperfect milling of the ores, and thereupon entered judgment against the appellants herein that the plaintiff have and recover from them, for the use and benefit of the corporation, the sum of $210,197.50, with interest thereon from the 11th day of June, 1892, at the legal rate, upon the issue presented by the claim for having paid an excessive price for milling the ores, and the further sum of $417,683, with interest thereon from the 11th day of June, 1892, upon the issue presented by the claim for damages sustained by reason of the imperfect and fraudulent milling of said ores. From the judgment thus entered, the present appeal has been taken. After the hearing of the appeal, the respondent filed herein a release of all claim for damages by reason of the imperfect and fraudulent milling of the ores, and has made a motion that the judgment appealed from be modified by striking out that portion thereof which was rendered upon the issue presented by this claim, or which authorizes a recovery from the appellants of any portion of the damages thus sustained, and that upon such modification the judgment appealed from be affirmed. In reply thereto it is urged by the appellants that, instead of granting the motion, the cause should be remanded to the superior court, and the motion made there.

The motion of the respondent is, however, in accordance with the invariable practice of this court. This court does not reverse a judgment or direct a new trial if it is able from the record to determine the rights of the parties, but will itself make a final determination of these rights by a correction or modification of the judgment. Under its authority to modify any judgment or order appealed from, whenever it is shown, either by the record on appeal, or by the admission or consent of the parties, that their rights can be finally determined here, this court will render its own judgment to that effect, or will direct such action in the court below as in its opinion will best conserve the rights of the parties to the action, without subjecting them to further delay or expense. This rule is followed, whether the error is found upon an examination of the record (Bank v. Chester, 55 Cal. 49; Woods v. Merrill, 57 Cal. 435), or appears upon the face of the judgment (Union Water Co. v. Murphy's Flume Co., 22 Cal. 621; Foucault v. Pinet, 43 Cal. 136), or is confessed by the respondent (Atherton v. Fowler, 46 Cal. 320; Paving Co. v. Bagge, 79 Cal. 439, 21 Pac. 855; Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 57, 33 Pac. 786), or when the respondent asks for or consents to a modification (De Costa v. Mining Co., 17 Cal. 613; Muller v. Boggs, 25 Cal. 187; Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 160; Beamer v. Freeman, 84 Cal. 554, 24 Pac. 169). And when, upon an appeal from a judgment, the respondent releases the appellant from that portion of the damages claimed in the action which is involved in the appeal, and withdraws from consideration by the court his right to a judgment upon his claim for such damages, it is proper to direct the court below to modify the judgment appealed from in accordance with such withdrawal. The application of this rule is accentuated in the case of an appeal from a judgment rendered upon two causes of action set forth in the same complaint, where the appellant questions the right of recovery upon only one of them. Whether respondent makes such consent for the reason that he is convinced that he cannot prevail in the action, or, as was suggested in Carpentier v. Gardiner, supra, because he prefers to remit the whole of the damages upon this cause of action, rather than submit to the delay and inconvenience consequent upon a new trial, his motion for a modification of the judgment should be granted.

The release by the respondent of all claim for the damages thus sustained, and his consent that the judgment be modified by striking out that portion thereof which authorizes a recovery upon this issue, has the effect to withdraw from consideration upon this appeal all matters involved in the rendition of this portion of the judgment, and to leave for determination only the judgment rendered upon the other issue presented by the complaint. The judgment of this court upon the former appeal, denying the appellants' motion for a new trial upon the issue presented by the claim for excessive charges paid for milling the ores, and directing that judgment be entered against them for the amount found by the court to be the amount of that excess, was a final determination of the rights of the parties upon that issue; and the action of the superior court in entering such judgment was a compliance with the mandate of this court, and, as its judgment upon this issue is in strict accordance therewith, there is no ground for an appeal therefrom, and this portion of the judgment must be affirmed.

The proposition of the appellants that, if the second cause of action is withdrawn, they are entitled to costs incurred by them upon the second trial, is contrary to the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, subd. 3. The prevailing party is entitled to costs incurred by him, whether his recovery be for the whole or a portion of his claim, or whether his claim be made up of one or several causes of action. The only limitation upon his right to his costs is that he shall recover $300 or over. The right to recover costs is purely statutory, and, in the absence of a statute, no costs could be recovered by either party. By section 1024, Code Civ. Proc., costs are allowed to the defendant only "upon a judgment in his favor." The cause is remanded to the superior court, and that court is directed to modify its judgment herein by striking out those portions thereof which authorize a recovery from the appellants of "the further sum of $417,683, with interest thereon at the legal rate from the 11th day of June, 1892, upon the issue presented by the claim for damages sustained by reason of the imperfect and fraudulent milling of said ores, together with plaintiff's costs disbursed at the former trial, amounting to the sum of $840.40, and the further costs given upon the second trial, amounting to $1,564.50," and also that portion thereof which directs that the plaintiff have execution for the said "further sum of $417,683, with interest thereon at the legal rate from June 11, 1892." As so modified the judgment is affirmed. The costs of this appeal are to be borne by the respondent.

LIFE INSURANCE—FRAUD IN PROCURING APPLICATION—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—EVIDENCE—CONTRADICTION BY PAROL—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—INDORSEMENT TO AGENTS.

1. On an issue whether representations that a certain kind of life insurance policy would be issued on a particular application were fraudulently made, it is unnecessary to directly prove that the agent making the representations belied them to be untrue, where the policy was not procured, and its terms as represented were such that an insurance company doing a legitimate business would in no probability issue it, since in such case fraud might be inferred.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, excluding evidence of the terms of an agreement reduced to writing other than the contents of the writing, but expressly admitting evidence of fraud, does not exclude parol evidence as to a written application for life insurance, couched in terms not readily understood by one not versed in insurance matters, and which was prepared by an agent and solicitor of the insurer, who represented that it called for a different policy than in fact was the case, and which application was not understood by the applicant; since it thus appears to have been made under the influence of fraud.

3. A soliciting agent procured an application for life insurance by fraudulent representations, and obtained a post-dated check in payment of the premium. He indorsed the check to the insurer's general agent, who paid him his commission, and paid the company the net premium, and delivered the policy with the first premium indorsed thereon paid. The general agent agreed with the company to be responsible for payment of the check, and paid the net premium after the insured had refused and returned the policy, and had demanded back the check. The general agent replied that it had become "property of the company, and could not be recalled." Held, that the general agent was not a bona fide purchaser of the check before maturity, but that it belonged to the company, as his and the soliciting agent's principal.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by H. E. Maxson against William Llewelyn and others. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. Affirmed.

Knight & Harpham and G. E. Harpham, for appellant. W. J. Hunsaker, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from the order denying him a new trial. He brought his action against the defendant Llewelyn as maker, and defendant George Larrabee as indorser, to recover upon a negotiable instrument in the form of a check. Larrabee was a special or soliciting agent of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, of which corporation Maxson was the manager for Southern California. The check was given by Llewelyn in payment of the first year's premium upon a life insurance policy to be issued by the company to him. By its terms, the check was made payable upon a day after the date upon which it was agreed the policy should be delivered. Plaintiff pleaded that he was the owner of the check, and that he had purchased it for value before maturity. For answer, the defendant made denial, and set up facts constituting misrepresentation and fraud in the procurement of the check, and showing at least a partial failure of consideration. He also averred that plaintiff took the check with knowledge of these facts. Upon the trial he proved that Larrabee represented to him that his company would issue an exceptionally and peculiarly favorable policy to him for the sake of other business which it hoped thereby to gain. Defendant signed a written application for a policy, and, not understanding its terms, was assured in answer to his question that this particular application would bring the policy agreed upon. Llewelyn thereupon gave his check for $560, payable to Larrabee, but payable upon April 20, 1896. The application was signed and the check delivered upon December 20, 1895. The policy was to follow some time in January, 1896. Larrabee agreed that, if the policy was not as represented, the check would be returned. The policy which was issued was such a policy as was called for by the application, but in essential particulars was a different policy, and one less favorable to the insured, than that which Larrabee had represented. Upon January 20, 1896, the defendant Llewelyn received the policy from the plaintiff, Maxson. He returned it the same day, with a letter stating that the policy was not in accordance with the understood terms. Upon January 23d, Maxson again sent the policy to Llewelyn, and in his accompanying letter said: "I return the policy herewith, and shall hold you for its payment. * * * Your check, application, and receipt for check were all dated December 20th. Application and check were in my hands on the 21st of December, and immediately became the property of the company, and could not be recalled." Llewelyn once more returned the policy, and refused payment of the premium. No evidence whatever was offered showing that Maxson had any actual knowledge of any misrepresentation by Larrabee. Larrabee made default, and was not a witness upon the trial. Upon behalf of Maxson, it was shown that Larrabee presented to him upon December 21st the check and the application for the policy. The application called for a policy such as was regularly issued by the company. Maxson testifies that he gave Larrabee $25 upon account of the check, upon the 21st of December, and a few days thereafter, having satisfied himself of the solvency of the maker, gave him $75 more. About the 6th day of January, he agreed with Mr. Forbes, his superior officer, and the general manager of the company, that he would be responsible for the payment of the premium to the company, and instructed the company to send the policy to him for delivery and collection. It was so sent to him, and by him delivered unconditionally to defendant Llewelyn, with an indorsement showing the payment of the first year's premium. The net amount of the premium, $222, was, in a later settlement and adjustment of accounts between him and the general office, made a charge against him, and settled accordingly. The time when the $222 was thus actually adjusted and settled in the accounts was after plaintiff knew from Llewelyn that he repudiated the contract.

By appellant it is first insisted that the charge of fraud and the evidence in support of it are both insufficient, in that it is not made to appear that, at the time Larrabee made the representations to Llewelyn, he did not believe he could procure such a policy, and that the only testimony upon the point is that such policy was not, in fact, procured. It would in most cases be extremely difficult, and in many cases absolutely impossible, to procure direct evidence of this nature. In all cases it is permissible to prove fraud by circumstances, and in most cases it is the only evidence available. In aid of the direct facts proved, legitimate inferences are permitted to be indulged to establish others not directly in evidence. Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 457; Levy v. Scott, 115 Cal. 39, 46 Pac. 892. Where a man makes a representation in the reasonable belief that it is true, fraud will not be imputed to him if it afterwards be shown to be untrue; but there must be reasonable grounds for his belief. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 880; Kerr, Frauds, p. 57. In this case no belief upon the part of Larrabee, and no reasonable grounds for belief, are shown; while, upon the other hand, the fact that the policy returned was not at all the policy represented, taken with the circumstance that it would have been to the last degree improbable that an insurance company doing business by legitimate methods would ever use such a policy as that represented, are circumstances enough from which the fraudulent character of the representations may be inferred.

Appellant further alleges that, whatever were the parol representations, the agreement of the parties was cast into writing in the application signed by defendant Llewelyn, and that in response to that application the precise policy called for therein was delivered to defendant; but the application itself, prepared by the special agent, was of such a nature as not to be readily understandable, if understandable at all, by one not versed in insurance matters. It seems not to have been understood by the defendant, for he asked specifically whether the application which he sent would bring the correct policy. It thus appears that defendant's signature to the application was procured by misrepresentation and fraud, sufficient to vitiate the transaction. Section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that no evidence may be received of the terms of an agreement which has been reduced to writing, other than the contents of the writing, expressly admits evidence to establish illegality or fraud. In Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222, it is well said: "By the interested or officious zeal of the agents employed by the insurance companies in the wish to outbid each other and to procure customers, they not unfrequently mislead the insured, by a false or erroneous statement of what the application should contain, or, taking the preparation of it into their own hands, procure his signature by an assurance that it is properly drawn, and will meet the requirements of the policy. The better opinion seems to be that, when this course is pursued, the description of the risk should, though nominally proceeding from the insured, be regarded as the act of the insurers. Rowley v. Insurance Co., 36 N. Y. 550. The modern decisions fully sustain this proposition, and they seem to us founded in reason and justice, and meet our entire approval. This principle does not admit oral testimony to vary or contradict that which is in writing, but it goes upon the idea that the writing offered in evidence was not the instrument of the party whose name is signed to it; that it was procured under such circumstances by the other side as estop that side from using it or relying on its contents; not that it may be contradicted by oral testimony, but that it may be shown by such testimony that it cannot be lawfully used against the party whose name is signed to it." The court found that the plaintiff was not a purchaser of the check for value before maturity, and, indeed, that he was not a purchaser at all, but that Larrabee indorsed the check to plaintiff, and plaintiff took it, as the agent of and for the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, and that at the time of the commencement of the action the insurance company was the owner and holder of this check. If there be any substantial evidence in the record supporting this finding, it is determinative of the case in respondent's favor. By appellant it is insisted that all the evidence shows that he was an innocent purchaser of the check, for value, before maturity; that he gave to Larrabee $100 for it; and that he paid the insurance company $222 more. For respondent it is contended that this evidence is all in harmony with the theory that the insurance company, and not the plaintiff, was the owner of the check; that plaintiff, as the superior of Larrabee, paid to him, upon behalf of the company, $100 for his commission, and, on behalf of the company, held the check for collection; that the proved fraud of the agent was the fraud of the principal; and that, by showing that Larrabee's principal was the owner of the check, this action for its collection is as successfully defeated as it would have been had Larrabee himself prosecuted it. In support of this argument, respondent adverts to the admission in plaintiff's letter above quoted. Upon January 23, 1896, plaintiff wrote to Llewelyn that the check upon the 21st of December "became the property of the company, and could not be recalled." This is affirmative evidence from the plaintiff's own lips in support of respondent's position, and against his own contention that he was the purchaser of the instrument. It is evidence sufficient, taken with the other circumstances, to support the finding. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—IMMEDIATE DELIVERY —CHANGE OF POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—JUDGMENT—REVERSAL.

One partner transferred to a creditor of the partnership their stock of merchandise without the knowledge of his partner, who for a month previous had not had anything to do with the affairs of the firm. After the transferring partner had shown the new delivery boy the delivery route, he left the store, leaving it in charge of the purchaser's agent, who had been employed there for a month previous. Held, that under Civ. Code, § 3440, making transfers of personal property unaccompanied by an immediate delivery, and not followed by continued change of possession, fraudulent as to creditors, the evidence was sufficient to show an actual and continued change of possession.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Minnie E. Stratton against John Burr and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Dillon & Dunning, for appellants. H. T. Gordon and J. W. Swanwick, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover the possession or value of certain personal property, alleged to have been wrongfully taken from the possession of the plaintiff by the defendant John Burr, as sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, on the 10th day of August, 1895. The defendant justified the taking of said property under and by virtue of a writ of attachment issued in an action commenced in the superior court of Los Angeles county on the 10th day of August, 1895, by one Gregory Perkins, Jr., against J. J. Stratton and U. G. Stratton, co-partners, doing business under the firm name of Stratton Bros. The answer denies that the taking was wrongful, and alleges that on the 8th day of August, 1895, Stratton Bros. were indebted to various persons in sums of money aggregating $992.50, and that on the 10th day of the month the said creditors assigned their several claims to Gregory Perkins, Jr., who thereupon commenced said action; that, on the said 8th day of August, J. J. Stratton, for the sole purpose of preventing the creditors of Stratton Bros. from attaching said property, and to hinder, delay, and defraud said creditors, without the consent or knowledge of said U. G. Stratton, entered into a secret and fraudulent agreement with Minnie E. Stratton, the plaintiff, under and by virtue of which it was agreed that said J. J. Stratton should transfer to the plaintiff all the property described in the complaint; that thereafter, on the same day, in pursuance of said secret and fraudulent agreement, said J. J. Stratton did sign a bill of sale of said property to the plaintiff, but the same was never delivered, and the pretended sale made in pursuance of said agreement was not accompanied by any delivery or by any change of possession of the things attempted to be so transferred.

The case was tried by the court, without a jury, and the findings were in substance as follows: On August 8, 1895, and for several months prior thereto, Stratton Bros. were co-partners, engaged in the grocery business in the city of Los Angeles, and on that day were indebted to the various persons named in the answer in the aggregate sum of $992.50, and were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,115 for moneys theretofore loaned by her to them. On the same day, said co-partners, for and in consideration of their indebtedness to the plaintiff, executed and delivered to her a bill of sale, whereby they sold and conveyed to her the property mentioned and described in the complaint; and the same was not made for the purpose of defrauding any person, but was executed by them and received by her for the sole and only purpose of paying the amount then owing by them to her. Said sale was accompanied by a delivery and change of possession of the property thereby transferred, and, prior to the sale, Stratton Bros. were in possession of said property. Immediately after the transfer of said property plaintiff took possession of the same, and remained in the possession thereof until August 10th, at which date she was the owner and in the rightful possession of the same. On August 10th, Perkins, as assignee of said creditors, caused said property to be attached by the defendant in proceedings duly instituted and prosecuted to final judgment, under which the same was sold by said sheriff on execution duly issued. The Stratton Brothers were not in possession of said property when attached, and were not then the owners thereof. The value of the property was $900. Upon these findings judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the return of the property, or for the sum of $900, the value thereof, in case a return could not be had, with interest and costs. From that judgment, and an order denying a motion for new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

It is not claimed by appellants that the transfer to the plaintiff was made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of the transferrors or other person, or that there was any actual fraud in the transaction, but the contention is—and this is the only ground urged for a reversal—that the transfer was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, of the things transferred. We do not think the judgment should be reversed on this ground. It has been held by this court in numerous cases that what constitutes an immediate delivery and an actual and continued change of possession is a fact to be determined upon the evidence in each particular case. "The circumstances connected with a transfer of personal property are so varied that it would be impossible to frame a rule applicable to each case, or to determine in advance what acts would be sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute. When the transfer is challenged as fraudulent under this section [section 3440, Civ. Code], all the circumstances connected therewith are essential to a determination of its character, and it can very rarely be the case that there will not be such a conflict of testimony as to preclude this court from re-examining its sufficiency." Claudius v. Aguirre, 89 Cal. 503, 26 Pac. 1077; Byrnes v. Moore, 93 Cal. 393, 29 Pac. 70; Porter v. Bucher, 98 Cal. 459, 33 Pac. 335. Every intendment is in favor of a judgment of a court of record, and, until the contrary is made clearly to appear, the appellate court is bound to suppose that it was based upon proper evidence. Grewell v. Henderson, 7 Cal. 291. In view, therefore, of the circumstances shown in this case, we think it cannot be said that the evidence was insufficient to justify the court below in determining as a fact that the transfer to the plaintiff was accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual change of possession, which continued until the property was seized by the defendant as sheriff.

It appears that, when the transfer was made, U. G. Stratton had had nothing to do with the business of the store for more than a month, and that, immediately after the transfer, J. J. Stratton left the store, and after that had nothing to do with its business, except that on the morning of that day he went around with the newly-employed delivery boy, and showed him the route for delivering goods to customers, and on the morning of the next day went again with the boy, and showed him another part of the route. Plaintiff's husband had been employed in the store as clerk and assistant to J. J. Stratton for about a month, and after the transfer he took charge of its business, and had full control and management of its affairs, as the agent and employé of his wife. The case is in many respects similar to that of Ford v. Chambers, 28 Cal. 13, where, as stated in the syllabus, it was held: "If a merchant, having a stock of goods in his store, and engaged in a retail trade, with clerks in his employ, makes a sale in good faith of his entire stock in trade to a creditor, in payment of indebtedness and for a fair price, and the creditor immediately goes into the store, takes entire control of the business, and proceeds to take an inventory, and also to retail the goods to customers, with the assistance of the clerks of the vendor, this constitutes an actual and continued change of possession, and the sale is valid as against the creditors of the vendor, although there has been no formal discharge of the clerks of the vendor, and rehiring of them by the vendee." We advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re HEALY'S ESTATE. (Sac. 482.)<sup>1</sup>
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1898.)
ADMINISTRATORS—RIGHT TO LETTERS—PETITION—CONTEST—INTEREST—APPEAL—ABUSE OF DISCRETION—REVIEW.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1374, providing that any person interested may contest a petition for administration, the public administrator, being interested in the right to letters, is a person "interested."

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1379, providing that administration "may be granted" to a person not otherwise entitled, at the written request of the persons entitled, reposes a discretion as to the granting of such request in the court.

3. Where the court, in granting letters of administration to a public administrator, found that the appointment of a petitioner for letters on the nomination of the next of kin, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1379, providing that letters "may be granted" to a person nominated by the person entitled, was not to the best interest of the estate, and the evidence on which the finding was made was not in the record, it cannot be said that the discretion so exercised was abused.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; F. A. Kelley, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Matthew Healy, L. Abrahams petitioned for letters of administration, and J. W. Hosselkus, public administrator, also petitioned. On hearing of both petitions together, Abrahams' petition and his motion to dismiss the contest of the public administrator were denied, and the latter was appointed. Abrahams appealed. Affirmed.

Spencer & Raker, for appellant. Goodwin & Goodwin, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is the appeal of L. Abrahams from the order denying his petition for letters of administration upon the estate of Matthew Healy, deceased, and granting letters to another petitioner, J. W. Hosselkus, public administrator. The only relations of the deceased living in California are Uity and James McCabe and their married sister, all children of a deceased sister of the intestate. Uity and James, being of lawful age, and of the next of kin, were entitled to letters as belonging to the seventh class enumerated in section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They did not themselves apply for letters, however, but nominated and requested the appointment of Abrahams, the appellant herein. He petitioned as their nominee. Thereafter Hosselkus entered a contest to Abrahams' petition, and at the same time filed a petition of his own asking for letters. The McCabes, in turn, contested the petition of Hosselkus. The petitions and contests were heard together. Abrahams moved the dismissal of Hosselkus' contest, upon the ground that he was not a party interested, within the meaning of section 1374 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the motion was denied. The outcome of the hearing was the order appealed from.

The public administrator is the eighth in order of the persons and classes of persons entitled to letters of administration, under section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and he is "a person interested," within the meaning of section 1374 of the same Code. The language of the latter section indicates that the interest mentioned therein is an interest, not alone in the estate, but as well an interest in the question, whose is the right to letters of administration upon the estate. Any one asserting a right to administer may appear in such a contest. This is a different interest from that which is contemplated in section 1307, Code Civ. Proc., concerning contests over wills. There, obviously, the interest is an interest in the estate, either as heir at law or devisee. In such a contest, of course, the public administrator is not a party interested. In re Hickman, 101 Cal. 609, 36 Pac. 118. Though the question has never been directly presented for adjudication, it has always impliedly been held in accordance with the foregoing view. Thus, in Re Muersing's Estate, 103 Cal. 585, 37 Pac. 520, the nominee of the nonresident father was allowed to contest the application of the public administrator for letters. Assuredly, the nominee of the nonresident father is not a person interested in the estate. In Re Connors' Estate, 110 Cal. 408, 42 Pac. 906, the public administrator unsuccessfully contested the application of the father for letters; and in Re Eggers' Estate, 114 Cal. 464, 46 Pac. 380, the same official successfully contested the application of a relative of deceased, who was not entitled to a distributive share of his estate.

Appellant next contends that, as the McCabes' right to administer was admittedly superior to that of the public administrator, to their nominee passed the same superior, absolute, legal right, precisely as it passes to the nominee of the surviving husband or wife under subdivision 1, § 1365, Code Civ. Proc. Such right of nomination in the first instance as any other person than the surviving husband or wife may possess is drawn from section 1379, Code Civ. Proc., which declares: "Administration may be granted to one or more competent persons, although not otherwise entitled to the same, at the written request of the person entitled, filed in the court." The power to procure a revocation of letters, and the appointment of a nominee after letters have been issued to one not in the first five classes enumerated in section 1365, Id., is accorded to the members of those five classes and to their nominees by section 1383, Id. But it is here to be noted that the members of class 7, to which the McCabes belong, are not empowered to nominate under section 1365, Id., nor to secure a revocation of letters under section 1383, Id. Their rights, then, are wholly embraced within section 1379, Id., upon the construction of which this question must depend. This section has formed a part of the law of the state since 1850. St. 1850, p. 381. It was section 66 of the former practice act. It was construed in Re Carr's Estate, 25 Cal. 585, and there held to apply only in cases where a vacancy in the administration existed. In view of the well-settled law that the re-enactment of a statute is a legislative adoption of its known construction (Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 356; In re Baker, 55 Cal. 303; Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 591, 31 Pac. 915), some difficulty would be experienced in avoiding the conclusion that when section 66 of the practice act was re-enacted as section 1379, Code Civ. Proc., the legislature meant it to apply only in the case of a vacancy arising during administration. But, giving a most liberal construction, and holding that in a case like the present a vacancy may be said to exist, it still remains to be considered whether the right of the McCabes to nominate under section 1379 is absolute, or whether a discretion in the matter of the appointment is conferred upon the court. By the appellant, as has been said, it is contended that the right is absolute; and by the respondent it is insisted that, while the court may not arbitrarily refuse to consider the application of such a nominee, the right of the nominee to appointment is not absolute, but the court may exercise a discretion in the matter which will not be reviewed, except for abuse. In Re Morgan's Estate, 53 Cal. 243, the married niece of the deceased nominated and requested the appointment of E. J. Croly as administrator. The public administrator filed a contest, and at the same time petitioned for letters for himself. This court said the fact of Croly's recommendation by the next of kin, under section 1379 of the Code of Civil Procedure, did not give him any preference over the public administrator for two reasons: First, because the next of kin were married women; but, second, continued the court: "Had it been otherwise in this respect, and had the next of kin been laboring under no such disability, their petition requesting the appointment of Croly was addressed to the discretion of the probate judge. It did not operate to supersede the claim of the public administrator otherwise established under the statute to receive letters of administration, and, it not appearing that the probate court in refusing to appoint Croly has abused the discretion confided to it in terms by the statute, the order will not be disturbed." In Re Allen's Estate, 73 Cal. 581, 21 Pac. 426, the construction of the section of the Code thus declared in Re Morgan's Estate is adverted to and approved. In Re Dorris' Estate, 93 Cal. 611, 29 Pac. 244, section 1379, Code Civ. Proc., is again considered, and the same construction put upon it. The opinion first assigns reasons why a right absolute (if a fit person be named) is conferred upon the nominee of the surviving husband and wife, under section 1365, Id., and as to the other classes it proceeds: "Hence they are only entitled to nominate when they are the persons entitled to administer, and then the nomination is submitted to the discretion of the court, which may, if there is good reason for so doing, refuse to confirm the nominee, and appoint the person next entitled." In Re Bedell's Estate, 97 Cal. 339, 32 Pac. 323, the section was again under consideration. It is said that the obvious purpose of the section is to give one entitled to administration the power to select some competent person to discharge the duties of the office, and that to hold that his request is not to be considered, when resisted by one belonging to a class lower in rank, would be to confine the selection to some person falling within the class immediately after his own. But, still emphasizing the fact that in such cases the appointment is addressed to the discretion of the court, it is said: "The provision in this section, being general in its terms, and having no qualifications except the conditions named therein, must be construed as giving to the court the discretionary power to grant administration to any competent person who otherwise would not be entitled thereto at the written request of a person who would be so entitled."

The evidence adduced upon the hearing is not before us. The court made findings, and among them gave the particulars of a single specific transaction from which it found that petitioner Abrahams was wanting in integrity in the discharge of trusts confided to him. This finding is assailed. Its sufficiency need not be considered. Elsewhere the court declared that it was to the best interest of the estate that the public administrator should be appointed, and, as the evidence upon which the conclusion was reached is not before us, it may not be said that the court abused its discretion in so determining. The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

HUTCHINSON et al. v. BROWN, Secretary of State. (S. F. 1,646.)

POLITICAL CONVENTIONS—NOMINATIONS.

Where a convention of a political party is regularly called and organized, its nominees, and not those of a convention made up of a minority of the delegates, who withdrew from the regular convention, are entitled to have their certificates filed by the secretary of state, though the delegates violate pledges, and disregard the advice of the executive committee, in that it nominates certain men who do not belong to the party, and makes a bargain by which some of its nominees are to retire in favor of the nominees of other parties.

In bank. Application by E. L. Hutchinson and another for mandamus to L. H. Brown, secretary of state. Writ granted.

E. S. Van Meter, E. A. Bridgeford, Stephen M. White, and Garret W. McEnerney, for petitioners. Thomas V. Cator, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an original proceeding in mandamus to compel the secretary of state to file a certificate of nomination presented by E. L. Hutchinson and F. L. Gregory, claiming to be chairman and secretary of the People's party state convention, and to compel him to strike from the files of his office another certificate of nomination presented by D. T. Fowler, as chairman, and Carlton H. Johnson, as secretary, of a People's party convention which is alleged to have been an illegal and pretended assemblage, not entitled to assume the name or exercise the powers of the People's party. There is no dispute as to the facts of the case, and those which we deem material may be very briefly stated: The People's party is a regular political organization, which at the general election of 1896 polled more than 3 per cent. of the vote of the state. For more than two years it has had regularly chosen and organized state and county central committees, and a state executive committee, which exercises full powers when the state central committee is not in session. In May, 1898, the executive committee regularly issued a call for a state convention to be held at Sacramento on the 12th of July, and made an apportionment of delegates to the different counties. Pursuant to this call the convention met and was duly organized on the day named, all but 14 of the counties of the state being represented by delegates. Among other preliminary steps in the organization of the convention was the appointment of a conference committee "to counsel with other political reform forces with a view of political union." This committee, after consultation with a committee of Democrats and another committee of Silver Republicans, agreed upon a plan of fusion, which was reported to the convention and has been fully carried out, though it was never formally adopted. The plan of fusion was, in brief, to divide the state and district offices among the three parties according to a certain schedule of apportionment. To effect this object, the People's party convention was to nominate a full ticket, but the nominees for those offices allotted to the Democrats and Silver Republicans were to place their resignations at the disposal of the conference committee, with the understanding that, if the other party conventions thereafter to be held should conform their action to the plan of fusion, then such nominees should be withdrawn, and the nominees of the Democrats and Silver Republicans substituted. Before this plan was reported to the convention, James G. Maguire, a Democrat, had been nominated for governor; and, although that was an office allotted to the Democrats in the plan of fusion, it was excepted from the arrangement for withdrawing candidates in favor of the nominees of the other parties. In other words, Judge Maguire was to be the Populist candidate for governor, whatever happened, provided only he would accept the nomination. As soon as Judge Maguire was nominated a minority of the convention, protesting against the action of the majority, withdrew and organized another convention in another room. Of about 160 delegates actually present, 53 participated in the new organization. The remaining delegates went on and nominated a full ticket, appointed managing committees, etc., and adjourned. The minority convention, after effecting an organization, also nominated a full ticket, appointed committees, and adjourned. Hutchinson and Gregory were chairman and secretary of the original convention, and Fowler and Johnson chairman and secretary of the rival convention organized by the minority. Each set of officers presented to the respondent certificates containing lists of the nominees of their respective conventions. He filed that of the minority convention, and refused to file that of the majority convention. This proceeding has been instituted to compel him to reverse his action.

The law governing the case is found in the Political Code (section 1185 et seq.), as construed by this court in a number of cases which we have had occasion to consider. It was determined in McDonald v. Hinton, 114 Cal. 484, 46 Pac. 870, that a political party can be represented by but one convention, and, in case the chairmen and secretaries of two rival conventions present certified lists of nominees for filing, the officer whose duty it is to file such certificates should determine which of the two rival conventions really represents the party, and file its certificate, rejecting the other, notwithstanding it may be formally correct and sufficient. A question was discussed in that case which the court found it unnecessary to decide, viz. whether the decision of the registrar (or in this case the secretary of state) is final, or subject to review and correction by the courts. In this case that question cannot be avoided, but it will not require any particular examination, since both parties to the controversy concede that the court not only may, but must, determine, upon the admitted facts, whether, as matter of law, the secretary should have filed the certificate which he rejected, and should have refused to file the certificate which he accepted. It is conceded that both certificates are regular in form, duly authenticated, and that all the conditions of the statute relative to their presentation have been fully complied with. The only question is which emanated from the regular and authorized convention of the party. Upon this point we are satisfied that the respondent erred in his conclusion. It is clear that the full convention was regularly called and organized; and that only about one-third of its members withdrew after the nomination of Judge Maguire. The withdrawal of a minority of the delegates present did not dissolve the convention, or destroy its identity. It remained, as before, the People's convention, with full authority to nominate a ticket to be voted for at the election. The fact—if it be a fact—that some or all of the delegates who remained were violating pledges or sacrificing party interests in nominating Judge Maguire and adopting the plan of fusion presents a question with which neither the secretary of state nor the court has the slightest concern. That is a matter to be settled between them and their constituents. Delegates to political conventions are, no doubt, trustees, in a large sense of the word, but they discharge a trust with which the courts do not meddle. They obey or disobey instructions as they see fit, and the only remedy for their disobedience is the censure of the people, expressed at the polls. This is true, at least so far as the ballot law is concerned. All the filing officer has to determine is whether the certificate offered for his acceptance emanates from the regular convention of the party. It is no concern of his whether the delegates to the convention have nominated members of their own party, or of other parties; whether the nominees are there to stay, or to be taken down. There is nothing unlawful in fusion. The statute does not forbid it, or attempt to do so, and a statute which did attempt it would be of very doubtful validity. It is for the conventions of different party organizations to decide for themselves whether their principal objects are so far common and paramount over minor issues as to justify them in uniting upon a list of nominees drawn from all parties so agreeing. And, even if they had nothing else in common except a desire to fill the offices, there is no power to prevent them from combining for that object.

One objection of the respondent is that, by the call of the executive committee, the People's party convention was assembled for the purpose of nominating a full ticket, and, of course, a full ticket of Populists, and that if there was to be any fusion, or joint action with other parties, it was only to be the action prescribed by the executive committee, and put forth as part of the call for the convention. As to this, it is enough to say that, according to universal party usage in California, the central or executive committee of a party has no function, after one election is over, except to preserve the organization, and take the necessary preliminary steps for the assembling of the next convention. It has no right to forestall or in any manner limit or curtail the powers of the convention which it calls. The convention, when assembled, is the depository of all party power, and so continues until it adjourns, after which a new committee comes into power for the mere purpose of subserving the party interests pending the election, and of doing thereafter such things as may be provisionally necessary to keep up the regular organization, and call another convention. It is therefore of no consequence what resolutions the executive committee chose to couple with its call for the People's party convention. They were merely advisory, and as advice were worth just what the convention chose to rate them at.

This case is not like the Michigan cases upon which the respondent relies to sustain his action. The People's convention did not adjourn, and its members unite with members of other conventions in the formation of a new convention, whereby its identity would have been destroyed. It continued its session by itself, and by itself nominated a full ticket as a Populist ticket. It proceeded regularly, and its action cannot be questioned because it nominated men who were not Populists, and made a bargain by which some who were Populists were to retire in favor of Democrats or Silver Republicans. It may be true that the result is the same as it would have been if the three conventions had fused. But the result is not what the ballot law is concerned with. What it demands is not a ticket of Simon-pure Populists, but only a ticket certified by the chairman and secretary of a regular Populist convention. The character and politics of the candidates are not the subject of inquiry for the secretary of state, but only for the voters. There is a wide difference between a fusion convention and a fusion ticket. A fusion convention represents no particular party. A fusion ticket may represent several parties, but is none the less entitled to a place on the official ballot for that reason. Several conventions holding separate sessions do not lose their identity by selecting the same set of nominees. The effect may be to cause difficulty at the next election, from the impossibility of ascertaining the vote of the respective parties, but that is a difficulty to be dealt with when we come to it. For the present we have no doubt that the certificate presented by Hutchinson and Gregory is the one that should have been filed, and consequently that the other certificate presented by Fowler and Johnson should have been rejected. The same observations apply to the certificates of nominations of district officers and members of congress. It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

Ex parte OVEREND. (Cr. 455.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 30, 1898.)

WITNESSES—CONTEMPT—IMPRISONMENT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1219, authorizing an imprisonment for contempt for refusing to do an act which is yet in the power of the person to perform, until the act is performed, does not justify such an imprisonment of a witness who refuses to testify in the trial of a case, which is discontinued immediately after such refusal.

In bank. Habeas corpus on the application of Alfred Overend. Prisoner discharged.

Guilfoyle & Quigley, for petitioner. A. P. Black, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. On the 15th day of June, 1898, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, sitting with a jury impaneled for the purpose, one Minnie Campbell was being tried upon a charge of having obtained money by false pretenses from the petitioner herein, Alfred Overend. On the forenoon of that day, the petitioner herein, Overend, was called as a witness for the prosecution on the said trial, and declined and refused to answer certain questions asked him by the prosecution, upon the ground that the answers would tend to convict him of a felony. The first question which he refused to answer upon that ground was, "Do you know this defendant, Minnie Campbell?" Other questions were asked him, such as, "Do you know the co-defendant, Lewis?" and, "Did you meet the defendant Minnie Campbell and William Lewis, in this city and county, on the 6th day of December, 1897?" The petitioner refused to answer these questions, and refused to give any further testimony in the case, upon the ground above stated. Thereupon the court adjudged him guilty of contempt for not answering the said questions, and, as a punishment, ordered that he be committed to the county jail until 2 o'clock of that day, and also pay a fine of $500. The further hearing of the case was continued until 2 o'clock of that day. At 2 o'clock the petitioner was again on the stand, and was asked similar questions, which he declined to answer on the same ground; whereupon he was again adjudged guilty of contempt, and punished by a fine of $500, and imprisoned in the county jail until 10 o'clock next morning. On the next day, June 16th, the trial of the case was resumed; and the petitioner, being put on the stand, again was asked questions similar to those propounded on the day previous, and again declined to answer upon the same ground; whereupon the court again adjudged the petitioner guilty of contempt for not answering the questions, and adjudged that in punishment thereof he suffer imprisonment in the county jail for a term of five days, and pay a fine of $500; and, in addition thereto, the following judgment was also entered: "I further adjudge that as it appears to me that it is still in your power to obey the order that you answer these questions, that you be further imprisoned in the county jail until such time as you shall submit to answer. The statute provides, when the contempt consists in the omission to perform an act which is yet in the power of the person to perform, he may be imprisoned until he has performed it; and I specify in this judgment those questions as the questions that you must answer, and must remain imprisoned until you do submit to answer. That is the judgment of the court, and you will be taken into custody by the sheriff." Thereupon the court said: "Now, in this case of Minnie Campbell it appears to the court that owing to the refusal of this witness to answer questions about matters which are indispensable to be proved by the state—by the prosecution—in order to submit their case to the jury for decision, that owing to his persistent refusal to answer, it has become impossible, gentlemen, for you to render a verdict in this case; and therefore an order will be made that owing to this fact,—the refusal of the witness called by the prosecution, one of the prosecution's witnesses, to answer these questions,—and the inability of the prosecution to supply the testimony desired from another source, that it has thereby become impossible for you to render a verdict, and for that reason you are discharged, gentlemen, from the further consideration of this case." Thereupon, over the objection and exception of counsel for the defendant Minnie Campbell, the jury were discharged, and the trial ended; and it was ordered that the said Minnie Campbell be held in custody, and that her trial be reset at a future period.

Petitioner contends that the power of the court to punish him for contempt for not answering the said questions was exhausted by the first orders sentencing him to imprisonment for five days, which time has expired; also, that his claim that answering the questions would tend to convict him of a felony was conclusive; and, moreover, that, if it was within the province of the court to itself determine whether his answering the questions would have that tendency, the main grounds on which the court based its rulings—namely, that it appeared to the court already, "by a certain transcript here on file, and being part of the records in this court, that the witness had heretofore, in this particular case in the examining court, appeared, and there testified in answer to some of these questions, not objecting then at all, but allowing himself to testify fully"; and that "it appears also by the witness' own statement that he has applied to the district attorney, the prosecuting officer of this court, and requested him to discontinue the prosecution of this case"—are untenable; also, that the judgment imposes two distinct punishments for the same offense,—the first under section 1218, and the second under section 1219, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Some of these contentions present interesting questions, but we do not deem it necessary to discuss them, because in our opinion the petitioner must be discharged upon another ground.

The term of imprisonment for five days has terminated; and as the jury in the case of the people against Minnie Campbell has been discharged, and the trial at which the petioner was called upon to testify ended, it is no longer possible for him to testify at that trial, and he cannot be imprisoned indefinitely for the nonperformance of an impossibility. A party can be indefinitely punished for contempt only under section 1219, Code Civ. Proc.; and under that section he can be so imprisoned only when the contempt consists "in the omission to perform an act which is yet in the power of the person to perform." "A party cannot be imprisoned for neglecting or refusing to do what it appears it is out of his power to do. And an order of commitment in such a case is void." Rap. Contempts, par. 115; Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 316. The case at bar comes within the principles stated in Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 175, and In re Hall, 10 Mich. 210. As was stated in the latter case, a commitment "would not authorize an imprisonment when the person could not have an opportunity to purge his contempt by answering." In the present case the discharge of the jury and the discontinuance of the trial at which the petitioner was called as a witness left no opportunity for him to purge his alleged contempt. The occasion for enforcing a proceeding against him under section 1219 had passed, and he was subject only to punishment for the past alleged contempt under section 1218. The petitioner is discharged from custody, and the sheriff is directed to release him.

TIBBET v. SUE et al. (L. A. 426.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1898.)

ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT — AMOUNT OF CLAIM—SUFFICIENCY OF SURETIES—AMEND-MENTS—DISCHARGE.

1. An affidavit in attachment stating the claim to be $500, "and interest and attorney's fees," is sufficient to sustain the writ, at least to the extent of $500.

2. A writ of attachment may be issued for a less amount than the demand set forth in the complaint.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 539, requires an undertaking, with "sufficient" sureties, as a condition to the issuance of an attachment writ. Section 1057 provides that, where an undertaking is required by any law of the state, the officer taking it must require the sureties to accompany it with an affidavit that they are each residents and householders or freeholders within the state, and are each worth the sum specified in the undertaking. Held, that an undertaking on attachment which fails to show that the sureties are freeholders or householders warrants the discharge of the attachment on application.

4. An undertaking in attachment which is irregularly issued cannot be amended, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing for amendments to pleadings or proceedings in furtherance of justice, since section 558 expressly provides that in such cases, on application, the attachment must be discharged.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by George A. Tibbet against Tom Sue and others. From an order refusing to discharge a writ of attachment, defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. J. Hunsaker, for appellants. J. E. Patton, R. A. Ling, and McKinley & Graff, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is taken from an order refusing to discharge a writ of attachment. The motion to discharge the writ was based upon three grounds: (1) The amount of plaintiff's demand is not stated in the affidavit for attachment; (2) the writ of attachment does not state the amount of plaintiff's demand in conformity with the complaint; (3) the undertaking on attachment does not show that the sureties are freeholders or householders.

1. The affidavit for the writ of attachment states that the "defendants in said action are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of five hundred dollars and interest and attorney's fees, money of the United States." The affidavit directly alleges the specific indebtedness of $500, and to that extent, at least, will sustain the writ of attachment.

2. It is claimed that the amount stated in the writ of attachment must be the same as the amount of the demand set out in the complaint. The writ of attachment should not be issued for an amount in excess of the demand set forth in the complaint. But it may be for an amount less than the demand set forth in that pleading. De Leonis v. Etchepare (Cal.) 52 Pac. 718.

3. The undertaking on attachment does not show the sureties thereon to be either householders or freeholders. Section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Before issuing the writ the clerk must require a written undertaking on the part of the plaintiff in a sum not less than two hundred dollars, and not exceeding the amount claimed by the plaintiff, with sufficient sureties, to the effect," etc. Section 1057 of the same Code declares: "In any case where an undertaking or bond is authorized or required by any law of this state, the officer taking the same must, except in the case of such a corporation as is mentioned in the next preceding section, require the sureties to accompany it with an affidavit that they are each residents and householders or freeholders within the state, and are each worth the sum specified in the undertaking or bond over and above all their just debts and liabilities, exclusive of property exempt from execution." Reading these two sections together, it is plain that the clerk has no authority to issue a writ of attachment unless the request is accompanied by an undertaking, with an affidavit attached setting forth the facts demanded by section 1057. Such affidavit must accompany the undertaking, for the law demands it. That the sureties upon the undertaking are either householders or freeholders is a material part of the affidavit. It is probably the most material fact demanded by the affidavit. If the affidavit may omit this fact, then the entire affidavit goes for naught, and an undertaking without any affidavit of the sureties whatever would support the writ, even as against a motion by the defendant to discharge it. A writ issued upon an undertaking unaccompanied by an affidavit of the sureties, as required by said section 1057, is irregularly and improperly issued, and should be discharged upon application.

Respondent asks the privilege of amending the undertaking, if it be held defective by this court. For such relief he invokes section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, wherein amendments are allowed to pleadings or proceedings in furtherance of justice. In speaking as to an application to discharge a writ of attachment, the Code says: "If upon such application it satisfactorily appears that the writ or attachment was improperly or irregularly issued, it must be discharged." Code Civ. Proc. § 558. This section is specific, and expressly directed to the subject of attachments. It must be held to control and limit the general provisions of the aforesaid section 473. The lawmaking body has declared what shall be the action of the court under the circumstances here presented, and such action demands that the writ should be discharged. It is said in Winters v. Pearson, 72 Cal. 554, 14 Pac. 304, that the affidavit on attachment is not amendable. The undertaking upon attachment stands upon the same ground. For the foregoing reasons the order is reversed.

FOREIGN JUDGMENTS—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS—APPEAL.

1. In an action on a judgment rendered in Texas foreclosing a mortgage, it appeared that a grantee of the mortgagor, by deed subsequent to the mortgage, was not before the court as a party defendant. Held, that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 16, providing that a court acting as such is presumed to act in the lawful exercise of its jurisdiction, such judgment must be assumed to be valid.

2. In an action on a judgment recovered in another state, the statutes of such state were put in evidence for the purpose of showing the validity of such judgment. Held, that, in the absence of the statute from the record, it must be assumed that the court drew the correct conclusion as to the validity of the judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by A. H. Cummings against John J. O'Brien on a judgment. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse F. Waterman, for appellant. Goodrich & Garrison, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Cummings sued O'Brien in one of the district courts of the state of Texas to foreclose a mortgage on lands situated in that state, which mortgage was given by O'Brien as security for payment of his promissory note to Cummings. Intermediate the execution of the note and mortgage and the commencement of that action, O'Brien conveyed the lands affected to a third person, of which conveyance Cummings, it seems, had notice. Such third person was not made a party to said action. Said district court, however, had jurisdiction of causes of that nature, and O'Brien himself appeared by attorney in the case. Judgment was rendered in Cummings' favor, and thereunder a sale of the land was made. The proceeds were insufficient to discharge the debt, and by the terms of the judgment O'Brien was personally liable for the balance. The present action in our courts is on said judgment to recover the amount of such deficiency. At the trial, as appears from the record here, the plaintiff, having made proof of the judgment, etc., in the Texas court, then "introduced in evidence the Revised Statutes of Texas to show the regularity of the proceedings had and taken in the case while pending in the said district court, and to rebut the presumption that the laws of Texas were the same as the laws of California." The superior court rendered judgment for plaintiff, and afterwards denied a new trial.

On appeal the only point is made that the judgment of the court in Texas was wholly void, for the reason that the grantee of O'Brien by deed subsequent to the mortgage was not before that court as a party defendant. It is provided by section 1963, subd. 16, Code Civ. Proc., that a court, acting as such, whether in this state or any other, is presumed to act in the lawful exercise of its jurisdiction. If, notwithstanding this provision of our statute, we ought to presume, when no evidence on the subject appears, that the law of Texas is the same as that of California, in determining the validity of a judgment of that state drawn in question here, and allowing (though without deciding) that a judgment in an action of foreclosure, to which the holder of the legal title is not a party, would, by the law of this state, be a nullity, still we cannot disregard the fact that the law of Texas was in evidence before the court below, nor indulge the presumption that the evidence was ignored by the court. It was competent to prove as a fact the law of that state on which depended the obligation of the former judgment, though the effect of the law, when proved, was a legal question for the court. The statutes of Texas were received in evidence for that purpose. True, their tenor is not disclosed by the record, but we must assume, in the absence of any further showing, that the trial court drew the right inference therefrom, viz. that the former judgment was rendered by said district court of Texas in the due exercise of its jurisdiction under the law as thus proven, and was, in all respects, valid. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

APPEAL—UNDERTAKING—PROOF OF AGENCY—TRIAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Where the notice of appeal specifies that it is taken from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, and the undertaking is one on appeal from the judgment only, the appeal from the order will be dismissed.

2. Testimony that witness acted as agent for another in a given transaction is competent proof of the fact.

3. On an issue whether a written contract was drawn up between plaintiff and defendant, where there was the positive evidence of two witnesses that such a contract was drawn, a refusal to permit defendant to show that a book containing a record of such transactions, kept by him, did not show an entry of a certain date of the drawing of such contract, was not reversible error, it appearing that defendant did not offer to prove that the book contained no entry in regard to the contract.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Mary McRae, administratrix of the estate of Malcolm McRae, deceased, against the Argonaut Land & Development Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Appeal from order denying new trial dismissed. Judgment affirmed.

Dudley & Buck, for appellant. J. G. Swinerton and J. A. Louttit, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The notice of appeal in this case specifies that it is taken by the defendant from the judgment, and also from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The stipulation of counsel to the correctness of the transcript shows that the undertaking on appeal is from the judgment only, and respondent calls attention to this fact, and objects to a consideration of the appeal from the order denying a new trial. This objection is well taken, and the appeal from the order should be dismissed. The record contains a statement on motion for new trial, which respondent concedes may be regarded as a bill of exceptions on appeal from the judgment; but, as the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment, exceptions to the findings upon the ground that they are not justified by the evidence cannot be considered. Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 1. The only questions for consideration arise upon the rulings of the court upon matters of evidence. This action is prosecuted to recover for services rendered by one W. D. McLaurin for the defendant in reference to a large tract of land owned by it near the city of Stockton, the claim and demand therefor having been assigned by McLaurin to Malcolm McRae, plaintiff's intestate. McLaurin was employed by one George H. Fairbrother, who acted, or assumed to act, as the agent of the defendant. Fairbrother's deposition was taken by the plaintiff, and among other questions put to him by the plaintiff was the following: "During the time you were acting as agent, did you know W. D. McLaurin?" Defendant objected, on the ground that the question assumes the witness was acting as agent. Before this question was put, the witness had, without objection, testified generally, and without reference to McLaurin's employment, that he had acted as agent for the defendant. The question, therefore, assumed nothing, and was entirely proper. It was not an attempt to prove agency, as contended by appellant in its brief, but to show that while acting as agent he knew McLaurin. While the statements or admissions of one, not as a witness, that in a certain transaction he acted as agent for another, is not competent to prove the fact of agency, yet, if he is called as a witness, his testimony, not only that he acted as the agent of the party, but as to the fact of agency, and the nature and extent of his authority, where it rests in parol, is as competent as that of any other witness. Mechem, Ag. § 101, and cases there cited.

It is also contended by appellant that the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the following question put by defendant to its witness Eugene Wilhoit: "Q. Now, look on that record of May 20th, and see whether there is any record of any charge for any work done for that corporation by you?" Fairbrother and McLaurin had each testified that a written contract between McLaurin and the defendant, for McLaurin's employment, was drawn up by Mr. Wilhoit, and Mr. Wilhoit had testified that he had no recollection of it; that he kept a book in which he entered charges for work of this character, and the book shown him covered the period of this transaction. If he had examined the book and testified that no record of it appeared, taken in connection with his testimony to the effect that, if he drew the contract, it should be entered in the book, and that he had no recollection of drawing the contract, it would be competent evidence tending to show that he did not draw it. But the judgment should not be reversed for that reason. We cannot assume that the book would have shown that there was no entry of the drawing of the contract, and, in order to show injury from the error, the defendant should have offered to prove that it contained no entry in regard to it. This was not done; and, besides, if it were admitted that no entry of the transaction existed in the book, the nonexistence of the entry would be wholly insufficient to overcome the positive evidence of two witnesses to the fact that a contract was drawn. A careful business man may conscientiously swear to the correctness of items appearing in his books, but he must be a rash man who, doing a large business,—as Mr. Wilhoit says he did,—will swear that no proper item was ever omitted. Such evidence would be necessarily of a weak and inconclusive character.

It is also contended by appellant that the court erred in excluding a deed and lease offered in evidence by defendant. The record in this regard is so meager and indefinite that we cannot say that the court erred in excluding them. The record is as follows: "Whereupon defendant offered in evidence the deed from defendant corporation to John Boggs, said deed being recorded and dated May 20, 1890." "Defendant also offered in evidence the lease executed by and between John Boggs on May 20, 1890, for five years, of the same land referred to in the deed, the land being the land referred to in this action as the 'Stockton Garden Tract,' and which has been referred to as the land sold by the defendant to Boggs." These offers were made separately, and objections to each were sustained in their order. The offer of the lease does not even show who the lessee was. The deed and the lease bear the same date, and the term of the lease was five years. If the defendant was the lessee, the conveyance would not affect McLaurin's employment, whether it commenced before or after the conveyance; and in support of the ruling we might properly assume that defendant was the lessee. But the testimony of McLaurin shows that about the time of his employment Fairbrother was making a trade of the land to Boggs, and upon cross-examination he said: "By the trade I mean the twelve thousand dollars a year rent to be paid by the Argonaut Land and Development Company to Boggs." The defendant being the lessee of the land, it is apparent that the conveyance did not dispense with or affect the employment of McLaurin, and therefore the evidence offered was immaterial.

No other errors of law are mentioned in appellant's brief, and we find none in the record which would justify a reversal. We advise that the appeal from the order denying a new trial be dismissed, and that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 5, 1898.)

WILLS—CONTESTS—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF —REVOCATION—QUESTIONS OF FACT—FINDINGS—REVIEW.

1. On appeal by proponents of a will from a decree in favor of contestants, evidence introduced by proponents, although objected to by contestants, will be considered as properly received.

2. Where a will legally executed has been offered for probate, the onus is on contestants to prove its revocation.

3. Testator made a will on May 31, 1893, which was inclosed in an envelope by the attorney drawing it. After his death, memoranda in pencil in testator's handwriting were found on the envelope, as follows: "July 4th. Make over." On the other side: "This has not been renewed up to this 15th day of October, 1895. Neglected it, thinking I would sell something." Testator's signatures, written on the margin of each page of the will and at the foot thereof, were canceled by two ink lines drawn through the length of each. On the last page, under the signature of witnesses, testator had written, "Owing to the depreciation in my property, I will make a new will." Some of the clauses were canceled by ink lines drawn the full length of every line and by cross lines extending from top to bottom. Several changes were made in the amount of legacies. Testator repeatedly, and within 15 days of his death, declared to various persons that he had an ironclad will that could not be broken. Held, on a contest, that a conflict of fact as to testator's intent to cancel was presented, and the action of the probate court would not be disturbed.

4. A finding by the probate court that a testator canceled and obliterated his will and his signature thereto and thereon "for the purpose of revoking same," is a sufficient finding of revocation, under Civ. Code, § 1292, providing that a will may be revoked by such acts "with the intent and for the purpose of revoking same."

5. In finding that a will offered for probate was revoked by testator, it is not necessary to find that at such time he was of sound and disposing mind, where his competency was not in issue, and the evidence clearly showed that the revocation was effectuated while he was mentally firm.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Petition by C. A. Buss for the probate of the will of Marcus L. Olmsted, deceased. From a judgment refusing a probate, proponent and others appeal. Affirmed.

Parrish & Mossholder, for appellants.
Haines & Ward, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the superior court refusing probate to an instrument offered as the last will and testament of Marcus L. Olmsted, deceased. C. A. Buss is the proponent of the will, and he, with Martha Buss, Solon C. Buss, Ella M. Stockton, and others, stand as defendants to the contest. The contestants, occupying the position of plaintiffs in this proceeding, are the brothers and sister of the deceased. By the evidence it was disclosed without conflict that the document offered for probate was duly executed by Marcus L. Olmsted as his will upon May 31,

1893. At that time his attorney indorsed on an envelope the words, "Last will and testament of Marcus L. Olmsted. May 31, 1893," and delivered it to Olmsted, with the will inclosed, and with no other writing thereon. Olmsted died upon January 15, 1896. At the time of his death, and for a year immediately preceding it, he resided with Mrs. Martha Buss, who kept house for him, and who is one of the defendants seeking the admission of the instrument to probate. She is likewise the mother of the proponent, C. A. Buss, and of the co-defendant Solon C. Buss. Upon Sunday, January 19, 1896, after the burial of Olmsted, Solon C. Buss met by appointment Albert Olmsted, a brother of the deceased, and a contestant, and one Ryder, at the house of his mother, Martha Buss, to examine the personal effects of the decedent. Buss, Olmsted, and Ryder went into the bedroom which had been the death chamber, and there Buss, in the presence of the others, opened a trunk with one of a number of keys which had been given to him by his mother. In the trunk were two locked tin boxes. These boxes had belonged to the deceased, and had been kept by him in a closet off his room. After his death they had been locked in the trunk by the housekeeper, Mrs. Buss. The keys had been taken from the pocket of the trousers of the dead man on the evening of or the next day after his death by Solon C. Buss and Albert M. Olmsted, and were by them handed to Mrs. Martha Buss, the housekeeper in charge. With one of the keys so delivered to his mother, Solon Buss testified that he unlocked the tin boxes, and in one of them found the will. When found it was inclosed in the envelope which bore the indorsement of the attorney above set out. After examining and reading the will in the presence of Ryder and Olmsted, Buss retained possession both of the envelope and of the will until they were filed with the clerk of the court. The writing upon the will and upon the envelope, and all the ink and pencil marks upon the will, were there when it was found. The will was inclosed in the original envelope furnished by the attorney, and upon the envelope were certain memoranda in pencil in the handwriting of the testator. Upon one side of the envelope was written, "July 4th. Make over," and upon the obverse side the following: "This has not been renewed up to this 15th day of October, 1895. Neglected it, thinking I would sell something." Upon the face of the instrument itself the lines, interlineations, erasures, cancellations, and new writings of words, phrases, or sentences were very numerous. The most significant of these, however, were the following: Upon the margin of each page of the will the deceased had written his name, and he had also written it as his subscription at the foot of the will. There were thus in all seven of his signatures upon the instrument. Each and all of these were canceled by two ink lines drawn through and across their full length. Upon the last page of the will, and under the signature of the attesting witnesses, appeared in the handwriting of the deceased the following: "Owing to the depreciation in my property, I will make a new will." Some of the clauses in the will were canceled by ink lines drawn the full length of every line of the clause, and by cross lines extending from the top to the bottom. A legacy originally appearing in the typewritten instrument for $2,000 was changed twice. The "two" was canceled by two ink lines drawn through the word, and the word "one" written in ink immediately over it. Again, the word "one" and the word "thousand" were canceled by a double pencil mark drawn through them, and over the word "one" was written in pencil the numeral "500." These identical changes appear more than once in the will. Upon behalf of the proponents of the will, and those in interest with them, it was permitted to be shown, under the objection and exception of the contestants, that upon many occasions after the execution of the propounded instrument the deceased had declared that he had a will, an ironclad will. These declarations were shown to have been made as recently as 15 days prior to his death, when he said to one Mrs. Woodward that he had a will, and that it was all right. Indeed, there is abundant evidence of many such declarations. They were objected to by the contestants as not having been made contemporaneously with the acts of cancellation, as being no part of the res gestæ, and therefore not admissible upon the question of the intent with which the act of cancellation was done; but as the judgment of the court passed in contestants' favor, and as the contestants are not here appealing, their objection to the introduction of this evidence may not be heard, and the question of its admissibility cannot be passed upon. The sole interest which the contestants have is in upholding the judgment, and for the correction of any errors made against them upon the hearing they must prosecute their own appeal. Klauber v. Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 32 Pac. 876. The case must be considered, therefore, upon this appeal, in the light of all the evidence which the record bears.

The mode by which a written will, once executed, may be revoked, is entirely governed by the provisions of the Code. No will, nor any part thereof, may be revoked or altered otherwise than "(1) by a written will or other writing of the testator declaring such revocation or alteration, and executed with the same formalities with which a will should be executed by such testator;" or "(2) by being burned, torn, cancelled, obliterated or destroyed, with the intent and for the purpose of revoking the same, by the testator himself, or by some person in his presence, and by his direction." Civ. Code, § 1292. It is with the revocation recognized by subdivision 2 that this case has to deal. As to the cancellations of clauses upon the face of the will, the striking out of some legacies, and the changes in others, they are to be considered only for the light which they may throw upon the general act of revocation of the whole instrument for which respondents contend. For the revocation contemplated by subdivision 2 two things are essential: First, there must be a sufficient act within the meaning of the statute,—that is to say, an act of burning, tearing, canceling, or otherwise destroying; and, second, that act must be performed animo revocandi, or, as our Code phrases it, it must be performed "with the intent and for the purpose" of accomplishing a revocation. Thus, the mere physical destruction, however complete it may be, is not sufficient, for that may have been occasioned by mistake or fraud, or, as in the case of a testator who, since the making of his will, has become insane, it may be accomplished without any lawful intent whatsoever. Again, the mere intent, without some physical act tending to the destruction of the instrument, and sufficient to fill the requirement of the statute, for very obvious reasons is insufficient, since the law expressly requires the joint union of act and intent. What act of destruction will supply the requirement of the statute is a question much discussed. It is apparent that the destruction may be total or partial. The will, for example, may be wholly burned or totally obliterated, or it may be but partially burned, and still legible. Generally, it may be said that, if the intent to revoke clearly appears, a slight act within the statute will be deemed sufficient. One of the recognized modes of revoking a will is by cancellation. In its primal significance the word means a lattice work. As applied to writings, it means the nullification of a writing by drawing upon its face lines in the form of a lattice work, "criss-cross." Usually, in legal as well as in common acceptance, cancellation is accomplished by the drawing of any lines over or across words with the intent to nullify them. It is a common business practice to cancel negotiable instruments and other written contracts by drawing such lines through the signatures of the makers. Such was the method adopted in this case. It is a well-recognized method, as has been said, and one clearly within the letter and the spirit of the statute.

Where a will legally executed has been offered for probate, the onus is upon the contestants to prove its revocation. This burden the contestants bore, and showed the facts above narrated. From them it appears that the instrument, during the lifetime of the maker, had been in his secure possession; that when discovered it was found by members of the two parties in interest,—by one of the contestants, and by one allied with the proponents; that it was then in the same condition in which it appeared when offered at the hearing, with all the marks of cancellation upon it. From these circumstances alone arise the presumptions—First, that the cancellations were the act of the testator; and, second, that they were performed with the intent and purpose of revoking the instrument. But it is said that acts of cancellation such as here disclosed are, in their nature, equivocal. This may be conceded. Indeed, the same is true of any act looking to the revocation of a will, even if it amount to total destruction, for to the act must always be added the intent to revoke before a compliance with the statute is had. In this instance, besides the facts and circumstances to which we have adverted, the writings of the testator himself, found upon the envelope containing the will, and appearing upon the last page of the will, furnish strong adminicular proof of this intent. There are upon the envelope, in the handwriting of the deceased, these words: "This has not been renewed up to this 15th day of October, 1895." There are upon the last page of the will these words: "Owing to the depreciation in my property, I will make a new will." Neither these writings, nor any of the writings of the testator, unless executed with all the formalities of a will, would be sufficient in and of themselves to prove, nor would they be admissible primarily to prove, the basic fact of a revocation. But, the fact of revocation having been established by prima facie evidence, these contemporaneous declarations of the testator afford strong corroborative evidence upon the presumption of the intent with which the act of cancellation was performed. The declaration that, "owing to the depreciation in my property, I will make a new will," affords a substantial reason for the revocation of the instrument. The words found upon the envelope support the proposition that the will of 1893 had been revoked, and further express the reason why the deceased, up to October, 1895, had not made a new will. Consequence is sometimes attached to the circumstance that the deceased retains among his valued papers an instrument which is contested as a revoked will. Under the circumstances presented in this case it seems quite natural that he should have done so,—to use the old document, as, indeed, he appears to have been using it, as the foundation and framework for another testament.

Against all this appellants oppose the evidence of the oft-repeated declarations of the deceased, made down to a short time preceding his death, to the effect that he had a valid will. We have said that under the circumstances of this case respondent's objection that this evidence should not be considered may not be heard. The question of its admissibility is not before us. The evidence is to be treated upon this appeal as properly in the case, but upon the subject of its admissibility reference may be had to Whart. Ev. (3d Ed.) § 895. Giving, then, to appellants' evidence all the weight to which it is entitled, what is to be said? Nothing further than at the most it presents a conflict upon an issue of fact which it was the peculiar province of the judge in probate, sitting without a jury, to decide.

It is further argued by appellants that the evidence discloses that the revocation was not absolute, but was dependent upon the making by the deceased of a new will, and, as it is not shown that he carried out his intention in this respect, the conditional revocation will be disregarded, and the old will restored, to avoid intestacy. This is upon the doctrine designated by Mr. Jarman as the rule of "dependent relative revocations," and he thus states it: "Where the act of destruction is connected with the making of another will, so as fairly to raise the inference that the testator meant the revocation of the old to depend upon the efficacy of the new disposition intended to be substituted, such will be the legal effect of the transaction; and therefore, if the will intended to be substituted is inoperative from defect of attestation, or any other cause, the revocation fails also, and the original will remain in force." 1 Jarm. Wills (6th Ed.) c. 7, par. 7. The dangers which lurk in the application of this doctrine have been well set out by Woerner in his American Law of Administration, at page 90. But it is sufficient here to say that under no reasonable theory do the facts of this case bring it within the sweep of the doctrine. The court found that the testator canceled and obliterated his will and his signature thereto and thereon "for the purpose of revoking the same." It is contended that this finding is insufficient; that it does not literally follow the language of the statute, "with the intent and for the purpose of revoking"; that a distinct meaning is to be given to the words as thus employed; and that it is, therefore, not a sufficient finding to say that the acts were done for the purpose of revoking. It would be extremely difficult to conceive of a testator canceling his will for the purpose of revoking it, and yet not canceling it with the intent to accomplish the same result. The truth of the matter is that the use of the words is idiomatic. Their meaning as used is identical. They are as near approaches to perfect synonyms as may be found in the language. In discussing the statute of Elizabeth, which declared a merchant to be a bankrupt who should "depart from his dwelling house or houses to the intent or purpose to defraud or hinder any of his creditors," Lord Ellenborough very aptly said: "It will be observed that upon the language of this statute the act is complete by being done with the intent specified, the words 'or purpose' being merely additional words to the same effect, and which carry the sense no further than it was carried by the preceding word 'intent.'" Robertson v. Liddell, 9 East, 487.

It is finally urged that the findings are insufficient because of the absence of a judicial declaration that the acts of revocation were done by the testator when he was of sound and disposing mind. To this it may be answered that the question of his sanity or mental competency was not made an issue. The court affirmatively finds that at the time he executed the will he was of sound and disposing mind. The presumption of sanity always exists until dispelled by proof. In this case the only evidence touching the question was that in the last week of his life he had become mentally infirm, as well as physically debilitated. But there is positively no evidence that the revocation was effected during that time, while, upon the other hand, the evidence of the testator's own writings upon the face of the will, and upon the envelope inclosing it, clearly indicate that the act was effectuated at a time long before. The judgment and decree appealed from are affirmed.

HOWE v. HALSEY. (Sac. 414.)

SUPERIOR COURTS—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT INVOLVED—INTEREST.

Under Const. art. 6, § 5, giving the superior court jurisdiction in cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to $300, the compounding of interest on a note for less than $300, pursuant to its terms, does not convert such interest into principal, and hence the superior court has no jurisdiction of an action on the note, although the amount of interest compounded renders the amount involved in excess of $300.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by William S. Howe against Milton S. Halsey. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Isaac Joseph, for appellant. A. A. De Ligne and A. M. Johnson, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought in the superior court of Sacramento county upon a promissory note dated April 4, 1894, for the sum of $200, payable one month after date, "with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of five per cent. per month, payable monthly, and, if not so paid, the interest may be added to the principal, and bear like interest, and the whole note may, at the option of the holder, without notice to the maker thereof, be treated as due and collectible. * * * Both principal and interest to be paid at," etc. The court dismissed the action without prejudice, upon the ground that it had no jurisdiction, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment of dismissal.

In this case the complaint set out a copy of the note, alleged that no part of the principal or interest had been paid, that at the time the original complaint was filed there was due "the sum of $415.67 principal, and interest thereon from July 4, 1895," etc.; and the prayer for judgment was for said sum of $415.67, and interest from July 4, 1895. Appellant contends that the ad damnum clause of the complaint determines the jurisdiction. That is undoubtedly the rule in proper cases but it would certainly not be held that the superior court would have jurisdiction in an action for goods sold and delivered where the complaint alleged that the plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant goods of the agreed price and value of $100, and that he had not paid for the same, or any part thereof, by reason whereof the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $500, and prays judgment for that sum; but where the complaint sets out several causes of action upon contract, each below the jurisdiction of the superior court, but which in the aggregate exceeds $300, exclusive of interest, it has jurisdiction. The rule, however, has its more general application in actions to recover damages for torts. Here the question is whether the provision in the note allowing the interest to be compounded monthly, and to bear like interest, converts the interest into principal to be treated as part of the sum loaned, or whether all beyond the sum named as the principal of the note is not interest, within the meaning of the constitution and statute fixing and defining the jurisdiction of the superior court? This precise question has been quite recently decided by this court in bank, adversely to appellant, in Christian v. Superior Court (L. A. No. 309; filed Sept. 15, 1898), 54 Pac. 518. Upon the authority of that case we advise that the judgment of dismissal in this case be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons and upon the authority cited in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1898.)

PENALTIES—WHAT ARE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—VESTED RIGHTS—STATUTES—REPEAL—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

1. Act April 23, 1880, providing that a stockholder may recover $1,000 as liquidated damages from the directors of a mining corporation for failure to post monthly balance sheets as required by the act, imposes a penalty.

2. The repeal of a penal statute pending appeal from a judgment obtained thereunder is not a deprivation of a vested right, since no one has a vested right in an unenforced penalty.

3. Although an act amending a law be unconstitutional as limiting the operation of the law to a certain class of corporations, this does not invalidate another part of the act limiting the liability of the directors of a corporation, where there is nothing indicating that the legislature would not have made the latter limitation in any event.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Murphy, Judge.

Action by Isaac Anderson against J. D. Byrnes and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

E. L. Campbell and J. S. Spilman, for appellants. C. M. Jennings, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. In plaintiff's original brief he says: "This is an action qui tam by a stockholder (a common informer) to recover the statutory penalty from the directors of a domestic mining corporation for failure to make or post monthly balance sheets, etc., required by act approved April 23, 1880." By that statute it is declared that a stockholder may recover the sum of $1,000 as liquidated damages from the directors of mining corporations for failure upon their part to comply with certain of its provisions. Subsequent to the filing of plaintiff's original brief, and while the appeal from the judgment in his favor was pending in this court, the legislature amended the act under which this litigation was inaugurated. This amendment was most important and substantial,—so important and substantial that it may be said that, so far as this plaintiff's rights are concerned, the act was repealed. Plaintiff, by supplemental argument, now claims that the act is not penal in character; that the $1,000 recovered by him as liquidated damages is not a penalty; and that, therefore, under the judgment recovered, he has vested rights, which a repeal of the statute cannot affect. That it is necessary to his ultimate success in the litigation in this court that his later position as to the law be correct is clearly apparent; for, if this act of the legislature is essentially penal,—if the $1,000 which he has recovered as a stockholder from the directors is a penalty, and not damages,—he has no case. This is eminently true, for the penalty had not yet been enforced, and, as has been said by judges of other courts, "no person has a vested right in an unenforced penalty." Therefore a repeal of the statute before the penalty is enforced is not a deprivation of any vested right. It follows that the amendment to the statute here under consideration absolutely prevents any further prosecution of this litigation if the statute is penal in character, and the amount recovered in the lower court is in all essentials a penalty.

Is the statute of penal character? This question seems to be easy of solution. The statute in this particular regard has not been directly before the court as a controverted question. At the same time, ever since the statute was enacted it has proven a prolific source of litigation, and has been viewed, weighed, measured, and tested by this court many times; and it may be said there is no case in our reports where the act has been before us, from the first to the last, from Loveland v. Garner, 71 Cal. 541, 12 Pac. 616, to Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 310, 46 Pac. 1076, but what in some way and to some degree refers to this act of the legislature as penal, and the amount recovered as a penalty. In the earlier case it is said: "It will be perceived that this act is in its nature penal, and does not specifically declare that for each failure to comply with its requirements a penalty may be recovered. Nor does it declare that each refusal or neglect of that kind shall render the directors liable for a penalty." In the later case it is said: "The law is designed to protect stockholders of domestic corporations, and to that end has declared that the directors of those corporations the conduct of whose internal affairs is subject to the control of the legislature shall do specific acts under a prescribed penalty for their failure and refusal." In other jurisdictions, acts of the same general kind are declared penal, and the amounts to be recovered, for failure to comply with their provisions, penalties. In one of these cases it is said: "This statute is in its nature penal. It prescribes a determinate penalty for neglect of a duty imposed by law upon the trustees of companies organized under our general incorporation act. The amount of the forfeiture is measured by the aggregate debt contracted by the company. The liability is not founded upon contract, but arises from misconduct in office. As the trustees who make default in publishing the report are wrongdoers, if the penalty or any part thereof should be recovered from any one of them, he could not without a special statute compel the others to contribute." Gregory v. Bank, 3 Colo. 334. Under another statute of the same general tenor, the Colorado court said: "The matter repealed was the right to recover twice the full value of the animal killed, upon failure of the company to file the notice required, and the statute giving such right was in its nature penal. * * * Appellee has not such a vested right under the judgment recovered by him that he cannot be divested of it by a repeal of the statute upon which the recovery is based." Railway Co. v. Crawford, 11 Colo. 600, 19 Pac. 673. In the consideration of an act of the state legislature of New York, in no essential principle different from the act here involved, it is said by the supreme court of that state: "With this decision before us, which we do not feel at liberty to overrule, this cause of action must be regarded as an action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture." Wiles v. Suydam, 64 N. Y. 177. And in this case it may well be said there can be no question but that the statute of limitations would run as against a penalty or forfeiture.

The power of the legislature to fix an arbitrary amount as "damages" for the violation of duty upon the part of the directors of a corporation is not apparent. Here the stockholder, having but a single share of stock, may bring suit and recover the same amount by judgment as a stockholder holding 1,000 shares of stock. It is thus apparent that compensation for the actual damage done to the stockholder was not intended to be given by the act. Indeed, conditions might arise where a dereliction of duty upon the part of the directors in not complying with the requirements of this law in posting notices, etc., would be peculiarly beneficial to the stockholder; yet such benefits would not bar a right of recovery, and could not be set up as a defense to an action brought by a stockholder, based upon a violation of the statute. As testing the penal character of the act, we see no difference in principle if it had provided that the directors should be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished accordingly, for a violation of its provisions, rather than providing, as it does, for the mulcting of the directors in damages in the arbitrary amount of $1,000, at the suit of any stockholder of the corporation. As to the language used in Ball v. Tolman, 119 Cal. 358, 51 Pac. 546, it is sufficient to say that the question here under consideration was not then in the mind of the court.

The act of 1897 purports to amend the earlier act in two important particulars: (1) It amends section 1 by limiting the scope and effect of the act to mining corporations "whose stock is listed and offered for sale at public exchange." (2) It amends section 3 by limiting the liability of directors of the corporations, for failure to do the things commanded by the act, to the actual damage sustained by the stockholder by reason of such failure, and costs of suit. It is now contended by plaintiff that the amendatory act is unconstitutional, in this: that it does not apply to all mining corporations, and therefore is not uniform in operation. The exigencies of the present case do not require the court to pass upon this question of constitutional law. Conceding, for present purposes alone, the contention of plaintiff to be sound, still section 3, as amended, entirely changes the remedy of the stockholder, and therefore necessarily deprived this plaintiff of the remedy afforded him under the old act, and which he has sought to enforce. In answer to this contention, plaintiff insists that the amendment changing the remedy is dependent upon the amendment limiting the scope and effect of the act to a certain class of mining corporations, and that amendment failing to the ground, by reason of its unconstitutionality, necessarily carries with it the second amendment to the act. But we see no dependency between these sections causing such a result. We see nothing in the act indicating in any way that the legislature would not have changed the remedy unless that body had first limited the effect of the act to mining corporations whose stock is listed and offered for sale at public exchange; and that is the test when a question of this character is presented to the court for decision. A very similar question upon principle to the one here considered is discussed at length by this court in Robinson v. Southern Pac. Co., 105 Cal. 544, 38 Pac. 94, 722. And, tested by the law there declared, the amendment to this act relating to the remedy of the stockholder is valid and constitutional legislation, even if it be conceded that the prior amendment pertaining to the character of mining corporations affected by the act is invalid and unconstitutional. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

PLEADING—CROSS COMPLAINT—CAUSE OF ACTION—SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT.

1. In an action to quiet title to 49 inches of water derived from a certain source, defendants answered, alleging their own right to 30 inches of such water, and in a cross complaint, bringing in new parties as defendants, alleged a contract with the grantor of such new parties, providing that, in case of the failure to supply the 30 inches from such source, it should be supplied from certain other properties conveyed to such new defendants after the making of the contract. Held, that such cross complaint could not be maintained under Code Civ. Proc. § 442, permitting the filing of a cross complaint whenever defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party "relating to or depending upon which the action is brought or affecting the property to which the action relates."

2. A complaint failing to show that the cause of action had accrued when the action was brought cannot be aided by a supplemental complaint setting up facts showing that such cause of action has subsequently accrued.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action by Frank D. Lewis against S. B. Fox and others. Defendants filed a cross complaint against plaintiff and others, and from a judgment and order against defendants in the cross complaint certain of them appeal. Reversed.

A. R. Metcalfe, Goodcell & Leonard, F. W. Gregg, and Frank B. Daley, for appellants. Gibson & Titus, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought May 1, 1893, by the plaintiff against S. B. Fox and a large number of others, as defendants, alleging that he is the owner of lots 7 and 8 in block 25 of the Rancho San Bernardino; that upon said lots there has been developed, by artesian wells, 84 inches of water, continuous flow, measured under a 4-inch pressure; that such amount of water is now flowing from said wells; that out of said quantity the first 35 inches, and the right to the use and control of the same, is owned by parties other than the parties to this action; that the right to the use and control of the same is prior and paramount in right to any other waters that now are or hereafter may be derived from said land; that the remainder of said 84 inches of water, namely, 49 inches thereof, and the right to use and control the same, is owned by plaintiff; that defendants, and each of them, claim some right, title, or interest in and to said 49 inches adversely to the plaintiff; that their claim is without right, etc.; and asks to have his title to said 49 inches quieted. S. B. Fox and 15 others of defendants, severing from the remaining defendants, answered the complaint, and admit that 84 inches of water had been developed by artesian wells on said land, "but deny that 84 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, has been since the commencement of this action, or is now, flowing from said wells"; admitting that the first 35 inches was owned by the Terrace Water Company (not a party to the suit), denying plaintiff's ownership of the land and of said 49 inches of water, and alleging their own right to 30 inches of said 49 inches of water from said source. In addition to this answer they filed a cross complaint against the plaintiff and the Vivienda Water Company (a corporation), Shirley C. Ward, and A. C. Armstrong (whom they prayed might be brought in as parties to the action), alleging, in substance, the following facts, among others, viz.: That in 1887 certain parties, of whom Ward was one, formed a corporation known as the Vivienda Water Company, and conveyed to it, through said Ward, said lots 7 and 8 named in the complaint, and, through others, lot 9 in the same block; that prior to said conveyance said Ward mortgaged said lots 7 and 8 to one Donovan to secure his promissory note for $2,000, payable July 8, 1889, which note and mortgage were afterwards assigned to the Terrace Water Company, a corporation, said corporation being then the owner of said first 35 inches of water flowing from the artesian wells on said lots 7 and 8; that said corporation commenced a suit to foreclose said mortgage in January, 1891, and said action was still pending; that said Vivienda Water Company was also the owner of 148½ inches of water from another source, known as the "Meeks Mill and Garner Properties," and on December 6, 1887, entered into a contract with certain of the defendants, and conveyed to them 30 inches of water flowing and derived from the artesian wells on said lots 7 and 8, and an interest in the pipe line conveying the water to the grantees' lands; that it was further provided that, in the event that at any time the supply of water at the artesian wells should be insufficient to supply the said 30 inches of water, then the same should be supplied from its other source of supply, viz. the Meeks Mill and Garner properties. The cross complaint further alleged that on March 22, 1892, the Vivienda Water Company conveyed said lots 7 and 8 to the plaintiff, Frank D. Lewis, but that the conveyance was without consideration, and that Lewis took with notice of their rights, etc. Also, that on May 4, 1891, the Vivienda Water Company, disregarding its obligation to furnish to cross complainants said 30 inches of water from the Meeks Mill and Garner properties in case of the failure of the wells on lots 7 and 8, conveyed said 148½ inches, which it owned in the Meeks Mill and Garner properties supply, to said Shirley C. Ward, and that said Ward conveyed approximately one-half thereof to A. C. Armstrong, one of the parties brought in by said cross complaint, and charged that both Ward and Armstrong took with knowledge of the cross complainants' right and title to said 30 inches of the said 148½ inches. Pending the action, A. C. Armstrong died, and his executrix, Mary E. Armstrong, was substituted, and she and Shirley C. Ward separately answered the cross complaint. The Vivienda Water Company made default. In addition to her answer, Mary E. Armstrong filed a cross complaint against P. A. Raynor, the Rialto irrigation district, and A. McBean, and these parties were brought in, and said district and McBean answered her cross complaint; but the allegations of these several pleadings need not be stated further than to say that they all relate to the question of the liability of P. A. Raynor, Mrs. Armstrong, executrix, the Rialto irrigation district, and A. McBean to the first cross complainants, S. B. Fox et al., for the 30 inches of water originally contracted to be supplied by the Vivienda Water Company from the artesian wells on lots 7 and 8. Final judgment of foreclosure of the Donovan mortgage in favor of the Terrace Water Company was entered August 6, 1894, and said lots 7 and 8 were sold thereunder in September, 1894, to said Terrace Water Company; and Lewis, the plaintiff in this action, not having redeemed said lots from said sale, a deed therefor was executed to said Terrace Water Company on March 23, 1895, and thereupon it filed a complaint in intervention, praying that it be adjudged the owner in fee of said lots and of all the water, etc., and that the defendants in intervention (the plaintiff and the original defendants) are without right, title, or interest therein; and upon the hearing it was so adjudged. The findings and decree were filed May 2, 1896, and are to the effect that the defendants and cross complainants named therein are entitled to the perpetual use of 30 inches of water from the Meeks Mill and Garner properties; that, subject to said right of cross complainants, the estate of A. C. Armstrong is the owner of 148½ inches from said supply, the Rialto irrigation district to 150 inches, subject also to the rights of the Armstrong estate; that after all the foregoing owners are supplied, McBean is the owner of the residue thereof, except 4 inches reserved by said Raynor; and determined the order in which these parties should supply said 30 inches to the cross complainants. This appeal is taken by said Mary E. Armstrong, executrix, Alexander McBean, and the Rialto irrigation district, out of whose water supply said 30 inches are to be furnished to those of the original defendants who filed the first of said cross complaints, and who are the respondents here; and, except as to the rights of the intervener, who became the owner of lots 7 and 8 under the foreclosure of the mortgage executed before any rights had attached to the water developed thereon, the judgment relates to waters derived from a different property, and is based upon issues framed between certain of the defendants and parties brought in by their cross complaint and by the cross complaint of Mrs. Armstrong. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

1. Appellants contend that the relief sought by the cross complaint constitutes no ground for a cross action. This question is raised by the answer of Mrs. Armstrong to the cross complaint, and by demurrer, and also by objections to evidence. Section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which the action relates, he may, in addition to his answer, file at the same time, or by permission of the court subsequently, a cross complaint. The cross complaint must be served upon the parties affected thereby, and such parties may demur or answer thereto as to the original complaint." I think appellants' contention must be sustained. The suit was brought by the plaintiff to quiet his title, as against the defendants, to 49 inches of water flowing from artesian wells upon lots 7 and 8, to which lots he held the legal title under a conveyance from the Vivienda Water Company. The defendants claimed title to 30 inches of water flowing from said wells, but subject to the first 35 inches of water therefrom, which had been sold to the Terrace Water Company by the former owner of said lots prior to the contract for the 30 inches to defendants. Defendants' contract was made with the Vivienda Water Company prior to the conveyance to plaintiff, and in said contract it was provided that if said wells should at any time fail to afford sufficient water to furnish defendants' said 30 inches, it would supply that quantity from its other source of supply known as the "Meeks Mill and Garner Properties." This provision in the contract in no way affected defendants' right to 30 inches of water from the wells then owned by the plaintiff, and their right to that water was pleaded in their answer to plaintiff's complaint, and could have been fully and finally determined under said complaint and answer. The plaintiff was not a party to that contract, and could not be affected in any way by that part of it by which, in a certain contingency, the 30 inches of water was to be supplied by the Vivienda Water Company from an entirely different source, with which the plaintiff was in no way connected. The property in controversy between the plaintiff and the defendants was 30 inches of water, to be taken from the artesian wells on lots 7 and 8, while the property in litigation under the cross complaint was a wholly different property, though of the same nature and quantity, to be obtained from an entirely different source, and which neither the plaintiff nor any party to the action was under any obligation to supply. It formed no part of the controversy between the plaintiff and the defendants, or any of them, nor did it form any controversy between the different defendants, but it formed a controversy between certain of the defendants and persons who were not parties, and which in no way affected the plaintiff, or the contract by which the cross complainants acquired the right to the 30 inches of water from the plaintiff's wells. Respondents cite Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 25 Pac. 407, to the proposition that new parties may be brought in upon a cross complaint. That is not questioned, but the presence of the new parties thus brought in must be necessary to the full determination of the rights of the parties then before the court, touching the property in litigation between them, where the proper relief cannot be given upon the answer to the complaint without their presence. In that case the presence of the Helbings was necessary to the determination of defendants' right and title to the property as against the plaintiffs, who claimed title under a deed from them, and who, relying upon that deed, were seeking to quiet their title as against the defendants to the same property. Here the property was not the same, and the plaintiff was not interested in or affected by the questions or property to which the cross complaint related.

2. Appellants also contend that the cross complaint did not state a cause of action against them. If that is true, the judgment against them cannot be sustained. That the cause of action, if any is stated in the cross complaint, had not accrued at the time it was filed, I think is clear. The contract or conveyance of the water under which respondents claim, dated December 6, 1887, sold and conveyed a perpetual flowing stream of water equal to 30 inches, "said water to be obtained from first party's artesian wells on lots 7 and 8 on block 25 of the Rancho San Bernardino; * * * and in the event that first party's supply of water from its artesian wells should at any time be insufficient to supply the said 30 inches of water, then first party agrees that the same shall be supplied from its other source of supply, to wit, from the Meeks Mill and Garner properties." This conveyance was recorded April 21, 1888, and the conveyance of said lots to plaintiff, Lewis, was not made until March 22, 1892. He therefore took the property with notice of the conveyance of said 30 inches of water to the defendants and cross complainants, and was bound to furnish said water so long as he retained the title and possession of the property, unless the wells should fail to supply sufficient for that purpose. The cross complaint alleges that 84 inches of water had been developed on said lots 7 and 8 prior to and at the time they were conveyed to the Vivienda Water Company (which quantity was more than sufficient to furnish said first 35 inches and the 30 inches to the cross complainants), and cross complainants further allege that they received said 30 inches immediately after said grant, "and ever since, without interruption or objection, except the commencement of this action by said Lewis, have continuously used said 30 inches of water upon their said premises for irrigation and domestic uses." There is no allegation in the cross complaint that any contingency had arisen which would entitle the cross complainants to demand that the water should be supplied from the Meeks Mill and Garner properties. It is not only not alleged that the artesian wells had failed to furnish sufficient water, but it is alleged that they had continuously received that quantity of water from that source. It is true they allege the pendency of the suit to foreclose the mortgage executed by Ward upon said lots, but the title and possession of the plaintiff had not failed, and their supply of water from that source has not been interrupted. To prevent misapprehension, it may be added that whether the foreclosure of the mortgage which was executed prior to the contract for the water here in controversy, and which terminated respondents' supply from the wells, is a contingency which, under the contract, would entitle respondents to have the water supplied from the other source, the wells not having failed to flow "a sufficient quantity of water," is a question not necessary to be decided, and upon which no opinion is expressed. All we mean to say is that, if it would constitute such contingency, no failure to obtain the water was caused by the pendency of the proceedings to foreclose at or prior to the filing of the cross complaint.

It is said by respondents, however, that "the deprivation of the thirty inches of water from the artesian wells, and ouster from the same by reason of the foreclosure and sale and sheriff's deed under the Donovan mortgage, is pleaded in their supplemental cross complaint." But this does not aid the original cross complaint. The cause of action must exist when the action—commenced by the cross complaint—was brought. If a suit be brought upon a promissory note before it becomes due, the complaint would not be aided by a supplemental complaint filed after it became due, alleging its maturity at a date subsequent to the commencement of the action. It must be clear that, until the cross complainants' supply of water from the artesian wells had failed from some cause, no right or cause of action could exist against the owner of the Meeks Mill and Garner properties, or against the owners of water supplied from that source. Not only so, but the court found that on or about March 30, 1895, the Terrace Water Company, by virtue of the sheriff's deed of said property, and of all the water flowing from the artesian wells thereon, ousted the cross complainants therefrom, and deprived them of all water from said wells, and from the use of said pipe line connecting therewith; and that on the — day of April, 1895, they demanded of the Vivienda Water Company and the executrix of A. C. Armstrong that they be supplied with 30 inches of water from the Meeks Mill and Garner properties; nor is there any finding that they were deprived of water from the wells prior to the execution of the sheriff's deed, though it is found that there was a gradual diminution of the flow, until, at the time the sheriff's deed was executed, there was not more than sufficient to supply said first 35 inches of water.

Other questions made by appellants need not be noticed. The judgment and order against appellants should be reversed, and the cross complaint of respondents dismissed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order against appellants are reversed, and the cross complaint of respondents dismissed.

TUFFREE et ux. v. STEARNS RANCHOS CO. (L. A. 387.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1898.)

APPEAL—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—JUDGMENTS—VACATION—NEW TRIAL—NOTICE—EVIDENCE.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, allowing an appeal from a special order made after final judgment, an order denying a motion to correct a judgment, or the file mark thereon, is appealable, where an appeal from the judgment will not present all the facts on which the motion is based.

2. A judgment regular on its face cannot be set aside on motion attacking its validity.

3. As to time of moving for new trial, notice of intention, filed after judgment entered on a remittitur from the supreme court, may be given in reference to such judgment, rather than the original judgment.

4. In a trial to the court, plaintiff was permitted to detail a conversation with one of several defendants, the court remarking that it would take care that the evidence harmed no one else. Held, that there was no error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by J. K. Tuffree and wife against the Stearns Ranchos Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, from an order denying its motion to amend the judgment and to correct a file mark thereon, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed as to the judgment, as to the order refusing to amend the judgment, and as to the order denying a new trial, and dismissed as to the order refusing the correction of the file mark.

E. W. McGraw, for appellant. J. S. Chapman and A. M. Stephens, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiffs, husband and wife, brought an action to quiet title, on complaint filed August 25, 1886, alleging ownership of the premises in the wife. Answers were filed for all the defendants, of whom there were many. The cause was tried, and findings were filed July 11, 1891, and judgment January 15, 1892. The judgment was that plaintiff Mrs. Tuffree was the owner in fee of the premises, and that defendant C. B. Polhemus has no right or title thereto, and that plaintiffs take nothing as to the other defendants. The cause was appealed by plaintiffs and by Polhemus to this court, and is reported in 108 Cal. 670, 41 Pac. 806. The judgment here, on that appeal, was given on October 2, 1895, and the judgment below was affirmed as to defendant Polhemus, and was reversed and judgment directed in favor of plaintiff Mrs. Tuffree as to all the other defendants except defendant Alfred Robinson. The remittitur went down November 2, 1895, and pursuant to directions therein the trial court entered judgment, which was indorsed: "Filed April 28, 1896. Docketed July 16, 1896. Entered July 15, 1896." On July 25th and 27th the court made an order substituting the Stearns Ranchos Company at its request for all the defendants, the company claiming to have succeeded to the interests of all the defendants, as set forth in supplemental answers. On July 18th counsel for defendant company and all other defendants served upon plaintiffs' attorneys a notice of motion that he would move the court "to have the file mark on said judgment corrected and altered so as to express the truth, to wit, that the date April 28, 1896, on said file mark, be stricken out, and in lieu thereof be stated July 15, 1896." Defendant company, as successor of the interest and on behalf of Moses Hopkins and Edward F. Northam, original defendants in said action, moved to amend the judgment by striking out the names of Hopkins and Northam so that the judgment shall not affect the interests formerly held by them. The ground of the motion was stated to be that Moses Hopkins died in February, 1892, prior to the appeal to the supreme court, and, being dead, was not a party to the appeal; that his executor was never substituted in his place, nor was the Stearns Ranchos Company, successor to his interest, substituted as a party; and the judgment of the supreme court did not affect such interest and was without jurisdiction. As to Northam, that he died in 1888, and Robert E. Northam, as executor, was substituted, but that he ceased to be such executor long prior to said appeal, to wit, March 1, 1889, on which day the estate was settled and the executor discharged; and that the supreme court never acquired jurisdiction over said executor, and the judgment as to him or the interest of Northam, deceased, was inoperative. The motion was heard, and on September 14, 1896, was denied. Defendant appeals from the judgment entered July 15, 1896; also from the order denying its motion to amend the judgment and to correct the file mark thereon; also from an order denying defendant's motion for new trial. It was stipulated that all these appeals might be heard upon a single transcript.

The appeals turn largely upon the question as to the effect of the judgment upon the defendant's interest in the premises as successor to Hopkins and Northam. Appellant contends that this court never acquired jurisdiction to disturb the judgment of the lower court in favor of Hopkins and Northam, because Hopkins was dead before the appeal was taken, and the executor of Northam was discharged upon final settlement of his testate's estate before the appeal, and was as though dead.

1. Respondents contend that the order denying the motion to correct the judgment or the file mark is not appealable; citing Tregambo v. Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501; Swain v. Burnette, 89 Cal. 564, 26 Pac. 1093. In the first of these cases the court said that an order refusing to set aside a default is not an appealable order; and in the other case, where the court granted a nonsuit on defendant's motion, and plaintiff moved to modify the judgment, this court said: "The order refusing to modify the judgment is not an appealable order." The question arises under section 963, Code Civ. Proc., which gives an appeal "from any special order made after final judgment." The rule stated in 89 Cal., supra, must not be accepted as universal, but must be applied to the case as it there stood, where it appears that the appeal from the judgment gave plaintiff all the relief he could have received by the appeal from the order. We think the rule and its reason better stated in De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, where it was held that an order refusing to set aside the judgment was appealable even though the judgment was appealable. Here, as in that case, the order is plainly within the statute, and, as there, an appeal upon the judgment roll now here would not present all the facts upon which the motion is based. We see no reason why the appeal should not be entertained.

2. The view we have taken of the motion to annul the judgment as to Hopkins and Northam relieves us from the necessity of passing upon the question as to whether the conduct of the attorneys for all the original defendants and of the attorney for the substituted defendant, appellant, estops the appellant from calling the judgment in question; and it also makes unnecessary a construction of section 385, Code Civ. Proc., under which respondents claim that as to defendant, the transferee of the Hopkins and Northam interests, the proceedings were regular, and defendant will not now be heard to complain. This motion is not made under section 473, Id., because of the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of the defendant, but is a direct attack upon the validity of the judgment irrespective of that section. The rule is well settled by our decisions that a judgment void upon its face, or that by an inspection of the judgment roll is found to have been given without jurisdiction, or for other reason thus appears to be void, will be set aside upon motion, without reference to the provisions of section 473. Such a judgment is said to be "a dead limb upon the judicial tree, which should be lopped off, if the power so to do exists." People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. 197. But it has been held that this cannot be done upon motion where the judgment is valid upon its face or its infirmity cannot be ascertained by an inspection of the judgment roll. Wharton v. Harlan, 68 Cal. 422, 9 Pac. 727; People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. 197; People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 607, 24 Pac. 311; Moore v. Superior Court, 86 Cal. 495, 25 Pac. 22; Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 Pac. 899; Manufacturing Co. v. Heiler, 102 Cal. 615, 36 Pac. 928; People v. Temple, 103 Cal. 447, 37 Pac. 414; People v. Harrison, 107 Cal. 541, 40 Pac. 956; Young v. Fink, 119 Cal. 107, 50 Pac. 1060.

The rule that allows a judgment void upon its face to be set aside upon motion is eminently wise and just, but so much cannot be said of a rule that would allow a judgment regular upon its face to be thus attacked. When a party is driven to evidence dehors the record to show that a judgment is void, and he does not proceed under section 473, supra, he should be permitted to do so only where the facts upon which he relies may be examined into under the forms and sanctions of a regular trial. The Code furnishes ample remedy for cases of surprise, excusable neglect, inadvertence, and mistake; and this remedy is supplemented by the rule which allows the annulment by motion of a judgment within a reasonable time, when void upon its face. This, we think, is as far as the remedies should be carried by mere motion.

3. Respondents make the point that the notice of motion for new trial was not given in time. The findings on the original judgment, from which this present appeal is taken, were filed July 11, 1891, and judgment was entered January 16, 1892. The notice of intention to move for a new trial now here was made July 25, 1896, and in time if the entry of judgment upon the remittitur, July 15, 1896, is to control; but, if the date of the decision and filing of the original judgment is to control, the notice was too late. Appellant concedes that its notice was too late if Brady v. Feisil, 54 Cal. 180, upon which respondents rely, is a correct statement of the practice. We are asked to overrule that case. We do not think that Brady v. Feisil is a sound exposition of the right of appeal conferred by our statutes, and it is in effect overruled by Klauber v. Street Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 32 Pac. 876. After clearly pointing out the reason why the first appeal might not present the errors of which the prevailing party in the lower court would have a right, but would be deprived of the privilege, of having reviewed, the court said: "As it is only when upon the second appeal the record presents the same matters, either of fact or of law, upon which the determination of this court was rendered at the former appeal, that the determination is held to be final, it follows that, if there is presented upon the second appeal a different state of facts, or any errors that were committed by the trial court which were not presented in the former record, this court is at liberty to consider them as fully as though presented upon a first appeal." The defendant had the right to have any matters of law or of fact reviewed on a second appeal which would affect the judgment against Hopkins and Northam, under whom it claimed, and which had not been reviewed or determined on the first appeal. Where the judgment was directed to be entered upon the findings, as was the case here, the appeal would be upon the same evidence, and in many respects must be upon the same record; but the assignments of error would include those matters of which the prevailing party at the first appeal was precluded from having any consideration of by this court. The judgment was not final as to such matters until it was entered under direction of this court, and the notice of intention may be given with reference to that judgment. The question, then, is, are there presented by this record any matters of law or fact not determined by the former appeal of which appellant can complain? We have compared the former transcript with the present one, and find that the appeal now is upon the same original pleadings, evidence, findings, and original judgment. The remittitur and decree pursuant thereto, the substitution of defendant for all the former defendants, and its answers and motions, are added to the original transcript. The specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings are not identical with those assigned in the first appeal, but we are unable to discover that any questions raised by the appellant now, so far as the rights of appellant and respondents are involved, were not fairly raised and decided in the former appeal.

The rule we have laid down by which this second appeal is held to be properly taken we do not think should entitle appellant to have the former decision of this court reviewed except upon matters not previously considered. A comparison of the present with the former record and the opinion found in 108 Cal., supra, we think will show that the merits involved in this appeal, so far as they are related to the facts, had full consideration in the first appeal.

4. Counsel calls attention to but one alleged error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by defendants. The court, against objection, permitted the witness Tuffree to relate a conversation with George H. Howard about making selections of land. The objection was as to all defendants except Howard. The court overruled the objection, remarking: "If it is admitted in evidence I will undertake to take care of it, and see that it don't harm anybody else." We find no error in the ruling.

5. As to that part of the order refusing to correct the file mark, we do not see that any right involved in the appeal is affected by it, and we therefore do not pass upon the question presented by the motion. If, in any future litigation, the date of entry of judgment should become material, it may be deemed an open question.

6. The appeal from the judgment presents no question except as to whether it is in conformity with the directions of this court, and, as there is no dispute as to the fact, there is nothing in this appeal.

Our conclusion is that so much of the order as refused to amend the judgment, the order denying a new trial, and the judgment appealed from should be affirmed; and, as to the motion and order relating to the change of date in the file mark of the judgment, that the appeal should be dismissed without prejudice.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, so much of the order as refuses to amend the judgment, the order denying a new trial, and the judgment appealed from are affirmed; and, as to the motion and order relating to the change of date in the file mark of the judgment, that the appeal is dismissed without prejudice.

ANDERSON et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LASSEN COUNTY. (S. F. 1,441.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 4, 1898.)

PROHIBITION—ADEQUATE REMEDY—INSOLVENCY—PETITION—AMENDMENTS—BOND—JURISDICTION.

1. Acts 1895, p. 134, allowing an amendment of a petition to declare a debtor an insolvent, does not authorize a petition commenced by less than five creditors, or by creditors whose claims are less than $500, as the statute requires in such cases, to be amended so as to bring in the requisite number of creditors, or so as to increase the amount to a sum sufficient to sustain jurisdiction.

2. A petition filed by creditors whose claims were less than $500, to declare a debtor an insolvent, was permitted by the court to be amended so as to bring in new creditors to increase the amount to $500, as the statute requires in such cases, without the filing of a new bond. Held that, the proceeding being statutory, the attempt to proceed without a new bond was in excess of jurisdiction.

3. Prohibition will lie to restrain an inferior court from proceeding on an amended petition in insolvency bringing in creditors other than those filing the original petition without requiring a new bond to be filed, since such proceeding would be in excess of the court's jurisdiction, and an appeal would be an inadequate remedy.

In bank. Original petition by Albert I. Anderson and another for writ of prohibition to superior court of Lassen county. Granted.

M. Marsteller and W. M. Boardman, for petitioners.

BEATTY, C. J. The petitioners ask for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from proceeding against them as involuntary insolvents, upon the ground that the court has acted, and is threatening to act, in excess of its jurisdiction. Upon the filing of the petition an alternative writ was issued, and the return thereto consists merely of a general demurrer to the petition. The question is whether the facts alleged show any excess, or threatened excess, of jurisdiction, for which the petitioners have no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103.

The material facts are that in October, 1896, five persons filed a petition in the superior court of Lassen county asking an adjudication of the insolvency of these petitioners. After two amendments to that petition a trial was had which resulted in an adjudication of insolvency, but a motion for a new trial was granted, and that judgment vacated upon the ground that these petitioners were not indebted to the petitioning creditors therein in the sum of $500 at the time their second amended petition was filed. When the matter again came on for hearing, in pursuance of the order for a new trial, the original five petitioning creditors were permitted, against the objection of these petitioners, to file a third amended petition, in which four new parties were joined as petitioning creditors and their claims set forth. No new bond accompanied this petition, nor was any new citation served or issued thereon. The alleged insolvents (these petitioners) objected at the time the third amended petition was presented—and have since renewed the objection in various forms—to allowing new petitioning creditors to be brought in by way of amendment. They contend that the law does not permit such an amendment; that the addition of new petitioning creditors constitutes it a new and distinct proceeding; and consequently that the court cannot proceed without a new bond and a new citation. These objections were overruled by the superior court as often as they were made, and the petitioners required to answer the third petition. The superior court threatens and intends to proceed upon the third amended petition in insolvency, not as upon a new petition, but as upon a proper amendment of the original petition, and without requiring any new bond or new citation.

The conditions upon which a person may be forced into insolvency and his property sequestrated for the benefit of his creditors are prescribed by the statute. Considering the serious consequences to the supposed insolvent and to those who have dealt with him, the conditions imposed by the statute are not onerous, and there is no reason why they should be disregarded. One of the conditions required is that five creditors should unite in the petition, and that they should hold claims to the amount of $500. It was not intended that less than five bona fide creditors, or creditors in a less amount than $500, should set this proceeding in motion, and afterwards drum up the requisite number and amount to sustain the jurisdiction, and there is nothing in the language of the statute to support the contention that a defect of this character can be cured by amendment. It is true the petition may be amended, but the language of the act is: "The petitioners may from time to time amend and correct the petition so that the same shall conform to the facts," etc. St. 1895, p. 134, § 9. This means nothing more than it says; i. e. that the original petitioners may amend and correct their allegations as to acts of insolvency and the particulars of their own claims, not that they may hunt up and bring in new creditors to set up new claims. If those who have originally commenced the proceeding cannot show that they are, to at least the number of five, creditors of the alleged insolvent, and creditors to the amount of $500, the proceeding ought to fail, and, in our opinion, does fail. The third amended petition, so called in this case, was therefore, at best, the beginning of a new proceeding, and not properly an amendment of the former petition. As a new proceeding, it was subject to the provisions of the statute in reference to citation, bond, etc.

The respondent cites Creditors v. Lumber Co., 98 Cal. 318, 33 Pac. 196, and Dixon v. Allen, 69 Cal. 528, 11 Pac. 179, to the proposition that the requirement of the bond is not jurisdictional. Those cases merely hold that, the bond being for the benefit and security of the person against whom the proceeding is taken, he can waive defects in the bond or delay in filing it, but they do not countenance the claim that in this proceeding the superior court has the power to make a decree of insolvency in the absence of a bond, and over the specific objection that no bond has been given. Grant that a bond may be waived, there is here a direct allegation showing that it has not been waived, but is, on the contrary, insisted upon, and, the proceeding being special and statutory, the attempt to proceed without a bond is an excess of jurisdiction.

And this particular excess of jurisdiction is one for which an appeal is a wholly inadequate remedy. The only effect of an appeal would be to reverse the adjudication of insolvency, but in the meantime the petitioners would have incurred costs and damages, for the recovery of which they would have no security. The bond accompanying the original petition covers only the costs and damages sustained by reason of the filing of that petition, with such proper amendments as may have been made thereto. It does not cover costs and damages sustained by reason of the filing of a petition by other creditors in a new proceeding. The judgment is that the respondent be, and it is hereby, prohibited from proceeding upon the so-called third amended petition in the matter of Anderson and Berry, insolvent debtors, as an amendment to the original petition therein, or otherwise than as a new and independent proceeding.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; HARRISON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; VAN FLEET, J.; HENSHAW, J.

GAROUTTE, J. I concur in the foregoing opinion and judgment. In re Visalia City Water Co., 119 Cal. 561, 51 Pac. 856, is direct authority upon the question.

JURY—CHALLENGE TO THE PANEL—ELISORS—VALIDITY OF APPOINTMENT—HOMICIDE—INTOXICATION—MANSLAUGHTER.

1. Pen. Code, § 1064, making the bias of the person summoning the jury a ground of challenge to the panel, does not warrant a challenge on the ground that the summoning officer was not legally appointed.

2. Pol. Code, § 4192, provides that process and orders in an action may be executed by a person appointed by the court, and denominated an "elisor," when (subdivision 3) both the sheriff and coroner are disqualified from acting. Code Civ. Proc. § 226, provides that, whenever jurors are not drawn or summoned to attend any court of record or session thereof, or a sufficient number of jurors fail to appear, such court may order the "sheriff or an elisor" chosen by the court forthwith to summon jurors. Pol. Code, § 4480, requires the Codes to be construed as one statute. Held, that the words "sheriff or an elisor," as used in the Code of Civil Procedure, mean simply that an elisor shall summon in those instances when the court is authorized to appoint an elisor, and hence it is error to appoint an elisor on the disqualification of the sheriff, unless it is also shown that the coroner is disqualified.

3. A sheriff who was disqualified from summoning the jurors in a case on account of bias should not be given charge of the jury on their retirement to consider the verdict.

4. The insanity caused by intoxication which will excuse responsibility for murder is the permanent general insanity caused by chronic alcoholism, and not the species of insanity brought about by a sane man becoming intoxicated by his own voluntary act.

5. Where there is no evidence which, by the most liberal interpretation, could be held to reduce the killing to manslaughter, it is not error to refuse to instruct on manslaughter.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Orange county.

Manuel Fellows was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals from the judgment and from the order denying him a new trial. Reversed.

J. G. Scarborough and H. T. Matthews, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant, convicted of murder in the first degree for the killing of one Dolores Garcia, appeals from the judgment and from the order denying him a new trial.

1. Dolores Garcia kept a saloon in the little town of San Juan Capistrano. The defendant was a farmer and vaquero. He was a hard drinker, and usually made himself drunk when he came into town. At the same time he was not incapacitated by drink from attending to his usual vocation. In the past he had had some business trouble with the deceased, and frequently referred to that trouble, and evinced his hostility toward Garcia when he had been drinking. He said that Garcia "had done him up for a hundred dollars, and that he would do Garcia up anywhere he met him." Upon the afternoon of June 16, 1897, he came into the town of San Juan Capistrano upon horseback, carrying a heavy rifle. He had been drinking, and continued to drink. To several people whom he met upon his way to the town, and to others with whom he talked after he arrived at the town, he declared his intention of killing Garcia. Between eight and nine o'clock in the evening he met Pedro Lebat, who was "pretty intimate with him," and to him declared his purpose, and offered Lebat, first twenty-five cents, and then a dollar, to go to the saloon of Dolores, and see who might be there. At that time defendant was carrying his rifle. Lebat refused to go, and they separated. About 9 o'clock in the evening the report of a rifle was heard in the neighborhood of Garcia's saloon, and, upon hurrying to the spot, the citizens found Garcia shot through the head by a heavy rifle bullet. A short time after the shooting defendant appeared at the house of one Concepcion Guingochea, and explained to him that he had killed Dolores, and that he had left his rifle about 20 yards from the corner of the street. He desired Guingochea to send the rifle to the town of San Mateo, and in that way he thought he could clear himself. The defendant handed over to the witness the cartridge belt which he wore, and then rode on into town. The witness informed the constable, and together they found the rifle of the defendant at the spot he had indicated. About half past 9 that night Pryor, the constable, met the defendant upon the street, mentioned the killing of Garcia, and asked him if he was the one that had done the deed. Defendant answered that he was, and that he had given his rifle to one Cuevas, for him to take down to San Mateo. This is substantially all of the evidence in the case. Upon the part of the defendant no evidence was introduced, further than testimony to the effect that the defendant was and had been a hard drinker for many years; that he did not refer to his trouble with deceased except when he had been drinking; and that he had been drinking heavily during the afternoon and evening of the day of the homicide. We think this naked statement of the facts sufficiently answers appellant's contention that the verdict is against the evidence.

2. The regular panel was exhausted in securing the jury, and a special venire was issued, directed to the sheriff. Upon its return defendant interposed a challenge to the panel upon the ground of the bias and prejudice of the sheriff who had summoned the members of it. The challenge was sustained, and a new venire ordered to issue, directed to and placed in the hands of an elisor named in the order. No showing was made that the coroner was likewise disqualified. To this order defendant reserved an exception. He also interposed a challenge to the panel thus formed. Pen. Code, § 1064. As it did not appear that the elisor was biased or prejudiced, and as that is the only ground of challenge contemplated by section 1064, defendant's objection to the panel may not be considered. People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 174. But defendant reserved his exception to the order appointing an elisor. His point is that the order was error, in the absence of a satisfactory showing that the coroner also was disqualified; or, in other words, that the special venire, under the circumstances shown, should have been directed to and returned by that officer. Therefore defendant is entitled to a consideration of the question as an alleged error at law occurring during the course of the trial.

Section 4192 of the Political Code provides as follows: "Process and orders in an action or proceeding may be executed by a person residing in the county, designated by the court, the judge thereof, or a county judge, and denominated an elisor, in the following cases: (1) When the sheriff and coroner are both parties. * * * (3) When either of these officers is a party and there is a vacancy in the office of the other, or when it appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court in which the proceeding is pending, or the judge thereof, that both of these officers are disqualified, or by reason of any bias, prejudice, or other cause, would not act promptly or impartially." Section 226 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Whenever jurors are not drawn or summoned to attend any court of record or session thereof, or a sufficient number of jurors fail to appear, such court may order a sufficient number to be forthwith drawn and summoned to attend the court, or it may, by an order entered in its minutes, direct the sheriff or an elisor chosen by the court forthwith to summon so many good and lawful men of the county," etc. The Codes are to be construed as one statute. Pol. Code, § 4480. So construing these provisions, it is clear that the Political Code limits and defines the power of a court in appointing an elisor, and enumerates the circumstances under which such an appointment is permissible. When the sheriff is disqualified, the duty in the first instance is always cast upon the coroner. When both are disqualified, then only may an elisor be nominated. And this, it is to be observed, is not a departure from, but is in strict adherence to, the rule of common law. 3 Bl. Comm. 355. Section 226 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the other hand, is directed to the mode of completing the jury, when from the regular list a sufficient number shall not be in attendance. The declaration that the court shall direct "the sheriff or an elisor" to summon so many men very obviously means that an elisor shall summon in those instances in which the court is authorized to appoint an elisor. To determine whether such an instance has arisen, reference must be had to section 4192 of the Political Code. Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 239, 28 Pac. 341.

The omission to name the coroner in section 226 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not significant, for by operation of law, clearly expressed in another section of the Code, which section must be construed with section 226, the coroner must act in such a case, when the sheriff is disqualified, and the need of an elisor, as well as the power to appoint him, only exists upon a showing of the disqualification or inability of both to act. In Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 362, the court says: "The objection that the elisor was improperly appointed is not well taken. The sheriff and coroner had been made defendants. In the event of their disqualification the court had the power to appoint an elisor." In Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 124, the sheriff was disqualified, and this court said: "There being no coroner, the appointment of an elisor to perform this service [summoning a special jury] was proper." The statute at this time, however, provided only that the sheriff might summon. St. 1852, p. 109, § 16. In People v. Young, 108 Cal. 8, 41 Pac. 281, an elisor was appointed, but only after a showing that both sheriff and coroner were disqualified. The proceeding was upheld. In People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049, upon proof of the sheriff's disqualification, a special venire was ordered summoned by the coroner. When the time came for the jury to retire, affidavits were presented showing the inability of the coroner to act by reason of sickness, whereupon the court appointed an elisor. These proceedings were held to be regular. For the reasons indicated the order appointing an elisor in this case, in the absence of a showing of disqualification upon the part of the coroner, was erroneous.

3. Notwithstanding the proof of the sheriff's disqualification for bias, when it came time for the jury to retire to deliberate upon its verdict the sheriff, under defendant's objection and exception, was given charge of it. While no statute or Code provision speaks expressly upon the subject, it is apparent that the same reasons which forbid the sheriff to summon jurors when he is biased should forbid his being intrusted with the care of such jury when it retires to deliberate. The proper course to have pursued was that adopted in People v. Ebanks, supra.

4. The court gave the well-known, oft-improved, and readily comprehended definition of "reasonable doubt" laid down by Chief Justice Shaw. But, following a practice repeatedly disapproved and deplored by this court, it elaborated the simple theme of the definition till its meaning was well nigh lost in complex variations of verbiage. It is not necessary here to say whether or not the result was error. Assuredly it was dangerously close to error. But let us again repeat that upon the doctrine of reasonable doubt an instruction is certainly free from error if the trial judge will but content himself with giving the definition of Chief Justice Shaw. As to the need of further exposition of the subject, it may be said that, if a juror cannot comprehend that definition, a trial judge may well despair of enlightening such an intelligence by any efforts of his own.

5. Upon the subject of intoxication, as an excuse for crime, the court of its own motion gave the instruction first considered in People v. Lewis, 36 Cal. 531, and since then reviewed and approved upon many recurrent occasions. People v. Williams, 43 Cal. 344; People v. Ferris, 55 Cal. 588; People v. Jones, 63 Cal. 168; People v. Blake, 65 Cal. 275, 4 Pac. 1; People v. Franklin, 70 Cal. 641, 11 Pac. 797; People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 425, 30 Pac. 581. A sentence from that instruction is as follows: "Insanity produced by intoxication does not destroy responsibility where the party, when sane and responsible, made himself voluntarily intoxicated." At the request of defendant the court further instructed the jury upon the subject, saying: "The jury is further instructed that, while mere voluntary intoxication is no excuse or justification for the commission of a crime, still insanity, although produced immediately by intoxication, is a defense. Under our Code, an insane person is incapable of committing a crime; that is to say, if a man kills another while insane, or his mind is unsound, it is no crime, and this is so whether his insanity is produced or brought on by intoxication, or the use of intoxicating liquors, or by any other cause." The instructions so given are manifestly contradictory, and calculated to confuse and mislead the jury. Yet the law of the matter is quite simple. No act committed by a person while in a state of voluntary intoxication is less criminal for that reason, saving that, when the actual existence of any particular purpose, motive, or intent is a necessary element to constitute any specific species or degree of crime, the circumstance of voluntary intoxication may be considered by the jury in determining the fact whether or not that particular purpose, motive, or intent was present. Pen. Code, § 22. But a sane person who voluntarily becomes intoxicated is not relieved from responsibility because of any mental derangement, mania a potu, or insanity produced by and consequent upon his own voluntary act. Such is the import of the instruction in People v. Lewis, supra, and it is that form of insanity, if insanity it may be called (for we do not think the word happily chosen), to which the instruction has reference. A sane man, therefore, who voluntarily drinks and becomes intoxicated is not excused because the result is to cloud his judgment, unbalance his reason, impair his perceptions, derange his normal faculties, and lead him to the commission of an act which in his sober senses he would have avoided. Upon the other hand, if one, by reason of long-continued indulgence in intoxicants, has reached that stage of chronic alcoholism where the brain is permanently diseased, where the victim is rendered incapable of distinguishing right from wrong, and where permanent general insanity has resulted, then, and in such case, he is no more legally responsible for his acts than would be the man congenitally insane, or insane from violent injury to the brain. See People v. Hubert, 119 Cal. 216, 51 Pac. 329. Such is the insanity to which the latter instruction doubtless had reference, but there was a failure to emphasize the distinction, with the result, as has been said, of leaving the subject confused and confusing.

6. It was not error for the court to refuse to instruct upon the crime of manslaughter. There is no evidence in the record which could by the most liberal interpretation be held to reduce the crime to that grade, and therefore to justify such a verdict. People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 174; People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 469.

No other alleged errors call for special consideration, but for the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; TEMPLE, J.

PEOPLE v. MILNER. (Cr. 406.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1898.)

HOMICIDE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY—OPINION EVIDENCE—VIEW.

1. Pen. Code, § 1105, provides that on a trial for murder, where the killing by defendant is proven, the burden of proving mitigation or justification devolves on him, unless the prosecution's proof tends to show that the crime is equivalent to manslaughter, or that he was justified or excused. By Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, jurors are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in their minds against a presumption. Held, that where the killing by the defendant was clearly proven, and his evidence made out a case of self-defense, uncontradicted on any essential matter by any other positive evidence, and no circumstances to bring the case within the exception contemplated by section 1105 were shown in the prosecution's evidence, and he was convicted of manslaughter, the verdict will not be disturbed on the ground that it was against the evidence, since it was for the jury to decide whether he had overcome the burden imposed on him by said section 1105.

2. The opinion of a physician who examined the wounds of the deceased is inadmissible to show that the person shooting deceased was either above or below him when he fired, since such a matter is not the subject of expert evidence, and no one could tell merely from the course of a bullet the positions of the one who was shot and the one who did the shooting.

3. Pen. Code, § 1119, provides that when, in the opinion of the court, it is proper that the jury should view the place of the crime, it may order the jury to be taken by the sheriff to the place, which must be shown to them by a person appointed by the court for that purpose. Held, that where the court in a prosecution for murder appointed a witness, who had heard and seen the defendant declare and point out the scene and objects relating to the crime before the coroner's jury, to show the jury the place described by the defendant, and the witness points out the different places to them, stating what the defendant had said before the coroner's jury in regard to each, an objection that the jury received evidence out of court, other than that which came from an inspection of the premises, is not available, since the witness by necessity was compelled to orally designate the place, to comply with the statute.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

One Milner was convicted of manslaughter, and from a judgment and order denying a new trial he appeals. Reversed.

Thos. Fitch and John G. North, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and C. N. Post, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant, tried for the murder of S. J. Darrah, was convicted of manslaughter. He appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying him a new trial. The facts are presented without conflict upon any material proposition, and under them defendant's counsel strenuously insist that the verdict is against the evidence.

Milner and Darrah were neighbors, living in Snow Creek cañon. Darrah's was the lower ranch, and, to reach his land, Milner was obliged to pass through the land of Darrah. Milner had sold to Darrah this land; reserving in the deed a right of way across it, and reserving also from his water rights in Snow creek 30 inches for his own use. This water he was diverting, and had been for some years, by means of a flume and ditch; taking the water from Snow creek a short distance above his house. There is some slight evidence, but evidence of little consequence, of pre-existing trouble between the two men. A witness testifies that about two years before he had heard the defendant say "that he had beat Darrah out of ten thousand dollars, and that he would beat the damned son of a bitch out of ten thousand dollars more before he got through." The use of this language, however, defendant denies. There is no evidence, saying this, of any antecedent difficulty; and there is positive evidence that the business transaction between Darrah and Milner was the sale by Milner to Darrah of his ranch for the sum of $839. Some little time before the tragedy, other parties, with whom Milner was in no way connected, took preliminary steps to appropriate water from Snow creek. After having done so, they secured a bond or option for the purchase of Milner's land and water right. Darrah seems to have conceived the notion that an attempt was about to be made to deprive him of the water rights which he claimed, and that Milner was aiding in the effort. A surveying party attempted to cross the land of Darrah by Milner's right of way, and was stopped by Darrah, armed with a rifle, and turned back; Darrah threatening to kill any of them that came upon his land. Darrah then threatened Milner's life, denied to Milner a right of way, and ordered him off of his land. Darrah's violent language and threats against the life of Milner are abundantly proven. Milner, by all of the evidence, seems to have maintained a pacific demeanor, and, according to the testimony of one witness, said that he dreaded having trouble with Darrah, because it could end in only one way; Darrah being excitable, and he (Milner) always maintaining his coolness and temper, for which reason he (Milner), in the event of a deadly collision, would have a decided advantage. Milner, it appears, repeatedly told Darrah that they would settle their differences at law, and Darrah as repeatedly answered that he did not have to, or did not or would not settle his troubles that way. Milner went to town, and procured the arrest of Darrah for disturbing his peace. That case was untried at the time of the tragedy. Again he went before the justice of the peace, and swore to a complaint seeking to have Darrah put under bonds to keep the peace. Darrah, with his lawyer, came before the justice. The testimony of that officer is as follows: "We then asked Darrah— I believe I put the question to Darrah myself,—that Milner had said to me he wanted to go to La Cueva ranch (the Snow Creek ranch) that evening with his family, and that he was afraid that Darrah would injure him in crossing that land. He wanted to go that night. I then asked Darrah if he would have any objections to Milner crossing that land for that purpose. At first Darrah did not consent. He seemed to hesitate about giving his consent, but by Mr. Purington (his lawyer) talking to him, as well as myself, he finally consented to allow Milner to cross the road without molestation from himself, excluding the power company from the permission, and I believe he named Barker. Milner objected to that kind of permission; said his brother might want to call and see him, and that permission would bar him from coming to his house. Upon the suggestion of Mr. Purington, I think, the permission was amended to include any one having legitimate business with Milner. * * * There was nothing said directly concerning any water disputes or water claims. When Milner first came into the court room, Darrah presented him a paper, and asked him to look at it and tell him whether he would pay it,—an account of some kind. Milner picked it up and glanced at it, and threw it down again. * * * To the best of my recollection, at the very last moment Darrah again called Milner's attention to this account, as near as I can recollect, in these words: 'Milner, I want you to look at that paper, and give me a definite answer whether you will pay it or not.' Milner asked Darrah how much it was. He said it was seventy-five dollars. Milner then took the paper and answered: 'I will not pay it until the court decides I have to.' Then Darrah made reply: 'Then I forbid you taking any water out of that ditch. If you want water, you will have to go to the head of the ditch and get it." The bill for $75 was for carrying water from the head of Milner's ditch to his turnout. In making the deed, Milner had reserved, as has been said, 30 inches of water in Snow Creek ditch. His flume and turnout were in place and in use. Milner had been using the water for four years.

Upon the morning of the tragedy, which was the next day after this conversation, Duvoisney, Darrah's hired man, passed beyond the house of Milner, and proceeded, as he testifies he was under instructions from his employer to do, to tear out the flume from which Milner diverted water, and which was upon Milner's own land. This same witness testifies that his employer had said to him about two weeks previously that, if he killed Milner and Barker, he would die happy. Milner noticed the change in the condition of the water flowing past his house, and, walking up the cañon unarmed, found Duvoisney engaged in the work. He protested against it, and Duvoisney ceased and went away, saying he would have nothing further to do with it. Not long after, Milner again noticed that the flow of water past his house was decreasing considerably, and concluded that Darrah was removing his flume. In view of Darrah's threats, and of the fact that Darrah carried a rifle, Milner, when he went up to investigate, took with him his shotgun, both barrels of which were loaded with buckshot. He had three other cartridges similarly loaded in his pocket. Reaching the point of diversion of the water, he mounted a small rock, and there saw Darrah engaged in tearing out his flume. This was the tragic meeting, and, as there were no eyewitnesses to it, the account is Milner's alone. Darrah was about 30 yards distant from Milner. Milner called to him, in a loud voice, to desist; holding his shotgun, both barrels cocked, in the hollow of his left arm, but not pointing toward the deceased. Darrah raised up, and, seeing Milner, answered: "Shoot, you God damned, cowardly son of a bitch." Milner answered: "I won't do it, only I want you to get off my property. I don't intend to shoot if I can avoid it. I want you to get off my property." On the bank was lying a wet piece of board, which, glistening in the sun, Milner thought was Darrah's rifle. Darrah moved away, approaching the piece of board. Milner shouted to him not to pick up the gun. Darrah passed the board, and disappeared behind a large bunch of grass. Milner was still standing on the rock, when, from behind the grass where Darrah had placed his rifle, Darrah raised up and fired at him. Milner was startled by the suddenness of the shot. One barrel of his gun, which was extremely "light upon the trigger," went off in the air, and as he fell or leaped from the rock he fired the other barrel as well as he could in the direction of Darrah. He ran for shelter over a ridge of land to a hollow beyond, and, as he passed the ridge in plain sight, Darrah fired again. Reaching shelter, Milner crouched down and reloaded his shotgun. As he rose up, Darrah was on the watch for him, and fired again. Milner immediately returned the fire, and Darrah fell. Milner went back to his house, and returned with a blanket with which he covered the body. Duvoisney was notified, and came and stood guard over the corpse. When it was discovered, it was lying prone, with 16 buckshot wounds in the front portions, ranging from the groin to the head. One had entered the heart, and, by the testimony of the physicians, immediate death was the probable result. The rifle was lying beside the body, the right hand of the deceased grasping the lever, with which a fresh cartridge had been thrust into the barrel. By the body were found empty shells and a loaded cartridge, the cap of which had been struck by the firing pin, but not exploded. Mrs. Milner, first testifying to her knowledge of firearms, and her ability to distinguish the difference in sound between the report of a rifle and the report of a shotgun, swore that she heard the shots, and that the first shot was from a rifle. Another witness testified that all the shots were rapidly fired. The range of the wounds in the body of Darrah, according to the testimony of the physician upon the trial, was inward and slightly upward. The same witness, however, according to the record of his testimony, at the preliminary examination had testified that the range was inward and downward.

To appellant's contention that a verdict of manslaughter is entirely unsupported by such evidence, respondent concedes that the testimony, if accepted without reservation, makes out a case of self-defense. But it is said that there are physical facts which are absolutely at war with defendant's testimony. These facts, as set forth by respondent, are the following, and we quote from respondent's brief: "The witness Johnson testified that defendant showed him the spot where he (defendant) stood when he shot deceased, and where deceased stood at the time of the shooting, and that the spot where defendant stood was higher than the spot where deceased stood. This being true, the bullets from defendant's gun, upon taking effect upon the body of deceased, should take a downward course, unless deflected by striking a bone. The testimony of Dr. King is to the effect that the wounds on the body of the deceased had ranged slightly upward. This testimony is fatal to defendant's testimony as to the relative positions occupied by himself and deceased, and casts suspicion on all his testimony, under the code rule." Johnson's testimony is as follows: "I saw him [defendant] point out a place where he said he stood when he fired a shot at Darrah. I examined the ground between these two places pretty carefully, and closely near where the defendant said he stood when he fired. There were rocks, not as large by a good deal as a good many in that section of country, but too large for a man to carry. At the right of the way he would be standing,

I suppose, I think there is a boulder, as I remember, to one side of that. I think I noticed at the time sufficiently to have a recollection as to who was on the higher or lower ground, the deceased or the defendant, and I think Milner was on higher ground a few feet." The testimony of King has already been adverted to. It cannot be said that this evidence either raises a conflict, or discredits the account of defendant. Depending upon the exact position of Darrah's body at the time when he received the fatal shot, the wounds might have ranged upward, as the doctor testified, and the shot still have been fired from the exact position which Milner indicated.

Respondent further answers in his brief: "The record discloses a number of hostile and threatening remarks made by defendant with reference to deceased, all tending to prove malice on defendant's part, and other remarks by defendant showing that defendant had no real fear of deceased. Shortly after the killing, defendant said he was not afraid of Darrah's killing him." The hostile remarks to which reference is here made, and which defendant admits that he uttered, were to the effect that "the son of a bitch [meaning Darrah] should not prevent him [Milner] from using his right of way." But the fatal affray was not over the right of way, and, while it is abundantly shown by the evidence that bad blood existed between the two, it uniformly appears that the defendant was the more contained of the two, and kept himself within the pale of the law. The declaration of counsel that shortly after the homicide defendant said that he was not afraid of Darrah's killing him is misleading when detached from its context. What he did say, by the testimony of a witness, is the following; and this, it will be noted, had no reference to the actual circumstances at the time of the tragedy: "Defendant said he was not afraid of Darrah killing him. The only thing he was afraid of was its ending just as it did. If it came to a shooting scrape, he had the best of it. He was not nervous and never got excited, and Darrah was a nervous and excitable man." The other hostile declarations testified to as having been made by defendant were "that he had already had Darrah arrested there to keep the peace. He said he failed to do it. He was turned out on his word, and he was not a man to keep his word. He [defendant] said he didn't know as it made much difference. He said he was going to watch that water, and he would watch it. No son of a bitch would keep him from doing it. He would take no chance whatever. There were several men could testify, if living, that he was capable of taking care of himself, but, thank God, they wasn't. * * * 'He has ordered Barker not to go over it, but, by God, I am going over it. No son of a bitch can keep me. He gave me permission, and, by God, I am going. If he opens his mouth, he had better keep it shut.'" The use of this language defendant denies, saying that he admits that he said no "son of a bitch could keep him from using his right of way"; but, accepting it, what shows it? That defendant believed Darrah was interfering with him in the enjoyment of his rights, as from the evidence Darrah certainly seems to have been; that defendant proposed to enjoy his rights; and that against such a man as Darrah, who had repeatedly threatened his life, he would take no chance whatever. What there may be in this language to have justified a verdict of manslaughter, we are unable to perceive.

These are the only considerations presented by respondent as supporting the verdict. One other circumstance appears from the evidence, and, though not called to the attention of the court in the brief of respondent, merits attention in this connection. Witnesses testified that, so far as their observation disclosed, no blood was found upon the ground by or under the body of Darrah. The physician was asked to say, from the character and location of the wounds, whether the person receiving them would have bled sufficiently to leave blood upon the ground. He answered that "it would depend upon the amount of clothing, etc., between the ground and the body to absorb the blood. Ordinarily there would be blood on the ground from those wounds." Darrah wore two shirts and a vest, but no coat, at the time of his death. Whether this clothing was sufficient to absorb the flow of blood is not made to appear. It was for the jury to decide under the evidence offered. It is shown, however, that Darrah's body was pierced by small bullets,—buckshot; that one of them entered the heart, and caused almost instantaneous death; and that with the cessation of the heart's pulsations the blood would cease to flow from the wounds. The theory and argument of the district attorney were that Darrah was not shot where the defendant stated, but was shot elsewhere, and his body dragged or carried to the spot behind the bush. The only fair conclusion to be drawn from all this is that the defendant's evidence is not contradicted upon any essential matter by any other direct and positive evidence in the case. If this consideration could properly end here, there can be no doubt but that a new trial should be ordered, for the reason urged, that the verdict is contrary to the evidence; but a trial for murder differs in some respects from the trial of any other criminal offense. "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable." Pen. Code, § 1105. In this case the killing by the defendant was clearly established by the people's proof. No circumstances of mitigation or justification to bring the case within the exception contemplated by the section were shown in the prosecution's evidence. The burden of proof, then, of justifying and excusing the act, or of proving circumstances which would lessen the gravity of the offense to manslaughter, devolved upon the defendant. At the close of the prosecution's case the presumption against the defendant was that he had committed an unlawful homicide. It may not be said that the presumption of innocence countervailed against this, since by the express provision of the law the presumption of innocence was overcome, and a presumption of guilt took its place when the required facts were proven. By section 2061 of subdivision 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, jurors are to be instructed "that they are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number, or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying their minds." In this is a distinct recognition of the fact—First, that a presumption is evidence; and, second, that it is evidence which may outweigh the positive testimony of witnesses against it. It has been said that disputable presumptions are allowed to stand, not against the facts they represent, but in lieu of proof of the facts, and that when the fact is proven contrary to the presumption no conflict arises, but the presumption is simply overcome and dispelled. Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 922. This is true. Against a proved fact, or a fact admitted, a disputable presumption has no weight; but, where it is undertaken to prove the fact against the presumption, it still remains with the jury to say whether or not the fact has been proven, and, if they are not satisfied with the proof offered in its support, they are at liberty to accept the evidence of the presumption. In the Burnett Case, supra, both parties testified to a state of facts contrary to the presumption. It was like an admission. It relieved the question from conflict. But here the burden of proving circumstances exonerating the defendant, or reducing the grade of the crime, was cast upon him; and, even though there be no direct contradictory evidence in the record, the jury was not bound to decide in accordance with the defendant's statement, if the presumption the better satisfied their minds. In this connection the language of Justice Field in Quock Ting v. U. S., 140 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 733, 851, is peculiarly applicable: "Undoubtedly, as a general rule," says the learned justice, "positive testimony as to a particular fact, uncontradicted by any one, should control the decision of the court; but that rule admits of many exceptions. There may be such an inherent improbability in the statements of a witness as to induce the court or jury to disregard his evidence, even in the absence of any direct conflicting testimony. He may be contradicted by the facts he states as completely as by direct adverse testimony, and there may be so many omissions in his own account of particular transactions, or of his own conduct, as to discredit his whole story. His manner, too, of testifying, may give rise to doubts of his sincerity, and create the impression that he is giving a wrong coloring to material facts. All these things may properly be considered in determining the weight which should be given to his statement, although there be no adverse verbal testimony adduced." In Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 639, it is said: "We do not understand that the credulity of a court must necessarily correspond with the vigor and positiveness with which a witness swears. A court may reject the most positive testimony, though the witness be not discredited by direct testimony impeaching him, or contradicting his statements." In People v. Lewis, 36 Cal. 531, a verdict of murder was set aside by this court as being contrary to the evidence. In that case the fact of the killing by the defendant was not proved, and it is said that the defendant was convicted chiefly on the vague "impressions of a drunken witness," and that the testimony of the drunken witness "leaves it entirely in doubt whether the deceased may not himself, either by design or accident, have fired the shot which caused his death." But the distinction between the case of People v. Lewis, and others like it, and the present one, is both radical and important. In those cases the people failed to prove the defendant's commission of the homicide. It is easily possible for this court to say, when the identity of the slayer is in doubt, whether the evidence adduced is legally sufficient for the conviction of the defendant; and, if it be not, then clearly it is the duty of the court to set the verdict aside. Under such a state of facts no burden is cast upon a defendant to prove anything. In the case at bar, however, the killing by defendant is both proved and admitted. The burden then is by law cast upon him to exculpate himself, or mitigate the gravity of the crime with which he is charged. He has to do this to the satisfaction of the jury. They are to weigh his evidence, and determine the fact whether or not it is to be believed, and, if believed, whether it is sufficient. How much or how little weight has the jury attached to his evidence? How much has the witness' credibility been affected in their minds in his appearance upon the witness stand, by his manner of testifying, by what may seem to them some improbability in his story? All these are considerations before the jury in passing upon the weight of evidence. In this case by its verdict the jury has, in effect, said: "The burden of proof cast by law upon the defendant has not, in our judgment, been sustained. His evidence does not produce conviction in our minds against the presumption arising from the proof of the people, which does satisfy our minds." In such a case as this, therefore, the verdict of the jury may not be set aside for the lack of legally sufficient evidence to support it.

But other considerations demand that the defendant should be awarded a new trial. Dr. King, testifying to the wounds found upon the body of Darrah, said: "The wounds had a range slightly upward, except where the bullets struck bones, and were deflected thereby. Q. Does that indicate whether the person firing the shot, and from whom the shot was received, was either above or below the person receiving the shot?" The objection of defendant to this question was overruled, and the witness answered: "It would indicate that the muzzle of the gun was below the party receiving the shot, or, rather, it would indicate that the muzzle of the gun was below the point of entrance of the bullets." The admission of this evidence was incontestably error. People v. Westlake, 62 Cal. 303; People v. Smith, 93 Cal. 445, 29 Pac. 64. The very slightest consideration is enough to show that such a matter is not the subject of expert evidence, and that in fact neither a physician nor anybody else could tell the positions of the man who shot and the man who received the shot, merely from the course of the bullet. If a man were supine, and a pistol were discharged directly at him, or if the pistol were discharged at him when he was standing upright, or if it were discharged at him when he was in any one of a multitude of other positions, the result still might be exactly the same in every case,—a wound traversing the body in a given direction. Upon the other hand, if a man standing upright should receive a gunshot wound from a weapon whose line of fire was horizontal to his body, nothing deflecting the bullet, the course of the wound would be horizontal. Yet, with the weapon held in exactly the same position, if his body was slightly inclined forward, the course with reference to it would be downward, while, if the body were slightly inclined backward, an upward course would appear.

The coroner's jury inspected the scene of the tragedy. One Carpenter was with them. The defendant accompanied the jury, and gave his story of the homicide as he gave it upon the trial. He pointed out, however, upon the spot, certain physical features of interest and importance,—the flume, the rock upon which he stood, the bunch of grass behind which deceased picked up his gun and fired upon him, and the spot where he (the defendant) stood when he fired the fatal shot. To these declarations of the defendant the witness Carpenter testified. He further testified that at that time he discovered marks upon the brush caused by shot, and lead marks upon the rocks caused by shot, from one of which he actually picked a buckshot. The court deemed it advisable that the jury should view the premises, and gave its order accordingly. It made provision for the presence of the parties and their counsel, the officers of the court, and the stenographer, and directed that the places designated in the order should be shown to the jury by the witness Carpenter appointed for that purpose. The places were: "(1) The place where the dead body of S. J. Darrah was found by the coroner's jury. (2) To show to the jury the place where Milner said to the coroner's jury that S. J. Darrah stood when he called to him from the top of the rock. (3) The place where the defendant said to the coroner's jury that he stood upon a rock or boulder with a shotgun in his hands. (4) The place where defendant said to the coroner's jury that he reloaded his shotgun. (5) The place where defendant said before the coroner's jury that he stood when he fired the shot that killed S. J. Darrah. (6) The place where marks of buckshot on the rocks were found east of the place where the dead body of Darrah was found. (7) The tuft of grass from behind which the defendant Milner said before the coroner's jury that Darrah picked up his gun. (8) The place where shot marks are on the brush, and the place or places where shot marks are on the rocks. (9) The Milner ditch and flume. (10) The Darrah ditch, commonly called 'Snow Creek.' (11) The place where the Milner ditch did divert the water from said Darrah ditch or Snow creek. (12) The trail where it crosses the Darrah ditch or Snow creek next below the said point of diversion of water in the Milner ditch, and passes to the north and east of where Darrah's dead body was lying, and within about ten or twelve feet of the same." The order was carried out; counsel for defendant neither objecting nor consenting to the order, but reserving, as appears, any legal objection which they might have to make to it. Arrived upon the ground, the terms of the order seem to have been obeyed with scrupulous exactness. Carpenter addressed the jury in the very terms of the order, saying: "This is the place where defendant said to the coroner's jury that he stood upon a rock or boulder with a shotgun in his hands." "This is the place where defendant, before the coroner's jury, said he stood when he fired the shot which killed S. J. Darrah," etc. Objection is now made, and was urged upon the motion for a new trial, that in this the jury received evidence out of court, other than that which came from an inspection of the premises. Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 2. The power of the court in regard to the matter under consideration is derived from and regulated by section 1119 of the Penal Code: "When in the opinion of the court it is proper that the jury should view the place in which the offense is charged to have been committed, or in which any other material fact occurred, it may order the jury to be taken in a body, in the custody of the sheriff, to the place, which must be shown to them by a person appointed by the court for that purpose, and the sheriff must be sworn to suffer no person to speak or to communicate with the jury, nor to do so himself, on any subject connected with the trial, and to return them into court without unnecessary delay, or at a specified time." Wright v. Carpenter, 49 Cal. 609, was a civil case. The jury were permitted to view the premises, and instructed that they might use the evidence of the witnesses before them, and their examination of the lands from such inspection, in determining whether they were rendered unfit for cultivation by reason of overflow. It was said by a bare majority of the court (two justices not participating), that this was error, in that it was not the purpose of the statute to convert the jurors into silent witnesses acting on their own inspection of the land, but only to enable them the more clearly to understand and apply the evidence; and it was reasoned that, if the rule were otherwise, the jury might base its verdict wholly on its own inspection of the premises, regardless of an overwhelming weight of evidence to the contrary, and the losing party would be without remedy upon motion for a new trial, since it would be impossible to determine how much weight was due to the inspection by the jury, as contrasted with the opposing evidence, or, treating the inspection as in the nature of evidence, whether it was sufficient to raise a substantial conflict. In the criminal case of People v. Green, 53 Cal. 60, the order of the court was to this effect: "Mr. Nye, you will go with the jury, and show them the position that you occupied during the transaction, and where the other parties were, and where Officer Collins was; and they can judge for themselves after that. There are not to be any explanations or comments made, except to show the jury where these parties were at the time the thing occurred." It is said that this proceeding was erroneous, and that the action of the court was not only opposed to the letter of the Code above quoted, but also to the purpose of the oath required to be administered to the officer who conducts the jury to the place mentioned in the order, and to the principle which gives to a defendant the privilege of being confronted by the witnesses against him. To the last proposition,—that of the right of the defendant to confront the witnesses against him,—no exception need be taken. It has since been declared to be error for the jury to receive a view of the premises in the absence of defendant. People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 623, 10 Pac. 169. But the very proposition upon which the case of People v. Bush was decided is that in so viewing the premises the jury was receiving evidence, and this certainly is the case. If, for example, it were material to determine whether a hole in the panel of a door was or was not caused by a bullet, it would be permissible to remove the panel, to bring it into the court room, offer and have it received in evidence, and submit it to the inspection of the jury. It would not for a moment be doubted, if this procedure were adopted, but that the physical object was evidence in the case. If, instead of so doing, the court should direct that the place where the material fact occurred should be viewed by the jury, and the jury should be conducted to the spot, and the panel of the door pointed out to them, would it be any the less the reception of evidence because obtained in this way? Certainly not; and, indeed, the Criminal Code recognizes that evidence is thus received when it declares that a new trial shall be granted when the jury has received evidence out of court, other than that resulting from a view of the premises. It must be concluded, therefore, that the doctrine of Wright v. Carpenter has been set aside by the later utterances of this court. So, also, has the ruling in People v. Green, supra, been reversed by the later case of People v. Bush, 71 Cal. 602, 12 Pac. 781. In that case the witness Bundy was instructed by the court as to the places to be viewed, precisely as was done in this case. In so doing he orally named and designated the places, as was done by the witness here. The objection was based, as is this objection, upon the language of the Code; and it was urged that the law forbade any person from speaking to the jury upon any subject connected with the trial, and that for the witness Bundy so to do was in direct violation of the language. But to that this court in bank replied that the objection was without merit, "for we cannot conceive how he could have shown the jury the two places which they were sent to view, in any other way under the statute." We perceive no error, therefore, either in the order or in its execution.

The matter of the citizenship of the juror Dole, and of the right of the defendant to raise the question, either in an attack upon the judgment, or upon a motion for a new trial, has not been overlooked; but as a new trial must be ordered, and as the juror could not again act in the case, it becomes unessential to this consideration. No other of appellant's points seems to require particular consideration, but for the reasons given the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

CAMP et ux. v. LAND. (Sac. 416.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1893.)
TRUST DEED—ESTOPPEL—NATIONAL BANKS—RIGHT TO TAKE TRUST DEED—HOW QUESTIONED—RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION—MERGER.

1. Where one gave a trust deed to a bank, he was estopped to deny its power to take it.
2. The question whether a national bank may loan money, taking a trust deed as security, could not be raised by the borrower, but only by the United States.

3. A trust deed, made to secure a debt, giving the trustees power to sell the property conveyed for its nonpayment, and providing for a reconveyance on payment of the debt, is not void as imposing an unlawful restraint on alienation.

4. Where trustees of a trust deed, made parties to a foreclosure of a prior mortgage on the property covered by the deed, merely prayed that the decree establish as a fact their assertion of superiority to the claims of all other defendants, and declare their preference right to any surplus, and the judgment did not pretend to foreclose the deed, it is not merged therein.

Department 2. Appeals from superior court, Sacramento county; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action for redemption by J. E. Camp and wife against William Land. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

McKune & George, for appellants. Holl & Dunn, for appellee.

HENSHAW, J. These appeals are from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial. To secure payment of his promissory note, plaintiff Camp had executed a mortgage upon certain realty to defendant, Land. Afterwards, being indebted to the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., he executed to trustees in its behalf a deed of trust to the same land affected by the mortgage. This deed was in the form commonly used in this state, and frequently considered by this court. Land brought suit to foreclose his mortgage, impleading the Camps, husband and wife, the bank, its trustees under the deed of trust, and others. The bank and its trustees answered, averring the debt due the former from Camp, and setting forth the trust deed. The priority of Land's mortgage lien was conceded, but the trustees' interest under their deed was asserted to be superior to the claims of all other defendants. The prayer was that the decree establish this fact, and that if, upon the sale of the land, any money remained after payment of plaintiff's just demands, it be applied in extinguishment or reduction of the debt due the bank. Mrs. Camp answered this pleading. She denied that the bank was a corporation organized under the laws of the United States, and denied the indebtedness of her husband to the bank. She alleged a violation of the law by the bank in making the loan and accepting the security. She set up the filing by her of a declaration of homestead affecting 54 acres of the mortgaged premises, and asked that the land, if sold, be sold in parcels, reserving the homestead portion until the last. The court found in favor of plaintiff, and in favor of the defendant bank and its trustees. It decreed the sale of so much of the land as might be necessary to pay the demand of plaintiff, and directed that the sale be made by parcels. It proved necessary to sell all of the land to extinguish plaintiff's debt. The homestead portion brought $3,748.60. Land was the purchaser. In time plaintiffs brought this action, asking to be allowed to redeem the homestead from the sale. Land answered, denying their right, and by cross complaint pleaded title in fee in himself, and sought a decree quieting his title. Upon the trial, plaintiffs offered and secured the admission in evidence of the judgment roll in Land against Camp et al., and rested their case. Defendant, and cross complainant, by the parol evidence of the bank's president, received without objection, proved the organization of the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. as a national bank under the laws of the United States, and established the additional fact that for many years before and after the execution of the trust deed it had done business as a national bank. The deed of trust was admitted in evidence over plaintiffs' objections and exception. The default of Camp, the trustor under the deed, was shown, and also a sale of the property to defendant according to its terms. The judgment of the court passed for defendant, and quieted his title against the claims of the plaintiffs. The facts abundantly justified this judgment, unless, as plaintiffs contend,—and it is their only contention,—the deed of trust was improperly admitted in evidence against them.

1. Of the objections to the introduction of this deed the first goes to the absence of proof of the corporate existence of the bank, and of its capacity to enter into the contract in question. But it is sufficient to answer, with reference to the plaintiff J. E. Camp, that, since he dealt with the bank as a corporation having power to enter into the particular contract, and since he received the benefit of that contract, upon well-settled principles of equity he may not be heard to advance these objections. Association v. Clark, 67 Cal. 634, 8 Pac. 445; Irrigation Co. v. Warner, 72 Cal. 379, 14 Pac. 37; Yancey v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 1111; Bank v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 604, 34 Pac. 337. As to his wife, those very questions were litigated by and decided against her in the foreclosure suit; while, as to both husband and wife, the evidence of the bank's president, admitted without objection, is sufficient to establish the de facto character of the institution. And, even if it be admitted that the bank, under sections 5136, 5137, Rev. St. U. S., was not authorized to make the loan in question, it did not lie with plaintiffs to raise this point. The United States alone can be heard upon this question. Bank v. Mathews, 98 U. S. 621; Bank v. Whitney, 103 U. S. 99.

2. The trust deed is in the form of those considered in such cases as Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 300; Bateman v. Burr, 57 Cal. 480; Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 922. The objection that it is void as imposing an unlawful restraint upon alienation has been decided against appellant's contention in the very recent case of Bank v. Alcorn (Cal.) 53 Pac. 813.

3. The final objection, that the deed was merged in the foreclosure judgment, is not tenable. It is not even necessary to decide whether the trustees could treat such a deed as a mortgage, and seek an equitable foreclosure and sale. The fact is that they did not attempt to do so. The judgment of the court makes no pretense so to foreclose, and therefore there can be no merger.

A junior mortgagee, brought into court at the suit of a superior mortgagee, may do one of two things: either affirmatively seek a foreclosure upon his own account, or without foreclosure ask for an application of any surplus to the reduction of his own debt. In the one case his mortgage lien is merged in the judgment; in the other, it is not. In Black v. Gerichten, 58 Cal. 56, the earlier case of Frink v. Murphy, 21 Cal. 108, is reviewed, and this distinction clearly pointed out. It was the latter course which the trustees adopted, and their deed was not extinguished, nor their rights under it merged, in the Land judgment. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

STANQUIST v. HEBBARD, Judge. (S. F. 1502.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1898.)

PROCESS—SUMMONS—SUFFICIENCY.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 407, providing that a summons shall notify defendant that, unless he appears and answers, plaintiff will take judgment for the money or damages demanded as arising on contract, or will apply for any other relief demanded by the complaint, it is not necessary that a summons state the nature of the cause of action against the defendant.

2. A summons which, in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 407, providing what a summons shall contain, notifies defendant that, if he does not appear and answer, judgment will be taken against him for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or that application will be made to the court for any other relief demanded in the complaint, is not void on the ground that the relief asked for is in the alternative.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 407, requiring a summons to notify defendant that, unless he appear and answer, plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded as arising upon contract, or will apply to the court for any other relief demanded in the complaint, a summons may demand only damages or only equitable relief.

In bank.

Catherine Stanquist petitions for a writ of mandate against J. C. B. Hebbard, judge of the superior court of San Francisco. Writ issued.

Stafford & Stafford, for petitioner.

GAROUTTE, J. This is a petition for a writ of mandate to compel respondent, as judge of the superior court, to proceed with the trial of the case of Stanquist against Stanquist. The action is one of divorce, and personal service of the summons was had. The judge refuses to proceed further with the trial, upon the ground that the summons is defective in material parts, and by reason of such defects no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant has been obtained.

It is first insisted that the summons is void because it does not state the nature of the cause of action alleged against defendant. A sufficient answer to this contention is found in the fact that the statute which provides what matters shall be stated in the summons fails to make such a requirement. While it might be a convenience to a defendant to be able to ascertain from the face of the summons the nature of the action brought against him, yet, being a convenience merely, the legislature has the right to deprive him of it. None of his constitutional rights are denied him by reason of a failure upon the part of the state legislature to require the summons to include a general statement as to the nature of the cause of action. The Code of Civil Procedure (section 407) now reads: "The summons must be directed to the defendant, signed by the clerk and issued under the seal of the court, and must contain: * * * (3) A notice that unless the defendant so appears and answers the plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the court for any other relief demanded in the complaint." The summons in the present case, following the very language of the statute, states: "You are notified that unless the defendant so appears and answers the plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the court for any other relief demanded in the complaint." It is now insisted that the summons is void because the relief to be asked for is stated in the alternative. Prior to the last session of the legislature, section 407, as to this matter, provided (subdivision 4): "In an action arising on contract for the recovery of money or damages only, a notice that unless the defendant so appears and answers the plaintiff will take judgment for the sum demanded in the complaint (stating it)." Subdivision 5: "In other actions a notice that unless defendant so appears and answers the plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint. The name of the plaintiff's attorney must be endorsed on the summons." Why the legislature made these changes in the law, and bulked the legislation found in subdivisions 3 and 4 of the old section into subdivision 3 of the new section, we do not know. But by elementary principles of statutory construction, the court has a right to assume that some change in the meaning of the statute was intended by this radical change in the language of the statute. At the same time it must be borne in mind that section 407 does not assume to declare the particular form of a summons, but declares what matters it must contain; and a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute in making a statement of those matters is all that is required. The summons under consideration follows literally the language of the Code, and must be held sufficient. To be sure, the purpose and intent of the statute is most awkwardly expressed, but that fact is a matter with which the court has nothing to do. The statute is not so bad as to be meaningless, and if the legislature in its wisdom sees fit to frame this statute in the alternative form, as to the relief to be demanded by the plaintiff, it certainly has the power so to do. It seems the purpose of this provision of the section, in part at least, was to require the defendant to look to the complaint alone to ascertain the nature of the cause of action alleged against him. Especially is this apparent when we find that the legislature, at the same time, repealed that subdivision of the section requiring the summons to state generally the nature of the cause of action. Under the notice now provided by the section, the defendant may only ascertain the relief sought against him by an examination of the complaint. It will be observed that the legislature, in enacting this section as it now stands, also repealed that portion of the old section requiring the summons in actions arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages to state the amount for which plaintiff will take judgment in case of failure to answer. Possibly this change in the law has affected the power of the clerk to enter up judgments in certain cases as provided in section 585, but that is a matter in no way touching the jurisdictional question here involved. The legislature had the power to prescribe the contents of a summons, omitting therefrom all matters now found in subdivision 3 of the section. This could have been done, and still defendant had due process of law. Hence the whole matter is purely one of statute,—a matter solely with the legislature. If subdivision 3 of the section could be repealed by the legislature, and still sufficient of the section remain to constitute a valid summons, then the mere fact that the matters stated in that subdivision are stated in the alternative furnishes no ground upon which to hold the summons void.

In deciding that a summons which follows the language of section 407 is not void, we do not intimate that a summons based on a complaint on contract for money or damages, or a summons based upon a complaint asking for equitable relief, would be void if not worded in the alternative. In one case a notice that, unless the defendant appears and answers, the plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, and in the other case a notice that unless the defendant so appears and answers the plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint, would substantially comply with the statute. For the foregoing reasons the writ should issue, and it is so ordered.

WALLACE v. RANDOL. (S. F. 804.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 7, 1898.)

BROKERS—BILLS AND NOTES—CONSIDERATION.

Plaintiff brokers were engaged to sell certain property for a specified commission, one-half to be paid when the first installment of the price was paid, and the other half on the payment of the second installment. A sale was effected, it being agreed that the purchaser should be allowed one-half of the commissions. To settle the purchasers' claim that they were entitled to one-half of the entire commission on the payment of the first installment, plaintiffs allowed the former to retain half the entire commission, and entered into an agreement with them which recited that the purchasers had received the full amount of their commission, and plaintiffs were to have all the commission due on the second installment; and that certain nonnegotiable notes contemporaneously executed by the purchasers to plaintiffs for plaintiffs' share of the commission on the first installment should be returned to the purchasers if the second payment "was completed." The second installment was not paid, and plaintiffs sued the purchasers on the notes. There was nothing to show that plaintiffs had in any way prevented the payment of the second installment. Held that, irrespective of whether there was a tender of the second installment by the purchasers, and a wrongful refusal of the sellers to accept it, which of itself would "earn" the commission, plaintiffs were entitled to recover on the notes, since they were based on a valuable consideration, and the second payment was not "completed."

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by James H. Wallace against James B. Randol to recover on a note. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward J. Pringle, for appellant. W. S. Goodfellow, for appellee.

GAROUTTE, J. The facts of this case, as disclosed by the record, are somewhat complicated. In many respects we do not see their materiality as bearing upon the merits of the present litigation, and proceed to state those we deem material. A Scottish company owned a large tract of land in the state of California, known as the "Chowchilla Ranch." They placed this ranch in the hands of a broker in London for sale at the price of $1,500,000, agreeing to pay him $75,000 commission if effecting a sale,—one-half of this commission to be paid when the first installment of the purchase price was paid, and one-half upon the payment of the second installment. The London broker secured the services of Catton, Bell & Co., brokers of the city of San Francisco, to assist him in effecting a sale of the property, agreeing to pay them for their services three-fourths of the commission. The San Francisco brokers found purchasers in E. B. Perrin and James B. Randol, and agreed that they should be allowed one-half of the commission, which amount was to be credited upon the purchase price. Perrin and Randol paid the first installment of the purchase price. This payment was composed in part of commissions on the sale, and in crediting those commissions as part payment complications arose which have come to a head in this litigation. $37,500 in commissions being due when Perrin and Randol made the first payment, they claimed a credit to that extent. But the London broker claiming one quarter interest in the commissions, and Catton, Bell & Co. claiming one quarter interest, a difference between the parties arose. A one-fourth part of this commission earned amounted to $9,375. This difference between Perrin and Randol upon the one part and Catton, Bell & Co. upon the other part was settled in the following manner: Randol, having a one-third interest in the purchase, gave Catton, Bell & Co. his promissory note for $3,125, payable upon the 2d day of February, 1892. Perrin, having a two-thirds interest in the purchase, gave his promissory note to Catton, Bell & Co. for $6,250, payable at the same time. The date of the payment of these notes was also the date when the second installment of the purchase price would fall due. As part of the transaction between the parties at this time an agreement was entered into, which recites: "Witnesseth, the said Randol and Perrin have this day received from Messrs. Catton, Bell & Company the sum of twenty-eight thousand one hundred and twenty-five ($28,125) dollars, in full payment of their share of the commission on the sale of the Chowchilla Ranch, situated in Merced and Fresno counties, and therefore waive all claim to any portion of the commission that is payable when the second payment is completed on account of the purchase of the ranch. * * * The said Randol has this day given his note unnegotiable for $3,125 to the said Catton, Bell & Company, and the said Perrin his note unnegotiable for $6,250. Both of said notes are to be held as security for the payment of the shares of Catton, Bell & Company in the said commission, upon the understanding that, should the second payment to be made on account of the ranch out of which is to come the full share of Catton, Bell & Company in the commission, to wit, $28,125, be completed, the said notes are to be returned to the said Randol and Perrin, respectively; otherwise the notes shall be considered good and payable to the extent to which there may be deficiency in the commission of said Catton, Bell & Company." In due course the time arrived when these notes became due and payable. No second payment was made to the Scottish company upon the purchase price of the ranch, hence no commissions came to Catton, Bell & Co.; and this action was thereupon commenced against Randol upon his note by the assignee of the brokers. He now appeals from the judgment rendered against him. Clearing away the rubbish, we find the foregoing facts are practically all that are material to the consideration of this case. Both evidence and argument have been presented as to the liability of the Scottish company for the balance of the commission, and also time and labor have been spent in attempting to show that it was the fault of the Scottish company that the second installment of the purchase price upon the ranch was not paid, and also that Perrin and Randol made a legal and proper tender of such installment of the purchase price. It is further disclosed that the original contract of purchase between the Scottish company and Perrin and Randol was subsequently modified, and practically supplanted, by other and different contracts. But we fail to see the materiality of these matters as bearing upon the pending litigation. The note here sued upon and the contemporaneous contract were matters arising entirely between Catton, Bell & Co. upon the one side and Perrin and Randol upon the other. They were contracts in which the Scottish company was not a party, and in the result of which it had no possible interest.

Let us see what the contract was between these parties. They had $28,125 in commissions to divide, one part to the brokers and two parts to Perrin and Randol. With the utmost liberality let us concede that Perrin and Randol claimed this entire amount, yet at the same time it must be conceded that Catton, Bell & Co. claimed one-third of it. Whatever may have been the exact claim of Perrin and Randol to the portion claimed by Catton, Bell & Co., to wit, $9,375, they induced those brokers to relinquish that claim, and as a consideration for such relinquishment they gave their respective notes to the brokers for the amount, payable February 1, 1892, the time when the balance of the purchase price fell due. And they thereupon agreed by the instrument from which we have quoted that, if such purchase price was not completed, then these notes were to be deemed immediately due and payable. This was a plain, fair contract entered into by the parties, based upon valuable considerations, and unless Catton, Bell & Co. in some way prevented the payment of the balance of the purchase price, they are entitled to recover in this action. Nothing of the kind is alleged. No fraud is suggested. It is apparent that the Scottish company, by any act upon its part, could not defeat recovery upon these notes, for it was in no sense a party to the transaction. Catton, Bell & Co., in making the contract were acting for themselves alone. Even the London broker had no interest of any kind or character in the matter. The notes would become due and payable upon the happening of a certain event, namely, noncompletion of the purchase price. This event took place, and under the terms of the agreement a cause of action at once arose. Conceding the alleged tender of Perrin and Randol to the Scottish company had the legal effect of an earning of the balance of the commission agreed to be paid by that company,—a matter not necessary to here consider,—still that was not the condition specified in the agreement which was to render the notes nugatory.

"Earning the commission" is not the equivalent of a "completion" of the payment of the purchase price. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

LATTA v. TUTTON. (L. A. 428.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 13, 1898.)

MORTGAGES — DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT — PERSONAL SERVICE — PRESUMPTIONS — PLEDGES — TENDER — DEMAND — LIEN — EXTINGUISHMENT — CONVERSION.

1. A recital in a default judgment for a deficiency after a foreclosure sale, that defendants "were regularly and duly summoned" to answer the complaint, does not raise the presumption of a personal service on defendants, where the judgment roll shows that the service was by publication.

2. A deficiency judgment rendered in an action to foreclose a mortgage is void on its face where the judgment roll shows that the service was by publication.

3. Where a tender is made to a pledgee, who makes no objection to the amount of it, but does not surrender the pledge or accept the tender, the lien is extinguished, and his possession becomes a wrongful conversion, even though the tender is in fact less than the amount due the pledgee.

4. No demand for the return of pledged property need be made where the pledgee claims ownership in himself.

5. In an action of claim and delivery, the sufficiency of a demand by pledgor for the return of the pledged goods is admitted by pledgee's failure to deny it in his answer.

6. A pledgee who surrenders his possession for the purpose of selling the pledged property, and who becomes the purchaser under a void sheriff's sale, loses his lien on the property, so that no tender of the amount due thereon is necessary in order that pledgor may maintain an action to recover its possession.

Commissioners' decision, department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by Ida Latta against George M. Tutton. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Parrish & Mossholder and Puterbaugh & Puterbaugh, for appellant. Gibson & Titus and J. C. Hizar, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Claim and delivery of certain five bonds of the Linda Vista irrigation district of the value of $500 each. Defendant denies the ownership of plaintiff, and claims ownership in himself, and sets up the statute of limitations. The pleadings are verified. The trial was by the court, and the findings of fact are: That plaintiff was the owner of the property on November 12, 1892, and ever since has been such owner, as her separate property; that on the day last named W. C. Latta, husband of plaintiff, delivered the property to defendant as a pledge, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, as part of the security for a loan of $2,500, evidenced by a note executed by plaintiff and her husband, due three years after date, secured by mortgage on certain real estate; that defendant foreclosed said mortgage upon said real estate, and it was sold thereunder, leaving a deficiency of $523.28; that plaintiff, at the city of San Diego, on January 7, 1897, prior to the commencement of this suit, offered in writing to pay defendant said sum, with legal interest, the amount she claimed to be due defendant on said indebtedness, and demanded possession of said bonds; that defendant made no objection to the amount of the offer in any wise or at all, and refused to accept said offer or deliver the property; that defendant received such pledge in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, and without any knowledge that plaintiff owned or claimed said bonds, and believing that her said husband was the owner thereof; that the agreement of pledge was not in writing, and by its terms was not to be performed within one year from the making thereof; that the cause of action is not barred; that defendant, on September 29, 1894, claimed to be the owner of said bonds, and has since claimed ownership of them, "but defendant [should be plaintiff] had no knowledge of said claim until said demand was made." As conclusions of law from the facts and from the admissions of the pleadings the court found the plaintiff to be the owner of the property, and entitled to its possession or value thereof, and that the cause of action is not barred, and gave judgment accordingly. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying motion for new trial, and comes here on bill of exceptions.

1. Defendant claims title by virtue of a levy of execution on his deficiency judgment, and sale thereunder to him of October 20, 1894. The validity of this purchase is drawn in question, and arises on the judgment in the foreclosure proceedings. The only service on the defendants in that action shown by the record was by publication of summons, and this appears from the judgment roll. The judgment was by default, and contains the following recital: " * * * It appearing to the satisfaction of the court that said defendants, W. C. Latta, Ida B. Latta, and James F. Brooks, have, and each of them has, been regularly and duly summoned to answer unto the plaintiff's complaint herein, and said defendants have, and each of them has, made default in that behalf, and that the default of each of said defendants for not appearing and answering unto plaintiff's complaint has been duly made and regularly entered herein," etc. We are asked to presume personal service from the recitals found in the judgment alone, although the judgment roll shows what service was in fact made, and that it was made by publication. The presumption which the law implies in support of judgments of courts of general jurisdiction only arises with respect to jurisdictional facts concerning which the record is silent. Galpin v. Page, 85 U. S. 350. Here the record is not silent. The recital in the judgment applied as well to service by publication as to personal service, and the recital must be presumed to refer to such service as the record affirmatively discloses. Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635. A judgment void upon its face is one that appears to be void by an inspection of the judgment roll. People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 607, 24 Pac. 311; Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 Pac. 899; Whitney v. Daggett, 108 Cal. 232, 41 Pac. 471. The deficiency judgment was void. Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65, 13 Pac. 73; Blumberg v. Birch, 99 Cal. 416, 34 Pac. 102.

2. Much attention is given by counsel to the question whether there was a sufficient tender to and demand made upon defendant by plaintiff before the action was brought. Plaintiff alleged a demand and refusal to surrender possession, and that at the time of the demand "plaintiff offered to pay defendant the sum of $523.28, with interest thereon from September 29, 1894, at seven per cent. per annum; that defendant refused to accept said offer, and refused to deliver said property to plaintiff, and claimed to be the owner thereof." This is admitted by failure to deny. Defendant sets up a pledge to himself of the property, and alleges ownership of it since November 12, 1892, the date of the pledge. The only evidence of ownership in defendant is his purchase from the sheriff under the void deficiency judgment, to accomplish which he surrendered possession of the bonds to the sheriff, in order that the execution might be levied, and the sale made; and at the sale he became the purchaser. When the tender was made to him, he made no objection to the amount. The effect of the tender was to release the bonds from any further claim of defendant by reason of his lien. Haile v. Smith, 113 Cal. 656, 45 Pac. 872. We think that when a tender is made to a pledgee, and he makes no objection to the amount, but does not surrender the pledge nor accept the tender, the result is to extinguish the lien, and amounts to a wrongful conversion, even though the tender in fact is less than the amount that may be due the pledgee. It is his duty to make known his objections, and, failing to do so, the tender must be deemed to have been the full amount due, and his refusal to surrender the property is a wrongful conversion. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250, 14 Pac. 369, 15 Pac. 773, citing section 2910, Civ. Code; Jones, Pledges, § 543. Whether the demand was sufficient need not be decided, for, being admitted by failure to deny, and defendant claiming ownership in himself by his answer, no demand was necessary. Cobbey, Repl. § 447 et seq.; Wells, Repl. § 374; Jones v. Spears, 47 Cal. 20.

3. Defendant's original possession as lienor was lawful, and was dependent upon possession (Civ. Code, § 2988); but when he surrendered that possession, and became a purchaser under a void sale, he no longer could be said to be in the lawful possession, nor that he came into possession lawfully. He was thenceforward in the position of any purchaser without right under void sheriff's sale, and, having lost his lien, no tender was necessary. It is therefore immaterial whether the tender was good or not. It was held in Wingard v. Banning, 39 Cal. 543, that if a common carrier sues out and procures to be levied a writ of attachment against property on which he has a lien for freight, he thereby abandons and forfeits his lien. No more do we think a pledgee can surrender the pledge to be sold on an execution, and afterwards be allowed to fall back on his original claim of lien in the event his purchase at sheriff's sale proves abortive. Jones, Pledges, §§ 328-330. It was so held in Jacobs v. Latour, 5 Bing. 130, and that the subsequent possession must have been acquired under the sale. Jones, Pledges, § 1014.

4. The action was not barred by the statute of limitations. The court found that defendant claimed ownership, September 29, 1894, and has ever since, but that plaintiff had no knowledge of such claim. The sheriff's sale of the bonds was October 20, 1894. The tender and demand were made shortly before complaint was filed. In any case the action was in time. Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 3. We discover no error, and therefore recommend that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

Action by one Barker against Gould and others to determine adverse claims to waters of a tunnel. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Canfield & Starbuck, for appellants. Thomas McNulta, Richards & Carrier, and W. S. Day, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff is the owner of certain lands in the county of Santa Barbara, situated upon both sides of a natural stream of water known as "Cold Spring Creek," which rises at a point north of the plaintiff's land, and flows through his premises into lands belonging to the appellants, which border upon the stream and lie south of and below the plaintiff's lands. Between July 1, 1894, and the commencement of this action, the plaintiff constructed a tunnel upon his land, on the east side of the creek, into which the water percolates from the adjoining land, and produces a stream which flows from its mouth, discharging at that point about  $4\frac{1}{2}$  inches of water under a four-inch pressure. The mouth of the tunnel is adjacent to the east bank of the creek, at an elevation of about 5 feet above the creek, and the tunnel runs from that point 100 feet in a direction nearly at right angles with the creek; thence, in a northerly direction and nearly parallel with the general course of the creek, 450 feet; thence, in a northerly direction, gradually diverging from the course of the creek, 375 feet, where it terminates at a point about 600 feet from the creek, measured along the strike of the strata. The tunnel is constructed with a slight deviation from a horizontal line, so that at a distance of 40 feet from its mouth it passes below the level of the creek, and at its breast, or inner end, its floor is at a depth of 120 feet below the level of the creek. The appellants, other than the Montecito Water Company, are the owners of certain lands which are riparian to the creek, and situate south of and below the lands of the plaintiff, and the water company claims the right to the use of a portion of the waters of the creek under a grant from them.

The plaintiff alleges that he is the owner of all the water which flows from the tunnel, and that the defendants make some claim against him to the water entering and flowing from the tunnel, the exact nature of which is unknown to him, but that their claim thereto is without right, and asks that they be required to set forth their respective claims, and that it be adjudged that they are invalid and void as against him, and that he is the owner of all the water entering the tunnel and discharging therefrom. In their answer to the complaint the appellants set forth their ownership of the lands as above, and that they are riparian to the creek, and allege that the water which enters the tunnel and is discharged therefrom is a portion of the water naturally flowing in the creek, but which, by reason of the nature of the rock through which the tunnel is excavated, has been abstracted from the creek; that such abstraction by the plaintiff is without right, and is an infringement upon their right to have all the water which naturally flows in the creek flow down to and through their lands.

At the trial the following issue was submitted to a jury that was called in to advise the court thereon, viz.: "Does the tunnel constructed by plaintiff abstract any water from the Cold Spring branch of the Montecito creek or any of its tributaries? If so, how much?"—to which issue the jury replied,

"No; it does not." The court accepted this verdict in its own findings upon the evidence, and found that the stream of water which flows from the tunnel is the accumulation of percolations from the soil and rocks, percolating therein from the adjoining land on either side of the tunnel, and that said tunnel was not constructed with the intention of abstracting the water from Cold Spring branch of Montecito creek, and that it does not abstract the water from said stream or any of its tributaries. Upon these findings of fact the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The appellants moved for a new trial, and, it having been denied, they have appealed therefrom and also from the judgment.

The point particularly discussed by counsel upon this appeal is the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the above findings of the court, but, as these findings were made upon the consideration to be given to conflicting evidence, we are not at liberty to review them. Whether the water entering the tunnel and flowing therefrom was withdrawn from the creek by reason of the construction of the tunnel, or was made up of percolations from the ground adjacent to the tunnel, independent of the creek, was the issue to which the evidence of both the plaintiff and the defendants was directed. Upon this issue the burden of establishing the claim of the defendants was upon them. There was no evidence of any visible or open flow of water from the creek to the tunnel, but the defendants sought to establish the fact by means of expert testimony, based upon the geological formation of the surrounding country, the direction and angle of dip of the strata, the character of rock in the different strata, and the character of the intervening seams. Testimony upon these subjects, and of the conclusions to be drawn therefrom, was also given on behalf of the plaintiff, and the court was called upon to determine, not only the weight to be given to the evidence on either side of the question, but also the value of each witness as an expert thereon. The conclusion of each expert witness was but an opinion formed by him from his knowledge of the science applicable to the subject-matter of the investigation, and his capacity for forming this opinion, as well as the value to which the opinion was entitled, depended upon the extent of his studies and of his experience in reference to that subject, and also upon the extent to which he had applied the knowledge thus acquired by him to this particular subject. His testimony was not of a fact, but was merely his deduction from other facts under the theory adopted by him as the result of his previous studies and experience. The court was not required to accept the opinion of either expert as conclusive upon the subject, unless it should be satisfied that it was based upon cogent and sufficient reasons; and its action in determining the sufficiency or cogency of these reasons is as conclusive upon the weight to be given thereto as is its decision upon a conflict of testimony upon any other question at issue. The decision of the trial court that the water entering the tunnel and flowing therefrom was the result of percolations from the soil adjacent to the tunnel, and was not abstracted from the creek, necessarily implies that it did not consider the testimony of the expert on behalf of the defendants to be entitled to sufficient weight to overcome the testimony on behalf of the plaintiff. The judgment and order are affirmed.

HUMPHREY v. POPE. (Sac. 461.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1898.)

RIGHT OF WIFE TO SUE—ENTICEMENT OF HUSBAND—PLEADING.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, providing that a wife, when living separate from her husband by reason of his desertion of her, may sue alone, the desertion need not have continued for the statutory period entitling a wife to a divorce, but a voluntary separation with intent to desert is sufficient.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 49, declaring that the rights of personal relation forbid (1) "the abduction of a husband from his wife," etc., and (2) "the abduction or enticement of a wife from her husband," etc., the right of action of the wife is not limited to a case where her husband has been forcibly taken from her, but she has the same right to sue for the enticement of her husband as the husband has to sue for her enticement.

3. A wife may maintain an action against a third person for enticing her husband away from her and destroying his affection for her.

4. The fact that the damages recovered in such action might be community property does not affect the wife's right of action.

5. A complaint for the enticement or abduction of plaintiff's husband and the alienating of his affections, alleging that defendant during the marriage, and before the commencement of the action, destroyed his affection for her, and illegally enticed and abducted him, is not objectionable for ambiguity in not showing whether the abduction was committed before or after the husband's desertion of plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Mary L. Humphrey against Louisa C. Pope. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

James A. Louttit, for appellant. Gibson & Ramage and J. G. Swinnerton, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for damages. A demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained without leave to further amend, and judgment was given in favor of defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted. The complaint alleged that at all the times mentioned in the complaint plaintiff and one W. G. Humphrey were husband and wife. On the —— day of September, 1896, the husband willfully deserted plaintiff, and by reason of said desertion plaintiff "is living separate and apart from him." Defendant, "willfully and wrongfully intending to injure plaintiff, and to deprive her of the affection, support, comfort, fellowship, society, aid, and assistance of * * * the said husband, wrongfully, * * * at divers days and times before the commencement of this action, and while such marriage existed, alienated and destroyed the affection of the * * * husband of this plaintiff, * * * and did illegally persuade, entice, and abduct said W. G. Humphrey from plaintiff, whereby plaintiff has wholly lost and been deprived of the assistance, comfort, fellowship, society, aid, and support of * * * her said husband; to all of which plaintiff during all said time was entitled * * * and otherwise would have had, but for the illegal persuasion, conversation, and the enticement, abduction, and doings and actions of defendant, as hereinbefore recited." The demurrer was upon several grounds: (1) Plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue; (2) insufficiency of facts to constitute a cause of action; (3) the complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain.

1. Respondent contends that plaintiff could not bring the action without making her husband a party plaintiff. The amended complaint was filed June 7, 1897, and the alleged desertion occurred in September, 1896. The statutory period required to make the desertion cause of divorce had not elapsed. In Andrews v. Runyon, 65 Cal. 629, 4 Pac. 669, the wife sued in her own name alone for personal injuries. It was objected that she could not do so, but that the husband must be joined. It was held that section 370, Code Civ. Proc., authorized the suit, because when commenced she was living separate and apart from her husband by reason of his desertion of her. Baldwin v. Railroad Co., 77 Cal. 390, 19 Pac. 644. Section 370, supra, requires the husband to be joined when a married woman is a party, which is the common-law rule; but the section introduces certain exceptions, and among them: "(3) When she is living separate and apart from her husband by reason of his desertion of her, or by agreement in writing entered into between them, she may sue or be sued alone." It was held under the provisions of the act of March 9, 1870 (St. 1869-70, p. 226), in Tobin v. Galvin, 49 Cal. 34, that the words, "while living separate and apart from her husband," do not mean a temporary absence of the wife. There must have been an abandonment on the part of the husband or wife, or a separation which was intended to be final. The Code adds to the language of the former act the words, "by reason of his desertion of her." The desertion through which comes the separation and forms the exception we do not think must necessarily have continued for the statutory period entitling the wife to a divorce. But the desertion must be such as is given as a cause for divorce by section 95, Civ. Code, to wit, a voluntary separation with intent to desert. The two sections should be read together to ascertain the meaning of the word "desertion" in section 370, supra. Section 107, Civ. Code, fixes the time the desertion must continue; but what is willful desertion is defined by section 95, supra. It would be a harsh rule and an unwarranted construction of the statute to hold that a husband may willfully separate from his wife with intent to desert, and yet that she could not maintain an action for a personal injury to herself if it occurred at any time within one year after the husband's desertion and abandonment of her. We think the allegations of the complaint sufficient upon this point.

2. The more serious question is that raised by respondent for insufficiency of facts alleged. The argument is that personal rights are defined by section 43, Civ. Code, and include the right to protection from injury to personal relations, and that such injuries are carefully defined by section 49, Id., and are entirely different from injuries to the person, such as bodily restraint, bodily harm, and defamation, which are enumerated in section 43, Id. Section 49 reads: "The rights of personal relation forbid: (1) The abduction of a husband from his wife, or of a parent from his child; (2) the abduction or enticement of a wife from her husband, of a child from a parent or from a guardian entitled to its custody, or of a servant from his master." Respondent claims that "abduction" means something different from "enticement," and that this is recognized by section 49, because the word "enticement" is omitted from clause 1, but is included in clause 2.

The word "abduct" is from the Latin "abduco," to lead away. Abduction is the taking away a wife, child, or ward by fraud and persuasion or open violence. Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. 606; State v. George, 93 N. C. 570. In private or civil law it is the act of taking away a man's wife by violence or persuasion. 3 Steph. Comm. 536. In reason, the wife should be as much entitled to sue for violation of her personal right, where her husband has been taken away from her by enticement, if such right exist at all, as should the husband, when his wife has been enticed from him. Ordinarily the injury is greater to the wife than to the husband. We are unwilling to give a construction to this section which would limit the wife to an action when her husband has been forcibly taken from her. Our criminal statute as to the crime of abduction for purposes of prostitution uses the words "takes away" for the word "abduct," and it has been held "that a physical carrying away is not required to constitute the taking, but that inducements are sufficient." People v. Demousset, 71 Cal. 611, 12 Pac. 788. In the decisions of courts generally the word "abduction" and the words "taking away" are used as the equivalent of each other, as we think they in fact are. We are unwilling to impute to the legislature any intention to give to the husband a right of action for the abduction of his wife, under clause 2, § 49, Civ. Code, of which the wife is deprived by the phraseology of clause 1. The abduction meant in both clauses we think should be held to be the same. And this brings us to the question, has the wife an action against another woman for enticing the husband away from and destroying his affection for her?

It was decided as early as the nineteenth year of George II., in Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes, 577, and has been the law ever since, that the husband has an action for enticing away his wife,—for taking away from him the comfort and society of his wife (per quod consortium amisit),—and the action was invented to help out the lonely and forsaken husband. But at common law the wife had no right of property in any damages recovered on her account for any cause, and was given no right of action to recover them. She was not only inferior to her husband, but she had no personal identity separate from him. As the wife was then regarded, the courts, with perfect consistency, in denying her this action, simply added this to her many other disabilities. Obviously and grossly wrong, such, nevertheless, was the generally accepted theory of the common law. And yet it was not accepted without protest, for in Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577, Lord Chancellor Campbell said: "Nor can I allow that the loss of consortium, or conjugal society, can give a cause of action to the husband alone." I have been able to find but two cases in this country not overruled, and respondent cites no others, where this barbarous discrimination has been approved. Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 45 N. W. 522; Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 20 Atl. 83. The first of these decisions was placed upon the ground that neither the common law nor the statutes of the state gave the wife the right to maintain such an action. The second denies the right apparently because (1) against good policy, and (2) particularly because it is not allowed by statute. Opposed to this view, and giving to the wife a right of action, without joining her husband, on various grounds,—in some states because the statutes have removed the disabilities from the wife, in others on the broad ground that the wife should have the action,—we find a long array of decisions the force and reasoning of which are entirely satisfactory to our minds. The courts of last resort have so held in Connecticut, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, Kansas, Nebraska, and Tennessee. The cases are too numerous to be cited, and we content ourselves by referring to a few of them. Bennett v. Bennett (1889) 116 N. Y. 584, 23 N. E. 17, where it was said that the common law gave the right of action, but afforded no remedy, and that the remedy is now supplied by the Code; Westlake v. Westlake (1878) 34 Ohio St. 621, where the doctrine of the common law and the reason upon which it rests are clearly pointed out; Warren v. Warren (1891) 89 Mich. 123, 50 N. W. 842, where the leading case (Duffies v. Duffies, supra) against the right is controverted, and many of the cases in support of the action are cited; Foot v. Card (1889) 58 Conn. 1, 18 Atl. 1027, where the points presented in the present case are fully met, and where will be found a lucid statement of the modern opinion upon the subject, and where it is held that by the very nature of the action, and "of legal necessity, therefore, damages for injury to this right must be to her solely," and this even though at the time the husband was living with his wife, the plaintiff. See, also, Price v. Price (1894) 91 Iowa, 693, 60 N. W. 202; Clow v. Chapman (1894) 125 Mo. 101, 28 S. W. 328, where it was said: "As the only reason why the wife formerly could not maintain an action for the alienation of her husband's affections was the barbarous common-law fiction that her legal existence became suspended during the marriage and merged into his, which long since ceased to obtain in this jurisdiction, there remains now not the semblance of reason, in principle, why such an action may not be maintained here." It remains to determine whether the law of this state is such as to constrain us to adopt the effete and inhuman doctrine of the common law, or whether we may not follow the more enlightened and humane principles so universally approved in our own country. The right to sue in her own name is expressly given to plaintiff by paragraph 3, § 370, Code Civ. Proc. The only possible impediment to the right of action that may be suggested arises out of the question, would not the damages recovered be property of the community, and, if so, would not that fact require the husband to be joined? She is given the right of action, as we have seen, by section 49, Civ. Code. She is given the remedy in her own name by section 370, Code Civ. Proc. Where the husband sues for the loss of his wife's affections, the fact that the damages might or might not be held to be community property would not affect his right of action, and we can see no reason why any different rule should apply where the wife brings the action. Conceding, but not deciding, that any damages the plaintiff may recover would be community property, we think the action properly brought in her name alone.

3. The objection to the complaint for ambiguity, etc., respondent says is based upon the ground that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether the abduction was committed before or after the husband deserted the plaintiff. While we think it but fair to defendant to be informed with some certainty during what period of time the blandishments of the husband's seducer were brought to bear upon him, we cannot say that the action should be dismissed for failure to do so. The complaint does charge with definiteness that defendant during the marriage, and before the commencement of the action, did wrongfully destroy the husband's affection for plaintiff, and did illegally persuade, entice, and abduct him from her, whereby she was wholly deprived of his assistance, comfort, fellowship, and society. This alleged conduct of defendant may have begun while the husband was still living with his wife, and plaintiff would have the right to so show. The gist of the action alleged is the enticing or taking away of plaintiff's husband and alienating his affections. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

ROBERTS v. BURR. (L. A. 435.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—INTENT—POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—SUFFICIENCY.

1. Civ. Code, § 3442, makes a question of fraudulent intent one of fact. Act 1895 makes a voluntary transfer without consideration by one insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency, fraudulent as to creditors. Held, that the rule under section 3442, Civ. Code, was not changed by Act 1895, except in transfers of the kind specially mentioned in the act.

2. A firm composed of father and son sold to the wife and mother jewelry, which was delivered to her and kept for three months in her house, where she resided with her husband and son, except when she intrusted a part of it to them to sell to obtain necessities for the family; they returning it on failing to find a purchaser. Held, that there was an actual and continued change of possession, as against creditors.

3. A mother purchased jewelry from a firm composed of her son and another, and, after keeping the property three months, delivered it to plaintiff, to be sold on commission. Held, that the employment of the son by plaintiff to assist him in his business, under a contract to which the mother was not a party, did not indicate that there had been no actual and continued change of possession in the mother, as against creditors.

4. A firm sold its stock to a creditor, after which plaintiff purchased it from him, and published a newspaper notice stating that a member of the firm was his manager. Held, that as against firm creditors, who attached property of plaintiff as belonging to the firm, the notice was admissible to show the partner's connection with plaintiff's business.

5. As against one claiming goods under a purchase from an insolvent firm, a statement of the firm to a mercantile agency long before the sale is not admissible in behalf of attaching creditors, if no actual fraud is alleged, and the only question is whether there was an actual and continued change of possession in the purchaser.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by James H. Roberts against John Burr. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jones & Newby, for appellant. L. H. Valentine, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover possession or the value of certain jewelry, precious and semiprecious stones, as bailee of the owner. Defendant justifies as sheriff under an attachment. Defendant had judgment, from which, and from the order denying motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. The trial was by the court without a jury.

S. E. Lucas & Son (composed of S. E. Lucas and James H. Lucas) were in the jewelry business at Los Angeles. Emily A. Lucas was wife to S. E., and mother of James H. She had made large advances of money to the firm out of her separate estate, and the firm owed her on August 2, 1895, nearly $6,000. On that day the firm conveyed by written bill of sale and delivered to her the possession of certain of their goods, the subject of this action, of the value of $5,025. November 14th and 16th Mrs. Lucas delivered the goods to plaintiff, to be sold on commission. On January 7, 1896, one Trafton, a creditor of the firm, commenced an action against the firm by attachment, and caused the goods to be seized. Subsequently he obtained judgment, and the property was sold under execution; Trafton becoming the purchaser for the amount of his judgment and costs, about $700. The court found "that the execution of the bill of sale was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, * * * and was not followed by an actual and continued change of possession, * * * and no actual nor continued change of possession * * * had occurred at the time of the levy of the attachment." The court also found that plaintiff at the commencement of the action "was not the owner nor in the possession of, nor entitled to the possession of, the stock of jewelry * * * described in the complaint, as against an attaching creditor of the said S. E. and James H. Lucas," and "that the said bill of sale * * * is fraudulent and void against the creditors of the said S. E. and James H. Lucas."

Appellant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision. The sole question contested arises out of the finding that there was no immediate delivery followed by an actual and continued change of possession, as required by section 3440, Civ. Code. It appears from the evidence, and is not contradicted, that Lucas & Son were indebted to Mrs. Lucas as already stated, and that on her demand for payment they sold and delivered to her the goods in question. S. E. Lucas took the package to her, and delivered it and the bill of sale to her, and received certain notes, aggregating over $5,000, in payment. There is no substantial conflict as to the following facts: Mrs. Lucas at the time resided with her husband and son in a house belonging to her. She placed the package containing the articles when delivered to her in a private satchel, and put the satchel in her bedroom closet, to which her husband had access. In October she delivered some of the articles to her husband, and some to her son, to be sold to obtain necessities for the family; but, finding no purchaser, the articles were returned to her and replaced in the satchel, which she kept under lock and key. With this exception, neither the husband nor the son had possession or control of the property at any time. Lucas & Son continued in business until September 2d, when they sold out to Lyons & Son, creditors, and the latter went into exclusive possession. No question is raised as to the bona fides of this sale. On November 13th, plaintiff took a lease of the premises, and purchased the fixtures and fittings of Lyons & Son, and the latter surrendered the premises to plaintiff. He went into business, and advertised himself as dealer in precious stones, and placed his name on the window. He received goods on sale from several persons. On November 14th and 16th, Mrs. Lucas personally delivered to him the articles she had purchased from Lucas & Son, to be by him sold upon commission. He receipted to her for the goods. He took James Lucas into the store as manager, and agreed to share with him the profits of a certain part of the business and of the commissions, and James had the management in running the store. He reported sales to plaintiff from time to time, and they had settlements as to their share of the profits and commissions. James made return to Mrs. Lucas of sales of her goods made by plaintiff, paying over to her in all between three and four hundred dollars. Lucas, Sr., was at the store frequently, but took no part in its management. Both he and the son had advised the arrangement between Mrs. Lucas and plaintiff, and were present at the store when she brought the articles and delivered them to plaintiff; and James wrote the receipt, which plaintiff signed and gave to her. Plaintiff continued in charge and control of the business, James being the active manager; and on January 7, 1896, the attachment was served, and Mrs. Lucas' property was taken by the defendant sheriff. There is considerable evidence in the record, not summarized, tending more or less to bear upon the good faith of the sale, which might have some significance if actual fraud were alleged, but which, in our opinion, does not throw any light upon the issues, for the reason that there is no question of actual fraud presented by the pleadings or by the findings. Respondent cites Cook v. Cockins, 117 Cal. 140, 48 Pac. 1025, to the point that under section 3442, Civ. Code, as amended in 1895, the question of fraudulent intent in cases arising under section 3440, Civ. Code, is one of law, and not of fact, and that it was incumbent upon plaintiff to show the good faith of the transfer to Mrs. Lucas, as well as that it was accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by actual and continued change of possession. The provisions of section 3442 are unchanged by the act of 1895, except where the transfer is voluntary, or without a valuable consideration, by a party while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, in which case the transfer "shall be fraudulent and void as to existing creditors." With this exception, there is no change in the rule that fraudulent intent is a question of fact, and not of law, and when actual fraud is relied upon it must be alleged and proved. See cases cited in Cook v. Cockins, supra; Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045.

We think the fact that Mrs. Lucas claims by purchase from her husband and son cannot, of itself, in any way affect her rights any more than if the purchase had been from a stranger. Nor do we see that an immediate delivery followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the goods could not and did not take place because it was under the same roof where all the parties resided. This court sustained a sale of hay by a husband to his wife, as against creditors of the husband, which was not moved from the corral where it was stacked on the homestead premises of the husband and wife, and where the wife was feeding it to her stock. Porter v. Bucher, 98 Cal. 454, 33 Pac. 335. The trial court took the case from the jury because in its opinion there could have been no change of possession such as the statute required. In speaking of this, it was said here: "If the ruling of the court below correctly stated the law, it would logically follow that, in order to make a valid purchase of hay from her husband, she must immediately remove the hay from the homestead, or buy it from day to day as she fed it to her cattle," and this the court held she was not called upon to do. We have seen that the wife may purchase personal property from her husband, the same as from a stranger. A rule, therefore, that would preclude her taking and holding the possession in the home of both, in the case of a purchase from the husband, would preclude the purchase of personal property from a stranger, and bringing it to her home, and continuing her possession under the same roof with her husband. But such a rule would practically deny the right altogether. There can be no doubt but that the wife may take and hold possession, notwithstanding her husband and son live in the same house. Bump, Fraud. Conv. § 132; Ludlow v. Hurd, 19 Johns. 218; Wilson v. Lott, 5 Fla. 324; Porter v. Bucher, supra. What is meant by "continued change of possession" has been the subject of much comment, and has never yet been, and never can be, reduced to any fixed and certain rule. What would be regarded as in law continued possession under one state of circumstances would not be under other conditions of fact. It was said in Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, so often quoted: "The word 'continued' was designed to exclude the idea of a mere temporary change; but it never was the design of the statute to give such extension of meaning to the phrase 'continued change of possession' as to require, upon penalty of the forfeiture of the goods, that the vendor should never have any control over or use of them. This construction, it made without exception, would lead to very unjust and very absurd results." In the case at bar the possession was taken August 2d, and retained, with a single temporary interruption in October, until November 14th,—over three months,—and was then parted with, not to the vendors, but to a bailee of the vendee for sale. In October a portion of the goods were delivered to the vendors to sell, to obtain family necessities, but were returned to the vendee at once, no sale having been made. With this exception, the vendors never had possession after the sale. Many of the cases speak of an open and notorious possession, but the statute does not require a publication of ownership in all cases. "While our statute makes the want of an immediate delivery and continued change of possession conclusive evidence of fraud, it introduces no new rule as to what acts shall constitute delivery and change of possession." Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316. The visible, open, and notorious delivery and possession spoken of in the cases refer generally to sales of the entire business, or of some bulky object of property. Acts of secrecy or concealment would go far towards showing actual fraud, but the fact that Mrs. Lucas did not inform her husband's creditors of the purchase does not change her position. Her husband had a right to prefer her as a creditor, except as the transaction was open to attack under the insolvent law or for actual fraud. We cannot regard the temporary parting with possession to the husband and son of some of the goods, under the circumstances disclosed, as inconsistent with an immediate and actual and continued change of possession. Under our law, the husband and wife are not one person in the sense that the possession of one is the possession of the other, or concurrent possession.

There is no conflict in the facts. The property was delivered to plaintiff, who was engaged in selling other similar property. The contract was between him and Mrs. Lucas. She had no understanding with her son James about it. No doubt, she felt greater confidence in parting with the property to plaintiff, knowing that her son would be employed to assist in the sale of the goods, but we cannot say from the fact that the son was employed by plaintiff that her three months' previous possession cannot be regarded as continued possession, under the statute. Lucas & Son continued in business after August 2d until in September, when they sold out entirely to Lyons & Son, and gave up the store, and had no connection whatever with it. Lyons & Son continued until November 14th, when they sold out their fixtures and fittings to plaintiff; and he went into exclusive possession of the leasehold interest, and of the goods he put in. Both Lyons & Son and plaintiff published the change of proprietors in the usual way. The attaching creditor, Trafton, knew of these changes. We can see nothing in the statements made to him by Lucas, and in Lucas' failure to tell him of the sale to his wife, that should prejudice her rights, or as in the least bearing upon the question of change of possession or continued possession. The vendee knew nothing of these representations, and the vendors could not impeach her title by any such representations after sale to her. We think the employment of James Lucas by plaintiff did not in any just sense, under the facts in the case, indicate that there was not an actual and immediate and a continued change of possession of the goods from Lucas & Son to Mrs. Lucas. There is not the slightest evidence that he was there as a representative of the firm of Lucas & Son, and it is only because he was once a member of the firm that any such inference could be drawn.

2. Plaintiff offered in evidence an advertisement he had caused to be published in the Los Angeles Times on November 17th, announcing that he had purchased the jewelry business owned by S. Lyons & Son, "and will carry a fine stock of diamonds and opals; and J. H. Lucas, formerly of Lucas & Son, is now manager there." Plaintiff claims that it was relevant, as tending to show that the public was warned of the position occupied by James H. Lucas. Similar oral evidence was admitted to show Lucas' connection with the business, and we can see no reason why this public notice was not admissible.

3. The evidence offered by defendant, and objected to by plaintiff, of the report made to R. G. Dun & Co. in 1894 by Lucas & Son, was not admissible under any issue in the case. Actual fraud was not alleged. This evidence did not, as we can see, cast the faintest light upon the question of immediate and actual and continued change of possession of the goods sold long after the reports were made. Upon the essential facts in the case there is no substantial conflict, and hence the question as to whether there was such change of possession as satisfies the statute becomes one of law, and may be here reviewed. Bell v. McClellan, 67 Cal. 283, 7 Pac. 699; Claudius v. Aguirre, 89 Cal. 501, 26 Pac. 1077. The judgment and order should be reversed.

MCCABE v. JEFFERDS, Auditor. (Sac. 446.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 21, 1898.)
COUNTY GOVERNMENT ACT—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Whether the provision of Act April 1, 1897, § 170, relating to county governments, that the compensation of the public administrator of Tulare county was to be such fees as are now or may be hereafter allowed by law, was unconstitutional or not, because the last clause provided that it should take effect immediately, it went into full operation and effect except as to salaried officers on June 1, 1897, as provided by the last section, since the unconstitutional clause giving said section 170 immediate effect was distinct from other provisions of the act, and could be stricken out without affecting it otherwise than to leave the time at which it should take effect to be governed by another provision of the same act.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Application for mandamus by J. C. McCabe against E. M. Jefferds, auditor. From a judgment awarding the writ, defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. B. Howard, W. W. Cross, and T. E. Clark, for appellant. C. G. Lamberson, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Plaintiff is the public administrator of Tulare county. His term of office commenced January 7, 1895, and will expire on the first Monday in January, 1899. The defendant is the county auditor of said county, and this proceeding is prosecuted by the plaintiff to compel him to issue a warrant upon the county treasurer for $83.33, the amount the plaintiff claims to be due him for his salary as such public administrator for the month of June, 1897. Defendant demurred to the complaint; the demurrer was overruled; and defendant answered. Plaintiff moved for judgment upon the pleadings; his motion was granted; and, from the judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandate, the defendant appeals.

Under the classification of counties by the county government act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 384, § 162), Tulare was a county of the eleventh class, and the compensation of the public administrator in counties of that class was "such fees as are now or may hereafter be allowed by law." Under the county government act approved April 1, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 452), a new classification of counties was made, whereby Tulare county constituted the thirteenth class, and the compensation of the public administrator was therein declared to be (as before) "such fees as are now or may be hereafter allowed by law" (page 522, § 170, subd. 10); and by the last clause of said section it was provided: "This section shall take effect immediately." The concluding sections of the act (page 577) are as follows: Section 232: "All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." Section 233: "The provisions of sections 158 to 214, inclusive, of this act, so far as they change the compensation of any officer therein named, heretofore paid a fixed salary, or heretofore paid a fixed salary and commissions, and not fees or per diem, shall not affect incumbents, unless otherwise provided in any of said sections." Section 234: "This act, except as otherwise herein provided, shall take effect and be in force sixty days from and after its passage."

Respondent contends that the legislature, by section 170, attempted to provide for the salaries of officers of the thirteenth class, but failed to do so, and that, therefore, the officers of Tulare county are entitled to the salaries provided for officers of counties of the thirteenth class by section 175 of the county government act of 1893, which was for the "public administrator one thousand dollars per annum." St. 1893, p. 421. His demand in this proceeding is based upon the theory that he is now entitled to that salary, instead of compensation by fees, as provided in the act of 1897. If we correctly understand respondent's contention, he bases the assertion that section 170 of the act of 1897 failed to provide for the salaries of officers of counties of the thirteenth class upon the last clause of said section, which purports to give it immediate effect; and this upon the ground that said clause "is special legislation and unconstitutional." I do not think it necessary to consider or decide whether that provision is unconstitutional or not, for, if it were, the whole act went into full operation and effect (except as to salaried officers) on June 1, 1897, as provided by the last section of the act; and respondent's demand is for his alleged salary for the month of June, 1897. It is therefore clear that he could have recovered his compensation for that month, as fixed by the act of 1897, unless it should be held that the clause giving said section immediate effect, being unconstitutional, vitiated the whole section. But it cannot be so held. This provision giving the section immediate effect is distinct and separable from all its other provisions, and may be stricken out without affecting it otherwise than to leave the time at which it should take effect to be governed by another provision of the same act. In Cooley on Constitutional Limitations (4th Ed. p. 215) it is said: "The constitutional and unconstitutional provisions may even be contained in the same section, and yet be perfectly distinct and separable, so that the first may stand though the last fall. The point is not whether they are contained in the same section,—for the distribution into sections is purely artificial,—but whether they are essentially and inseparably connected in substance. If, when the unconstitutional portion is stricken out, that which remains is complete in itself, and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, wholly independent of that which was rejected, it must be sustained." Conceding, then, for the purposes of this decision, that the clause giving the section immediate effect is unconstitutional, and therefore void, that part of the section fixing the compensation of respondent and other officers is not affected thereby; and therefore, as to the respondent, whose compensation had not been changed, and was limited to "the fees allowed by law," the act took effect on June 1, 1897, and his compensation for said month was such only as is fixed by section 170 of the act of 1897, namely, such fees as were then allowed by law to administrators. I advise that the judgment awarding a peremptory writ of mandate be reversed, and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment awarding a peremptory writ of mandate is reversed, and the proceeding dismissed.

SPRIGG v. BARBER. (L. A. 311.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 13, 1898.)

NEW TRIAL—STATEMENT ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY —REVIEW.

1. An order denying a new trial cannot be reviewed where the statement contains no specification of errors or the particular reasons relied on for the new trial.

2. On appeal from an order denying a new trial, the clerk cannot, by certificate, supply what is required to appear in the statement.

3. The notice of motion for a new trial constitutes no part of the statement on appeal, without being referred to in the statement as such.

4. Error assigned to the introduction in evidence of a judgment roll of another action can only be considered upon the review of the order denying a new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by Patterson Sprigg against C. L. Barber. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Withington & Carter, for appellant. Haines & Ward, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Respondent submits, in limine, "that the record fails to disclose for review, either on the appeal from the judgment or from the order, any question arising out of any proceedings upon the trial, outside of the judgment roll, for the reason that the statement specifies no ground of alleged insufficiency of evidence, or of alleged errors of law argued before the court for the new trial." Judgment was entered March 20, 1896, and filed March 21, 1896. On March 28th plaintiff served notice of motion for a new trial. The transcript contains what purport to be minutes of the court, to show that on April 10th, the parties being present, plaintiff by his attorneys, and defendant in person, plaintiff moved the court to set aside the decision rendered March 20th, wherein judgment was given, and to grant plaintiff a new trial upon the grounds stated in the notice. The motion was made upon the minutes of the court, the record in the cause, and evidence taken. Motion was denied, and plaintiff excepted, and served notice of appeal April 17th. This part of the record (except notice of appeal) is not authenticated in any manner except by the clerk's certificate at the end of the statement, and follows immediately after the judgment roll in the transcript. Then follows the statement, which was settled by the judge September 11, 1896. In the statement there is no copy of the notice of motion or its specifications, and no copy of the motion itself, and no reference made to them, and no specifications of error in any form. The statement contains only the evidence introduced at the trial, and the rulings of the court as they there occurred, the notice of appeal, and the clerk's certificate. The question is, can this court look beyond the judgment roll and the statement, and consider the motion and the grounds stated therein, and the specifications found with the notice of motion? These questions, we think, are answered in the negative in Leonard v. Shaw, 114 Cal. 69, 45 Pac. 1012. There, as here, there was a failure to embody in the statement any specifications whatever of the errors or particular reasons on which the moving party relied, and it was held that the motion could not be considered. The clerk certified, among other things, in the case now here, that certain original documents were of record and on file in his office "in said entitled case, * * * to wit, judgment roll, notice of motion for new trial, order of court denying said motion, statement on appeal, notice of appeal, and service thereof." We do not think the clerk can supply by certificate what the law requires should be made to appear in the statement. The judge settles the statement, and in this case he certified to its correctness as it appears in the transcript. The clerk has no power to add to or take from that statement as thus settled. In Leonard v. Shaw it was said that, although the notice contained the required particular errors and objections relied upon, "this did not, however, obviate a specification of the errors and objections in the statement to be made in such cases after a hearing of the motion." This must necessarily be so, since the notice forms no part of the record. If appellant had made some reference to the notice and motion in the statement as constituting a part of the statement, and located or identified them at some place in the transcript so that it could be reasonably inferred that they formed a part of the statement as settled by the judge, this would, we think, have been sufficient; but without some such reference, or making them a part of the statement, this court cannot consider them.

Appellant's counsel say in their brief: "The language of the court in repeated cases would lead the practitioner to the conclusion that the place for the specifications was in the notice, and, if found therein, they had served their purpose, and need not be brought up in the record." In support of this statement we are cited to Buckley v. Althorf, 86 Cal. 643, 25 Pac. 134. That case held that, where a motion for a new trial is submitted on the minutes of the court, the notice of the motion must specify the particulars wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient, and the errors of law relied upon; and that, failing in this, no subsequent statement is authorized, and, if made and settled, will not be considered on appeal. But it is nowhere intimated in the opinion that, having made the requisite specifications in the notice, they need not be restated in the statement. On the contrary, it was there said: "His motion for a new trial having been submitted on the minutes of the court, he could only bring to this court, on appeal, matters other than those appearing in the judgment roll, by bill of exceptions, or a 'statement of the case subsequently prepared'"; citing Code Civ. Proc. § 661. Subdivision 4 of section 659 prescribes that, if the ground of the motion, when made upon the minutes of the court, be for insufficiency of the evidence or errors of law, the notice must specify the particulars, failing in which the motion will be denied; but this subdivision does not dispense with the statement, or give the slightest intimation that the statement need not contain what subdivision 3 of the same section says the statement must contain, to wit, "the statement shall specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely." In Re Westerfeld, 96 Cal. 113, 30 Pac. 1104, cited by appellant, the question was only as to the sufficiency of the notice. Pico v. Cohn, 78 Cal. 384, 20 Pac. 706, is also cited. That case would seem to be against appellant's contention. It was there held that the notice of intention to move for a new trial is not made a part of the record on appeal, and need not be embodied in the statement, or presented on appeal in any form, unless the respondent insists that it is insufficient. The notice was held to be the basis of the motion, "and that, upon the proper statement being filed, and the necessary motion made and passed upon by the court below, the notice has performed its functions, and is not a necessary part of the record on appeal, or to be presented in any form. When the case comes to us we look to the statement or bill of exceptions, and the specifications in which the court below is not sustained by the evidence, and the specifications of errors of law, as our guide in reviewing the case; and to these alone. If a question is presented by such specifications, and is properly saved in the statement or bill of exceptions, this court will look no further, but must presume that the question was properly presented to the court below, and passed upon in its rulings upon the motion for a new trial." Southern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Superior Court, 105 Cal. 84, 38 Pac. 627, is also cited. The opinion affirms Pico v. Cohn on the point as to the notice of intention above noted, and decides that the order denying the motion is deemed excepted to, and need not be embodied in the bill of exceptions. We find in the opinion no intimation that specifications of particular errors may be dispensed with in the statement beyond this. We are unable to verify, from the decisions, the claim that this court has encouraged the belief that the only place for the specification of errors is in the notice. It seems to us that when it was held that the notice formed no part of the record the plain inference would be that the specifications must appear in the statement, for surely they should appear somewhere. Counsel claim that this court must presume, when the trial court has settled a statement showing the exceptions and the evidence pertinent thereto, that the ground was argued before the trial court. But this is to ask the court to supply by presumption what the Code says must be embodied in the statement. Code Civ. Proc. § 659.

2. Appellant claims that, even if the motion for a new trial cannot be considered, the whole case is open for consideration upon the appeal from the judgment upon the objection made by plaintiff to the introduction of the judgment roll as evidence by defendant in a certain case theretofore tried in the superior court of San Diego county. It was objected to by plaintiff as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and was admitted, plaintiff excepting. We are unable to see, and respondent fails to show, that this was more than an error of law occurring at the trial, which, like any other error arising in course of the trial, can only be heard upon a consideration of the motion for a new trial.

It results from the foregoing that the case is here on the judgment roll alone, and, as no question is raised as to the sufficiency of the findings to justify the decision, the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

FITCH v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRAN-
CISCO. (S. F. 1,222.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 17, 1898.)

MUNICIPAL BOARDS—FIXING WATER RATES—RE-MOVAL FROM OFFICE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Under Const. art. 14, § 1, requiring water rates to be fixed by the governing boards of municipalities annually, by ordinances passed in February, to take effect July 1st, and subjecting any board failing to fix rates within such time to process to compel action at the suit of any party interested, and to such further processes and penalties as the legislature may prescribe, an ordinance passed after February is valid, though passed without process.

2. Const. art. 14, § 1, requiring water rates to be fixed by municipal boards annually by ordinances, passed in February, to take effect July 1st, and subjecting any board failing to fix rates within such time to process to compel action at the suit of any party interested, and to such further processes and penalties as the legislature may prescribe, does not authorize the legislature to remove supervisors from office for failure to pass such ordinances at the suit of any interested party, since article 6, § 20, requires the style of process to be "The People of the State of California," and all prosecutions to be conducted in their name and by their authority; and hence Act March 7, 1881 (St. 1881, p. 54), making supervisors so failing guilty of malfeasance, and subjecting them to removal from office "at the suit of any interested party," is so far invalid.

3. Act March 7, 1881 (St. 1881, p. 54), making supervisors failing or refusing to pass ordinances fixing water rates in February, to go into effect July 1st of each year, guilty of malfeasance, and subject to removal, was intended to provide a penalty for delinquency, and not to compel action by the supervisors, and hence was not authorized by Const. art. 14, § 1, subjecting supervisors so failing to process to compel action, and to such further processes and penalties as the legislature may prescribe.

4. A ratepayer is not a "party interested," under Act March 7, 1881 (St. 1881, p. 54), subjecting supervisors failing to fix rates in February, to go into effect July 1st of each year, to removal from office "at the suit of any interested party," where the rate was fixed after February, but before July, and the suit was not commenced until July 15th; since he was in no way injured by the failure to fix the rates in February.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Petition by one Fitch for the removal of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial defendants appeal. Reversed.

G. W. McEnerney, E. S. Pillsbury, McGowan & Squires, and Henley & Costello, for appellants. W. T. Baggett and G. W. Schell, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The constitution (article 14, § 1), after providing that the rates to be collected by any person, company, or corporation for the use of water supplied to any municipality or its inhabitants shall be fixed annually by the governing body of such municipality, provides: "Such ordinances or resolutions shall be passed in the month of February of each year, and take effect on the first day of July thereafter. Any board or body failing to pass the necessary ordinances or resolutions fixing water rates, where necessary, within such time, shall be subject to peremptory process to compel action at the suit of any party interested, and shall be liable to such further processes and penalties as the legislature may prescribe. Any person, company or corporation collecting water rates in any city or county, or city or town, in this state, otherwise than as so established, shall forfeit the franchises and waterworks of such person, company or corporation to the city and county, or city or town, where the same are collected for the public use." Two courses of action are thus authorized to be pursued against the board of supervisors, or other governing body of the municipality, in case of its failure to pass such ordinances or resolutions as will enable any person or corporation to collect rates or compensation for the water supplied by it to the municipality, or its inhabitants therein, viz. a peremptory process to compel the board to pass the ordinances or resolutions, and a punishment for its failure to pass them. The first is given by the constitution itself, and may be invoked by any "party interested" without the necessity of any legislation therefor. The "party interested," who is thus authorized to invoke peremptory process to compel the board to pass an ordinance fixing the water rates, is a party who has an interest in having the rates fixed, and who would be injuriously affected if they were not fixed. The provisions that "the rates or compensation to be collected shall be fixed annually," and "shall continue in force for one year, and no longer," read in connection with the concluding sentence of the section, by which a company which shall collect water rates "otherwise than as so established" shall forfeit its franchises and waterworks for the public use, make it evident that the furnisher of water would be injuriously affected if the rates are not fixed, and is therefore a "party interested," who is entitled to such peremptory process.

The provision that the ordinance fixing the rates shall not take effect until July, although it is to be passed in February, is manifestly for the purpose of affording to the person or company supplying water ample time to adjust the individual rates for its consumers in accordance with the terms of the schedule fixed by the ordinance, and also to provide an opportunity, if necessary, in case the ordinance shall not be passed in February, to invoke process for compelling the board to pass an ordinance prior to July. The failure of the board to pass an ordinance in the month of February is by the terms of the section made a condition precedent to the right to ask for process to compel action by it, since it cannot be determined until after February has expired whether there will be a failure to pass the ordinance "within such time"; and, inasmuch as the right to process for the purpose of compelling action by the board cannot be invoked until after February, it must follow that an ordinance fixing rates, which is passed subsequent to February, is as valid as if it were passed in February, and that the rates fixed by such ordinance may be collected from the consumer, since the constitution would not authorize the issuance of process to compel action by the board if its action under such process would be vain and nugatory. Hence an ordinance passed subsequent to February without such process is equally valid as if passed under its mandate.

The provision in the section which renders the board "liable to such further processes and penalties as the legislature may prescribe," in case of its failure to pass the ordinances within the month of February, clearly indicates, not only that, in the absence of legislation, the board will not be liable to any penalty therefor, but also that it will be liable to only such processes and penalties as are within the power of the legislature to prescribe. In pursuance of this provision of the constitution, the legislature passed the act of March 7, 1881. St. 1881, p. 54. But, while the authority to prescribe a penalty for the failure of the board is referable to this section, the extent of the penalty and the proceedings for its enforcement must be in conformity with the legislative power elsewhere conferred by the constitution. Section 8 of this act is as follows: "Any board of supervisors or other legislative body of any city and county, city or town, which shall fail or refuse to perform any of the duties prescribed by this act, at the time and in the manner herein specified, shall be deemed guilty of malfeasance in office, and upon conviction thereof at the suit of any interested party, in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be removed from office." To the extent that this section authorizes the penalty to be imposed "at the suit of any interested party," it is not within the provision of the above section of the constitution, unless it should be held that the provision for the penalty is a part of the process authorized to compel action by the board; but, after an ordinance has been passed, there is no occasion for invoking any process to compel action. The evident purpose of the section is to provide a penalty by way of punishment for the delinquency of the board. The term in which the delinquency is defined,—"malfeasance in office,"—and the declaration that, "upon conviction" of the delinquency, the board shall be deemed "guilty," and the penalty provided, "removal from office," all point to an offense which has been completed, and are conclusive reasons for holding that the purpose of the section was not to compel action by the board, but to punish it for its failure to act. The provision in the section that the penalty may be imposed "at the suit of any interested party" is, however, inconsistent with section 20 of article 6 of the constitution, which is: "The style of all process shall be 'The People of the State of California,' and all prosecutions shall be conducted in their name and by their authority." In whatever terms the failure of the board to pass the ordinance in February may be characterized, such failure, aside from the rights of a party who may compel action by the board, is an offense against the entire state, and not against any individual; and, under the above provision of the constitution, the legislature has not the power to authorize a prosecution for such offense in the name of and at the instance of any individual.

Moreover, irrespective of these considerations, the plaintiff herein is in no respect an "interested party" at whose instance the penalty may be imposed. He alleges in his complaint, as the basis of his right to maintain the action, "that said plaintiff is a citizen of the United States and of the state of California, and is, and for many years last past has been, a resident taxpayer, householder, and freeholder within the said city and county, and a user and consumer of water sold, distributed, and supplied by the Spring Valley Waterworks, a corporation, as hereinafter set forth, to said city and county and the inhabitants thereof, and therefore is interested in the rates or compensation collected and to be collected by said corporation for the use of water so supplied and to be supplied to said city and county of San Francisco and the inhabitants thereof." If it be assumed from the allegation that he is a user and consumer of water that he is also a ratepayer, it does not follow that he has any interest which authorizes a prosecution of the board for its alleged offense. It cannot be said that one citizen of the state or of the city more than another is interested in having a penalty inflicted for delinquency in official duty; and the use of the term "party interested," rather than "person," in the above section of the statute, indicates that the legislature intended the "suit" to be instituted by one who had some personal and individual interest in the subject-matter, and who had been injuriously affected by the failure to pass the ordinances. It is shown by the record herein that on the 2d of June, 1897, the board of supervisors did pass an ordinance fixing the rates to be collected during the year commencing on the 1st of July succeeding; and, as the present action was not commenced until the 15th of July, the plaintiff was not at that time a "party" in any respect interested by reason of the failure of the board to fix the rates in February. We have seen that an ordinance fixing rates which is not passed until after February is as valid for the purpose of determining the rates to be collected as though passed in the month of February, and that the ratepayer is not interested in the time at which the ordinance is passed, provided there is at all times a legal ordinance under which he can know whether the amount demanded for the water supplied to him is correct. Prior to July 1, 1897, the rates to be paid by the plaintiff for the water supplied to him were fixed by the ordinance that had been passed in the previous year; and, on and after July 1st, they were fixed and capable of ascertainment by the ordinance passed on the 2d of June. It is not claimed that this ordinance is in any respect illegal, defective, or unjust; and, as the plaintiff was not therefore in any respect injuriously affected by the failure of the board to pass the ordinance in February, he was not an "interested party," within the meaning of the statute, and had no authority to institute the present proceeding. The court, therefore, when these facts were brought to its attention, should have dismissed the proceeding. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the superior court is directed to enter an order dismissing the proceeding.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; VAN FLEET, J.; HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.; McFARLAND, J.

GAROUTTE, J. I have not concerned myself in the consideration of the question as to whether or not Fitch is a proper party to inaugurate this proceeding. My conclusion rests upon the broad proposition that the act is unsound legislation, and should be so declared. When this case was here some time ago, upon a preliminary proceeding, I had occasion to investigate the law bearing upon it, and gave my views in a few words as to the proper construction of the statute under which this prosecution is based. Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 487, 50 Pac. 644. At that time I thought that the charge was essentially criminal, and, being so, no law could stand which punished innocent office holders because some other office holder may have been guilty of malfeasance in office. Upon such construction, the law impressed me as violative of fundamental principles, and necessarily unconstitutional. The time intervening since that decision was rendered has only served to more firmly convince me of the soundness of the views I then expressed.

As a civil proceeding, the judgment rendered can only stand upon the theory that the act of the legislature upon which the proceeding was based is in the nature of an act fixing the tenure of office of the various public officers of the state, whose duties under this statute demand the fixing of water rates in the month of February of each year. Such a construction of the statute cannot be assented to for a moment. It is not an act purporting to fix or regulate the term of office, but rather an act to punish certain public officers for violation of official duty, by depriving them of the remaining portion of their terms of office. There is an express provision of the law declaring the official term of these officers to be two years. Construing this act as a tenure of office act would place it in direct opposition to this express declaration of the law. This statute was enacted under express authority and direction of that provision of the constitution of the state which declared that the legislature may prescribe penalties for a failure upon the part of boards of supervisors to fix water rates in the month of February. How can it now be held that the legislature, in pursuance of such authority granted by the constitution, passed an act fixing the tenure of office of the supervisors of the state? If such be the character and purpose of the act, it is neither authorized nor in line with this authority granted by the constitution. The fair, reasonable, and proper construction of the act is that the legislature, in pursuance of the authority and direction of the constitution, prescribed the penalty for failure of the supervisors to fix water rates as removal from office. This act would have been no more criminal in character if the legislature had prescribed the penalty for failure to fix the rates at imprisonment in the county jail for six months, or at a fine of $500. It must be conceded by every one that the judgment of removal from office is a penalty. Yet all must recognize the fact that a penalty is but a punishment inflicted upon a wrongdoer. A party wholly guiltless cannot be made to suffer a penalty. And, if this removal from office is a punishment to be inflicted upon an officer for nonperformance of official duty, then this act is certainly not one pertaining to the tenure of office.

The legislature has the power to fix the tenure of office of the various county and municipal officers, and, in the exercise of such power, may declare the expiration of the term to take place upon the happening of some future event, which may or may not happen; but, if such event does happen, the office holder goes out of office, because his term of office has expired, under the law. His term has expired as absolutely as though the day fixed for its expiration had been known at all times. But there is no semblance of a penalty suffered by the office holder in such a case. No punishment is inflicted upon him. In other words, if the removal from office attaches as a penalty to the office holder, the act authorizing the removal can in no sense be treated as an act relating to the tenure of office. Again, there is nothing in the act in any way indicating that it was the purpose of the legislature to legislate as to the tenure of office of members of the boards of supervisors of the state. To the contrary, every paragraph, and almost every line, of the act, indicates that the legislature intended by its provisions to punish supervisors by removal from office for failure to fix water rates in the month of February. The phrases "guilty of malfeasance in office" and "upon conviction," found in the act, are not harmless, innocent terms, and would be found in no act dealing with tenure of office. The attention of the court has been called to no act in this state or elsewhere, of general similar import, which has ever been construed as an act relating to the tenure of office. It is assumed there is none. A judgment that these supervisors have been guilty of malfeasance in office—and such is the judgment required to be entered by the act itself—cannot be justified under a purely innocent act relating to the tenure of office.

It is substantially conceded by counsel for respondent that, if the statute is essentially penal and the action essentially criminal, then this judgment cannot stand. That it is an act penal in character, that it is an act essentially and directly aimed at the punishment of supervisors for the nonperformance of official duty, must be conceded. Many reasons why the act does not contemplate a criminal action are suggested in the various briefs of respondent's counsel. These reasons are based largely upon the peculiar character of procedure to be followed. It is only necessary to say that every reason suggested was carefully considered in the very recent case of Kilburn v. Law, 111 Cal. 239, 43 Pac. 615, a case involving an attempt to remove the bank commissioners from office for the nonperformance of official duty. A single difference divides the two cases,—the fact that the prosecution was there commenced under section 772 of the Penal Code, and here brought under a general statute of the state. This difference is wholly insignificant. In that case it was declared that the proceeding was criminal, although it bore substantially all the marks of a civil action found in this case. As indicating that the particular character of procedure to be followed in a case like the present does not brand its character as either a criminal or civil action, it is sufficient to say that the constitution of the state (article 4, § 18), after providing for the impeachment of various state officers, declares: "All other civil officers shall be tried for misdemeanor in office in such manner as the legislature may provide." It is thus apparent that the doors are left wide open by the constitution for the legislature to provide for the trial of municipal officers for misdemeanor in office in any way that body may see fit. Under the very terms of the constitution, the power of the legislature in such matters is exclusive and supreme.

In conclusion, we find the principles involved in this case covered as by a blanket in the case of In re Marks, 45 Cal. 199. That case as authority has stood for a quarter of a century, quoted and approved by this court upon many occasions. It was the unanimous decision of the court,—a court composed of eminent jurists. Marks, a harbor commissioner, was charged, at the instigation of a private citizen, with neglect of official duty, under an act of the legislature passed in 1853. In all essentials, the constitution of the state at that time was the same as we find it now. In its opinion, the court in that case, defining the scope of the act, declared: "It is provided in substance in the act of 1853 that any person holding any office in this state, who shall neglect to perform his official duty according to law, shall be deprived of his office." It will thus be observed that the act is mild and bland-like in its language, as compared to the act involved in this case, but at the same time it is equally apparent that it is entirely identical in principle. After exhaustive argument and consideration, the court there laid down certain principles of law which are absolutely controlling here. It was first decided that neglect of official duty amounted at common law to an impeachable misdemeanor in office, and upon conviction the officer must be removed. It is next declared: "There can be no doubt that the case made by the complaint is one directly within the provisions of the act of 1853. That act was designed to afford a remedy of a summary character against office holders who were guilty of extortion or neglect in the performance of official duty, and the case of Marks is brought by the complaint within the latter category." It is next declared: "The act of 1853 does provide how, in what manner, upon what procedure, in what court, officers not of the first class shall be tried for that misdemeanor in office known at common law and recognized in this statute as neglect of official duty. The power of the legislature to enact such a statute (under the latter clause of section 18) is plain,—as obvious as is the power of the assembly to prefer, and that of the senate to try, articles of impeachment under the first clause of the same section." It is next declared: "The power to remove certain officers for misdemeanor in office is exercised only by the assembly and senate under the name of impeachment. The like power to remove all other officers under like circumstances and for like causes is to be exercised 'in such manner as the legislature may provide.' The power to provide the manner in which a delinquent is to be tried in the second case is on a footing with the power to directly remove the delinquent by the judgment of the senate in the first case." In conclusion, and as absolutely controlling this whole question, the court declares: "It is the exercise by the district court of the power to remove from office upon conviction had, which is, in fact, the power of impeachment, and is impeachment in every respect except the mere form of procedure pursued."

It is thus apparent that the proceeding in the present case, upon principle and authority, is in all material respects a proceeding to impeach these municipal officers for a non-performance of official duty, by a procedure laid down by the legislature under direct authority from the constitution; for that authority declares that these officers may be "tried for misdemeanor in office in such manner as the legislature may provide." The act before us provides a manner of trial for such officers. The proceedings under this act being in the nature of impeachment, it only remains to be said that the impeachment of a public officer for nonperformance of official duty is the highest form of criminal action. By this act of the legislature, nonperformance of official duty in fixing water rates in the month of February is declared to be malfeasance in office. These supervisors, under authority of this act, and by the judgment of the trial court, in effect have been impeached for malfeasance in office. The act provides that all supervisors comprising the board, innocent and guilty alike, must suffer such penalty of impeachment. In this very case the trial court declared that some of these defendants were wholly innocent of any violation of the law, and yet, in the face of that fact, removed them from office. The legislature has no power to pass an act visiting these serious consequences upon innocent men, and, as a necessary result, any act attempting to enforce such a power is unconstitutional. A determination as to the exact limits of the power of the legislature in declaring what acts of the individual shall constitute a crime is an interesting and possibly a difficult question, considered in the light of the constitution. But there is no difficulty in declaring, in the light of the constitution, that a legislature has no power to say that one man wholly innocent is guilty of crime, and shall be punished, because another man fails to perform his official duty. The power of the legislature reaches no such limit. It cannot be done under our form of government. I shall not concern myself in pointing out the particular provision of the constitution forbidding it. I find it between the lines. The whole spirit of the instrument denies the right to do it. I concur in the judgment and order of reversal.

MITCHELL et al. v. COLGAN, State Comptroller. (S. F. 1,569.)

REFORM SCHOOL—USE OF FUNDS FOR BUILDING PURPOSES—POWER OF TRUSTEES.

1. The provision of Act March 11, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 111), as amended by Act March 23, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 328), § 24, that money to be contributed by the counties of the state for the care and support of the inmates of the Whittier Reform School should be placed in the state treasury, in the "Whittier Reform School fund for the use of said institution," does not authorize the trustees to erect needed buildings therefrom, since the same section provides that the county funds were for "the keeping and taking care of each minor committed to said institution," and all the acts relating to the school divide the appropriations into two classes, one for buildings and equipment and the other for its support, and nowhere give the trustees authority to erect buildings, except as specially empowered thereby.

2. The fact that the trustees of the Whittier Reform School, established by Act March 11, 1889, were, by section 3 thereof, constituted a body corporate and politic, with the right to exercise all the powers usually belonging to such corporations, does not authorize them to divert funds dedicated to particular uses to some entirely different use.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Application for mandamus by Adina Mitchell and others, trustees of the Whittier State School, against E. P. Colgan, state comptroller. Denied.

John W. Mitchell, for plaintiffs. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and W. H. Anderson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for defendant.

CHIPMAN, C. Petition for writ of mandate. The petition sets forth that by the act of March 11, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 111), as amended March 23, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 328), there was established for the use of the Whittier State School a fund, known as the "Whittier Reform School Fund," under which law there has been paid into the state treasury, to the credit of said fund, $86,012.61, which will be increased by other payments to the sum of about $125,000; avers the purposes of the school, and that there are now therein about 250 boys and 50 girls; that among the various buildings is one called the "Trades Building," which, as originally constructed, was for temporary use only, describes the building, and avers that by reason of its temporary nature, and the jarring of the machinery used therein, it has become dangerous, and liable to collapse, and has been condemned by a competent engineer, and to prevent injury to the life and limb of inmates a necessity has arisen to close and abandon the building; that there is no other building belonging to the school which can be used for the trade departments, and that these departments and buildings for their accommodation are necessary for the purposes of the institution, to provide for which plaintiff invited architects to furnish competitive plans for needed buildings, notices of such invitation being published in certain newspapers. For the advertising of notices plaintiff agreed to pay certain sums, and to the successful architects a first premium of $4,000.50; to the other competing architects a second and third premium of $150 and $100, respectively. Claims duly verified for these amounts were presented to plaintiffs, and duly audited, allowed, and ordered paid out of the Whittier Reform School fund, and were duly certified to defendant as required by section 30 of the act of 1893, supra, and he was requested to draw and deliver to plaintiffs his warrant on the state treasurer payable out of said fund. Said claims were also presented to the state board of examiners, and the claims for advertising notices were allowed, and certified by said board to defendant, but the claims of the architects were not allowed by said board. The defendant refuses to draw his warrant for any of said claims. Prayer that defendant be directed to forthwith draw and deliver his warrant to plaintiffs payable out of said fund. Defendant demurs to the petition for insufficiency of facts.

Plaintiffs claim that by section 24 of the acts referred to there was created a special fund in the state treasury, now designated as the "Whittier Reform School Fund"; that this fund is subject to any use to which plaintiffs may desire to apply it, if for the benefit of the institution; and that they have the power to expend this fund for the erection of needed buildings. Accordingly, plaintiffs proceeded under the act of April 1, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 925), as stated in the petition. As the power to erect the building is not conferred by this act, we must look to the acts creating the board in this case. It is claimed that this power is derived from the reform school acts, supra, and that by section 30 of the act of 1893 it is made the duty of the comptroller to draw his warrants for moneys expended by the board without reference to the board of examiners. This reform school was established by the act of 1889, supra, and has continued under that act and the amendatory act of 1893, supra. The act of 1889 appropriated $200,000 out of the general fund of the state "for the erection, equipment and maintenance of the building or buildings and grounds of said reform school, as herein provided, for the two years commencing April 1, 1889." The act provided for the commitment to this school of infant boys and girls between certain ages, the expenses for their care to be borne equally by the state and by the county from which such infant is committed, the county money to be paid into the state treasury, and "paid directly by the state treasurer to the superintendent of the reform school for the use of said institution, as herein provided." Section 24. April 6, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 484), the legislature appropriated $120,000, mainly for equipment of the various department buildings and other permanent improvements; and by another act appropriated $60,000 "for the support of the Whittier Reform School" (General Appropriation Act, p. 502); having at the same session provided by still another act for a deficiency for like purposes of $10,000 (Id. p. 131). March 23, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 296), the legislature appropriated $100,000 for the erection of certain buildings and "improvements on the lands belonging to the state at Whittier," and some small expenses of the school; and also by a separate act appropriated for "support" $106,000. Id. p. 192. By a further act it amended the act of 1889 in many particulars. Id. p. 328. There was no change made as to the division of expense between the state and county for maintenance of the inmates, except that it was provided that the amount to be charged to the county for the support of the minor was to be "exclusive of the use of the permanent property of the institution"; and all moneys paid by counties were to be placed in the state treasury in the "Whittier Reform School fund, for the use of said institution," and were not to be paid to the superintendent by the state treasurer, as by the act of 1889. There is nothing in either act to indicate that the county funds were to be used to construct permanent buildings or make permanent improvements, but, on the contrary, much to show that the state was to provide all necessary buildings and equipment, and the counties to pay only one-half of the cost of the support or maintenance of the inmates, and each county was to pay only in proportion to the number of its commitments. The legislation, we think, shows quite clearly that it was to be a state institution, and its realty to be the property of the state; and the purpose was to furnish an asylum for the correction and reform of certain minors, for whose support and maintenance, and not for the erection of buildings, the counties were to contribute. Cochran v. Los Angeles Co., 117 Cal. 534, 49 Pac. 570, was an action to recover for the care and keeping of children committed from defendant county. In all the acts of the legislature the appropriations made were of two classes, one for buildings and equipment and the other for the support of the school. Section 24 of both acts directs that the trustees, with the approval of the governor, shall "estimate and determine as near as may be the actual expense per month of keeping and taking care of each infant (minor), * * * not including the use of the grounds and buildings." This is the method of ascertaining what the county shall pay, and it is the expense or cost of taking care of the inmates of which alone the county is to pay one-half. We can discover nowhere in any of the acts any authority given to the trustees to enter upon the erection of buildings except as they are specially empowered by the acts themselves, and out of the funds appropriated for building purposes. It does not appear from the petition that the trustees propose to use any unexpended building fund, or to erect any of the buildings referred to in any of the acts; nor does it appear that the funds on hand are any other than such as have been created for the care and support of the inmates. The act of 1889 required the county to pay into the state treasury, and the act of 1893 did the same, but provided that the fund should be designated and known as the "Whittier Reform School Fund"; but in both cases "for the use of said institution." Such use, however, we do not think can be made to include the erection of new buildings, for the act in terms provides that the county funds are for "the keeping and taking care of each minor committed to said institution." The general appropriation act of April 1, 1897 (St. 1897, pp. 363, 366), carries $108,800 "for support of Whittier State School," and provides that

"not more than five hundred dollars of this money shall be used for permanent improvements," and points out how it shall be used. Of course, the word "support," as plaintiffs claim, may be said to mean "for the use of said institution"; but, conceding this, it does not, in our opinion, aid plaintiffs' construction. On the contrary, as we view it, it is strong proof that the legislature never intended to give the trustees unlimited power to divert the county and state money to the erection of buildings, which money was appropriated by the state and contributed by the counties for the "support" and the "care and keeping" of the children committed to the school.

It is claimed by plaintiffs that section 3 of the act of 1889 creates the trustees "a body corporate and politic," with the right "to exercise all the power usually belonging to said corporations," with the right "to receive, hold, use and convey or disburse moneys or other properties, real and personal," and with the "power to make contracts, to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded"; whence it is contended that the trustees are endowed with "almost plenary powers for the control and direction of the assets and affairs of the institution," subject only to the exceptions in that section prescribed. One of these is "that they shall not have power to bind the state by any contract or obligation beyond the amount of the appropriations which may at the time have been made for the purposes expressed in the contract or obligation." Plaintiffs say in response to this provision that the contracts they have made and propose to make are "for the use of the institution," and do not exceed the amount of the fund on hand; and, as "use of the institution" includes the erection of buildings, the trustees are thus using the fund "for the purposes expressed in the contract or obligation." But this assumes that the terms "use of the institution" are as broad as claimed by plaintiffs, in which we cannot concur. These trustees are given no unusual and extraordinary powers. The fact that they are constituted a body corporate and politic, with the powers above stated, does not authorize them to divert funds dedicated to particular uses to some entirely different use. We cannot believe from anything expressed in the various acts that the legislature intended by the phrase "use of the institution" to say that moneys contributed by counties and appropriated by the state for the "care and keeping" of the inmates of this school and the "support" of the institution might be used to rebuild a structure. It may be that, should a building be destroyed by fire, or, as in this case, become unsafe and dangerous, and liable to collapse, and for that reason be abandoned, the usefulness of the school may thereby become greatly embarrassed; still we cannot find that the legislature has given the trustees power in such a case to divert funds provided for the support and maintenance of the school to the erection of new buildings. A construction which would permit this use to be made of the county and state funds under the clause "the use of the institution" would be far more likely to lead to abuses than would the construction we give offer "the temptation of having the fund expended for extravagant maintenance and higher salaries," as suggested by plaintiffs. Besides, it would take from the legislature the power we think it has reserved to itself of determining what buildings the state requires for its public institutions. Our conclusion is that the Whittier Reform School fund referred to in the statutes cannot be resorted to by the trustees for the erection of buildings, and that the contracts made looking to that end were unauthorized. Whether claims such as are here involved should be presented to the board of examiners need not be, and is not, decided. The writ should be denied.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the writ is denied.

WHITE v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Sac. 450.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 27, 1898.)

RAILROAD—COLLISION—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff, driving at a walk, approached from the east defendant's railroad tracks, running north and south. On reaching the tracks, his view was interrupted towards the south by box cars blocking his passageway over the street to the width of about 15 feet. He looked and listened, and saw and heard no train approaching. His view towards the north was clear, and, if a train with an engine at its head had been coming from the south, he could have seen the smokestack of the engine. A person driving from the opposite direction, having a complete view towards the south, passed him, and did not indicate that a moving train was approaching. He then drove past the first track at the end of the box cars, and was injured by a freight train backing from the south, before he could avoid it. Held, that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by James M. White against Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dudley & Buck, for appellant. Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment and order denying its motion for a new trial. The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries. Plaintiff was in the act of driving across the railroad track of defendant, when a train approached, and, in attempting to save himself from a collision, he was thrown out of his vehicle, and injured. The matters involved in this appeal are few, and not of great importance. The negligence of defendant at the time of the accident is substantially conceded by its attorneys. Indeed, the testimony of its principal witnesses—employees—indicates a degree of negligence upon its part in the handling of its train of cars closely approaching recklessness. But, to defeat plaintiff's right of action, it is insisted that he was guilty of contributory negligence, and for that reason it is claimed the evidence fails to authorize and justify the verdict of the jury. By reason of this contention we are brought to an examination of the salient facts of the case. Plaintiff, in a one-horse vehicle, was traveling westward upon Market street, a well-traveled street in the city of Stockton. He arrived at Sacramento street, which intersects Market street, and extends north and south. This street is covered by various railroad tracks of defendant, and is used constantly for railroad purposes. When plaintiff approached Sacramento street, he found a detached train of box cars resting upon the track nearest to him. These cars extended to the south upon the street, and blocked his passageway over Market street to the width of about 15 feet. He passed over this first track at the end of these box cars, and at the moment his horse stepped upon the next track, which was but a few feet distant, a freight train, backing from the south, was upon him, and in his efforts to escape he was injured. There is some conflicting evidence as to the ringing of the bell of the engine at the time of the accident, or, to be more exact, it may be said there was some conflict in the evidence as to whether or not plaintiff heard the engine bell ringing. But we attach no special importance to this matter. The ringing of a bell or the blowing of a whistle upon a train that is traveling backward is calculated to deceive a traveler upon the highway. The distance of the alarm from the real point of danger well serves the purpose of lulling the traveler into a false sense of security. This is essentially true where the traveler upon the highway, by reason of obstructions near the track, cannot see the approaching train, and therefore is compelled to depend largely upon his sense of hearing alone. In this case a sight of the approaching train was entirely denied plaintiff by reason of the stationary cars and other obstructions. If he had heard the bell upon the engine, which even at the moment of the accident was distant more than 50 yards, he would probably have felt secure, and made the attempt to cross the track. And as matter of law this court would not say that it was contributory negligence, under such circumstances, to rely upon the alarm given by the bell, and attempt to cross. By reason of these views we attach little importance to the true solution of the contested fact as to whether or not the bell was ringing at the time of the accident, or whether or not plaintiff heard the bell ringing, if it did ring.

Was the plaintiff, as a careful, prudent man, justified in attempting to cross the street at the time he made the attempt? He was driving one horse, hitched to a light vehicle. Upon arriving at the crossing, he traveled at a walk. He looked and listened. He saw no moving train. He heard no noise of an approaching train. He had a clear view towards the north, and there was no danger from that direction. His view towards the south was obstructed, but, if a train with an engine at its head had been coming from that direction, he would have seen at least the smokestack of the engine. A moment before he drove upon the track, a party driving from the opposite direction, having a complete view of existing conditions towards the south, passed over the track, and in no way indicated by his actions that a moving train was approaching. The foregoing facts appear by the evidence of the plaintiff, and many of them are corroborated by the evidence of other witnesses. Upon these facts the case was one eminently proper to go to the jury. As matter of law we cannot say this evidence discloses contributory negligence upon the part of the person injured. The other evidence in the record depicting the circumstances surrounding the accident may create a conflict as to certain facts, but it does no more, and therefore avails nothing in the consideration of a question similar to the one at bar. It is contended by appellant that the "physical facts and circumstances" absolutely disprove plaintiff's testimony in all essential respects. Counsel's argument directed to this point has not convinced us of the soundness of this contention.

There is no ground furnished by the two instructions, of which appellant complains, that demands a reversal of the judgment. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: VAN FLEET, J.; HARRISON, J.

In re BYRNE'S ESTATE. (Sac. 478.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1898.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACCOUNTING—APPEAL—COMPENSATION—ATTORNEYS' FEES.

1. An administrator's expenses preliminary to applying for letters are not chargeable to the estate.

2. Where an item in an administrator's final account is allowed by the court, but inadvertently omitted from its order, it does not justify an appeal, since it could no doubt be corrected by calling the court's attention to it.

3. An administrator is entitled to traveling expenses necessarily incurred in legitimate efforts to preserve the estate, and properly incurred in distributing its assets.

4. The disallowance of an item in an administrator's final account for expenses claimed to have been incurred in efforts to preserve the estate will not be disturbed, where it was not clearly shown that the expense was necessary.

5. Where an item of $20 in an administratrix's account for traveling expenses, claimed to have been incurred in preserving the estate, was cut to $5; and it appeared by her own testimony that, for one trip which she made, no claim could be made, and that she had been separately allowed $17.10 for a trip relating to the same matter; and it was not clearly shown that the expense incurred was necessary and proper,—the refusal to allow the full amount will not be disturbed.

6. Expenses of an administratrix in contesting an order for her removal, and in endeavoring to recover the appointment after the order was made, cannot be charged to the estate.

7. That an administratrix lives some distance from the county in which the estate is probated will not justify her burdening it with the fees of two attorneys.

8. Where litigation relating to administration was not complicated nor excessive, and the attorney first employed was competent, the reduction of the administratrix's claim for the services of an additional attorney will not be disturbed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Byrne, deceased, an order was made settling the final account of Maggie G. Barrett, administratrix, and she appeals. Modified.

W. B. Lardner (Geo. B. Merrill, of counsel), for appellant. Taber & Taber and Pollen & Wallace, for administrator. J. M. Fulweiler, for absent heirs.

HENSHAW, J. This is the appeal of Maggie G. Barrett from the order settling her final account as administratrix of the estate of Joseph Byrne, deceased.

1. The first rejected item is for $7.70. It represents the railroad fare and expenses of appellant incurred upon a trip from San Francisco to Auburn, before she had applied for letters of administration, but when she was taking steps so to do. It was properly rejected. It has been decided that the compensation of an attorney to aid an applicant in securing letters, whether the application be successful or not, is no proper charge against the estate. In re Simmons' Estate, 43 Cal. 543. This item of expense incurred in the same manner stands upon no different plane.

2. For the same reason, the rejection of the second item, also for $7.70, for traveling expenses in attending the hearing of the contest over letters of administration, was also proper.

3. This item of $8.25 was allowed by the court in its findings, but, by some inadvertence, its allowance was not inserted in the order. If the attention of the trial court had been directed to the oversight, it would undoubtedly have been corrected. It should be allowed as of course, but the circumstances do not justify an appeal, since the administratrix should have first called them to the attention of the probate court.

4. The court retired this item of $12.75. It represented the expenses of the administratrix in traveling from San Francisco to Iowa Hill in her effort to dissuade Patrick Byrne, the only heir at law of the deceased residing in the state of California, from petitioning for the sale of a piece of realty belonging to the estate, and called the Irish and Byrne Mine. The administratrix was strongly opposed to parting with this property, and Patrick Byrne seems to have as strongly favored its sale. Upon his application, a sale was decreed, which decree, upon the administratrix's appeal, was set aside by this court, as having been based upon an insufficient petition. Estate of Byrne, 112 Cal. 176, 44 Pac. 467. The administratrix is entitled to her traveling expenses necessarily incurred in her legitimate efforts to preserve the estate, and properly incurred in distributing its assets. But we will not disturb an order rejecting such an item as this, except upon a clear showing that the moneys were thus necessarily and properly expended. Such a showing is not here made.

5. Of this item of $20, but $5 was allowed. In support of it, the administratrix testified that, when she went to Iowa Hill, she stopped at Mr. Watt's house. He accompanied her to the mine and other places. She sent him $20 for his services and for her board. The first time she was there was when her intestate died. She supposed she stayed there altogether two days and more. It thus appears that one of these visits was before she was appointed administratrix, and still another when she went to dissuade Patrick Byrne from his attempt to procure an order of sale of the property. Moreover, in the succeeding item her expenses to Iowa Hill for one trip, aggregating $17.10, were allowed. It may not be said that the court was not justified in thus refusing to allow the full amount.

6. This item of $17.10 was allowed in the finding, and omitted in the order. It stands precisely as does item 3, supra, and, it is conceded, should be credited to appellant.

7. Item 7 is for $20 expenses of George B. Merrill in visiting Auburn. Item 8 is for $7.50 paid as clerk's fees in the supreme court upon filing the administratrix's application for a writ of prohibition. Item 9 is for $100 moneys paid to George B. Merrill upon account of legal services rendered the administratrix. It was allowed for $50. Item 10 aggregates $78.80. It represents moneys expended for clerk's fees, printing, and the like in the matter of the administratrix's application for a writ of review, the decision in which will be found reported in 111 Cal. 154, 43 Pac. 519. Item 11 is for $10, moneys paid as expenses to George B. Merrill to argue before the supreme court at Sacramento the appeal from the order of sale of real property. See Estate of Byrne, 112 Cal. 176, 44 Pac. 467. Item 12, for $6.75; item 13, for $66.95; and item 14, for $22.10,—were incurred after the administratrix's removal from office. They represent, for the most part, expenditures made in her unsuccessful attempt to secure her reinstatement. Item 15 is for $600, the value of legal services rendered by W. B. Lardner as attorney for the administratrix. It was allowed for $200. Item 16 is for $1,800, the value of the services of George B. Merrill as attorney for administratrix. It was rejected in toto, saving that $50 was allowed of the $100 paid in item 9, supra. These items may be considered collectively. The expenditures represented by them were incurred under the following state of facts: The administratrix was not an heir of the deceased. She was the sister of his deceased wife. The only heir at law residing in the state of California was Patrick Byrne, a brother. The administratrix lived in San Francisco, while the estate was in probate in Placer county. She was opposed to selling the interest of the estate in the Irish and Byrne mine, which in reality was not a mine at all, but consisted of 116 acres of land patented under a mineral entry, but wholly undeveloped. Adjacent placer mines were being successfully worked, and she believed that by delaying the sale a much greater price could be obtained. Upon petition of Patrick Byrne, the estate's interest was ordered sold, notwithstanding the opposition of the administratrix. At that time W. D. Lardner was her attorney. He resided at Auburn, Placer county. No question arises as to his skill and ability to conduct all the proceedings and litigation on behalf of the administratrix. After the order of sale, the administratrix desired to appeal. She says she talked to Lardner, and did not think he favored an appeal, but Lardner offers no evidence pro or con upon the matter. Returning to San Francisco, she consulted Mr. Merrill. He made a trip to Auburn, for the expenses of which $20 were charged in item 7, and rejected. Mr. Merrill examined the papers in the case, and consulted Mr. Lardner, with the result that an appeal was taken terminating in a reversal of the order for insufficiencies in the petition. Estate of Byrne, 112 Cal. 176, 44 Pac. 467. Both Lardner and Merrill appeared as attorneys of record in the appeal. The latter went from San Francisco to Sacramento, to argue it before the appellate court; and the claim of $10 for his expenses upon that trip constitutes the rejected item No. 11. As to the need of employing Mr. Merrill, in addition to what has been said, the only further evidence in the record is that of the administratrix, who states that, since she resided in San Francisco, she thought she needed counsel in that city, as she could not have Mr. Lardner running back and forth.

After the appeal from the order of sale was perfected, the administratrix refused to carry out its terms. Upon a showing of this fact made to the court by the petitioning heir at law, Patrick Byrne, she was ordered to show cause, upon a day set, why she should not comply with the order. Without making any showing before the probate court, and without consulting Mr. Lardner, Mr. Merrill sued out in the supreme court an alternative writ of prohibition, directed to the trial judge, to restrain the proceedings which it was alleged he was about to take and to order. Prior to this, however, the probate court had become convinced that the order of sale was suspended under the appeal, and had vacated the order to show cause, and dismissed the application upon which it was based. This was known to Mr. Lardner, who, in turn, notified Mr. Merrill. Notwithstanding, the judge was served with process from the supreme court under the application for the writ of prohibition; and, upon the day set for its hearing, his answer was presented, showing that long previously the proceeding in his court had been dismissed. The matter thus terminated in the supreme court by the discharge of the writ. Rejected item No. 8 is for fees in the matter of this application. The probate court holds that the expenses attending these matters were not proper charges against the estate, because the proceeding in the probate court would have been annulled if that court's attention had been directed to the authorities bearing upon the question; that, in fact, the court examined the authorities, and of its own motion dismissed the citation before the proceeding in the supreme court had been filed; and, finally, because appellant's attorney insisted upon serving the judge of the court with the citation from the supreme court, after knowledge that the proceeding in the probate court had been dismissed.

While the appeal from the order of sale was pending in the superior court, steps were taken against this administratrix which terminated in her removal, and in the appointment of another as administrator. After her removal, she unsuccessfully contested these orders and decrees under petition for writs of review in the supreme court. See Barrett v. Placer County Superior Court, 111 Cal. 154, 43 Pac. 519, and the unreported case of Barrett v. Placer County Superior Court (S. F. 539) 115 Cal. xvii., "Cases not Reported." <sup>1</sup> The other items above set forth represent expenditures that she made after she had been removed from office, and while she was contesting the order of removal. She had been required to give additional security upon her bond as an administratrix, and had failed to do so within the time limited in the court's order. Some of the charges represent expenditures which she incurred in her efforts to procure another undertaking. The court was certainly justified in its refusal to allow each and all of these items.

There is thus left for consideration the items of attorneys' fees. Of these, Mr. Lardner's charge, of $600, is reduced to and allowed for $200. Mr. Merrill's charge, amounting to $1,400, is allowed for $50. It is to be remembered that neither the personal representative in employing an attorney, nor the court in allowing compensation for that attorney, is dealing with or expending any moneys of their own. They both stand in the position of trustees managing the property of the heirs at law or devisees, for their benefit, and for the benefit of the estate's creditors. It is their duty, as it is the duty of all trustees, to exercise the highest diligence and to limit the expenditures with a wise prudence and economy. They have no right to be liberal with the money of the heirs of the dead man. They have no right to incur, or to allow, any item of expense which would not be incurred by a prudent man in the proper management of his own affairs. Too often this court has viewed with grave perturbation the action of trial judges in allowing enormous fees to attorneys from moneys over which they were charged with the high duties of trustees. It has frequently expressed its extreme regret that, under the usual conflict of evidence upon the question, it has been unable to correct a manifest abuse. It is a new departure when, instead of the heirs complaining that their estates have been looted by excessive attorneys' fees, the attorneys themselves come before the court complaining of inadequate compensation. Every attorney should be fully and fairly paid for his services, having in mind their nature, their difficulty, the value of the estate, and the responsibility thus cast upon the counselor. But upon the other hand, as has been said before, no judge has the right to be liberal with the moneys of an estate. Freese v. Pennie, 110 Cal. 467, 42 Pac. 978. Circumstances might arise where the administrator would be justified in calling into consultation and in employing additional counsel; but the court in this case determined that no such necessity existed, and we are not disposed to question that conclusion. The fact that the administratrix resided some distance from the county in which the estate was probated did not justify her in burdening the estate with the fees of two attorneys. The court finds that Mr. Lardner, who was first employed, and who continued in the employment until the removal of the administratrix, was thoroughly competent to transact all the legal business necessary for the protection of the estate, and further declared that the legitimate business was not complicated nor excessive. By far the greater part of the services rendered by Mr. Merrill, it will be observed, was in unsuccessful attempts to retain for her her position, and to recover it for her after it had been lost. Where a personal representative has been removed for cause, it can scarcely be held that her attorneys' fees in preventing her removal should be made charges against the estate. For the rest, the court allowed Mr. Merrill $50 for his services upon an appeal from the order of sale, while declaring that Mr. Lardner was fully able to have perfected the appeal, and prosecuted it to its outcome. We cannot say, under the circumstances, as matter either of law or fact, that the court should have awarded a greater sum. The order appealed from will be modified in accordance with the findings of the trial court in the indicated particulars. In all other respects it stands affirmed. Each party will bear his respective costs upon this appeal.

I concur: TEMPLE, J.

McFARLAND, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment solely on the ground that the matter of compensation of attorneys was within the discretion of the court below, and that, under former decisions, a case is not here presented which warrants us to interfere with that discretion. Personally I think that the amount allowed Mr. Merrill for services as attorney was too small.

The court in bank, upon rehearing, orders that the order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed. The appellant will recover her costs of appeal. In other respects the judgment of the department will stand.

In re BYRNE'S ESTATE. (Sac. No. 478.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 7, 1898.)

On rehearing by court in bank. Modified.

For former opinion in department, see 54
Pac. 957.

PER CURIAM. The appellant in this cause petitions for a rehearing after judgment in department. As the appeal was submitted without oral argument, and has been reconsidered by the court in bank upon the briefs and petition, we have concluded to modify the judgment of the department without further delay in those slight particulars in which we think it is erroneous.

In addition to those items of the account which were approved by the findings, but omitted from the order settling the account, we are of the opinion that the charge of $20, designated in the opinion heretofore rendered as "item 7," should have been allowed. The evidence does not support finding 36, upon which it was rejected. It appears very clearly and without contradiction in the evidence that Mr. Lardner, the local attorney at Auburn, was not in favor of appealing from the erroneous order directing the sale of the real estate, and that the administratrix was in favor of appealing. She consulted Mr. Merrill, whose advice coincided with her views, and he took and successfully prosecuted the appeal. Whatever advantage accrued to the estate from the reversal of that order was due to Mr. Merrill's professional services. To enable him to perform these services intelligently and properly, a visit to Placer county, where the estate was in process of administration, and where the papers and records were, was proper and expedient. The reversal of the order of sale entirely justifies the appeal and every step taken in its prosecution, irrespective of the claim that the estate profited largely by the postponement of the sale.

For the same reasons, the charge of $10, designated in the department opinion as "item 11," ought to have been allowed. Finding 45, that it was unreasonable and unnecessary, is not supported by the evidence. The allowance to Mr. Merrill of only $50 for his services in prosecuting that appeal is certainly extremely meager, and far less than the sum we should have been willing to approve; but there is no ground upon which we can hold that the superior court abused its discretion in fixing his allowance in that amount.

the value thereof. Section 1476 limits the value of a homestead selected by the debtor to $5,000, and provides for a division and sale thereof in case it exceeds that sum. Held, that premises exceeding $5,000 in value, selected by insolvent, cannot be set apart as his homestead.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1476, limiting the value of a homestead created by declaration made and recorded to $5,000, and providing for a division and sale thereof in case it exceeds such sum, applies only to homesteads created by declaration made by the debtor and recorded.

3. In determining the value of premises set apart as a homestead, incumbrances thereon cannot be deducted.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

John B. Herbert, an insolvent debtor, petitioned to have part of his property set apart as a homestead, and from an order so setting aside certain property the assignee of insolvent appeals. Reversed.

Jas. R. Lowe and Chas. Clark, for appellant. J. R. Welch, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. John B. Herbert, an insolvent debtor, applied to the court for an order setting apart a homestead; a declaration of homestead upon the property sought to be set apart having been duly made and recorded prior to the insolvency proceedings. Upon the hearing the court found the value of the homestead property, both at the time that the declaration of homestead was filed and at the date of the hearing, to be $10,000, and that mortgage liens rested upon the property to the extent of $5,500. Based upon these facts, the court made an order setting apart the premises as a homestead. The assignee of the insolvent's estate now attacks the validity of this order upon the ground that the court had no power to set apart a homestead of the value of $10,000.

Section 60 of the insolvent act of 1880 provides: "It shall be the duty of the court * * * to exempt and set apart for the use and benefit of said insolvent such real and personal property as is by law exempt from execution; and also a homestead in the manner as provided in section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Section 1465 authorizes the homestead selected, designated, and recorded to be set apart, and it is the duty of the court to make the order when application is made; but this section is silent as to whether such homestead can be set aside if of greater value than $5,000, and the insolvent act, as well, makes no provision for such a case. Section 1476, Code Civ. Proc., provides, however, that, if the homestead "as selected and recorded be returned in the inventory appraised at more than five thousand dollars, the appraisers must before they make return ascertain and appraise the value of the homestead at the time the same was selected, and, if such value exceeded five thousand dollars * * * the appraisers must determine whether the premises can be divided without material injury"; if they can, they must proceed to admeasure and set apart a portion not to exceed in value five thousand dollars; otherwise provision is made for sale. By virtue of the foregoing sections of the Code, the homestead of the insolvent debtor should be dealt with exactly like that of a deceased person. If Herbert had died, and this application had been made to the court in probate to set apart the homestead, the course to be followed by the court is clearly outlined by these sections of the Code; and under the authority of these sections the court would have had no power to set apart these premises as a homestead, but either should have required a portion thereof to be set apart, or, if such course had been deemed impracticable, then have ordered a sale of the entire property, with the direction that the proceeds be applied as provided in section 1476. The insolvent act substantially declares that the probate procedure should be followed in a case presenting the facts here disclosed, and under such procedure the action of the trial court in this case was not justified.

It is contended upon the part of respondent that section 1476, supra, does not apply to homesteads created by declaration made and recorded. This contention is unsound. The section applies alone to such character of homesteads. Again, the fact that mortgage liens amounting to $5,500 rested upon the homestead property was a matter wholly immaterial. In fixing the valuation of the homestead premises, liens or incumbrances of any character are not an element entering into the question. For the foregoing reasons the order is reversed, and the trial court directed to proceed in accordance with the views here expressed.

HENDERSON v. HART. (Sac. 358.)

REPLEVIN—AMENDING COMPLAINT—CONVERSION—REOPENING CASE—EXECUTIONS—WRITTEN CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—CHANGE OF POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF SELLER.

1. In replevin, where it is shown that defendant wrongfully disposed of the property before the commencement of the action, it is not an abuse of discretion, after the evidence is closed, to permit an amendment so as to support a recovery for the conversion of the property, where it is not shown that plaintiff knew, when the action was brought, that defendant no longer had possession of the property.

2. It is proper to refuse defendant's motion to reopen a replevin case in which the complaint was amended at the close of the evidence so as to support a recovery for conversion, where defendant fails to show or even claim that any evidence exists, in addition to that before the court, which is relevant to the case as it stands on the amended complaint.

3. A written claim of property in goods about to be levied on under execution, which states the claimant's "grounds of title," pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 549, 689, to be by purchase from S. and the judgment debtor, is not defective, as indicating a purchase from said persons jointly.

4. The seller's possession of hogs when they were levied on does not show a want of immediate and continued change of possession, where such possession was as an agister for hire on leased premises different from those on which the hogs had ranged before the sale.

5. Declarations of a seller concerning the sale are inadmissible against the buyer, where made after the sale, when not in possession of the property, and when the buyer was not present.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county.

Replevin by Mary E. Henderson against Wilson Hart. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order refusing to reopen the case, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Johnson & Chase, for appellant. A. N. McCoy and H. P. Andrews, for respondent.

BRITT, C. 1. In its original form, this was an action in the nature of replevin to recover possession of 146 head of swine, alleged to be the property of plaintiff, and wrongfully taken and withheld by defendant. In his answer, besides denying generally the allegations of the complaint, defendant justified the taking in his capacity of township constable under a writ of attachment issued in a certain suit against one W. M. Ham. He alleged that the hogs were the property of said Ham, and also that before the commencement of this action he had sold them under execution to satisfy the judgment obtained in said suit against Ham, and delivered possession thereof to the purchaser. At the trial the defendant's averments concerning the sale of the animals under process, and that he had not possession thereof at the commencement of this action, were established by proof. After the evidence was closed, but before the final submission of the case, by leave of the court granted over defendant's objection, plaintiff amended her complaint so as to transform the action virtually into one of trover, charging defendant with converting the property, and claiming damages accordingly. On defendant's request it was ordered that the answer to the original stand as the answer to the amended complaint, and defendant then moved the court to set down the cause for trial on the issues thus raised. The record shows that this motion "was heard on the papers and evidence in the case," and was denied. It was not an abuse of discretion in the court to allow plaintiff to amend her pleading so that it might support a recovery for the conversion of the property, when it was shown that she could not have judgment for its possession because defendant had disposed of the same before the action was begun. Riciotto v. Clement, 94 Cal. 105, 29 Pac. 414. If it appeared that plaintiff knew when she brought her action that defendant no longer had possession of the property, the conclusion might be different, but it was not shown that she had such knowledge. Nor did defendant, in support of his motion to reopen the case, show or even claim that any evidence existed, in addition to that already before the court, which was relevant to the case as it stood on the amended complaint. On the contrary, he submitted his motion on the papers filed and evidence previously taken. The court could not assume that additional evidence was at his command. Its denial of the motion was therefore not improper.

2. While the hogs were yet held by defendant, plaintiff served on him a verified written claim thereto, pursuant to sections 549, 689, Code Civ. Proc., in which "the grounds of her title" were stated as follows: "Affiant acquired title to said property by purchase of certain hogs on or about April 1, 1895, from E. W. Saunders and W. M. Ham; and the said hogs levied upon are the same so purchased, and the increase of the same," etc. At the trial it appeared that she had bought some of the animals from Saunders, and others from Ham; and it is objected that the statement in said verified claim is defective and false, in that it indicates a purchase from those persons jointly. We consider that the statement sufficiently apprised the officer of the source of plaintiff's title, whether she had acquired all the hogs from Saunders and Ham jointly, or some from each of them severally. Dubois v. Spinks, 114 Cal. 289, 46 Pac. 95; Marble Co. v. Brow, 109 Cal. 241, 41 Pac. 1031.

3. It is urged that the sale of hogs by Ham to plaintiff was not accompanied by immediate and continued change of possession. It seems unnecessary to detail the evidence on this point. The animals were in Ham's custody when attached, but he had them, together with hogs of other persons, as an agister for hire, not on the premises where they ranged before plaintiff bought them, but on lands he rented for the temporary purpose; and there was evidence of such previous delivery and continuous change of possession as, in our opinion, sustains the finding in plaintiff's favor. See Levy v. Scott, 115 Cal. 48, 46 Pac. 892, and cases cited. Defendant sought to prove a declaration of said Ham, made some months after the purchase of the hogs by plaintiff, to the effect, as defendant understands it, that he was yet the owner of them; but the statement was not uttered in the presence of plaintiff, nor when the hogs were in Ham's possession, and was rightly excluded from the evidence. Cahoon v. Marshall, 25 Cal. 198, 202. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BANK OF LEMOORE v. GULART et al.
(Sac. 460.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1898.)

CONTRACTS—ALTERATION—CONSTRUCTION—ASSENT.

1. B. agreed in writing with R. to pay a note of R. and G. out of the proceeds of sheep mortgaged to B. by G. B. telephoned the payee that he had agreed to pay the note, and asked for 30 days' extension, which was granted on consideration of his promise. He sold the sheep, and shortly after "guaranteed full payment," and asked for another extension, and subsequently paid some interest. The sheep were attached in an action against G., and, to secure their release, B. paid the attachment debt, after deducting which, and expenses, the proceeds of the sheep were insufficient to pay the note. Held, that B. had obligated himself unconditionally to pay the note in full, and had not limited his liability to the proceeds remaining after all claims against the principal were satisfied.

2. Where a person who agreed to pay another's note, which was payable to a bank, telephoned the cashier that he had agreed to pay it, and thereby secured an extension, the bank's acceptance of the new agreement is inferred.

3. An agreement of the maker of a note, restricting the liability of one who had promised to pay it, is ineffectual, as against the payee, where it was made after the payee had accepted the promise.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kings county.

Action by the Bank of Lemoore against Manuel S. Gulart and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Joe D. Biddle appeals. Affirmed.

H. L. Smith, for appellant. M. J. Short, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover the amount due on a promissory note for $600 executed by defendants Gulart and Rose to the plaintiff on November 22, 1892, payable six months after date, and bearing interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month. It is alleged in the complaint that on July 24, 1893, defendant Biddle signed and delivered to defendant Rose a written agreement whereby, for a good consideration expressed therein, he promised and agreed to pay to the plaintiff the said promissory note sued upon, out of the proceeds of a band of sheep that day mortgaged to him by defendant Gulart,—the payment to be made in about 30 days, or as soon as the sheep should be sold; that on or about the same day plaintiff agreed to and did accept the promise made by Biddle to pay the said note, and that Rose performed all the conditions of the said agreement to be by him performed; and that the said sheep were delivered to Biddle, and had long since been sold by him, but he had not paid any part of the principal of the said note, or any of the interest due thereon, except the sum of $40, which was paid by him about February 3, 1894. Rose answered, admitting all the averments of the complaint, and alleging that shortly after the execution and delivery of the said agreement the plaintiff, for a good and sufficient consideration, promised to and did release and discharge him from all liability for or on account of the said note, or any part thereof. Biddle answered, denying his liability upon the said agreement, because Rose and he had, subsequent to the execution thereof, entered into other agreements which took the place of the one sued upon, and which had been fully executed by him before the commencement of this action, and that, if liable to the plaintiff for any sum, it was for $121.35 only; that being the amount of the proceeds of the sale of the sheep mentioned in the said agreement. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and the court found, among other things, that all the allegations of the complaint were true, and all the allegations and denials of the said answers were untrue. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants Rose and Biddle for the amount claimed in the complaint. From that judgment Biddle alone appeals, and the case is brought here on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

Appellant contends that the findings were not justified by the evidence, but we think they must be sustained. By the agreement of July 24, 1893, appellant promised unconditionally to pay the note in suit to the plaintiff out of the proceeds of a band of sheep, when they were sold; and on or about the same day he called up, by telephone, D. O. Carr, the cashier and secretary of the plaintiff bank, and told him that he had made an agreement by which he agreed to pay the note of Rose and Gulart (the note in suit), and that he would pay the interest up right away, and would like 30 days on the note. In answer, Carr told him that, in consideration of his saying he intended to pay the note, they would not press the matter for 30 days. And Carr testified: "What caused me to extend the time to pay the note was the fact that Joe D. Biddle agreed to pay it." Appellant sold the said sheep in September, 1893, for $1,875, and on December 16, 1893, he wrote to the Bank of Lemoore, saying: "Say, Friend Carr. * * * Can't you let the note run, say, a little longer? Will send you the interest, and pay up at once. The note is strictly A 1. Will guaranty full payment." And about February 3, 1894, he paid $40 on account of the interest due on the note.

It is claimed, however, that, if appellant is liable to the plaintiff to pay the note sued upon, the extent of his liability is the proceeds of the sale of the sheep, and that by the word "proceeds," as used in the agreement, was meant the net sum remaining after all other claims against them should be satisfied; that, at the time the said agreement of July 24th was executed, the said sheep were the property of Gulart, and were held by the sheriff under a writ of attachment issued in an action commenced against him by one Dickey; that, to obtain possession of the sheep, appellant had to and did pay the claim of Dickey, amounting to about the sum of $1,300; and that the expense of keeping the sheep from the time he received them until the sale, and the expense of the sale, amounted to the sum of $454, leaving in his hands, as the net proceeds of the sheep, the sum of $121.35, for which sum only he could be held liable. The obvious answer to this position is that when appellant signed the agreement to pay the said note, and telephoned Carr that he had made an agreement by which he was to pay it, he knew of the attachment and the conditions under which the sheep were held, and yet placed no limitation or restriction upon his liability to pay the note in full; and that he did not then mean that the "proceeds" should be what might be left after paying off Dickey's attachment claim is quite conclusively shown by his letter of December 16th, by which he admits his liability to pay the note, and expressly guaranties full payment thereof. It therefore, we think, clearly appears from the evidence that appellant obligated himself unconditionally to pay to the plaintiff the full amount due on the said note; and the court having, in effect, so found, the findings cannot be disturbed on this ground.

Appellant also contends that there is no evidence to support the finding that the agreement of July 24, 1893, was accepted by plaintiff on or about its date. Carr testified that for nearly six years he had been the cashier and secretary of the plaintiff corporation, and that he extended the time to pay the said note at appellant's request, and because he had agreed to pay it. The cashier of a bank is an executive officer thereof, and is charged with large powers and duties in the management of its financial business, and "notice to the cashier of a bank relative to any matter falling within the scope of his official employment is notice to the bank." Boone, Banking, § 134. It appears, therefore, that Carr, as cashier, had notice of the said agreement, and acted upon it in granting the extension, and this notice must be held to be notice to the bank. Under these circumstances it should be assumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the bank knew of and approved the action of Carr in regard to the note, and also knew of and accepted the agreement.

Appellant further contends that the court erred in certain rulings upon the admission of evidence. When appellant was on the stand as a witness in his own behalf he testified that in August, 1893, the said sheep were held by the sheriff under attachment issued in the suit of Dickey v. Gulart, and that he released the attachment by paying Dickey's claim of about $1,300, and that at the time he paid the said claim he received the sheep from the sheriff, and thereafter kept them until some time in September, when he sold them. He was then asked by his attorney: "What agreement, if any, did you have with Gulart and Rose in regard to the repayment of money which you paid to Dickey for the release of the sheep from the attachment?" Plaintiff objected to the question as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and a variation of a written contract, and the objection was sustained. The attorney then said: "I offer to show by this witness that on August 22, 1893, the time he paid the thirteen hundred dollars to release the sheep from the attachment in the case of Dickey v. Gulart, it was agreed between Rose and Gulart and this witness that if the witness, defendant Biddle, would pay the money to release them from the attachment in the case of Dickey v. Gulart, that when the sheep were sold he could retain out of the proceeds of the sale the amount of money which he paid for the release of the attachment, and that he could also retain out of the proceeds of the sale the amount of money which it cost to run the sheep, and the amount of money to cover the expense of the sale, and the balance of the proceeds were to be applied in satisfaction of the contract of July 24, 1893." Plaintiff objected also to this offered evidence, upon the ground that, if received, it would be irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and a variation of a written contract; and the objection was sustained. The rulings complained of were, in our opinion, proper, and should be sustained. Having entered into an agreement in July to pay the note to the plaintiff, and that agreement having been accepted and acted upon by the plaintiff, appellant could not in August, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, make any new agreement with Rose and Gulart whereby his liability to plaintiff would be limited, changed, or modified in any respect. And that appellant did not himself consider that he had to any extent been released from his obligation to the plaintiff to pay the note is shown by his letter of December 16th, in which he again guarantees the full payment of it. The record, in our opinion, discloses no valid ground for reversal, and we advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

IRISH v. SUNDERHAUS et al. (Sac. 356.) (Supreme Court of California. Nov. 9, 1898.)

ASSIGNMENTS—PURPOSE—SUFFICIENCY OF TRANSFER—PLEADING—REVIEW.

1. Plaintiff, suing as an assignee, alleged that the claim sued on was assigned to him before the commencement of the suit, but did not aver that he was then the owner. Held that, in the absence of a special demurrer and after judgment, the pleading should be sustained.

2. In an action against the stockholders by an assignee of claims against the corporation, defendants claimed that one E. had purchased the claims and released them. E. and one S., attorney for the creditors, entered into an agreement, whereby S. was to become the owner of the claims by assignment, and, on payment of a consideration, transfer them and the corporate assets to E. The contract was not carried out, but at E.'s request S. sold the assets of the corporation, and received and applied the money according to the agreement, which defendants claimed was a substantial compliance therewith, and entitled E. to the transfer of the claims. Held that, even if E. became the equitable owner, defendants, to sustain their claim, must show that S. was able to perform his part of the agreement.

3. An attorney for creditors of an insolvent corporation procured assignments of their claims, which he transferred. The creditors were not told when the attorney procured the assignments that he intended to transfer the claims. No creditor supposed that by his assignment he was doing anything more than enabling his attorney to realize the value of the claims. Held, that a finding that the assignments were made for collection only would not be disturbed.

Action by John B. Irish against John Sunderhaus and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. R. Wehe, for appellants. John B. Irish, in pro. per.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought against the stockholders of a corporation by plaintiff as assignee of certain claims of creditors. In the complaint, after setting out the debt of each creditor, and after an averment that the debt is still due and unpaid, plaintiff avers "that said claim was duly assigned to this plaintiff before the commencement of this action," but it is not averred that he is still the owner of the assigned claim. The complaint was not demurred to, but appellants in this court for the first time object that the complaint in that respect fails to state a cause of action, and Holly v. Heiskell, 112 Cal. 174, 44 Pac. 466, is relied upon as authority. That was an action of "claim and delivery," and it was held that the complaint must show that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession at the time of the commencement of the action; and it was said: "It is not sufficient to merely aver that he was the owner or entitled to the possession at some period prior to that time." Williams v. Ashe, 111 Cal. 180, 43 Pac. 595, is referred to. In that case the averment was to the effect that "on and after a day named plaintiff was the owner," etc. The cases of Affierbucker v. McGovern, 79 Cal. 268, 21 Pac. 837, and Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750, are differentiated from that case as follows: "But in both of these cases the radical error was in pleading ownership upon a day certain, and upon no other day, and there was no implication which could be construed as a pleading of continued ownership or right of action at the time of the commencement of the suit." The complaint was held to be not obnoxious to a general demurrer, because "there is still by fair intendment to be gathered from the complaint that he claimed ownership and right of possession at the time of the commencement of his action. Amestoy v. Transit Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550; Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 25, 41 Pac. 24."

Unless they can be placed upon the proposition that averment of ownership upon a day named rebuts the presumption of continuance, the cases relied upon are inconsistent with the cases cited in the above quotation. If plaintiff had proven an assignment to him prior to the commencement of the action, he would not have been required to show the negative fact that he had not subsequently parted with his title. The presumption is a rule of evidence, and cannot take the place of an allegation of an essential fact. Therefore, before a special demurrer, such a pleading would be found wanting. But after judgment, or upon a general demurrer, if the facts are found in the complaint, though not logically stated, the pleading will be sustained. Plaintiff's ownership is, by "fair intendment," shown at the time the action was commenced.

The stockholders in answer aver, in substance, after denying plaintiff's ownership of the claim, that one Henry Epstein had purchased all of the claims sued upon, and after suit brought, but before the answer was filed, had released all the stockholders from such indebtedness. In proof a written contract between Epstein and one F. D. Soward, dated September 21, 1895, is shown. In this contract it is recited "that Soward was attorney for the petitioning creditors in the insolvency of the Alaska Milling & Mining Company, and attorney in fact for all the creditors who have filed claims; that Epstein, party of the second part, desired an option for sixty days to purchase and become the owner of said claims." The party of the first part agreed "to become the owner by assignment and transfer of all said claims," and, in consideration of $8,000, "to execute and deliver to said party of the second part good and sufficient assignments, transfers, and conveyances of all said claims," and to pay costs of the proceeding, and at the option of the party of the second part to procure a dismissal of the proceeding in insolvency or a sale of the assets by the assignee and a conveyance to Epstein. As soon as Soward should procure transfers to himself of the claims, "and upon the execution and delivery by said party of the first part of a good and sufficient agreement of said party of the first part agreeing to transfer to said party of the second part the claims," Epstein was to pay to the party of the first part $500, upon which payment the party of the second part was to have the option for 60 days to become the owner of all said claims, upon paying the remaining $7,500. Before that time, however, Soward was to perform all the conditions of the contract and of the additional agreement to be made; it being understood that these were conditions precedent to the payment of the $7,500 by Epstein. Yet it was "distinctly understood and agreed" that Epstein "shall in no respect be obligated to pay said sum of seventy-five hundred ($7,500) dollars, but that the payment of said sum of seventy-five hundred ($7,500) dollars shall be optional with said party of the second part, and that said payment of five hundred ($500) dollars is made in consideration of the option and privilege hereby given." Attached to the written instrument are exhibits containing lists of the claims and demands referred to, followed by an agreement signed by Soward to the effect that the $8,000, if paid, shall be applied as follows: (1) To pay certain costs; (2) to pay attorney's fees; (3) to pay laborers in full; (4) to pay other creditors a pro rata proportion.

It will be seen that by the extraordinary agreement Epstein bound himself to nothing except to pay $500 "when the party of the first part shall have procured the necessary assignments and transfers to him," and upon the execution and delivery of another agreement by Soward. And thereon Epstein had an option to pay $7,500, and become the owner of said claims; before which, however, Soward was to perform all the conditions of the contract as a condition precedent to the payment by Epstein, which, it is distinctly stipulated, Epstein need not make, notwithstanding entire performance on the part of Soward. The $500 was never paid, and the additional agreement called for was not entered into. In fact, Soward was unable "to become the owner by assignment and transfer of all the said claims and demands," until the assets of the insolvent corporation were sold by the assignee. The contract was never carried out, but in lieu of it, at Epstein's request, Soward procured a private sale of the assets of the insolvent corporation to certain persons who had contracted with Epstein to purchase the mine. Upon the sale of this mine and another, in which the same parties were interested, the purchasers paid to the assignee $8,000. Soward, as attorney for the assignee, received the money, and distributed it in the manner agreed upon. It is contended that this was a substantial compliance with the written agreement, and that Epstein, under the terms of that contract, was entitled to have the "said claims and demands" transferred to him by Soward. This Soward refused to do, but did assign them to plaintiff, who thereupon commenced this action against the stockholders.

Defendants contend that Soward took the assignments from the various creditors for collection merely, and not as absolute owner; and while they expected him to realize as much as possible from the assets of the corporation, and to divide the same as the law would direct, they did not understand that they sold their demands to him, nor did they authorize him to sell them. If the controversy were only between Epstein and Soward, there would certainly be much plausibility in the contention of the defendants. But admitting that they are right in their construction of the contract made between Epstein and Soward, and that under that contract Epstein is the equitable owner of the demands, they must still show that Soward was able to perform by transferring the demands. Plaintiff represents the rights of the creditors, and defendants must not only establish their contention as against Soward, but also as against the creditors. That it was not supposed by Epstein or Soward that the latter would purchase the claims outright is shown by the agreement itself. Soward was to pay the creditors pro rata. They were still creditors to be paid. The creditors were not told by Soward when he procured the assignments that he intended to transfer their claims and obtain money in that mode. They were simply told that the mine had been sold, and that, after paying the costs, fees, and lienors, he would be able to pay them about 50 per cent. upon their demands. Evidently this was a representation by him that he would procure for them the value of the assets of the corporation. Why, in order to do that, it was necessary to assign to him does not appear. But he was their attorney, and naturally they did whatever he advised. Soward testified that no mention of the stockholders was ever made. No creditor supposed, or had reason to suppose, that by this assignment he was doing anything more than to enable his attorney to realize for his benefit the value of the assets. There was no other evidence upon the point. The "understandings" of Low do not constitute evidence at all, and should not have been received. We cannot disturb the findings of the court to the effect that the several assignments were made to Soward for collection only. The exceptions to rulings in regard to the admission of evidence have reference to the case of the defendants as against Soward. But, if the finding that the claims were assigned to Soward for collection only must stand, that is immaterial. The judgment and order are affirmed.

KOFOED et ux. v. COSBY et al. (TOWNSEND, Intervener. L. A. 354).

TENDER—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER—FORECLOSURE SALES—REDEMPTION—EVIDENCE—INTEREST ON JUDGMENT—TRUSTEES.

1. Civ. Code, § 1501, providing that all objections to the "mode" of an offer of performance, which the creditor has an opportunity to state at the time to the person making the offer, and which could be then obviated by him, are waived by the creditor if not then stated, is not restricted to objections to the thing offered, and the time and mode of offering it, but applies also to objections to the conditions on which the tender is made.

2. A judgment creditor of a mortgagor did everything necessary to redeem under a foreclosure sale, and paid to the sheriff a sum which the latter received as the proper amount of redemption money, which he paid over to the attorney for the mortgagee, who received it without objection as to the amount. After the judgment creditor's right to redeem had expired, the mortgagee informed the judgment creditor that in addition to the amount paid to the sheriff there should have been paid a certain sum on account of taxes paid by him on the property before the foreclosure. The parties agreed that a redemption had not been effected, but the mortgagee's attorney said that, as the creditor had attempted in good faith to redeem, he would have mortgagee assign the certificate of purchase to the creditor, if the amount of the taxes were paid to him, which was duly carried out on both sides. Held, that the land was redeemed under the judgment, since equity would have relieved the redemptioner from the mistake, and have allowed him to perfect the redemption.

3. On an issue as to whether the reason for refusing a tender was stated at the time to the person tendering, it is not error to require the person to whom the tender was made to answer if, under any conditions, he would have accepted the tender.

4. Where a decree provided that defendants, as judgment creditors, should convey to plaintiffs, as judgment debtors, property which the former, as such creditors, had redeemed from a foreclosure sale, on a payment or tender of a certain amount, it is not error to fail to allow interest on the sum to be paid from the time of the decree up to the time for payment or tender, where such payment could be enforced by defendants at any time.

5. The attorney for a judgment debtor, purporting to be acting for himself, agreed to buy the judgment from the judgment creditor for a certain sum; and it was agreed that execution should be issued in the creditor's name, and that the property realized should afterwards be transferred to the attorney on payment of the agreed sum. Part of the property sold under the execution and bid in by the creditor was the debtor's undivided half in certain property. Afterwards the vendor of said property obtained a decree requiring the vendees, including the debtor, to pay the balance of the price before a certain date, or be barred of all their rights in the premises. On the motion of said attorney, who was attorney for all of the vendees in said suit except said debtor, the decree was amended so as to provide that, if any of the vendees failed to pay their share, their co-vendees, or any of them, might pay the same, and be entitled to a conveyance of such share. Thereafter the debtor obtained a decree adjudging that the attorney was a trustee for the debtor of all rights under the agreement to purchase the judgment, and requiring the creditor to reconvey to the debtor the property purchased at execution sale, on payment or tender of the agreed price of the judgment. The tender was wrongfully rejected. Subsequently the debtor made an effort to raise his part of the balance to be paid the vendor, but said attorney, with the purpose of depriving him of his interest in such lands, deterred and discouraged persons willing and able to do so from advancing the necessary amount to the debtor, whereby he was unable to procure said moneys within the time specified in the decree. The attorney and the judgment creditor procured one of the co-vendees to permit them to use his name to take for themselves the title to the share coming to the debtor, and in his (co-vendee's) name they paid the moneys due from the debtor, taking a conveyance to the co-vendee of the debtor's share, and afterwards procuring his conveyance of the same to the creditor, who in all the transactions was acting in the interest and for the benefit of said attorney. Held, that the attorney and the creditor are trustees of the debtor as to the debtor's undivided half of the property purchased.

Department 2. Appeals from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by John C. Kofoed against Samuel B. Gordon and another to compel defendants to convey to plaintiff certain real property formerly belonging to the latter, and which defendants, as judgment creditors of plaintiff, had redeemed from a foreclosure sale. From an interlocutory decree, a final judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from interlocutory decree dismissed. Affirmed.

Action by John C. Kofoed and his wife against James F. Cosby and Samuel G. Gordon to recover certain property held by defendant Gordon as an alleged trustee. Sarah H. Townsend intervened to quiet her title to part of the property in controversy. From certain interlocutory decrees, from a final decree for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from interlocutory decrees dismissed. Affirmed.

John D. Pope and Murphey & Gottschalk, for appellants. T. M. Stewart and Bicknell & Trask, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. These two cases arise out of the same transactions, and the questions involved depend to a great extent upon the same state of facts. They were tried together in the superior court, and were argued and submitted together here. A brief general statement will suffice to show the nature of the main controversy. A more particular statement will be made in connection with the points in which the cases differ.

On the 30th of June, 1891, a judgment was entered and docketed in the superior court of Los Angeles in favor of the defendant Cosby and against the plaintiff John C. Kofoed for about $2,500, for which sum a lien thereby attached to all of the real property of said Kofoed in Los Angeles county, consisting of numerous parcels. Kofoed was at that date, and thereafter continued to be, involved and embarrassed in his pecuniary affairs. In this situation he employed the defendant Gordon, an attorney at law, in his professional capacity, to assist him in extricating himself from his difficulties, and authorized him, among other things, to negotiate with Cosby for a compromise and release of his judgment of June 30, 1891. Gordon seems to have acted in the interest of Kofoed up to the summer of 1892, when he claims to have been discharged from his employment without having been paid for his services. Acting upon the theory that he was no longer bound by any professional obligation to Kofoed, on the 25th of October, 1892, he entered into the following contract with Cosby:

"In the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, State of California. James F. Cosby, Plaintiff, vs. John C. Kofoed, Defendant. Judgment in favor of James F. Cosby against John C. Kofoed, June 30, 1891, $2,504.83. James F. Cosby and Samuel B. Gordon agree thus: Cosby agrees to sell and Gordon agrees to buy the judgment above named at and for the price of two hundred dollars, to be paid out of moneys that shall be collected thereon, and not otherwise, as follows: Collections on said judgment are to be applied thus: First, to reimburse Gordon for all cash expenses incurred in enforcing said judgment, which expenses it is expected will include costs of only one or more abstracts, sheriff's fees, and expenses of execution, and costs of advertising, but nothing for Gordon's services; second, to pay to Cosby said sum of two hundred dollars, the purchase price of said judgment, to be paid to said Cosby as fast as collected; and, third, the residue of such collections, if any, to belong to Gordon, and to be in full payment of his services in the premises. Until paid for as above, Cosby retains the ownership of said judgment, but gives Gordon entire control thereof for all purposes of enforcing the collection thereof. When paid for as above, Cosby is to assign and transfer said judgment, or so much thereof as shall be unpaid, to Gordon. Gordon is to take immediate steps to enforce collection of said judgment, and continue the same with energy and diligence, all at his own cost, expense, and labor, to be repaid only as above provided, and without cost, expense, or liability to Cosby. Dated Los Angeles, October 25, 1892. [Signed] J. F. Cosby. S. B. Gordon.

"It is also understood and agreed that in case of sale of land or other property on execution on the above judgment, or in case of redemption, by virtue of said judgment, of lands sold on prior judgment or lien, if the same shall be done for the benefit of the parties hereto, the same shall be done in the name of Cosby, who shall hold the same until payment to him of said two hundred dollars, when he shall transfer the same to Gordon, or his order, but all without expense to said Cosby. October 25, 1892. J. F. Cosby. S. B. Gordon."

Immediately after the date of this contract, Gordon caused an execution to issue on the Cosby judgment, which was levied upon a number of parcels of real estate belonging to Kofoed. This property was sold under the execution on December 13, 1892, and bid in by Gordon in the name of Cosby. The price bid was credited on the judgment, leaving a balance still unsatisfied. A short time thereafter an action, numbered 19,201, was commenced by Kofoed and wife against Cosby and Gordon in the superior court of Los Angeles, for the purpose of having Gordon decreed to be a trustee of the plaintiffs as to all rights acquired by him under and by means of the contract of October 25, 1892, whereby the judgment of June 30, 1891, was assigned by Cosby to Gordon, and to compel Cosby to accept from plaintiffs $200 in full satisfaction of said judgment. On July 25, 1893, a decree was entered in this action in which it was ordered and adjudged that Gordon was a trustee for plaintiffs, and for their use and benefit, of all the rights or interests he had acquired by the contract of October 25, 1892, and that plaintiffs be subrogated therein in Gordon's place and stead, provided they paid or tendered to him on or before the 31st day of July, 1893, the sum of $79.50, on account of certain expenses incurred by him. It was further decreed that the defendant Cosby, on payment or tender to him of the sum of $200 on or before July 31, 1893, should receive the same in full satisfaction of his said judgment, and should convey to John C. Kofoed certain parcels of the land purchased by him at the execution sale of December 13, 1892, and to Lily H. Kofoed, his wife, the remaining parcels so purchased by him; the right to the same having been theretofore assigned to her by her husband. And it was further specially provided that unless the plaintiffs should pay or tender said sums to Gordon and Cosby on or before the 31st day of July, 1893, all their right, title, and interest in and to said contract and premises should cease and determine, and that thereafter neither Cosby nor Gordon should be held as their trustee, or trustee of either of them. Appeals were afterwards taken by the defendants from this decree, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, but by stipulation these appeals were subsequently dismissed, so that the decree remains in full force, and, so far as it goes, is a final determination of the rights of the parties.

For the purpose of complying with this decree, an assignee of plaintiffs on the 31st of July, 1893, made a tender of the proper sums of money to be paid to Gordon and Cosby, respectively, but, in tendering the money, presented for execution by both of them an instrument purporting to transfer, release, and assign the Cosby judgment, and to quitclaim the various parcels of land sold under the execution and specified in the decree. This instrument so presented to Cosby and Gordon for signature at the time of the tender of the money was not such an instrument as they, or either of them, were by the terms of the decree required to execute; that is to say, the decree did not require them, or either of them, to assign or transfer the Cosby judgment, but only required Cosby to accept $200 in full satisfaction, and it did not require Gordon to join in the transfer of the lands sold to Cosby at the execution sale. The tender so made was rejected by Gordon and Cosby,—rightfully as they claim, wrongfully as claimed by the plaintiffs and found by the court. This contention presents the principal question in both cases, for all the rights of plaintiffs to the lands here in controversy depend upon the decree in case No. 19,201; and, if they did not make a tender in compliance with that decree, they must fail in both actions. In the complaints it is alleged that when the tender was made it was rejected, with no statement of objection thereto other than that the defendants intended to appeal from the judgment. This the defendants, by their answers, deny; and they allege the fact to be that, at the time said tender was made, it was coupled with a demand that the defendants should jointly execute said deed, and that the attorney of the defendants, in their presence, not only stated that they intended to appeal from the judgment, but also stated that the judgment did not require them to execute a deed such as demanded. The court fails to find whether or not the tender was coupled with a demand that the deed presented should be executed by the defendants jointly; and, if the fact is material, it must be assumed, for the purposes of these appeals, to have been found in favor of the appellants. The court does find expressly that the tender was rejected, with no statement of objections thereto, other than that the defendants intended to appeal from the judgment. The facts above stated, and all statements of fact hereinafter contained, are taken exclusively from the admissions in the pleadings, and the findings of the superior court; and this because, in our opinion, there is sufficient evidence to sustain the findings in all particulars, and not because we hold ourselves precluded from any consideration of the evidence by the objection of respondents that the motions for new trial were not noticed in time,—an objection which we find it unnecessary to consider.

Was the tender of July 31, 1893, sufficient to preserve the rights of the plaintiffs under the decree in case No. 19,201? An offer of performance must be free from any conditions which the creditor is not bound on his part to perform. Civ. Code, § 1494. Here the offer of performance was coupled with conditions which Cosby and Gordon were not bound to perform. But all objections to the mode of an offer of performance which the creditor has an opportunity to state at the time to the person making the offer, and which could be then obviated by him, are waived by the creditor, if not then stated. Id. § 1501. Cosby and Gordon had full opportunity at the time to state their objections to the conditions coupled with the tender, but failed to do so; and the objections, if stated, could easily have been obviated by plaintiffs. Therefore the objections were waived, if section 1501 of the Civil Code applies to the conditions accompanying the offer, and is not restricted, as appellant contends, to objections to the thing offered, and the time and mode of offering it. This precise question has never been necessarily involved in any previous case in this court, or, if so, it has never been considered and expressly decided, so that we are called upon for the first time to determine what is the true construction of the statute upon this point. Taking all the sections of the Code relating to the subject of tender together, it is evident that the intention of the legislature was to do away with many of the objections by which rights dependent upon offer of performance had been theretofore defeated, and to establish more reasonable and more liberal rules upon the subject. It is therefore the duty of the courts to construe any doubtful language of the statute in harmony with the legislative policy. A tender is not required to be unconditional. On the contrary, it is expressly provided (Id. § 1498) that, when a debtor is entitled to the performance of a condition precedent to or concurrent with performance on his part, he may make his offer to depend upon the due performance of such condition. He is forbidden, it is true, to make his offer dependent upon any other conditions; but his obligation in this particular is no more imperative than the obligation to tender the full sum of money due, or the precise personal property or written instruments called for, and there is no more reason for imposing upon the creditor the duty of stating his objections to the thing tendered than there is for requiring him to state his objections to the conditions coupled with the offer. If the person offering to perform is acting in good faith, and makes the mistake of demanding something to which he is not entitled, he ought to be given the same opportunity to recede from such demand that he is allowed for tendering the correct amount where he has tendered too little, or the right thing when he has tendered the wrong thing. There is no consideration of justice or convenience that applies with any greater force to one case than to the other. This principle is the necessary basis of the numerous decisions in which it has been held that an express objection to a tender upon one ground is as clearly a waiver of unauthorized conditions as of other objections not mentioned.

The only real question, therefore, to be considered, is whether the language of section 1501 of the Civil Code, "All objections to the mode of an offer," etc., is brought enough to include, not only the thing offered, but the conditions of the offer; and upon this point we think it is doing no violence to the language of the statute to say that the "mode" of an offer to perform includes the condition upon which the offer of performance is made to depend. We can conceive of no case in which this construction would work an injustice to a creditor seeking only his due, while an opposite construction might in many instances—as in the case before us—deprive a party offering and intending in good faith to perform his obligation of all means of enforcing valuable rights.

Two decisions of this court are cited by appellants which it is claimed are in conflict with this view. Cosby v. Superior Court of Los Angeles Co., 110 Cal. 45, 42 Pac. 460, was certiorari to review a judgment convicting these defendants of contempt for refusing certain tenders made subsequent to July 31, 1893, in pursuance of an attempted amendment of the original decree in case No. 19,201, extending plaintiff's time for making tender. The only question involved in that case was the validity of the amendatory order, but the writer of the opinion, in reviewing the various proceedings in the case, took occasion to remark, obiter, that the tender of July 31st was clearly insufficient. This expression of opinion was perhaps justified, if it then appeared, as stated in the opinion, that the tender was refused by reason of the condition. But, even if the evidence in that case was the same as the finding here, the point we are considering was not involved, and could not have been decided. In Woody v. Bennett, 88 Cal. 243, 26 Pac. 117, the action was upon a contract providing for an exchange of horses, and the question was whether plaintiffs had made a proper demand for the exchange before commencing their action. It was held unnecessary to decide that question, because the defendants had positively and repeatedly refused to exchange, except upon condition that the plaintiffs would take an imported mare at a valuation of $2,000, which mare they had never agreed to take. The demands and counter demands in that case were made by letter. It does not appear how many letters were written, but two at least were written by defendants; and, first and last, they insisted that plaintiffs should take the mare. It does not appear from the report that the plaintiffs specified their objections to this condition, but presumably they did; for the point was not made that they had failed to object, and the case was decided without reference to the effect of such failure. If the point was in the case, it was not made by counsel or considered by the court. It was simply held that the conditional offer of defendants was equivalent to a refusal to exchange, and justified plaintiffs in suing, whether their previous demand for the exchange had been proper or not. We think it clear that neither of these cases sustains the contention of the appellants, or precludes the court from giving to section 1501 of the Civil Code and section 2076 of the Code of Civil Procedure the liberal construction which we think they were intended to bear.

The superior court did not err in holding that the rights of plaintiffs were preserved by the offer of July 31, 1893. Having thus disposed of the only important question common to both cases, it now becomes necessary to consider them separately with reference to the questions peculiar to each.

In the case numbered on our docket L. A. 353 there are three appeals,—one from an interlocutory decree, one from the final judgment, and one from the order of the superior court denying a new trial. The interlocutory decree is not appealable, and the appeal therefrom must be dismissed. Respondent objects to any consideration of the appeal from the order, upon the ground that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not in time. We do not decide the point raised by this objection, because we are satisfied that the evidence set out in the bill of exceptions is sufficient in any event to sustain the findings of fact; and all other points made by appellants may be considered on the appeal from the judgment.

The action in this case was commenced for the purpose of compelling the defendants to convey to Kofoed certain real property formerly belonging to him, which he had mortgaged to one Pinney, and which had been purchased by Pinney January 6, 1893, under a decree of foreclosure. The Cosby judgment of June 30, 1891, had been transferred, as above stated, to Gordon, and only partially satisfied by the proceeds of the execution sale of December 13, 1892. The unsatisfied balance gave Cosby, as trustee for Gordon, the right to redeem from the sale under the Pinney foreclosure. This right would expire with the expiration of the lien June 30, 1893, although the six months from the foreclosure sale would not elapse till July 6, 1893. This, it will be observed, was all prior to the decree in case No. 19,201, and, of course, prior to the tender made pursuant to that decree. On the 30th day of June, then (his last day to redeem), Cosby did everything else necessary to effect a redemption, and paid to the sheriff $1,634.13, which sum was received by the sheriff as the proper amount of redemption money, and paid over to Pinney's attorney, Jones, who received the same without objection as to the amount, and receipted to the sheriff. But a few days afterwards, and after Cosby's right to redeem had expired, Pinney informed his attorney, Jones, that, in addition to the amount paid to the sheriff by Cosby, there should have been paid $5.60 more on account of taxes paid by him on the mortgaged premises subsequent to the foreclosure sale. In consequence of this information, Jones had an interview with Gordon, who was acting for Cosby and himself in the matter, in which he claimed that redemption had not been effected,—a claim in which Gordon, after some discussion, acquiesced. Whereupon Jones said, in substance: "You have attempted in good faith to redeem, and, if you will pay those taxes, I will have Pinney assign you his certificate of purchase." This proposition was accepted, the money paid, and the certificate of purchase duly assigned by Pinney to Cosby. Upon evidence substantially to this effect, the superior court found that the land was redeemed by Cosby and Gordon under the Cosby judgment, and consequently that it was held by them as trustees for Kofoed. The defendants contend, on the contrary, that it was not redeemed under the judgment, but was purchased by Cosby after the time for redemption had expired. We think the court correctly held that the land was redeemed under the Cosby judgment. It is, no doubt, true that the right to redeem property sold under execution is purely statutory, and that, in order to effect a redemption, the statute must be fully complied with. Many cases may be cited in which purchasers have successfully resisted attempts to redeem upon the ground that some requirement of the statute has been overlooked. But it has been held by this court that when a qualified redemptioner makes an attempt in good faith to redeem within the proper time, and is only prevented from perfecting a valid redemption by an innocent mistake, equity will relieve him from the consequences of such mistake, and allow him to perfect the redemption. Pownall v. Hall, 45 Cal. 193. That was a case in which the redemptioner had by mistake given along with the balance of the redemption money a counterfeit legal-tender note for $100. His payment was therefore pro tanto no payment, and by strict law the redemption was not effected; but his attempt in good faith to redeem, which was only prevented by his innocent mistake, was held to give him a right in equity to perfect the redemption by making up the deficiency. We can see no difference in principle between that case and this. The mistake here was an innocent mistake. Gordon made an attempt in good faith to redeem. Neither he, nor the sheriff, nor Jones, the agent and attorney of Pinney, knew of the small amount of taxes that Pinney had paid. The sheriff accepted the amount tendered as the proper amount, and Jones accepted it without objection on behalf of Pinney. Upon discovery of the mistake, Gordon and Cosby could have enforced their right to perfect the redemption; and the voluntary offer of Pinney, by his attorney, to transfer the certificate of purchase upon payment of the taxes, was only another way of perfecting a right enforceable in equity. These conclusions with regard to the effect of the evidence dispose of the contention of appellants that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint, and in failing to find upon the allegations of the answer. The only fact alleged in the answer, and not found, is the failure to pay the $5.60 of taxes. That fact also appears from the complaint, as it does in the evidence, and our conclusion is that in spite of that fact the redemption was effected.

It is next contended by appellants that the decree of the superior court cannot be sustained except upon the theory that Kofoed owned the judgment against himself at the time of the redemption. We do not see the force of this contention. The theory of the case is, and the fact is, that, at the time of the redemption, Cosby owned the judgment, as trustee for Gordon, who was in turn trustee for Kofoed; and whatever Cosby got under the judgment he held in trust for Kofoed, the ultimate beneficiary, with only a lien thereon for his reasonable expenses incurred in the preservation of the property.

We do not think the superior court erred in requiring Gordon and his counsel to answer on cross-examination the question whether they would have accepted the tender of July 31, 1893, even if it had not been coupled with a demand for a deed. In view of the conflict in the evidence as to what passed at that interview, the determination of Gordon and his counsel not to accept the tender in any case was of some weight in determining what was actually said. And, besides, the fact elicited was in itself wholly immaterial, in the view we take of the transaction, and therefore entirely harmless.

Finally, we think the court did not err in failing to allow interest subsequent to the judgment upon the amount which the defendants were found entitled to receive upon a conveyance of the land to plaintiff. They were allowed interest on all their expenditures up to the date of the judgment, which, in view of the fact that they have deprived the plaintiff of the use and possession of the land, was a liberal allowance. After the decree, they had only to comply with it, to get their money.

L. A. 354.

The case presented by appeal numbered L. A. 354 relates to the real property sold December 13, 1892, under the execution issued upon the Cosby judgment, as above stated. Of the property sold at that time a portion stood, as to the title, in this way: It had formerly belonged to one Hubbell, who had contracted to sell it to Kofoed and others,—Kofoed to have one-half undivided, and the remaining half to go to the other vendees, in various proportions. Under this contract one-half of the purchase money had been paid by the vendees, and an action was pending between them and Hubbell, in which the vendees were seeking damages on account of his alleged inability to make a good title, and he was asking a decree of specific performance or foreclosure of their contract of purchase. In May, 1893, a decree in favor of Hubbell had been entered in this action, whereby the plaintiffs were required to pay to him on or before the 9th day of August, 1893, the sum of $7,720, in default of which they were to be forever barred and foreclosed of all their right, title, and interest in the premises. On July 15th, on motion of Gordon, attorney for all the plaintiffs except Mrs. Kofoed (who had been substituted for her husband under an assignment of his interest), this decree was so amended as to provide that, in case any of the vendees of Hubbell should fail to contribute their proportions of the sum found due him, their co-plaintiffs, or any of them, might pay the same, and should thereupon be entitled to a conveyance of the share of the vendee so defaulting. This was the situation when the decree of July 25, 1893, in case No. 19,201, was entered, and when the tender to Cosby and Gordon was made in pursuance thereof on July 31, 1893. That tender, as above shown, was rejected, and the title to the Kofoed interest acquired by Cosby at the execution sale of December, 1892, was retained by him. In this complicated condition of affairs, Kofoed and wife made an effort to raise half of the money to be paid to Hubbell on August 9th, but failed in their efforts. The superior court finds that on August 5, 1893, the defendant Gordon had the purpose to deprive plaintiffs of their interests in the lands described in the Hubbell judgment, and that with the intent to embarrass them, and prevent them from raising money to pay their proportion of the amount due Hubbell, they did deter and discourage persons willing and able so to do from advancing said necessary money to said plaintiffs, whereby said plaintiffs were unable to procure said moneys within the time specified in the decree. It is further found that Gordon and Cosby procured one George W. Burton—one of the vendees of Hubbell, and a co-plaintiff of the Kofoeds in the Hubbell suit—to permit them to use his name to take for themselves the title to the share coming to Mrs. Kofoed, and that they did use Burton's name, and in his name paid the moneys due from Mrs. Kofoed, taking a conveyance to him of her share, and afterwards procuring his conveyance of the same to Cosby, who in all these transactions was acting in the interest and for the benefit of Gordon. Upon these findings of fact the superior court made an interlocutory decree declaring the defendants trustees of Mrs. Kofoed as to an undivided half of the Hubbell lots, and of John C. Kofoed as to the other lots sold under execution December 13, 1892, and thereupon ordered an accounting of the expenses incurred by defendants in preserving the trust property. The account of these expenses was subsequently settled, in the sum of about $8,000; and thereupon a final decree was entered, requiring defendants to convey said property to Kofoed and wife, according to their respective rights, upon payment of the sum found to have been expended in preserving the trust estate. The defendants appeal from the interlocutory decrees, from the final decree, and from an order denying a new trial. The appeal from the interlocutory decrees are dismissed for the reason that they are not appealable. The appeal from the order need not be considered, further than to say that the evidence in the bill of exceptions supports the findings. All other assignments of error are reviewable on the appeal from the final judgment.

As to the contention of appellants that the findings do not cover the material issues, we think it sufficient to say that in the finding "that, in all their transactions tending to acquisition of title to the lands in controversy herein, defendants acted in the interest and for the benefit of defendant Gordon," the court has covered the whole ground of dispute. This finding, in connection with the others, negatives the allegation of the answers that Gordon had no interest in the lots except his fee as an attorney. Besides, his fee as an attorney may have been the equivalent of the entire Kofoed interest. And the evidence supports the finding. Their whole course of conduct in relation to this property shows that Cosby and Gordon were acting in concert, and for the benefit of Gordon. The circumstances, without the aid of direct and positive evidence, were sufficient to warrant the court in finding that what Cosby did in the matter was for Gordon's benefit. He was Gordon's trustee as to the judgment which he had transferred, and necessarily also as to these lands which had been purchased at the execution sale under that judgment. The relation between him and Gordon was not merely that of vendor and vendee,—it was a relation of trust and confidence, voluntarily assumed; and they were both, when acting together in the effort to acquire the lands in controversy by means of that judgment, involuntary trustees of the Kofoeds. But appellants contend that they did not acquire the Hubbell lands by means of the Cosby judgment. They insist, on the contrary, that Burton acquired the Kofoed interest in those lands by advancing the money to pay for it in accordance with the terms of the decree in the case of Kofoed et al. against Hubbell, and that he thereupon conveyed that interest to Cosby, who holds it entirely freed of any claims of the Kofoeds. This conclusion might follow, if the substance of that transaction corresponded with its form. But the findings of the court and the evidence in the case show that Burton's name was a mere cover to conceal a purchase made by Cosby for Gordon's benefit,—a purchase in which he got the benefit of the first payment originally made by Kofoed to Hubbell. The court did not err in declaring Cosby and Gordon trustees of Mrs. Kofoed in the Hubbell lands. As to the other tracts and lots sold at the execution sale, the title to which stood in the name of Kofoed, there can be no question that the decree is correct.

Intervention of Townsend.

Sarah H. Townsend was allowed to intervene in this case (L. A. 354) for the purpose of quieting her title to one of the lots in controversy. Kofoed and others had sold and conveyed this lot to her in 1886, but her deed had not been recorded when the lot was purchased by Cosby and Gordon at the execution sale in 1892. It was, however, alleged and found that they had actual notice of the previous sale of the lot by Kofoed, prior to the execution sale, and this finding is supported by the evidence. There is no error in the decree quieting her title.

It is ordered that the several appeals from the interlocutory decrees be, and the same are hereby, dismissed in both cases; that the final decrees and the orders denying new trials be affirmed in both cases.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS.

GOVE v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 765.) (Supreme Court of California. Sept. 3, 1898.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. Action by Henry M. Gove against the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Dismissed. Mullany, Grant & Cushing and A. Everett Ball, for appellant. Harry T. Cresswell and Joseph F. Coffey, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. As bearing upon the motion to dismiss the appeal, the facts of this case are identical with the facts presented by the case of Horton v. City of Los Angeles, 119 Cal. 602, 51 Pac. 956. Upon the authority of that case the appeal is dismissed.

MACHINERY SUPPLY CO. v. DUNCAN. (L. A. 384.) (Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1898.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. S. Noyes, Judge. Action by the Machinery Supply Company against Blanton Duncan. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed. Blanton Duncan, in pro. per., and D. Allen, for appellant. M. L. Graff, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to recover the value of a pumping plant furnished by it to defendant, together with the value of the work and labor attendant upon the construction of the plant. Defendant answered, and by cross complaint averred a specific contract with plaintiff to furnish at an agreed price materials and labor necessary to the construction of the plant under a warranty that the plant, as constructed, would pump from 5,000 to 6,000 gallons of water per hour. He further pleaded a failure by plaintiff to perform, a breach of warranty, and consequent damages. Plaintiff, answering this cross complaint, set forth in precise words the contract, which was in writing, denied the warranty, averred performance, and charged that the failure of the plant to pump sufficient water was wholly occasioned by the presence in the well of large quantities of sand in suspension, which clogged the pump valves. Upon these issues trial was had. The court found throughout in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, and judgment passed accordingly. From the judgment, and from the order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. The findings are within the issues, and support the judgment. The evidence, though in sharp conflict upon many matters, is clearly sufficient to support the findings. No exception was reserved to any of the rulings in receiving or rejecting evidence. There is thus nothing left for review. Therefore the judgment and order are affirmed.

In re MILLER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,514.) (Supreme Court of California. Aug. 31, 1898.) In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. B. Ogden, Judge. In the matter of the estate of A. T. L. Miller, deceased, an appeal was taken, and dismissed without opinion on division in the department. Motion for rehearing denied. James T. Boyd and Timothy J. Lyons, for appellant. Lloyd & Wood and T. Z. Blakeman, pro se.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case was dismissed, and appellant asks for a rehearing. We are satisfied that the order of dismissal was properly made, upon the ground that the appellant had no interest in the proceedings for distribution. His claim is adverse to the title and estate of the decedent, and the distributees take subject to such claim as he may have. Its extent and validity are questions which must be litigated in another forum. Rehearing denied.

SAN FRANCISCO SAV. UNION v. LEE et al. (Sac. 373.) (Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1898.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; William W. Cross, Judge. Action by the San Francisco Savings Union against J. W. Lee and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant A. C. Bowlin appeals. Affirmed. W. W. Middlecoff, for appellant. Bradley & Farnsworth, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover possession of real property. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant Bowlin appeals on bill of exceptions. Plaintiff claims title and right of possession by virtue of a sale of the premises made pursuant to the powers given to certain trustees in a certain deed of trust, executed by appellant to secure the payment of a certain promissory note made by appellant, and payable to plaintiff. This case is not distinguishable in its facts and in the principles of law involved from Bank v. Alcorn (Sac. 332) 53 Pac. 813. The questions presented by this appeal had very careful consideration in the case referred to. Upon the authority of that case, the judgment and order are affirmed.

SPRIGG v. BARBER. (L. A. 312.) (Supreme Court of California. Oct. 13, 1898.) Department 2. Action by Patterson Sprigg against C. L. Barber. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case comes up on a record raising the same question presented in L. A. 311, between the same parties (54 Pac. 899). For the reasons therein stated, the judgment and order in this case are affirmed.

WALLACE v. PERRIN. (S. F. 820.) (Supreme Court of California. Oct. 7, 1898.) Department 1. Action by James H. Wallace against E. B. Perrin. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

PER CURIAM. This case involves the same matters, and by stipulation is submitted upon the same briefs, as Wallace v. Randol (S. F. 804) 54 Pac. 842. Upon the authority of that case, this day decided, the judgment and order are affirmed.

WITTER v. SAN LUIS OBISPO BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N et al. (L. A. 302.) (Supreme Court of California. Aug. 29, 1898.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge. Action by W. G. Witter against the San Luis Obispo Building & Loan Association and another. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. G. F. Witter, Jr., for appellant. Unangst & Kemp, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This case presents in all respects the same questions involved in Witter v. Andrews (L. A. 301, this day decided) 54 Pac. 276. Upon the authority of that case, the judgment herein is affirmed.

WRIGHT v. SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Sac. 554.) (Supreme Court of California. Aug. 17, 1898.) In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; E. E. Gaddis, Judge. Action by Charles E. Wright against Sacramento county and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed. Frank D. Ryan, Dist. Atty., W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and Charles T. Hughes, for appellants. H. C. Ross, Jr., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal presents precisely the same question as that involved in Devine v. Board (Sac. 518, this day decided) 54 Pac. 262; and, upon the authority of that case, the judgment herein is affirmed. Chief Justice not participating.

MORTON et al. v. PACIFIC COAST S. S. CO. (S. F. 885.)

STEAMSHIP COMPANIES—PUBLIC WHARVES—EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES.

The power of the board of state harbor commissioners to lease the piers on the coast to steamship companies was revoked by Pol. Code, § 2524, which empowers the board, inter alia, to set apart and assign suitable wharves for the "exclusive" use of vessels. The statute gives the commissioners power to make reasonable rules concerning the management of the property of the state intrusted to them. Held, that a steamship company which has been assigned a wharf by the board has no right to grant an exclusive privilege of soliciting thereon the carrying of baggage to and from its vessels, so as to prevent plaintiff from carrying on his business of a baggageman on such wharf, where it does not interfere with the proper conduct of the business of the steamship company.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Morton Bros. against the Pacific Coast Steamship Company to restrain defendant from interfering with them in the carrying on of their business on defendant's piers. From a judgment granting the relief sought, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Towle, Jr., for appellant. Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. The Pacific Coast Steamship Company is a common carrier by vessel. Under an agreement and understanding with the board of state harbor commissioners, the company uses piers Nos. 9 and 11 upon the water front in the landing of its vessels. By contract with the Pacific Transfer Company, it receives 25 per cent. of the gross receipts of that company for the exclusive privilege of soliciting upon their piers the carrying of baggage at the times when the passengers on the company's vessels arrive in port. Morton Bros., carrying on the same line of business as the Pacific Transfer Company, were denied the right by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company to solicit business upon these piers or wharves from passengers landing thereat. Thereafter they brought this action against the Pacific Coast Steamship Company to restrain that company from interfering with them in the carrying on of that particular business upon these piers. The trial court granted the relief sought, and that decision is now attacked by appeal.

There are a few minor and incidental questions raised by the appeal and discussed by counsel, but we pass them by, and take hold of the broad proposition, to wit, what, are the rights of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company to and over piers Nos. 9 and 11, under the assignment it has from the board of state harbor commissioners? The authority and control of the harbor commissioners over the water front are found in section 2524 of the Political Code, and, among the many things enumerated in that section, it is declared that the board of harbor commissioners are empowered to "set apart and assign suitable wharves, berths and landings for the exclusive use of vessels." Under this grant of power from the state, the harbor commissioners, by resolution, ordered that piers Nos. 9 and 11, commonly known as Broadway wharves Nos. 1 and 2, be assigned to the exclusive use, occupancy, and control of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, and to the exclusive use and occupancy of the vessels operated by that company. The language of that resolution may be broader than is justified by the power vested in the harbor commissioners under this section of the Political Code. If so, any attempted grant of authority over these piers to the steamship company in excess of the power vested in the harbor commissioners under the aforesaid section would be void and of no effect. Hence we are not specially concerned in the consideration of the length and breadth of the resolution assigning these piers to the steamship company, but will concede that the resolution gives to the company all the right to and over these piers which the board of harbor commissioners had the power to grant. These commissioners had power to grant to the steamship company only those rights and interests which the statute declares they may grant; for the power and control over the water front delegated by the statute to the commissioners may be exercised by them alone, and they can delegate none of those powers, and no part of that control, to third parties.

If the steamship company has the right to let the use of these piers to a transfer company for the purpose of soliciting from passengers the carriage of baggage, it has the same right to let the privilege to an hotel proprietor to solicit for his business. If it has authority to let these privileges, it has authority to let privileges to persons to carry on upon these piers any and all kinds of legitimate business. If it has the power to sell a single privilege, it has the power to sell any and all privileges. Neither is the question of the right of the company to grant a monopoly to conduct any particular kind of business upon these piers material here; for if, in effect, it were a lessee of these piers, it would have a control that would authorize the granting of exclusive privileges. As against the business world, this company either has the control of these privileges or it has not. It either has the same rights over these piers as it has over the decks of its vessels, as far as the business world is concerned, or it has no rights over them except a use for the loading and unloading of freight and passengers. There can be no half-way station; no divided authority. If the assignment to the company has the legal effect of a lease, these privileges to do business upon the piers are matters solely with the company, and exclusive privileges may be granted at its option. Again, the fact that the privilege granted to the Pacific Transfer Company may be said to relate to the convenience of passengers landing upon the piers is a matter wholly immaterial as in any way assisting to support the company's right to grant it. The power to grant this privilege implies the power to grant any and all legitimate privileges for the conduct of business at that point. While the direct question before the court is not as to the right of the steamship company to grant a privilege to the Pacific Transfer Company to do business upon these piers, yet the solution of that question would seem to solve the issue made in this case; for, if the right to grant that privilege vested in the company, then the right to exclude these plaintiffs from the privilege also vested. The power to grant the one is inseparably connected with the power to deny the other.

Until of recent date the harbor commissioners had power to lease these piers to steamship companies, but by express enactment of the legislature that power was revoked, and in lieu thereof they were authorized to "set apart and assign" them. Upon the face of this legislation, it is apparent that the state intended to curtail the power of the commissioners in dealing with the water front. Again, it is apparent, upon an inspection of the many provisions of this section of the Political Code, that by the assignment or setting apart of these piers to the steamship company the commissioners did not relinquish authority over them, and that under such assignment the relation of landlord and tenant in no sense existed; for, as we have seen, the commissioners were expressly forbidden to create such relation. The section of the Code declares: "The commissioners shall have power to make reasonable rules and regulations concerning the control and management of the property of the state intrusted to them by virtue of this article." This power still remained in them over piers Nos. 9 and 11, after the assignment of the use to the steamship company.

We pass to a consideration of the power vested in the commissioners by the particular language found in the section of the Code,— "set apart and assign suitable wharves, approaches or landings for the exclusive use of vessels"; and, as necessarily involved in such consideration, we must ascertain the signification of that language. The meaning of this provision revolves around the word "exclusive," and we are clear that this word refers to an exclusive use by certain particular vessels. It can hardly be said to refer to the exclusive use of vessels in general, for the whole water front is substantially set apart for the exclusive use, indirectly at least, of vessels. In other words, the provision means that the harbor commissioners may set apart to particular parties wharves and landings for the exclusive use of their vessels. Other vessels have no right to use such wharves and landings. By such construction, the word "exclusive" makes the assigning and setting apart of a use of the wharves and landings exclusive as against other vessels, but could not be construed as giving the entire control and occupancy of these wharves and landings to the assignee. The measure of the power of the harbor commissioners is found in this language, and, such being its construction, the assignment to the steamship company only gave that company the exclusive privilege of using these piers in the loading and unloading of freight and passengers. In all other things these piers are under the control and authority of the harbor commissioners, and subject to all reasonable rules and regulations they may promulgate.

The trial court made a finding of fact to the effect that the proper conduct of the business of the steamship company in the use of these piers does not demand that these plaintiffs should be excluded therefrom upon the arrival of vessels. In other words, the presence upon those piers of these plaintiffs, soliciting business upon the arrival of the defendant's vessels, is not an infringement upon defendant's use. This finding is supported by the evidence. The evidence may be said to disclose the fact that, if these plaintiffs are allowed the privilege, then all other transfer companies must be allowed the same privilege, and the presence of all these parties upon the piers would interfere with defendant's use; but it is sufficient to say that as to the result, to the defendant's use, of the presence of all these persons upon the piers soliciting business, we are not now concerned. We are dealing with the plaintiffs alone, and, if the interference or noninterference of plaintiffs with the defendant's use is a material question here, then plaintiffs have the finding of fact to their credit. But it may be said, in conclusion, that this matter of granting or refusing privileges of the kind here involved is a matter with the harbor commissioners alone, and a matter which they should control and manage by reasonable rules and regulations.

Various cases are cited by opposing counsel to support their respective views. We find none of them directly in point. The question here is one largely of statutory construction, and general principles of law aid us but little in declaring the true conclusion. We are satisfied plaintiffs are authorized to bring this action. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

122 Cal. 341

SIMONS v. BEDELL et al. (L. A. 429.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1898.)

EQUITY—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—PLEADING—MARRIED WOMAN'S AGREEMENT—ACKNOWLEDGMENT—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—CONVERSION—EVIDENCE.

1. Where all the parties have gone before the court on the theory that equity had power to determine who was entitled to the distribution of an estate, the court, on appeal, will treat the matter as within the jurisdiction of the court below.

2. A complaint alleging that decedent expressed a desire to devise certain property to plaintiff, but was told by her father that it was unnecessary, and that she could deed certain other property to her mother, who, with her father and plaintiff, were sole heirs, and that her parents would then deed the property in question to plaintiff on decedent's death, and that, relying thereon, she made no will, but deeded the property as advised, which conveyance her mother accepted, sufficiently alleges that she would have made a valid will, and devised said property to plaintiff, but for the action of her parents, as against an objection that it pleads evidentiary, and not ultimate, facts.

3. In an action by a husband to recover proceeds of real estate, where his wife, on her father's inducement, made no will, but conveyed certain real estate to her mother, on condition that her parents deed the realty in question to her husband after her death,—he and her parents being sole heirs,—it is unnecessary to prove that her father was agent of her mother in inducing the action taken, since the mother could not accept the conveyance without the condition.

4. An oral agreement by decedent's parents, as a condition of a conveyance of certain property made to the mother to obviate making a will,—decedent's husband and parents being her sole heirs,—that they would convey certain real estate to the husband, is not within the statute of frauds, requiring trusts of lands to be in writing.

5. Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 4, providing that obligations to do a thing which the party has not lawfully power to perform, or (Id. subd. 5) to procure the consent of the contracting party's wife or a third person's wife, cannot be specifically enforced, has no application to a promise by a father that, as a condition of a conveyance to his wife which was made, they would convey other realty to decedent's husband, since the mother, after accepting the conveyance and retaining the benefits, would be compelled to carry out the conditions.

6. Civ. Code, § 1093, providing that no estate passes in the real property of a married woman, unless by a grant separately acknowledged by her as provided in sections 1186 and 1191, does not apply to prevent specific performance, where she has accepted a voluntary conveyance made to her on condition that she convey to grantor's husband other realty to which she shall succeed as the grantor's heir.

7. Where one heir was entitled to a conveyance by others of certain realty, but by order of the probate court it was sold, the proceeds are impressed with the trust in the realty.

8. Decedent's mother had deeded her certain realty in contemplation of the daughter's marriage; and she before her death deeded part of it back to her mother, on condition that her mother and father, as her heirs, should make a conveyance to decedent's husband of another part of her said realty. Held, that a conversation regarding such property had with the mother before the daughter's marriage was admissible in an action by the husband to compel a conveyance.

9. A father induced his daughter, in order to obviate a will, to convey realty to her mother on condition that the parents should convey other realty to the daughter's husband after her death; her parents and husband being sole heirs. Held, that what the daughter said at the time was admissible, notwithstanding the mother was not present, to prove the conditions imposed.

Beatty, C. J., and Henshaw and Temple, JJ., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by James J. Simons against Jane Bedell and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. E. Cox, for appellants. Jesse F. Watterman and C. C. Wright, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff brought this action to obtain the judgment of the court that he was entitled to certain funds in the hands of the administrator of his deceased wife's estate. Plaintiff prevailed in the action, and this appeal is from the judgment in his favor, and from the order denying motion for a new trial, and is presented by statement. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled. The complaint and a supplementary amended complaint allege, and the court found: That defendants Otis T. and Jane Bedell were husband and wife, and the parents of deceased, Jennie R. Simons. July 10, 1890, one Julius Collins conveyed to said Jennie R. (before her marriage to plaintiff) lot 9 of the Abbott Kinney tract, in the city of Los Angeles, for the consideration of $2,500, which was paid by the said Jane Bedell. Thereafter, to wit, about January 1, 1892, and in contemplation of the marriage between the said Jennie and plaintiff, in addition to whatever right she had derived by said deed, Mrs. Bedell gave to her said lot 9. Soon thereafter, to wit, about January 18, 1892, in con templation of said marriage, said Jane executed and delivered to her said daughter Jennie a deed conveying to her certain real property in the city of New York, of the value of about $15,000. Thereafter, to wit, about February 15, 1892, the said Jane informed her said daughter Jennie that it was not just to her sister that she (Jennie) should have both the New York City and the Los Angeles property; and it was thereupon agreed between the said Jane and her daughter Jennie that the latter should execute and deliver to said Jane her obligation for $2,500, secured by mortgage on the New York property, and that by such execution of said obligation she (the said Jennie) would subsequently become the owner of said properties, by free and unincumbered title. The note and mortgage were accordingly executed about February 15, 1892. On March 18, 1892, plaintiff and the said Jennie intermarried. The said Jennie paid on account of said indebtedness the sum of $400, and all interest to March 1, 1893. During the summer of 1892 she became afflicted with consumption, and died on April 18, 1893. After plaintiff's said marriage he conveyed to his said wife certain real property situated in the city of Los Angeles, being certain lots in block C, Thomas tract. Prior to the death of the said Jennie she "exhibited much solicitude and anxiety concerning the disposition of her property, and expressed the desire to said defendants Bedell to make a will and bequeath said lot 9 and said lots in block C to this plaintiff, and said New York property to her mother, the said defendant Jane." The said Otis, father of deceased, represented to her that it was unnecessary to make a will, and that it would incur unnecessary cost and expense and delay in its probate, and that, if she would execute and deliver a deed to her mother of said New York property, it would accomplish the same object, to which the said Jennie replied that she wanted plaintiff to have the Los Angeles property, to which the said Otis replied that, if she would make a deed to her mother of the New York property, they (the defendants Bedell) would convey to plaintiff the Los Angeles property. Relying upon the said representations of her father, she on February 15, 1893, did make and deliver to him a deed conveying the New York property to her mother, and he agreed to hold the said deed during the lifetime of the said Jennie; and, relying upon said promises of her said father, she made no will. Shortly after the death of the said Jennie, which occurred April 18, 1893, the said Otis delivered said deed to the said Jane, and she accepted the same. The court found (though it is not alleged in the complaint) that she was fully informed of said agreement made by the defendant Otis as aforesaid. It was alleged and found that both she and said Otis have ever since the death of said Jennie refused and neglected to execute to plaintiff a deed to said Los Angeles property, though often requested so to do. It further appears from the complaint and the findings that plaintiff was appointed administrator of his wife's estate November 27, 1893, and that as such administrator he sold, under order of the court in 1895, all the said Los Angeles real property, the subject of the estate, and received the consideration paid; that in July, 1896, he resigned his trust, and defendant Bonebrake was appointed administrator; that plaintiff paid over to defendant Bonebrake the funds received for the sale of said property, who now holds the same as such administrator. The judgment of the court was "that all the funds in the hands of the said administrator * * * derived from the sale of property described in the complaint is the sole and separate property of plaintiff; deducting first therefrom all debts which have been duly presented and allowed against the estate of said Jennie R. Simons, deceased, and all costs and expenses to which said fund may be legally subjected during the course of administration," etc. It is conceded by defendants and found by the court that plaintiff and defendants Bedell are the sole heirs at law of deceased. There is much conflicting evidence, and, upon certain facts found, the court might have reached a different conclusion. But we think there was evidence tending to justify the findings, and we cannot say that the court erred in its adoption of the facts as found.

1. Defendants contend that the demurrer should have been sustained, as no cause of action was stated. The question was not presented by the demurrer, nor is it argued in the briefs, as to the right of plaintiff to go into a court of equity to determine who is entitled to distribution,—a question which it seems to us was clearly within the powers of, and should have been determined by, the court sitting in probate. Siddall v. Harrison, 73 Cal. 560, 15 Pac. 130. We are not prepared to say, however, that the court was without jurisdiction; and, as all parties seem to have treated the matter as properly brought before the court, we shall so treat it. Defendants urge that there is nothing in the complaint to show that said Jennie "intended to and would have made a valid will bequeathing to plaintiff all her interest in the Los Angeles property," had it not been for the action of her parents, nor "that she would have bequeathed any part of her property to plaintiff, if she had made a will"; that the complaint states the evidence, instead of the ultimate facts; and that "evidentiary facts cannot be substituted in a pleading for an allegation of the facts to be put in issue,"—citing Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 415; Thomas v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 426; Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 Pac. 984; Harris v. Hille-gass, 54 Cal. 463. It is not distinctly alleged that the said Jennie abstained from making a will devising her Los Angeles property to plaintiff in consideration of the promise made to her by her father, that he and her mother would convey their interest in that property to plaintiff should she die; but we think it sufficiently appears from the complaint that the parties so regarded the agreement, and that she conveyed the New York property upon the understanding that her parents were to convey their interest in the Los Angeles property to plaintiff. We do not think that the rule with regard to pleading ultimate facts, instead of the evidence of those facts, is so far violated as to bring the pleading within the cases cited, and to make it obnoxious to a general demurrer.

2. It is objected that there is no finding of fact that Otis T. was the agent of his wife, Jane, nor is there any allegation of such agency in the complaint; and it is claimed that the finding that she was fully informed of the agreement made by Otis is not a finding that she had such knowledge when she accepted the deed to the New York property, and the finding is outside any issue raised in the pleading. It is not disputed that Mrs. Bedell was at her home in New York when the alleged agreement was made in Los Angeles, and that the knowledge came to her after the death of her daughter, plaintiff's wife. And Mrs. Bedell testified that her husband did not communicate to her the agreement as it is testified to by plaintiff and found by the court, but that the agreement was subject to her approval. There was evidence tending to support the finding as to the agreement, and the question is, could the mother retain the title to the property, and refuse to carry out the agreement under which it was conveyed? We do not see that it was at all necessary to allege or prove an agency in the husband from his wife. The New York property had been conveyed to plaintiff's wife by her mother. So, also, had the Los Angeles property been conveyed by her direction, and plaintiff had conveyed to her some property. In anticipation of death, plaintiff's wife desired that the New York property should in that event go back to her mother, and the Los Angeles property should go to her husband. Her father was there with her during her last illness, and to him she communicated her wishes, and to him she committed their execution. It was his duty to correctly inform his wife of the conditions upon which his daughter had made the deed, and he could not deprive plaintiff of the benefits of the agreement by misrepresenting its conditions to the grantee of the deed. If she did not know the conditions at its delivery, she did later, which was the same in contemplation of law; and it was her duty either to comply with them, or surrender the property conveyed. We think the foregoing views are sustained by ample authority. Some of the cases will be found in notes to the text in Devl. Deeds, §§ 1073, 1074, 1077. See, also, Lady Superior of Congregational Nunnery of Montreal v. McNamara, 3 Barb. Ch. 375.

3. It is claimed by appellant that the agreement upon which plaintiff relies is void under the statute of frauds, not having been in writing; citing Wittenbrock v. Cass, 110 Cal. 1, 42 Pac. 300. It is also urged that, even if Otis T. could make such agreement for himself, he could not bind his wife; citing § 3390, Civ. Code. The case cited was where a resulting trust not in writing was set up. Mrs. Cass had purchased the property with her own money, and taken the title in her own name. Her agreement was to make a deed to her son, and leave it in escrow until her death, in consideration of certain things to be done by him. It was held that no such trust arose. We do not think that case similar to the one here. Plaintiff's wife executed her deed, of property owned by her, to her mother, without consideration, and delivered it in escrow to her father, to be delivered upon certain conditions and agreements. The condition of delivery happened, to wit, her death. She omitted to make provision for her husband by will, and made no conveyance of the Los Angeles property to him, relying upon the conditions being performed upon which she made the conveyance to her mother. She owned both properties, and in fact conveyed to her mother property worth $15,000, subject to a mortgage to secure $2,100, the amount then due; reserving to her husband lot 9, of the value of $2,500, and the lots conveyed to her by him, which were sold at probate sale for the mortgage lien on them. The section of the Code above referred to has no application to such a case; for there was here neither an obligation "to perform an act which the party had not the power lawfully to perform," nor "an agreement to procure the act or consent of the wife of the contracting party, or of any third person," in the sense there understood. It may be conceded that Mrs. Bedell could not be compelled to carry out the agreement, but she accepted the benefits and retained them, and equity will compel her to comply with the terms upon which such benefits were bestowed. She cannot profit by the act of one party to the agreement, and repudiate her own obligation in respect of it. Her acceptance and retention of the consideration, after learning all the facts, was a ratification of the agreement by which it was paid. Equity and good conscience demand that the defendants Bedell either convey the New York property to the estate of Jennie Simons, deceased, or relinquish all claim upon the proceeds of the Los Angeles property.

4. It is further urged that under section 1093, Civ. Code, Mrs. Bedell cannot be compelled to convey her interest, because she did not execute and acknowledge any instrument as prescribed by section 1186 and section 1191 of the same Code; citing Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 695, where it is held that "specific performance cannot be compelled of an unacknowledged executory contract of a married woman to convey her separate property." Olson v. Lovell, 91 Cal. 508, 27 Pac. 765, is cited, where Jackson v. Torrence is commented upon. The governing principles of those cases are so obviously dissimilar from the principles underlying the case before us, that we deem it unnecessary to say more than that the sections of the Code and the cases cited do not apply. Had this action been brought for specific performance, and before the Los Angeles property was sold by the probate court, we cannot see that any essential element would have been lacking. The contract was concluded, certain, unambiguous, mutual, and for valuable consideration. It was fair in all its parts; free from misrepresentation or misapprehension, fraud or mistake, imposition or surprise. It was neither an unconscionable nor hard bargain, nor was its performance oppressive upon the defendants. And it was such contract as was capable of execution through a decree of the court. Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1404, 1405, and notes. It is true that the Los Angeles property was sold by the probate court, and a conveyance by the Bedells to plaintiff of their interest could not well be decreed; but the proceeds of the sale remain within the control of the court, and it is within its power to make the alternative decree directing payment to plaintiff, or that he is entitled to distribution thereof, subject to the payment of debts, charges, and expenses of the estate.

5. The only errors claimed in the admission of testimony are two: (1) A witness was called by plaintiff to relate a conversation she had with Mrs. Bedell, at Los Angeles, about the property, just before the marriage of her daughter. The ground of the objection was that "it had no relevancy to the case, and the nature of the conversation was not shown." We think the question was relevant. (2) A witness was asked to state what plaintiff's wife said in the presence and hearing of her father with relation to the property matters between herself and her husband. The objection made at the trial was that the question was incompetent and immaterial. The objection now made is that Mrs. Bedell was not present. Mr. Bedell was present. The testimony was admissible, as tending to prove the conditions upon which Mrs. Simons made the deed to her mother, even though the latter was not present. Counsel falls into error here, as elsewhere, in assuming that the previous knowledge and consent of Mrs. Bedell were necessary to bind her. We discover no error in the judgment or order of the court, and therefore advise that they be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed. McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

TEMPLE, J. I dissent. Conceding the validity of the contract stated in the principal opinion, it is nothing more than this. In consideration that Mrs. Simons would deed to her mother the New York property, and would not make a will, defendants Bedell would convey to plaintiff, after the death of Mrs. Simons, the Los Angeles property. As Mrs. Simons owned the Los Angeles property, and under the contract was expected to die such owner, the title which defendants were to convey was what they would inherit from their daughter. Had they conveyed this to the plaintiff, their deed would not have authorized plaintiff to recover the property from the administrator. He would take as heir, and an heir cannot recover the property from the administrator before distribution. Bonebrake is administrator, and holds the property as such. The estate has not yet been distributed. McDaniel v. Pattison, 98 Cal. 86, 32 Pac. 805; Siddal v. Harrison, 73 Cal. 560, 15 Pac. 130. After the death of his wife, plaintiff was appointed administrator, and had the Los Angeles property sold, and then resigned. A successor was appointed, and this suit was brought. In a suit for specific performance,—which this is,—it seems clear to me that the money must take the place of the real estate. Such it was when the alleged contract was made, and it seems quite obvious to me that, even conceding that Otis T. was authorized to contract for his wife, the contract was within the statute of frauds. Wittenbrock v. Cass, 110 Cal. 1, 42 Pac. 300, seems altogether in point, except that this is a much plainer case than that was. There is not, and cannot be, a pretense of part performance here. Supposing, therefore, that Mrs. Bedell did ratify the agreement by accepting the deed, the contract is void. Nor do I think there is any evidence to sustain the finding that Mrs. Bedell accepted the deed with full knowledge of the alleged contract. To the contrary, all the evidence upon the subject is to the effect that she was told that her husband had only told Mrs. Simons that they would convey the property if his wife, Mrs. Bedell, approved of it, subject to a mortgage for the amount of the debt on the New York property. Plaintiff's testimony and his letters all tend to show this. I also think the case is, in principle, within the decision in Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 695, and that there was grave error in the admission in evidence of the statements of plaintiff's wife—not made at the time of the alleged contract, but subsequent thereto—as against Mrs. Bedell. It is assumed that the property had all belonged to Mrs. Bedell, as her separate property. Suggestion is made, however, that the evidence discloses that all the property was community property of Mr. and Mrs. Bedell. If so, then title to the New York property did not pass by Mrs. Bedell's deed to Mrs. Simons, and there was no consideration for the alleged agreement. It might be argued with some plausibility that upon the facts found a suit might be maintained to cancel the deed to the New York property, but I am unable to comprehend any relief to which the plaintiff is entitled, under those facts, in regard to the Los Angeles property.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY v. RIVERSIDE COUNTY. (L. A. 391.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1898.)

COUNTIES—PRESENTATION OF CLAIMS—NEW COUNTIES—APPORTIONMENT OF PROPERTY AND DEBTS.

1. St. 1893, p. 346, §§ 43, 44, requiring a second presentation of claims allowed in part to the board of supervisors before bringing suit for the balance, do not apply to claims wholly rejected.

2. Act March 11, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 158), erected a new county out of existing ones, and provided that commissioners should apportion the property and indebtedness of the old county and the new one. At that time certain railroad taxes were delinquent for each of eight years, and the railroad company paid the first six years' taxes, but left the taxes for 1886-87 unpaid. Under the reassessment act of March 23, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 290), the state board of equalization reassessed the latter taxes, and apportioned the valuation and taxes between the two counties according to the mileage in each. After the passage of the reassessment act, but before the reassessment, the commissioners apportioned the property of the old county, including taxes due, and fixed a ratio for the division of said taxes, excepting the taxes for 1886-87, and adjusted the indebtedness between the counties. The latter taxes were afterwards paid into the treasuries of the old and new counties in the ratio established by the state board of equalization. Held that, the commissioners having made no adjustment of the respective rights of the counties in them, an action by the old county to recover the amount of said taxes paid to the new county would not lie.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by the county of San Diego against the county of Riverside. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

L. Gill, Charles R. Gray, and E. W. Freeman, for appellant. A. H. Sweet, Alexander Hughes, and Goodrich & McCutchen, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover certain taxes paid by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company upon reassessment by the state board of equalization for the years 1886 and 1887, under the provisions of the act of March 23, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 290), paid by that company to the state treasurer, and by him to defendant county. Defendant interposed a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled; and, defendant declining to answer, plaintiff had judgment for $9,104.65, from which defendant appeals. The demurrer challenges the jurisdiction of the court as to both the person of defendant and the subject-matter of the action, and the sufficiency of the facts alleged.

1. It is contended that the complaint is insufficient in showing that the claims sued upon were presented but once to the board of supervisors; citing sections 43 and 44 of the county government act (St. 1893, p. 346); Arbios v. San Bernardino Co., 110 Cal. 553, 42 Pac. 1080. In the case cited this court construed these sections to require a second presentation of a claim before suit where the board has allowed a portion of the claim presented and rejected the remainder; and the reason stated was that the board should have an opportunity to again consider the claim, if the amount allowed was not satisfactory to the claimant, so as to avoid, if the board should change its mind, the cost of litigation which might be imposed by section 44. Where the whole claim is rejected, as in the case here, the statute does not require a second presentation.

2. Riverside county was carved out of San Diego county and San Bernardino county by act of March 11, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 158). The railroad company at that time was a tax delinquent for the years 1880 to 1887, inclusive. It appears from the allegations of the complaint that the company paid the tax to these counties for the years 1880 to 1885 some time during the year 1893; but for the years 1886 and 1887 the tax was levied upon the reassessment made under the act of March 23, 1893, and was not paid until 1894. The action relates to the tax for these last two years. The act of March 11, 1893, creating Riverside county, contains a section, apportioning the public property and debts of the counties concerned, not unlike the one found in the act of March 11, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 123), creating Orange county. Section 9 of the act of March 11, 1893, supra, provides for the appointment of commissioners, and among their duties were the following: "Said board of commissioners shall, immediately after its organization, ascertain the indebtedness of San Diego county existing at the time this act takes effect, and also the total value of all property at that time belonging to said county of San Diego. They shall ascertain the assessed value of all property in San Diego county, as it stood before this act takes effect, according to the assessment made for San Diego county in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-two; also the assessed value, under the same assessment, of all property in the territory hereby set apart from San Diego county and embraced in the county of Riverside. They shall find the difference between the amount of the indebtedness of San Diego county and the value of the property belonging to San Diego county at the time this act takes effect, and, if such indebtedness exceeds the value of such property belonging to San Diego county, the county of Riverside shall pay San Diego county a due proportion thereof, to be determined as follows." Directions are given how to find this "due proportion," and the commissioners are directed to report the amount constituting this proportion to the boards of supervisors of the respective counties; "also, the value of any property belonging to San Diego county at the time this act takes effect which is situated in the county of Riverside. The sum of said ascertained value of said last mentioned property, added to the ascertained proportion of said excess which the county of Riverside is to pay to San Diego county, shall be an indebtedness from the county of Riverside to the county of San Diego. Said property, situated as aforesaid in the county of Riverside, shall, upon settlement therefor as provided in this act, become the property of the county of Riverside, and San Diego county shall pay the entire indebtedness of San Diego county." Provision is further made for adjusting accounts after the excess in the value of the property over the indebtedness in either county is ascertained, and then follows a provision authorizing a tax by Riverside county should it, upon final settlement, be found indebted to San Diego county. The corresponding section found in the act organizing Orange county is set out quite fully in Los Angeles Co. v. Orange Co., 97 Cal. 329, 32 Pac. 316, and Orange Co. v. Los Angeles Co., 114 Cal. 390, 46 Pac. 173. It is alleged in the complaint that this board of commissioners was duly organized under the act, and to carry out its directions, and that "they proceeded to discharge their duties under said act"; that "they reported their proceedings to the boards of supervisors of San Diego county and Riverside county in October, 1893, ascertaining the sum of $2,782.86 to be due the county of San Diego by the county of Riverside on account of the matters which were considered by said commissioners." Among other things, it fixed a ratio of apportionment, "which ratio was subsequently ratified and accepted by the respective boards of supervisors of said counties, and adopted by them in the division of the taxes for the years 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885, which had been reassessed against said railroad company, and paid over to the officers of the two counties, as hereinafter explained. But the taxes for the years 1886 and 1887 were not considered or in any manner adjusted by the said board of commissioners or the boards of supervisors of the two counties." The complaint then alleges that on August 24, 1894, while the taxes for these two years remained duly levied, but uncollected, the state board of equalization, "under and by virtue of the act of March 23, 1893, reassessed said railroad company for taxation" for these years, and improperly apportioned the amount to be paid to each county at the rate of $10,000 per mile,—$877,000 to San Diego county and $926,000 to Riverside county,—and reported the same to the auditors of the respective counties as the basis for taxation of the railroad company by them, and the property of the company was taxed in accordance with such apportionment. It is further alleged that the railroad company paid the tax to the state treasurer, and he paid the same to the respective counties as apportioned by the state board of equalization. The commissioners made the adjustment in October, some months after the reassessment act was passed, and presumably knew of its provisions, and that a reassessment for the years 1886-87 would be made.

These allegations of the complaint sufficiently show the nature and foundation of the action. No explanation is given as to why the commissioners did not adjust and apportion the taxes for the years 1886 and 1887. They did adjust the unpaid taxes for the years 1880 to 1885, inclusive, which had remained unpaid; and the commissioners evidently regarded (and properly, we think) the matter of adjusting these taxes as coming within the jurisdiction conferred upon the commissioners by the act under which they were constituted. These "back taxes" were treated as property formerly belonging to San Diego county; and if, for some unexplained reason, the railroad company paid the taxes to the counties for the years 1880-85, and refrained at that time from paying for the years 1886-87, until reassessed under the act of 1893 (if such be the fact), we cannot see that the question as to whether the matter properly belonged to the commissioners to adjust was affected thereby. The claim against the company for these taxes may have been in "abeyance" because "some question arose as to the validity of the provision of the act of the legislature for the collection of said taxes," as is alleged in the complaint; but it was a claim as much as was the claim for the back taxes of the other years, and was, we think, one of the matters confided to the commissioners for adjustment by the legislature. In Orange Co. v. Los Angeles Co., supra, the action was for a claim that had been omitted by the commissioners because they were ignorant of its existence, but was such a claim as the commissioners could have taken into account and apportioned. This court said: "In creating the county of Orange, the legislature determined how the debts and property of Los Angeles county should be divided and apportioned, as it had full power to do. The act prescribed the limits of each county's rights, and the methods by which they were to be ascertained. In performing their duties the commissioners doubtless intended to make the division as required, and, if they failed to do so, the failure arose through mistake. The mistake was one, however, which in our opinion can be corrected by legislative action only, and not by the courts." A similar claim to the one now before us was presented by the county of Colusa to the county of Glenn, arising upon the division of the latter county and under the reassessment act of 1893. In the act dividing these counties no provision was made for any apportionment of the public property or of the debts or credits of Colusa county between it and Glenn county. It was held on demurrer in such case that the whole thereof belonged to Colusa county, citing Los Angeles Co. v. Orange Co., 97 Cal. 329, 32 Pac. 316; Tulare Co. v. Kings Co., 117 Cal. 195, 49 Pac. 8. But the point as to whether the tax paid in 1894 was upon the original assessment, or upon a reassessment, and what effect, if any, that question would have in the case, was not decided, but left open to be pleaded by defendant. Colusa Co. v. Glenn Co., 117 Cal. 434, 49 Pac. 457. In the present instance the legislature provided a board of commissioners to determine how these matters should be adjusted, and we think in such case the courts cannot be called upon to perform its duties. Sedgwick Co. v. Bunker, 16 Kan. 498; Orange Co. v. Los Angeles Co., supra.

From this view of the case, it becomes unnecessary to pass upon the questions, so fully discussed by the respondent, namely: When was the obligation to pay this tax incurred? Did San Diego county lose her right to this tax by the mere segregation of a portion of her territory? Did the act of March 11, 1893, deprive her of the right to receive this tax? These are questions not necessary to be decided in this case, and are therefore not now passed upon.

Respondent states in its brief that all the facts were set forth in the complaint in order to have the right of action determined on the demurrer, from which we infer that the complaint cannot be amended so as to obviate the objections made to it. The judgment should therefore be reversed, with directions to dismiss the action.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the action.

DAVIS v. GREEN. (Sac. 424.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1898.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—BURDEN OF PROOF—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. The wife of an insolvent husband leased land, and bought seed barley to plant, for the price of which she gave her individual note. She testified that she planted the barley because her husband intended to go away; that they thought that she had better have it in her name; that she had her husband buy the barley, and help plant it, which he did under her direction; that he did the work in the field, and she worked in the house. The husband did not go away, but remained, and took charge of the work. Held, that the crop raised was community property, and liable for the husband's debts.

2. The burden is on the party claiming that property acquired by either husband or wife after marriage is separate property, to prove it by satisfactory evidence.

3. The admission of evidence, immaterial, but not prejudicial to a party, is harmless error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Madera county.

Action by Lizzie B. Davis against J. W.

Green. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Searles & Child, for appellant. Francis A. Fee, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover the possession or value of 610 sacks of barley, which were levied upon and sold by the defendant, as constable, to satisfy a judgment against one W. E. Davis, the husband of plaintiff. The plaintiff claims that the said barley was her separate property, and as such was not liable for the debts of her husband. The defendant denies that the barley was the separate property of the plaintiff, and alleges that it was the community property of herself and husband. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the findings and judgment were in favor of the defendant. From that judgment, and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The only question presented is, was the finding that the barley was community property justified by the evidence? Mr. and Mrs. Davis were married in 1892, and thereafter, up to the time of the trial, continued to live together as husband and wife. At the time of the marriage Mrs. Davis had no property, real or personal. In 1894, Mr. Davis was insolvent, and in the fall of that year Mrs. Davis thought she would engage in some farming business in her own name. To that end she leased certain land, and bought seed barley of a Mr. Scheffing to plant upon it, for the price of which she gave him her promissory note. The seed barley was planted, and in June, 1895, the crop was harvested, the 610 sacks in controversy being a part of that crop. Mrs. Davis, as a witness in her own behalf, testified: "Mr. Davis and Mr. Scheffing did the work in planting the crop under my direction. Mr. Davis bought the seed grain for me, under my direction, from Mr. Scheffing. I have not paid for it. I gave Mr. Scheffing my note for it in the amount of two hundred and fifty dollars. I signed and delivered the note to Mr. Scheffing in payment for the seed which I bought from him. The seed for which I gave my note is the same seed that was planted on the land referred to. The note has not yet been paid. Mr. Healy and Mr. Dyer harvested the crop. I agreed to pay them, but have not done so yet. * * * I planted the barley because Mr. Davis intended to go away, and he and I talked it over, and we both thought I had better have it in my own name, and he told me to do just as I pleased about it. There was other barley harvested besides this six hundred and ten sacks, which I sold. I took the funds, and used them as my own money. There were about twelve hundred sacks raised in the entire crop, and one-fifth went for rent. There were somewhere near three hundred sacks which I disposed of by sale, myself. I used the money realized from the barley sold. I used it in the house for living. * * * I had Mr. Davis help put this barley in. He and Mr. Scheffing did the work. My husband did the work in the field, and I did the work in the house. * * * All these acts which Mr. Davis performed I had him do. I authorized him to act as my agent in all these matters." The above is, in substance, all the evidence on which appellant's claim that the crop of barley raised was her separate property is based; and in support of this claim the case of Wren v. Wren, 100 Cal. 276, 34 Pac. 775, is cited and relied upon. In that case the plaintiff, who was a married woman, and living with her husband, brought the action to recover for personal services rendered by her as nurse to the defendant, who was an inmate of their house; neither she nor her husband, however, being under any natural or legal obligation to care for him without charge. And, prior to the rendition of the services mentioned, it was orally agreed between plaintiff and her husband that she should have and receive all moneys earned by her in nursing defendant as her sole and separate property. The right of the plaintiff to recover was upheld by this court, and it was said that under the provisions of sections 158 and 159 of the Civil Code "there can be no doubt that a husband and wife may agree between themselves, without any other consideration than their mutual consent, that money earned by the wife in performing any work or service which does not devolve upon her by reason of the marriage relation shall belong to her as her own." Obviously that case is not in point here. In this case it does not appear that there was ever any agreement between the plaintiff and her husband that the crop raised on the leased land should be her separate property. She simply stated that she planted the barley "because Mr. Davis intended to go away, and he and I talked it over, and we both thought I had better have it in my own name." This is entirely consistent with the idea that they so thought because, during his expected absence, she could manage the business better if it was conducted in her own name; but it comes far short of constituting an agreement that the proceeds of the business should be her separate property. Besides, Mr. Davis did not go away, but remained, and took full charge of the work. He "did the work in the field," and she "did the work in the house." In this state all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, except that acquired in certain specified ways,—of which this is not one,—is presumed to be community property, and the burden is upon the party claiming that it is separate property to prove it to be such by clear and convincing evidence. Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 248; Morgan v. Lones, 78 Cal. 58, 20 Pac. 248; Dimmick v. Dimmick, 95 Cal. 323, 30 Pac. 547; Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 264, 33 Pac. 95. Under the showing made here, it must, therefore, be held that the seed barley purchased, and the crop raised therefrom, were community property, and liable for the debts of the husband.

The point is made that the court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objection of plaintiff, the proceedings in insolvency on the part of Davis, filed June 24, 1895, and showing him to be indebted to various persons in the aggregate sum of $6,581.38. But, conceding that this evidence was irrelevant and immaterial, still we fail to see that the plaintiff was, or could have been, prejudiced by it. If it had been excluded, we think the result of the trial must have been the same. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. WAUGH v. AUBURN & Y. J. TURNPIKE CO. (Sac. 391.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1898.)

TURNPIKE COMPANIES—REINCORPORATION—EFFECT ON RIGHT TO COLLECT TOLLS—CORPORATIONS—STATUTES.

1. A company, organized to construct a turnpike in 1853, in due time elected to continue its existence as a corporation under Civ. Code, §§ 287, 401, for the term of 50 years, and continued to take tolls up to the present time. Section 287, allowing such extensions, provides that "thereafter the corporation shall continue its existence under the provisions of this Code which are applicable thereto, and shall possess all the rights and powers, and be subject to all the obligations, restrictions and limitations imposed thereby." Section 288 expressly repeals the former laws under which such corporations were formed. Section 514 permits wagon-road corporations to take such tolls only as are fixed by the board of supervisors. Held, that the extension of the existence of the corporation carried with it the right to collect tolls.

2. Act April 22, 1853 (St. 1853, p. 114), in regard to the incorporation of wagon-road companies, which was, in effect, an amendment of the corporation act of 1850 (chapter 4), which was expressly repealed by Act May 12, 1853 (St. 1853, p. 169), is also repealed, as "inconsistent" with the later act.

3. Civ. Code, §§ 287, 401, permitting corporations to continue their existence for 50 years, on certain terms, is not limited to private corporations as distinguished from quasi public corporations.

Beatty, C. J., and Henshaw and Temple, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action by the people, on the relation of one Waugh, against the Auburn & Yankee Jim's Turnpike Company, to enjoin defendant from collecting tolls. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. P. Tuttle, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, L. L. Chamberlain, and Tuttle & Wright, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. When this cause was in department the following opinion was prepared by Mr. Commissioner HAYNES. Upon further consideration of said cause in bank we are satisfied with the views therein expressed, and for the reasons therein given the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to dismiss the action:

"The defendant was incorporated in 1853, under an act approved May 12th of that year, entitled 'An act to authorize the formation of corporations for the construction of plank or turnpike roads' (St. 1853, p. 169), for the purpose of constructing and operating a turnpike toll road between Auburn and Yankee Jim's. The corporation fixed the term of its existence at twenty years, which was the longest period permitted by the statute, and constructed the road within the time fixed by law, and thereafter, and until the month of May, 1873, continued to exist and to take tolls on said road, under the said act; and at the date last mentioned, which was less than twenty years from the date of its organization, it elected to continue its existence as a corporation, under the provisions of sections 287 and 402 of the Civil Code, for the term of fifty years, and continued to take tolls as before until April 10, 1896, when the board of supervisors, on the application of the defendant, fixed the rates of toll to be charged on said road, by adopting the rate fixed on that and other roads the year before; and the defendant still and now claims the right and franchise to take tolls thereon by virtue of its original organization, and its continued existence under the provisions of the Civil Code. This action was commenced in June, 1896, the prayer of the complaint being for a decree adjudging that the defendant has no warrant or authority to collect tolls on said road, and that it be perpetually enjoined therefrom. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals.

"The facts were stipulated, and stand as the findings, and the foregoing statement is condensed therefrom. Respondent concedes that the defendant is now, and ever since 1853 has been, a corporation, but contends that the franchise to exist as a corporation and the franchise to collect tolls are separate and distinct; that the latter franchise is simply a right granted by the board of supervisors under the law; and then states the question thus: 'Did the mere existence of the corporation, which happened to be called a turnpike company, confer upon the board the duty and right to give it the further franchise?' It must be true that by the terms of the act of 1853, under which the defendant became incorporated, the existence of the corporation, as well as its right to take tolls, was limited to twenty years; and, if that act had continued in force, the question before us would be easily determined. It is conceded, however, that, before the expiration of the term of its existence, the codes were adopted, and under the provisions of the Civil Code the term of its existence was not only extended, but its existence was continued 'under the provisions of this code which are applicable thereto, and shall possess all the rights and powers, and be subject to all the obligations, restrictions and limitations prescribed thereby.' Civ. Code, § 287. So far as I am informed, there has never been any question that, as to a corporation electing to continue its existence under the provisions of the code applicable to it, the former laws under which it was formed and existed, and which were applicable to it, were expressly repealed by section 288 of the Civil Code; and if it be true, as conceded by respondent, that the term of defendant's existence has been extended by its compliance with the code provisions, at least that part of the act of 1853 which limited the term of its existence to twenty years has been repealed. But the act of 1853 did not limit the time within which the franchise of taking tolls should be exercised, otherwise than by the term of its existence as a corporation, and hence, to support respondent's contention, the same provision of the statute which was repealed, as to the existence of the corporation, remained in force, and is now invoked as a living statute, under which the death sentence of the franchise to take tolls is pronounced. To illustrate: Suppose the codes had not been enacted, and the legislature had amended section 5 of the act of 1853 to the effect that the term of existence of all corporations formed under it should be extended to fifty years, and had left section 18 unchanged; could any one doubt that the right to take tolls given by that section would continue during the extended term? Though not destroyed by defendant's election to continue its existence under the code, its right to take tolls was not left unaffected. By section 18 of the act of 1853 the defendant had full power to regulate tolls and toll gates on its road; but by section 514 of the Civil Code wagon-road corporations are permitted to take such tolls only as are fixed by the board of supervisors. The act of 1853 made no provision as to the disposition of the road at the expiration of the franchise, or upon the dissolution of the corporation, while the Political Code (section 2619) provides: 'Whenever the franchise for any toll-bridge, trail, turnpike, plank or common wagon road has expired by limitation or non-user, such bridge, trail, turnpike, plank or common wagon road becomes a free public highway.' Section 2799 of the Political Code provides that the corporation may abandon the whole or any part of their road by a written surrender, acknowledged and recorded, and section 2800 provides for the purchase of toll roads by the county 'at any time after any toll road constructed, and under operation under any of the laws of this state, has been in existence for ten years or more, * * * at a fair cash valuation, to be fixed by seven commissioners,' etc.

"It is further urged by respondent that under the act of April 22, 1853 (St. 1853, p. 114), the corporation was allowed to collect revenue enough to recoup itself for the cost of the road, repairs, and running expenses, and, in addition, twenty per cent. on the investment, after which time its income was to be reduced. It is not clear that said act applies to any corporation organized under the act of May 12, 1853. The act of April 22d was brief and imperfect, and, while not referred to in the repealing clause of the later act, appears to have been repealed by it. The former act is entitled 'An act to provide for the incorporation of wagon-road companies. The first section provided that the provisions of chapter 4 of an act concerning corporations, passed in 1850, 'wherein the same does not conflict with the provisions of the following sections of this act, shall apply to the incorporation of companies formed for the purpose of constructing common wagon roads.' It was, therefore, in effect, an amendment of chapter 4 of the act of 1850, and that chapter was expressly repealed by the act of May 12th, which also repealed 'all other laws and acts inconsistent herewith.' It is also argued that it could not have been the intention of the legislature that by the continuance of the existence of corporations under section 287 of the Civil Code the valuable rights and privileges would be continued which would have otherwise ended under the provisions of the original charter. But the power of the legislature to extend the existence of these privileges upon the extension of the corporate existence cannot be questioned; while there would seem to be little reason for continuing the latter, if all its former rights and privileges were to be lost by its acceptance of the offer of continued corporate existence. Indeed, the simple and inexpensive process of organizing a corporation, thus creating a franchise to exist as such, shows conclusively that if that was the sole purpose of section 287 it was almost, if not quite, useless; and, therefore, its principal purpose must have been to continue corporate existence in order that corporate property, rights, and privileges might be preserved and enjoyed by complying with the provisions of section 401 or of section 402 of the Civil Code. (The latter of these sections authorized corporations to continue their existence for an additional period of fifty years, and was repealed March 30, 1874.)

"It is further argued that these code provisions were intended to apply to the numerous corporations doing business of a private nature, and not to quasi public corporations. Whether any reason existed which would have justified such a distinction, need not be considered. It is plain no ground for such distinction appears in either of the sections of the codes above considered, while section 403 of the Civil Code declares that: 'The provisions of this title [title 1] are applicable to every corporation, unless such corporation is excepted from its operation, or unless a special provision is made in relation thereto inconsistent with the provisions of this title, in which case the special provision prevails.' It is, of course, conceded that a 'toll road' is a public highway, and that, when the right to take tolls ceases, it becomes a free public highway, and the board of supervisors has no authority to grant a franchise to collect tolls upon such a highway. El Dorado Co. v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 521; Blood v. Woods, 95 Cal. 78, 86, 30 Pac. 129.

"Respondent cites several cases, none of which affect the conclusions I have reached. In People v. Railroad Co., 76 Cal. 190, 18 Pac. 308, defendants were granted a franchise by the board of supervisors under a special act of the legislature, which limited the term of franchises to be granted to fifteen years. Held, that tolls could not be collected after the expiration of that time. People v. Davidson, 79 Cal. 166, 21 Pac. 538, was entirely similar. There the road was constructed by a private individual in 1861 (upon what authority does not appear), and who kept it as a toll road. In 1878, the board of auditors of El Dorado county, on the owner's application, made an order fixing rates of toll, which order was repealed by the board of supervisors in 1886. On these facts two questions were considered: '(1) Did the defendant dedicate his road to a public use? (2) When his franchise expired, and he ceased to have a right to collect tolls on it, did it become a free public highway?' In McMullin v. Leitch, 83 Cal. 239, 23 Pac. 294, the defendants were incorporated under the act of 1853, but it was not renewed under the provisions of the Civil Code, and it was held that its right to collect tolls expired at the termination of the franchise, and that the stockholders were not entitled to compensation upon the road being declared a free public highway.

"Appellant cites People v. Pfister, 57 Cal. 532, a case directly in point. The defendant was incorporated as a turnpike company in 1857, and elected to continue its existence under the code, and complied with its provisions in that behalf. In the opinion it was said: 'The denial of the right of the corporation to collect tolls is based in the complaint exclusively upon the ground that no such corporation exists. If it exists, it has a right to collect such tolls as the board of supervisors may authorize it to collect.' Ross, J., dissented, contending that the extension of the existence of the corporation did not carry with it the right to collect tolls beyond the period of twenty years from its original organization. The learned counsel for respondent, commenting on that case, say that 'the sole contention of the plaintiff was that no such corporation existed.' The complaint in that case stated that among the franchises exercised by defendants was the following: 'To own and possess a certain highway, and to collect tolls thereon' (see reporter's statement). The public would not be likely to complain that the corporation kept the road in repair at its own expense, and it would, therefore, seem somewhat probable that the exercise of the franchise aimed at was that of taking tolls, and therefore the pith and marrow of the decision was the conclusion that, as the corporation existed, it had the right to take tolls. As it is stipulated that the agreed statement contains 'all the facts concerning said action,' the judgment should be reversed, with directions to dismiss the action."

HENSHAW, J. I dissent. The only new rights obtained by the corporation were (1) to continue its corporate existence to the full term of fifty years; (2) to exercise its corporate franchise under the prescriptions and regulations of the Code. An analysis of People v. Pfister, 57 Cal. 532, will disclose that the sole objection there presented to the defendant's right to collect tolls was based upon the contention that it had ceased to be a corporation. That proposition having been resolved in the defendant's favor, the right to collect tolls was not decided, but conceded.

PEOPLE v. GLEASON. (Cr. 408.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1898.)

CRIMINAL LAW — CHARACTER — INSTRUCTIONS — HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—WITNESSES.

1. Where accused has offered no evidence of character, an instruction that an accused's character cannot be assailed, unless he himself has put it in issue by calling witnesses in its support, is erroneous, as raising the inference that the people, had they been permitted, might have shown that accused's character was bad.

2. Where accused on cross-examination testified that an exhibition of a pistol by him on the day preceding the homicide was accidental, it having fallen out of his pocket, it is competent to show that such exhibition was made deliberately and with a threat, though deceased was not present, and the threat itself was not directed against him in particular.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

T. M. Gleason was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Reversed.

A. J. Bledsoe, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HARRISON, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, for having shot and killed one Cotton, in the town of Bakersfield, and, having been sentenced to state prison for the term of his natural life, has appealed to this court.

In its instructions to the jury, the court gave the following instruction at the request of the prosecution: "You are instructed that the people are not permitted to assail the character of a defendant on trial in a criminal case until the defendant has himself put his character in issue by calling witnesses and offering evidence in its support; and, unless put in issue by the defendant, the people can in no way attack his character." The object of the prosecution in asking this instruction is not apparent. The evident effect of the instruction was, however, to suggest to the jury that, if the prosecution had had an opportunity to do so, they might possibly have shown that the defendant was not a man of good character, and to excuse their failure to make such showing upon the ground that he had not offered evidence in support of his character. The law assumes that a defendant who is upon trial for an offense has a fair character, and, unless evidence to the contrary is given to the jury, he is entitled to the benefit of this presumption in their consideration of the weight to be given to the testimony bearing upon his guilt. In the present case there was no evidence at the trial in reference to the character of the defendant, and he had the right to have the jury, in considering the evidence before them, assume that his character was unimpeached. He was not required to offer witnesses in support of his character, but had the right to rely upon the above presumption; and it was error for the court to suggest to the jury the possibility that his character was not good, and give them the opportunity to indulge in a conjecture that this presumption might have been overcome, but for his failure to support it by evidence. The defendant had been a witness in his own behalf, and it was competent for the prosecution to impeach his credibility as a witness by the same means as it would impeach the credibility of any other witness. People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 Pac. 175; People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 618, 45 Pac. 860. They did not, however, make any attempt to attack his credibility, and as a witness he stood before the jury in the same light as any other witness. The above instruction contains a correct rule of law, but it is a rule of law by which a court is to be governed in determining the admissibility of evidence, and is not for the guidance of a jury in determining the effect of evidence which has been admitted for their consideration. As there was no evidence before the jury relating to the subject-matter of this instruction, the court was not justified in giving it to them, even if there could be any occasion upon which the instruction could be properly given to a jury. A jury should be instructed upon the evidence which has been admitted for their consideration, and not with reference to what would be their duty if they had an opportunity to consider evidence which has not been admitted. Instructions upon abstract rules of law, which have no application to the evidence in a case, tend to confuse rather than enlighten a jury, and ought not to be given. People v. Devine, 95 Cal. 227, 30 Pac. 378; Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28; In re Calkins' Estate, 112 Cal. 296, 44 Pac. 577.

At the trial the defendant testified that on the previous evening he had got the pistol with which he shot the deceased from a man named Percy, and had left it at Carroll's saloon early that morning; that after noon of that day he went to Carroll's place for his pistol, and "I told him to 'give me that gun, and I will put it away'; that after getting the pistol he went to the Brewery Saloon with it upon his person, and, being asked if he took it out there and exhibited it, he replied: "No, sir; it kind of fell out here, and I shoved it back again." He was then asked if he did not, while in the Brewery Saloon, in the presence of one Brown and others, take the pistol out and exhibit it to them, and say in their presence, "This is what I go heeled with," or words to that effect, to which he replied in the negative. In rebuttal the prosecution called Brown as a witness, who testified that he saw the defendant in the Brewery Saloon a few minutes before the shooting, and was asked whether the defendant exhibited his pistol and said to him, in substance, "This is what I go heeled with for those fellows that are after me," or words to that effect. The question was objected to upon the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial for any purpose, and that it had not been shown to have any relation to Cotton. The objection was overruled, and the witness answered that he heard the remark and saw the pistol. It is urged upon this appeal that it was error to admit this testimony, as it was not a part of the res gestæ, and was not made in the presence of Cotton, or shown to have any reference to him. It is not claimed that this remark was any part of the res gestæ, but it was competent for the prosecution to show by a cross-examination of the defendant what he did with the pistol after he got it, and thus refute any inference from his statement that he got it merely for the purpose of putting it away, and it was also competent to contradict his statements in reference thereto by the testimony of Brown. The presence or absence of Cotton when the remark was made was of no moment, since the testimony was not for the purpose of showing any threat towards Cotton, but to impeach the correctness of the defendant's previous statement of his purpose in getting the pistol.

The other errors assigned upon the appeal do not need any consideration; but for the error in giving the above instruction the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

BILLS AND NOTES—PAYMENT—EVIDENCE.

The production of a note by plaintiff, with no payments indorsed thereon, is prima facie proof of nonpayment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county.

Action by John Brennan against Laura A. Brennan, administratrix of the estate of Thomas Brennan, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank R. Wehe, for appellant. F. D. Soward, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Action on a promissory note alleged to have been made by Thomas Brennan, deceased, to the plaintiff. The defendant in her answer, upon want of information and belief, denied that Thomas Brennan executed the note, and on the same ground denied that the whole or any part thereof had not been paid, but averred, upon information and belief, that the sum of $600 thereof had been paid in coin, and the sum of $200 in board and lodging. At the trial plaintiff's attorney introduced the note sued on in evidence, which had no indorsement whatever of payment, and introduced a witness, William Ryan, who testified that the note was in the handwriting of the deceased. This evidence was introduced without objection. Plaintiff then rested; whereupon defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the evidence on the part of the plaintiff was not sufficient to show that the note had not been paid. The motion was denied, and, defendant declining to offer any evidence, judgment was rendered for plaintiff as prayed for in the complaint. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

The only point insisted upon by appellant here is that there was not sufficient proof of nonpayment of the note. At common law, and in many of the American states, payment is an affirmative plea on the part of the defendant, and the burden of proving it rests upon him. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 516. If a different rule prevails in California, still it is the law here that the production of the note by plaintiff in such an action, with no indorsement of payment on it, is sufficient prima facie proof of nonpayment. Frisch v. Caler, 21 Cal. 71, and Bank v. Christensen, 51 Cal. 573. The possession of the attorney for plaintiff was the possession of plaintiff. The judgment is affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—ARGUMENT—ABSENCE OF JUDGE.

A defendant is deprived of liberty without due process of law where the judge absents himself from the court room for 20 minutes during the argument of a case in which defendant is convicted of a felony.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Colonel L. Tupper was convicted of a felony, and he appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. Reversed.

Bernard L. Mills, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant was convicted of a felony, and, as ground for a new trial, he alleged by affidavit, which was not contradicted, that during the argument of the case to the jury the judge absented himself from the court room for the period of 20 minutes. It was also alleged by the affidavit that during such absence the judge was out of sight and hearing of the proceedings going on within the court room. The foregoing facts being undisputed, we are fully satisfied they demand a retrial of the case. The argument of the case to the jury is as much a part of the trial as the introduction of evidence. And evidence may be introduced before the jury, in the absence of the judge, if the practice here pursued may be held justified within the law. It is hardly necessary to present either argument or authority to show that neither of these practices can be justified. The judge is a component part of the court. There can be no court without the judge. And all that was done in the absence of the judge was in fact done in the absence of the court. A defendant convicted under such circumstances has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law. As fully supporting these views, we cite O'Brien v. People, 17 Colo. 561, 31 Pac. 230; Turbeville v. State, 56 Miss. 798; State v. Beuerman (Kan. Sup.) 53 Pac. 874. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county.

Petition by W. W. McDonald for writ of prohibition against Gilmore Agnew, justice of the peace. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Scott & Dooling, for appellant. G. B. Montgomery, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The defendant, a justice of the peace, appeals from a judgment of the superior court prohibiting him from further proceeding in an action brought in his court by one Wilds against McDonald, the plaintiff in this proceeding. The appeal is from the judgment, upon the judgment roll. The findings show the following facts: That summons in the action of Wilds against McDonald was regularly issued by the justice, and "a duplicate of said summons, attached to a copy of the complaint, was handed to said W. W. McDonald" by the attorney for said Wilds; that neither said summons nor complaint was marked "Copy," nor was any other summons shown or read to McDonald; that McDonald's attorney afterwards demanded of the justice permission to inspect the original summons and proof of service, but this request was not complied with, for the reason that the summons had not been returned, and a similar request was made of Wild's attorney, who replied that he would file the summons and proof of service before he moved in the action. These requests, as well as a subsequent motion to quash the summons and dismiss the action, were made before his time to answer had expired. This motion to quash was denied by the justice, and the defendant in that action again moved the court to strike the complaint from the files upon the grounds that the summons had not been returned; that the originals, and not copies, had been served; and that no other complaint or summons had been shown to him; and this motion was also denied. For the purposes of each of these motions, McDonald appeared specially. He then filed a demurrer to the complaint, prefacing it with the following statement: "Comes now the above-named defendant, and not submitting himself to the jurisdiction of this court, nor waiving any of his rights, but appearing only for the purpose of demurring to the plaintiff's complaint filed herein." This demurrer stated three grounds: (1) Want of facts; (2) improperly joining two causes of action; and (3) for uncertainty. Defendant's attorney declined to argue his demurrer, and it was overruled, and, being called upon to answer, he declined to do so, and his default was entered; and, before judgment was entered thereon, McDonald procured from the superior court an alternative writ of prohibition. No return of the summons was at any time made to the justice, though it was attached to the answer of the justice in this proceeding, with a sufficient affidavit of service, made before the date of the default. Upon these facts the superior court concluded that the justice never acquired jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, and entered judgment awarding a peremptory writ of prohibition, from which the justice appeals.

As the default was entered without a return of the summons, or proof of its service, it is not necessary to decide whether due service was in fact made, nor whether, in the absence of an appearance by the defendant, the justice would have had jurisdiction to enter his default, since there was an appearance by the defendant before the default was entered. Section 416, Code Civ. Proc., provides that "the voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons and copy of the complaint upon him"; and section 1014, Id., provides, "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him." A special appearance may be made for the purpose of quashing the summons or proof of service, but a demurrer to the complaint, raising, as it does, an issue of law in the case, to be tried by the court, is necessarily a submission to its jurisdiction over the parties. But the statute is too plain to require argument or illustration. In Voorman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 305, 45 Pac. 470, in speaking of section 1014, supra, it is said: "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives written notice of his appearance, or where an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him, and he can appear in no other way. This statute was intended to settle all disputes upon the subject." Respondent cites Deidesheimer v. Brown, 8 Cal. 339, Lyman v. Milton, 44 Cal. 631, and Kent v. West, 50 Cal. 185, to the point that he did not waive his objections to the service of the summons by demurring to the complaint. These cases hold that, where the defendant has appeared specially to move to quash the summons, he does not waive the right to have the question reviewed upon appeal by answering after his motion is overruled. But granting that the defendant does not waive his objection to the service, and the ruling of the justice thereon, by demurring or answering, these cases show that he has "a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law," by an appeal, and therefore prohibition will not lie. By demurring to the complaint the defendant appeared and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and the justice did not exceed his jurisdiction in entering his default, and could regularly proceed to enter judgment thereon. The judgment of the superior court should be reversed, the writ of prohibition, if issued, should be quashed, and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the superior court to quash the writ and dismiss the proceeding.

SPELLING v. BROWN, Secretary of State.
(S. F. 1,653.)<sup>1</sup>

NOMINATION FOR CONGRESS — CERTIFICATE — DETERMINATION OF REGULARITY.

In deciding on the regularity of certificates of nomination for congress offered to the secretary of state to be filed, the usage of a party in nominating its candidates, viz. by the formation of district conventions at a state convention by the delegates thereto, in accordance with the call of the state central committee, will be recognized as decisive in favor of a candidate thus nominated against one nominated by delegates in a district convention organized and conducted independent of the state convention.

In bank. Application for mandamus by T. C. Spelling against L. H. Brown, secretary of state. Writ denied.

The following is the report of the commissioner (Searls, C.):

"This is an original proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent, L. H. Brown, as secretary of state in and for said state of California, to file a certificate of the nomination of T. C. Spelling, the petitioner, for the office of representative in congress of the Fourth congressional district in and for the state of California, etc.; also that he, the said secretary, strike from the files of his office an instrument purporting to be a certificate of nomination of James H. Barry for the office of representative in congress for said Fourth congressional district, etc. An alternative writ of mandamus issued upon the petition, whereupon L. H. Brown filed his answer thereto. The taking of testimony and finding the facts deducible therefrom having been referred to the undersigned, and, the parties having appeared, and introduced their evidence, and submitted the cause, the following facts are found, and herewith presented to the court for its action:

"Facts.

"(1) The Democratic party is the name of a regular political organization in the state of California, which has existed in the state since the year 1888, and for a period long anterior thereto, and which at the last general election, to wit, the general election of 1896, polled more than three per cent. of all the votes of the entire state.

"(2) The supreme control and authority of the Democratic party in the state of California is vested: First, In the state convention of said party when in state convention assembled. Second, When the state convention is not in session, in the state central committee by it selected, and in such executive committee or subcommittees as the Democratic state central committee may from time to time appoint, to act for it when not in session.

"(3) Since 1888, and for a long time prior thereto, it has been the invariable practice, usage, and custom of the Democratic state central committee, prior to each general election, to issue a call for a Democratic state convention; to designate the time and place of its meeting, the number of delegates to which each county is entitled, etc.; such convention, when assembled and organized, to select and nominate candidates for the Democratic party to be voted for at the next ensuing general election. Also to provide in said call that the delegates chosen as delegates to the Democratic state convention shall be delegates to the district conventions of their respective districts, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the offices of representatives in congress, railroad commissioners, and members of the state board of equalization, and to transact other business not necessary to be mentioned here.

"(4) During all the time mentioned in finding 3 it has been a like practice, usage, and custom of the members or committees of the Democratic party to select delegates pursuant to such calls of the state central committee; and they have, when thus selected, met in state convention, organized, and nominated candidates to be voted for at the ensuing general election for state officers; and the delegates so selected as delegates to the Democratic state convention have acted as delegates to the district conventions by them represented,—that is to say, the delegates from each congressional district have met and organized separate congressional conventions, and nominated a candidate for congress, in their respective districts, to be voted for at the next ensuing general election.

"(5) It should be stated that the Democratic state central committee, during all the time aforesaid, has been appointed by the Democratic state conventions to serve until the next state convention of the party, and until its successor is appointed.

"(6) Some time prior to August, 1898, the state central committee of the Democratic party issued and published a call headed as follows: 'Call for Democratic State and District Conventions.' It then proceeded as follows: 'The Democratic state committee of the state of California, representing the Democratic party of said state, a political party which at the last general election held in the state of California polled more than three per cent. of the entire vote of the state, by virtue of the authority vested in said committee, hereby issues the following call for state and district conventions: First. A state convention of the Democratic party of the state of California is hereby called to meet at the city of Sacramento, county of Sacramento, state of California, on the 16th day of August, 1898, at two o'clock p. m. of that day, to nominate candidates for state offices, to be voted for at the general election to be held in the state of California on the 8th day of November, 1898; to select a new state committee; and to transact such other business as may be brought before said convention. Second. The appointment of delegates to said convention shall be one delegate at large for each county, and one delegate for each two hundred votes, or a majority fraction thereof, cast in each county for J. W. Martin, who, as the Democratic nominee for presidential elector, received the highest number of votes cast for any nominee of the Democratic party for presidential elector in the state of California in the election of 1896. Third. The delegates chosen as delegates to the state convention shall also be delegates to the district conventions of their respective districts for the purpose of nominating candidates for the offices of members of congress, railroad commissioners, and members of the state board of equalization. They shall also select congressional committees for each of the congressional districts of this state, and perform such other business as may properly come before said state and district conventions. The district conventions above referred to are hereby called to meet at the same time and place as the Democratic state convention. The representation to the state and district conventions upon the basis herein set forth is hereby declared to be as follows.' Then follows a table showing, among other things, the number of delegates to which each county is entitled, etc., and then as follows: "The Democratic state committee directs that the delegates to said state and district conventions be selected in such a manner as the various county committees shall determine to be expedient, provided that the holding of primary elections for the election of said delegates is recommended wherever it may be practicable to hold said elections.'

"(7) Delegates to the convention were selected in the several counties of the state, and met in Democratic state convention, and organized pursuant to the call at Sacramento on the 16th day of August, 1898, at 2 o'clock p. m.

"(8) The delegates from the city and county of San Francisco were selected under the circumstances and in the manner following: The local democracy of said city and county was divided into two factions, each claiming the right to exercise local power. The state central committee appointed a local committee to investigate and report in the premises, which committee reported that neither of said factions was entitled to wield such power. Thereupon the state central committee appointed a committee of one hundred persons to act as a county committee of the Democratic party in and for the city and county of San Francisco. This committee of one hundred selected and appointed the number of delegates to which the city and county of San Francisco was entitled, viz. one hundred and fifty-four delegates, of which number eighty-nine delegates were from the Fourth congressional district. These delegates were selected as follows: Each member of the committee named one delegate, and the remaining fifty-four were selected by the committee at large. A set of rival delegates was elected in said city and county by a primary election, and when the state convention met and organized a hearing was had, and such action taken that the rival delegates were rejected, and the delegates selected by the committee of one hundred were seated as delegates from said city and county in said state convention. On the 18th day of August, 1898, the state convention, being still in session, and about to adjourn for a noon recess, the chairman announced that the congressional convention for the Fourth congressional district would assemble in the hall during the recess. Such congressional convention then assembled and organized by electing a chairman and secretary, there being present eighty-five of the eighty-nine delegates from said Fourth congressional district, who had been admitted to the state convention, twenty-five of whom were proxies, and such proceedings were then and there had that in the end James H. Barry was nominated by acclamation as the Democratic candidate for the office of representative in congress from said Fourth congressional-al district. The usual certificate was prepared and verified as required by law, which, with the necessary accompanying proofs, was on the 10th day of September, 1898, duly presented to the respondent herein for filing, etc.

"(9) The facts regarding the candidacy of T. C. Spelling for the office of representative in congress for the Fourth congressional district are as follows: In 1896 a Democratic state convention had been called, and delegates from the city and county of San Francisco had been elected thereto. There were rival delegates elected. The delegates first mentioned not being certain of securing seats in the state convention, and being desirous of nominating James G. Maguire as the Democratic candidate for congress from the Fourth congressional district, the delegates from said Fourth congressional district met in San Francisco prior to the meeting of the state convention, organized as a Democratic congressional convention by selecting a chairman and secretary, and then and there such proceedings were had that said James G. Maguire was unanimously nominated as the Democratic candidate for the office of representative in congress from said Fourth congressional district. A congressional committee of seven persons was also appointed at the same time and place.

"(10) The delegates participating in such action were afterwards admitted as delegates to the state convention, and thereupon met as a congressional convention for said Fourth district, and then and there again nominated said James G. Maguire for the same office for the said district.

"(11) In 1898, and probably about August 11th, the 'congressional committee of the Democratic party of the Fourth district of the state of California,' being the committee appointed in 1896 as aforesaid, met in San Francisco, and reorganized by the appointment of a new committee, consisting in the main of the same members as the old, elected a chairman and secretary, and, among other things, adopted a resolution to call a nominating convention in and for the Fourth congressional district, to be held on the 13th day of August, 1898, at 8 o'clock p. m., at 121 Eddy street, to nominate a candidate for congress to represent said Fourth district. A list of say fifty delegates was by said resolution appointed, and the secretary was instructed to give notice to the delegates so appointed, which he afterwards did by postal cards directed to them severally. The committee was also increased to probably nine members or more by appointment. E. J. Reynolds, chairman of the committee, resigned, and J. M. Chase was appointed in his place.

"(12) The convention so called met at the time and place designated, duly organized by the appointment of a chairman and secretary, adopted an order of business, platform, etc., and, among other things, unanimously nominated the petitioner herein, T. C. Spelling, as the Democratic candidate for the office of representative in congress from the Fourth congressional district. A committee of nine, as the successors of the committee of the Democratic party of the Fourth congressional district, was appointed; an auditing committee, etc. The usual certificate of nomination, as required by statute, was certified and verified in due form, and presented, with the necessary accompanying papers, to the respondent herein, L. H. Brown, as secretary of state, with a request that it be filed, etc. This was on September 11, 1898, at, say, 11:30 a. m., a couple of hours prior to the presentation of the certificate of James H. Barry. Each party protested against the filing of the certificate of the other; and, after a hearing, the respondent herein filed the certificate of nomination of James H. Barry, and refused to file the petition of petitioner, and returned to him his certificate on the 23d or 24th day of September, 1898, with the reasons for his refusal in writing.

"(13) There is no evidence that the Democratic state conventions, or the state committees appointed by them, have ever recognized or in any wise empowered the Democratic congressional committee of the Fourth district herein mentioned to nominate candidates, or to transact other business.

"(14) In using the word 'custom' herein, I have so used it as a fact nearly synonymous with practice, usage, etc., acquiesced in, and not as a conclusion of law.

"(15) The practices of the Democratic state central committees hereinbefore mentioned are not founded upon any written rules.

"(16) There are a few minor facts in relation to auditing committees and merely technical matters at which I have only glanced. If a more full statement on such questions is desired, the evidence will warrant findings thereon. Conscious of the necessity of an early determination of the matter, these findings have been hurriedly prepared, and are hereby respectfully submitted."

T. C. Spelling, in pro. per. E. S. Van Meter, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. Prior to the general election in 1896, the state central committee of the Democratic party called a state convention of the party, and provided, among other things, that the delegates to the state convention from the respective congressional districts should form district conventions for the purpose of nominating candidates for congress. In pursuance of this call the state convention met, and the several district conventions were also organized, and made nominations. In the Fourth congressional district the delegates elect to the state convention anticipated the meeting of that body by organizing a district convention, and nominating James G. Maguire as their candidate for congress. At the same time they appointed a campaign committee. In the month of August, 1898, the regular state central committee of the Democratic party called another state convention for the purpose of nominating candidates for state offices, and again provided that the delegates to the state convention from the respective congressional districts should meet in district conventions for the purpose of nominating candidates for congress. In pursuance of this call a state convention met and organized, and subsequently the delegates from the Fourth congressional district organized a district convention, by which James H. Barry was nominated as the Democratic candidate for congress in that district. In the meantime the campaign committee representing the district convention of 1896 had appointed delegates to a district convention, who met, and, claiming the right to represent the Democratic party in the district, nominated the petitioner as a candidate for congress. Regular certificates of nomination were presented to the respondent by the representatives of each convention. He filed the certificate of Barry, and refused to file the certificate of petitioner, who therefore asks a writ commanding him to reverse his action.

We think the respondent was clearly right in the course he took. It was his duty to decide which of the two certificates was issued by the regular convention. There was no law to guide him in determining which was regular, and necessarily he was compelled to resort to the test of party usage. Mr. Barry was nominated by a convention called in conformity with the established usage of the Democratic party, and recognized as regular by the state convention of the party. This, in our opinion, is decisive. Writ denied.

VINCENT v. COLLINS et al. (Sac. 385.)

APPEAL—NOTICE—PARTIES.

A mortgagor and his assignee in insolvency were made parties defendant in an action to foreclose. A decree was entered for the mortgagee, and the property sold for a sum in excess of the debt and expenses of foreclosure. The mortgagor, who was the only defendant to appear, moved to set aside the sale for irregularities. The motion was denied, and he appealed from the judgment and order. Held, that the assignee was an "adverse party," within Code Civ. Proc. § 940, i. e. one whose interest would be affected by a reversal, on whom notice of appeal should have been served.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Action by George Vincent against W. J. Collins and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion to set aside a foreclosure sale, defendant H. J. Keymer appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Granted.

C. W. Kitts, for appellant. Thos. S. Ford, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage, executed by the defendant H. J. Keymer on lot 4, in block 12, of the city of Grass Valley, Nevada county. The mortgage was dated September 26, 1892, and the complaint was filed September 2, 1896, naming as defendants W. J. Collins, assignee of the estate of H. J. Keymer, an insolvent debtor, H. J. Keymer, Agnes Keymer, and W. D. Harris. Due service of process was made on all of the defendants, but only H. J. Keymer, the mortgagor, appeared and answered, the defaults of the others being regularly entered.

The complaint alleges that on December 22, 1893, defendant H. J. Keymer filed his petition in insolvency, and was adjudged to be an insolvent debtor, and that thereafter the defendant W. J. Collins was duly appointed assignee of said insolvent's estate and qualified as such, and that the clerk of the court duly conveyed and assigned to him all of the said estate. The answer does not deny any of the averments of the complaint, but alleges that on December 20, 1893, said H. J. Keymer filed a declaration of homestead on a portion of the said mortgaged lot, setting out therein the facts required in such case, and "that the remainder of the said lot, with the improvements thereon, after taking out said homestead, is amply sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's claim." The cause came on regularly for trial on November 7, 1896, and a decree of foreclosure was signed and filed on the 11th day of that month. It appears from the recitals in the decree that findings were waived by the parties, and that there was due and owing to the plaintiff upon the said promissory note and for money expended under the terms of the said mortgage, including interest, attorney's fees, and costs, the sum of $1,517.03. It was adjudged that the whole of the mortgaged premises mentioned in the complaint be sold at public auction, in the manner prescribed by law, by L. A. Garthe, a commissioner appointed by the court for that purpose, and that the said commissioner, out of the proceeds of the sale, retain his fees, disbursements, and commissions, and pay to the plaintiff, or his attorney, the amount found due him, with interest thereon from the date of the decree, or so much thereof as the said proceeds will pay. It was further adjudged "that it is necessary to sell the whole of said land in one parcel to satisfy the mortgage, and the whole of said land in one parcel is hereby ordered sold"; that, "if more than the amount necessary to satisfy the mortgage and costs is realized, the commissioner is directed to pay the same to W. J. Collins, assignee of H. J. Keymer, insolvent"; and "that the defendants, and all persons claiming, or to claim, from or under them, * * * be forever barred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption and claim of, in, and to said mortgaged premises, and every part or parcel thereof, from and after the delivery of said commissioner's deed." In pursuance of the decree the commissioner, against the objections of said Keymer, sold the whole property in one parcel, and from the proceeds of the sale, after paying all expenses thereof and the amount due the plaintiff, he had left in his hands the sum of $447. Subsequently Keymer moved the court to set aside and declare void the said sale, upon the ground that the property sold consisted of two distinct parcels, and before the sale was well known by the plaintiff, defendants, and commissioner to so consist; that defendant Keymer, prior to the sale, demanded in writing of the commissioner that he sell the parcels separately, which he refused to do; and that said property being sold in one parcel prevented its bringing its full value. At the hearing of the motion there were used and referred to, on behalf of the defendant, the judgment roll, the notice of the motion, and the affidavit of H. J. Keymer; and on behalf of the plaintiff the counter affidavits of George Vincent, L. A. Garthe, and W. J. Collins. After considering the matter, the court denied the motion, and in due time thereafter defendant Keymer appealed from the judgment and the order denying his said motion. Respondent moves to dismiss the appeals upon the ground that notice thereof was not served on the defendant W. J. Collins, or the other defendants, and this court, therefore, never acquired jurisdiction to hear the cause.

It appears that notice of the appeals was served only on the attorney for the plaintiff, and the question is, was that service sufficient to give this court jurisdiction of the case? The Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 940) requires that notices of an appeal shall be served on the "adverse party," and it is settled law that every party to an action, who has an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation and whose rights would or might be affected by a reversal of the judgment or order appealed from, is an adverse party, on whom service of the notice must be made. In Senter v. De Bernal, 38 Cal. 640, it was said: "Every party whose interest in the subject-matter of the appeal is adverse to, or will be affected by, the reversal or modification of the judgment or order from which the appeal has been taken, is, we think, an 'adverse party,' within the meaning of these provisions of the Code, irrespective of the question whether he appears upon the face of the record in the attitude of plaintiff or defendant or intervener." In Williams v. Association, 66 Cal. 195, 5 Pac. 85, it is said: "This court has not jurisdiction to hear an appeal from a judgment, unless the appellant shall have served a notice of appeal on all the adverse parties; that is to say, upon all whose rights may be affected by a reversal of the judgment, or, when the appeal is from part of a judgment, by a reversal of the part appealed from. And, where the appeal is from the whole judgment, this court has no jurisdiction to modify the judgment in such a manner as shall affect the rights of the parties on whom notice of appeal has not been served, as such rights have been ascertained and fully determined by the judgment." And see O'Kane v. Daly, 63 Cal. 317; Randall v. Hunter, 69 Cal. 80, 10 Pac. 130; Millikin v. Houghton, 75 Cal. 530, 17 Pac. 641; In re Castle Dome Mining & Smelting Co., 79 Cal. 246, 21 Pac. 746; Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103; Lancaster v. Maxwell, 103 Cal. 67, 36 Pac. 951; Barnhart v. Edwards, 111 Cal. 428, 44 Pac. 160.

In view of the law, as declared in the cases above cited, we think it must be held that defendant Collins was an "adverse party," and that notice of the appeals should have been served upon him. He was the assignee in insolvency of the appellant, and as such the title to all the estate, real and personal, of the insolvent debtor, not exempt from execution, was vested in him. Insolvent Act 1880, § 17; Poehlmann v. Kennedy, 48 Cal. 201. True, he held the property in trust for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent, but it was his duty to care for and look after the property, and, if any was withheld from him, to sue in his own name and recover possession of the same.

In this case there were left in the hands of the commissioner, after paying the amount found due the plaintiff and all expenses incident to the foreclosure, the sum of $447, which by the decree he was directed to pay to the said assignee. It is evident that if the judgment should be reversed or the sale set aside the rights of the assignee might be affected, as upon another sale there might be nothing left to be paid over to him for the benefit of creditors. Upon this motion we cannot consider the question as to whether or not the decree was valid and binding until reversed, in so far as it directed the balance, if any, to be paid over to Collins, assignee. As presented here, we think this court has no jurisdiction to consider and decide upon the merits of the case, and hence that the motion to dismiss the appeals should be granted.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the motion to dismiss the appeals is granted.

PEOPLE ex rel. DEAN v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF CONTRA COSTA COUNTY. (S. F. 713.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1898.)
WHARVES—FRANCHISES—COUNTIES—EXERCISE OF JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS—CERTIORARI.

1. Act March 23, 1893, § 1, providing that every franchise "to erect or lay telegraph or telephone wires, to construct or operate railroads along or upon any public street or highway, or to exercise any other privilege whatever" to be granted by a county or city, shall be granted only on conditions provided in such act, applies to a franchise granted by a county to construct and maintain a wharf.

2. The action of a board of county supervisors in granting a franchise for a wharf, under Act March 23, 1893, requiring a publication of a notice describing the franchise to be granted, and the opening of bids and the awarding of the franchise to the highest bidder, does not call for the exercise of judicial functions, and therefore certiorari will not lie to review such action.

3. Nor is the action of a board under this act even quasi judicial, so as to allow such a writ.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county.

Application for a writ of certiorari, on the relation of Roger G. Dean, against the board of supervisors of Contra Costa county. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Proceeding dismissed.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari to review the action of the board of supervisors of Contra Costa county in granting to one McNear a franchise to construct and maintain a wharf upon the southern shore of the straits of Carquinez. It is claimed by the petitioner that the action of the board in granting the franchise was wholly without the law. Section 1 of an act of the legislature approved March 23, 1893, declares: "Every franchise or privilege to erect or lay telegraph or telephone wires, to construct or operate railroads along or upon any public street or highway, or to exercise any other privilege whatever hereafter proposed to be granted by the board of supervisors, common council or other governing or legislative body of any county, city and county, city, town or district within this state, shall be granted upon the conditions in this act provided, and not otherwise." This language is broad in its terms. It is difficult to imagine language broader in significance and more explicit upon the subject with which the act is dealing. It includes franchises such as is here before us.

It is now claimed upon the part of McNear that the board of supervisors in no degree, and to no extent, followed the law laid down in this act, and required to be pursued by the board in the granting of this franchise; but it is insisted that the board made a grant of the franchise under certain provisions of the Political Code; and therefore it is claimed that the act of the legislature passed in 1893 cannot furnish the test upon which to base a decision as to an exercise or nonexercise of judicial functions upon the part of the board in granting the franchise. This position cannot be maintained. This franchise should have been granted by the board of supervisors under the provisions of the act of 1893. If the granting of a franchise under the act by the board demands the exercise of judicial functions, then the granting of this franchise in disregard of the provisions of the act is an act performed in excess of judicial power. If a franchise may be granted lawfully only by the exercise of judicial power, then any other mode or manner of granting it would be an act of trespass upon that power, and outside of and beyond it.

It is contended that the action of the board of supervisors in granting the franchise under the act of 1893 in no sense calls for the exercise of judicial functions, and therefore certiorari is not the proper remedy. Let us pause a moment to examine this act. It will be observed that it is an act simply providing the course to be followed by the board in granting the franchise, and but two things are required to be done by that board: First, a notice must be published describing the franchise to be granted, and asking for bids therefor; and, second, upon a date stated in the notice the bids are to be opened, and the franchise awarded to the highest bidder. As to the authority to reject all bids, we are not now concerned. There is nothing calling for the exercise of judicial functions in the publication of the notice required by the statute, and certainly nothing involving the exercise of judicial functions upon the part of the board in arriving at a determination as to who is the party making the highest bid, for such decision is based upon mathematical computation. Hence the single question remains, is the granting of the franchise a judicial or a legislative act? That such a grant is essentially and entirely legislative cannot be questioned; and for the judicial department of the government to interfere by certiorari with legislative action would constitute a usurpation of power. A franchise is a special right or privilege granted by the people to an individual, and, under the act of 1893, the grant is based upon valuable considerations. The legislative character of the grant is the same whether it passes to the individual from the people, via the state legislature, or by way of a municipal board of supervisors having the authority vested in it by the state legislature to make the grant. When legislative power is vested in a municipal board, acts done in the exercise of that power are acts of legislation, and should be recognized as such by the courts. It has been decided by this court that the granting of a franchise is a legislative act. This has been decided in a long, unbroken line of cases, beginning with Chard v. Harrison, 7 Cal. 113, and ending with Quinchard v. Board, 113 Cal. 664, 45 Pac. 856. If the granting of this franchise be a purely legislative act, then there was no exercise of judicial functions upon the part of the board in making the grant, and clearly no excess of jurisdiction. The Quinchard Case, supra, carefully treats of this question at great length, and the principles there declared are controlling here. Those principles all point to a denial of the relief here sought, for the reason that the writ of certiorari does not open a way by which to reach the wrongs sought to be righted in this proceeding. As an interesting case bearing directly upon the question before us, People v. Oakland Board of Education, 54 Cal. 375, is cited.

It may be said that the action of the board of supervisors in granting a franchise under this act of the legislature is, at least, quasi judicial, and for that reason courts will reach out and take hold of the proceedings by this writ. Upon such theory, courts have sometimes accommodately reached out and annulled the proceedings of inferior boards and tribunals. This has even been done by the courts of this state in cases where franchises of various character have been granted; but there is no justification for it under the law, and remedies for such wrongs should be found by traveling other roads. Legislative action in no sense is the exercise of judicial functions. The mere fact that, in certain proceedings pending before boards of supervisors, notice must be given of a hearing, evidence of witnesses taken, and a decision made by the board involving a determination of facts based upon the exercise of judgment, does not constitute such proceeding even quasi judicial. These things constitute the mere form of judicial action. The essential elements of judicial action are lacking, namely, the ascertainment of existing rights. Murray v. Board, 23 Cal. 492, probably looks the other way from the views we entertain upon this question, and there may be other early cases in company with it, but the tendency of the later decisions of this court is all the other way. Certiorari is not the proper remedy. For the foregoing reasons, the proceeding is dismissed.

LEWIS v. BURNS et al. (Sac. 421.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—DEED TO WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS—EVIDENCE—DEEDS.

1. The amendment of Civ. Code, § 164, which provided that a deed to a married woman would be presumed to have vested title in the marital community, and that this presumption could only be overcome by clear and satisfactory evidence, so as to provide that the presumption in such cases is that the title is thereby vested in the wife, as her separate property, does not apply to conveyances made before the amendment went into effect.

2. Plaintiff testified that a lot was purchased with the savings of himself and wife; that at the advice of their employer, who negotiated the sale, the deed was made to the wife; that a house was built thereon by the employer, and was paid for out of their wages (this latter fact also being testified to by other witnesses); that afterwards the purchase of a second lot was negotiated by their employer, and the deed taken in the same way; that it was paid for partly by rent saved from the first house, and a mortgage given for the balance; that the property was always considered community property. The rents were collected by the wife, but applied for family purposes. Shortly after the second purchase a mortgage was given on both lots for $1,500, and, several years after, the second lot was mortgaged for $500. Defendants, to whom the wife had conveyed the property, claimed that it had been given to her as her separate property by the husband and their employer, and that the latter had furnished part of the price, and that the remainder had been furnished by the wife from her savings before marriage. The deed to defendants described the property as being the wife's "sole and separate property, acquired by her while living separate and apart from her husband." Held, that the property was community property.

3. Evidence of statements as to whether a deed to a wife was intended as her separate property, made out of the presence of the husband, is inadmissible against him.

4. A notary's record, showing the acknowledgment before him of a deed by a husband to his wife, is inadmissible to prove conveyance of title from the husband, in the absence of proof that the deed had been delivered.

5. It is inadmissible as secondary evidence without showing that the deed, if delivered, had been lost.

6. The fact that assessment lists against property standing in name of a wife, made out to the wife, are sworn to by the husband, does not constitute an admission that the property belongs to the separate estate of the wife.

7. A recital in a deed given by a wife that the property conveyed is the separate property of the wife is not evidence that such was the fact, as against the husband.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by S. T. Lewis against Thomas Burns and another. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

James A. Louttit, for appellant. Baldwin & Thompson, Budd & Thompson, and Minor & Ashley, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Action to quiet plaintiff's title to two certain lots in the city of Stockton. The complaint alleges that plaintiff and Bridget Burns intermarried in 1873; that Bridget died November 16, 1892; that while they were husband and wife they purchased with their own means, the result of their joint labors, the lots in question; that the conveyances were taken in the name of the wife for the community, and were so held until Bridget's death, and upon her death became the sole property of the plaintiff, as surviving husband. The answer denied that the purchases were made by the fruits or results of their joint labors, or that the lots were owned or possessed as community property, or that the conveyances thereof were taken in the name of the wife for the community, or that they were so held, and denied that their claim was without right. The answer also alleged that defendants are the owners in fee, "and that they derived title to the same from that certain deed of conveyance made, executed, and delivered to defendants by said Bridget Lewis, and dated the 16th day of October, 1890, a copy of which is hereto attached, and marked 'Exhibit A,' and made part hereof." In this deed the grantor is described as "Bridget Lewis, wife of Sylvester Lewis," and the clause describing the property is as follows: "Lot 15 in block 33, and lot 10 in block 24, both east of Center street; the said property being her sole and separate property, acquired by her while living separate and apart from her said husband, Sylvester Lewis, aforesaid."

The court found for the defendants, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant attacks the findings, and also specifies several errors of law occurring upon the trial.

The findings are to the effect that said lots were acquired by the wife, during marriage, by way of gift, from one De Blainville and the plaintiff, pursuant to an agreement between the three, by the terms of which the title was placed in Bridget (the wife) to be held, owned, occupied, and used by her as her separate property; "that it was not purchased or acquired as the fruits and results of the joint labor and efforts of plaintiff and said Bridget, and they were not, as husband and wife, the owners of the same in community," and were not at any time held as the property of the community; and that on the 16th of October, 1890, said Bridget conveyed said lots, by her grant, bargain, and sale deed, to the defendants. Appellant attacks these findings upon the ground that the evidence does not justify them. Plaintiff and Bridget Burns intermarried in 1873, and the marriage relation continued until the death of Bridget, on November 16, 1892; and the two lots in question were conveyed to her by grant, bargain, and sale deed, for a money consideration, after the marriage. The first of these lots (lot 15 in block 33, east of Center street) was purchased January 8, 1882, and the second (lot 10, block 24, east of Center street) was purchased April 14, 1885; the deeds respectively bearing those dates. Under section 164 of the Civil Code, as it stood prior to the amendment of 1889, and the subsequent amendments, a deed of bargain and sale to a married woman must be presumed to have been paid for from the community funds, and to have vested the title in the marital community; and this presumption could only be overcome by clear and satisfactory evidence. Gwynn v. Diersen, 101 Cal. 563, 36 Pac. 103; Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 267, 33 Pac. 95; and Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 24 Pac. 743, and cases cited on page 284, 85 Cal., and page 744, 24 Pac. As these lots were purchased before said section was amended, the presumption arising from the mere fact of the conveyance by such deeds during the marriage relation is not affected by the amendment which has changed the presumption. In Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 264, 267, 33 Pac. 95, in discussing the effect of the amendment of section 164, Civ. Code, by which it is declared that the presumption in such cases is that the title is thereby vested in the wife, as her separate property, it was said: "But the rule declared by the statute was more than a rule of evidence; it was a rule of property, as well; and we do not think the legislature intended or had the power to change it so that it would be retroactive in effect, and disturb titles already vested." And in Gwynn v.

Dierssen, 101 Cal. 565, 36 Pac. 103, it was said: "Section 164 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1889, is not retroactive in effect." That the marriage relation existed at the time these lots were severally conveyed to the wife, and her subsequent death, are admitted by the pleadings, by the failure of the defendants to deny those allegations in the complaint; and that they were acquired during coverture is also shown by the deed under which they claim title, and which they make part of their answer. The plaintiff put in evidence the deeds by which these lots were severally conveyed to the wife; each being a grant, bargain, and sale deed, the first dated January 8, 1882, for the consideration of $250, and the second dated April 14, 1885, for the consideration of $1,656.05. Under the pleadings this made a prima facie case for the plaintiff, and threw upon the defendants the burden of proving "by clear and convincing evidence" that the lots in question were not community property.

A careful examination of the record leads me to the conclusion that the findings hereinbefore stated are not justified by the evidence. Plaintiff and his wife moved to Stockton in 1877 or 1878. They then had eight horses and two or three wagons. In the latter part of 1881, or first of 1882, they moved into De Blainville's house, and lived with him; the wife keeping house, and the plaintiff assisting De Blainville in his store and bar, for which services they were to receive $35 per month. The plaintiff testified that about this time De Blainville learned that said lot 15 was for sale, and advised plaintiff and his wife to buy it, and, they assenting, he negotiated the purchase, at the price of $250; that the lot was paid for out of the money they had saved from their earnings; that De Blainville and the wife attended to closing up the purchase, he remaining in the store; that De Blainville advised that the deed be taken in the name of the wife, "as she would be better satisfied"; that he assented, saying he would as soon it would be in her name as his, and the deed was so made on January 8, 1882. After the purchase, De Blainville bought lumber, employed a carpenter, and built a house for them on said lot, and retained and applied their wages until from that source and the sale of a horse he was fully paid for the erection of the house. That the house was erected for the plaintiff and his wife, and that their wages were retained by De Blainville to pay therefor, is also shown by his statements to the man who built the house during his employment, as well as by other witnesses. In regard to the purchase of the second lot, the plaintiff testified: That De Blainville advised its purchase. That, to plaintiff's statement that they had but little money, De Blainville replied that it would do no harm to mortgage it; that the rents would pay for it. The house built on the first lot had been rented, and they had saved up something therefrom. As before, De Blainville negotiated the purchase, and attended to closing it up, and again advised the plaintiff that the deed be made to the wife, and the plaintiff again assented. That what they had was paid on the purchase, and a mortgage executed for the remainder. The plaintiff testified, in substance, that these lots were always considered and treated as belonging to both himself and his wife; and there is nowhere in the record any evidence that, in the conversations between De Blainville and the plaintiff and his wife in reference to these purchases or the deeds of conveyance, any reference was made to a gift or to separate property, or to any agreement between the three that these purchases were or should be regarded as a gift from the plaintiff and De Blainville to Mrs. Lewis, who was present on both occasions when the question was considered as to which should be named as grantee. It is claimed, however, as evidence tending to show that these lots were the separate property of the wife, that she collected the rents. The plaintiff testified that she did, but the money was used and applied for family purposes, just as she used and applied his earnings, which he handed over to her. The money used to purchase the first lot was accumulated from their mutual earnings, and it also was in possession of the wife, but that did not make it her separate property. She was merely the custodian for the marital community.

Judge Smith was called by defendants, and testified that he had a conversation with Mrs. Lewis and De Blainville in relation to the purchase of the second lot, and that plaintiff was not present. He was then asked to state what occurred at that time. Counsel for plaintiff objected that it was hearsay, irrelevant, and incompetent. The objection was overruled, and an exception taken. The witness then testified: That De Blainville told him how he wanted the deed made; that he was buying it for, and giving it to, Mrs. Lewis. That she was present, and they were talking about the property, and he gave directions to the clerk how to draw the deed. That they afterwards came to the office, and De Blainville complained that a mistake had been made in drawing the deed in the name of Mrs. Lewis, it being for a valuable consideration; that some one told him it was community property, and might be taken for the debts of the husband. That he replied that there was no mistake. That they simply asked that the property be deeded to Bridget Lewis. That plaintiff was not present at this conversation. That they requested him to see Mr. Lewis. And that he could only recollect that it related to another deed. All this testimony was given subject to the objection above stated. Whether what was said at the time the deed was prepared was inadmissible, we do not stop now to inquire. What was said afterwards, plaintiff not being present, was clearly inadmissible. Upon cross-examination the witness testified that he knew nothing about where the money came from to buy the property; that nothing was said about it. His statement that he was buying the property for, and directing the deed to be made to, Bridget Lewis, was entirely consistent with a purchase by him, acting on behalf of plaintiff and his wife, in which he had no personal interest; and the direction as to the deed was in accordance with the understanding had with plaintiff and his wife, and therefore does not raise a conflict with the testimony of the plaintiff that it was bought with community funds and was regarded as community property. And, as additional evidence that De Blainville did not put any money into this purchase, the record shows that, a few days after the purchase, plaintiff and his wife joined in a mortgage on both lots to F. F. Seiden for $1,500, payable April 22, 1886, and on the same date in 1891 mortgaged the lot last purchased for $500, and on October 28, 1892, about two weeks before the death of the wife, again mortgaged lot 10 for $200. The date and amount of the first mortgage would indicate, even in the absence of the testimony of the plaintiff, that the money was applied to the purchase of the lot. If it had been applied to any different purpose, we may reasonably suppose that the defendants, who were the brother and sister of Mrs. Lewis, would have known it, and disclosed it upon the trial.

Mr. Haas, who sold the first lot as attorney in fact for the owners (called by defendants), testified that De Blainville stated to him that he wanted to buy the lot for Bridget Lewis; that De Blainville paid the money for it, but he did not know whose money it was. Our comments upon De Blainville's statements to Judge Smith apply here, and need not be repeated.

A. C. McDonnell, called for defendants, testified that he was a notary public in 1885, and produced his notarial record, and was asked: "Now read the entry or state to the court whether you took the acknowledgment of S. T. Lewis of a deed from S. T. Lewis, as grantor, to Bridget Lewis." Plaintiff objected—First, that the deed must be produced; second, if lost, its loss must be shown before secondary evidence is admissible, and that defendants have not proved, or tried to prove, its existence or its delivery or its loss. Defendants then stated, as a further ground for its admission, that it tended to contradict the testimony of plaintiff that he did not acknowledge such a deed. To this, plaintiff objected that said testimony was given upon the cross-examination of the plaintiff, over the objection of the plaintiff that it was not cross-examination and was immaterial, and that they could not now contradict him. The court ruled that he would allow the question as to a certain act being done by Lewis in reference to this property,—whether he made an acknowledgment. The witness answered that he took the acknowledgment of S. T. Lewis of a deed to Bridget Lewis of said lot 10 on April 20, 1885. The witness was then asked, "What was the character of the deed?" Plaintiff's objection, based upon proper grounds, was overruled, and the witness answered that it was a quitclaim deed. Plaintiff, at the close of his case, on rebuttal, moved the court to strike out said testimony upon the ground that no evidence had been introduced tending to show its delivery or loss, and this motion was overruled. In each of these rulings the court erred. If the deed was never delivered, its acknowledgment was wholly immaterial; and, if it had been delivered, it was the best evidence of all the facts appearing thereon, and, before secondary evidence could be given, its loss must be shown.

The assessment lists of the lot first purchased were sworn to by plaintiff. They were made out by the assessor, and were properly assessed to Bridget Lewis. It was not an admission that they were her separate property. The circumstances did not require any explanation from the husband as to his interest in the property.

The defendants offered in evidence the deed from Bridget Lewis, under which alone they claim, and a copy of which is set out in their answer. Plaintiff objected upon the usual grounds, and also that there was no evidence of delivery; that it was not recorded until in December, which was after the grantor's death. The presumption is that a deed duly executed was delivered at its date. Civ. Code, § 1055. There was therefore sufficient evidence of its delivery to justify its admission. Whether the fact that Bridget Lewis twice mortgaged one of these lots after the date of the deed,—the last time within three weeks before her death,—and that it was not recorded until about a month after her death, coupled with the fact that in his petition for the probate of her will the defendant Thomas Burns, shortly after her death, and before the deed was recorded, included these lots as a part of her estate, would overcome the presumption declared by the statute, and put the defendants on proof of its actual delivery, in the view we take of the case, need not now be decided. The presumption is perhaps sufficient, as against these circumstances, to preclude us from saying that the finding that it was delivered is not justified by the evidence, nor is it necessary to a reversal of the judgment that we should so conclude. The recital in the deed that the property conveyed was her sole and separate property, acquired by her while living separate and apart from her husband, is not, however, evidence, as against the plaintiff, that such was the fact. Plaintiff, in rebuttal, however, showed by several witnesses that the recital was not true, and defendants made no effort to sustain it. Whether the defendants are estopped by this particular recital made in the deed which they plead as their only source of title (and which, if it had been omitted, would, on its face, show that it was community property) from showing that it was a gift from de Blainville or her husband, we do not now inquire. The question was not made in the court below, nor argued here. The recital, however, is evidence that it was not acquired in the way declared in the findings.

We find no evidence that there was any agreement between plaintiff and his wife and De Blainville that these lots should be a gift to the wife, or that the matter of separate property was ever mentioned between them, or that it was ever regarded or treated between the plaintiff and his wife as her separate property; nor do we find evidence which would justify a finding that De Blainville ever gave or paid any of his own money upon either of these purchases. In conclusion, we find no evidence inconsistent or in conflict with the presumption of law that the lots in controversy were community property; and upon that ground, as well as because of errors of law hereinbefore pointed out, we advise that the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

In re KELLEY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 518.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1898.)

NONRESIDENT EXECUTORS — REVOCATION OF LETTERS — STATUTES — JURISDICTIONAL POWER — PROCEDURE — INTEREST IN PETITIONER.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1436, 1437, providing that an executor, who has permanently removed from the state, may be suspended, and that the judge shall then cite the executor to appear, and, if the court is satisfied that cause exists, such executor's letters must be revoked, the court has power to revoke letters testamentary to a nonresident, who, after qualifying and filing an inventory, permanently departs from the state.

2. Where a nonresident executrix, immediately after qualifying and filing her inventory, returned again to her home outside the state, and there remained permanently, and did not come into the state nor submit herself to the jurisdiction of the court, nor personally conduct the affairs of the estate, and, when cited to show cause why she should not be removed, demurred, and filed her first account, but did not answer personally or otherwise, it is ground for revoking her appointment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1437, providing that if an executor, cited to show cause why his letters should not be revoked, fails to appear, or, having appeared, the court is satisfied that cause exists for his removal, his letters shall be revoked.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1436, 1437, providing that an executor who has permanently removed from the state may be suspended, and then cited to appear and show cause why his letters should not be revoked, he may be cited for that purpose without being first suspended.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1436, providing that an executor may be suspended "whenever, * * * from his own knowledge or from credible information," the judge of the superior court learns that there is cause for such action, it is immaterial that the person petitioning therefor has no interest in the estate.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

In the matter of the estate of Morgan C. Kelley, Luther C. Russell, public administrator, petitioned for a revocation of the letters of Frances A. Van Voorhis, as executrix, and for letters of administration c. t. a. to the petitioner. From an order granting the petition, the executrix appeals. Affirmed.

Eugene Van Voorhis and Curtis & Curtis, for appellant. L. Gill, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Petition of Luther C. Russell, public administrator of Riverside county, praying that letters testamentary issued to Frances A. Van Voorhis be revoked, and that letters of administration with the will annexed be issued to him. The court gave judgment removing the executrix and appointing petitioner as prayed for, from which the executrix appeals on the judgment roll alone.

The court found that deceased died testate January 7, 1895, naming appellant executrix. On January 28th she filed her petition for probate of the will and for letters testamentary, which duly issued February 11th, and she thereupon duly qualified as executrix. February 21st she filed her inventory and appraisal, and took possession of the property of the estate. At that time she was a resident of the city of Rochester, Monroe county, state of New York. Immediately after issuance of letters she returned to her home in Rochester, and has continuously resided and now resides there. She has not come into this state nor submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the court since her appointment, nor has she personally conducted the affairs of the estate. She has never filed any account of her administration except an account filed November 16, 1897, and after application for her removal had been made by the public administrator. "As a conclusion of law from the foregoing facts, the court finds that the said Frances A. Van Voorhis * * * has forfeited her right to further act as such executrix, and she is therefore removed as such executrix, * * * and that Luther C. Russell, public administrator, * * * is entitled to letters," etc.

The question presented is: Should the letters of a nonresident executor be revoked who, upon receiving his appointment and filing his inventory, permanently removes from the state, and does not at any time return to personally conduct the business of the estate, or place himself within the jurisdiction of the court? The executrix in this proceeding was appointed February 11, 1895, and filed her inventory February 21st. She then returned to her home in Rochester, N. Y., where she ever since has remained. The court found that she had not come into this state, nor submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the court, since her appointment, nor personally conducted the affairs of the estate. She was cited to appear and show cause why her letters should not be revoked. She appeared by attorneys, who filed a demurrer to the petition and also filed her first account. She did not appear personally, nor did she make any answer to the citation. We think the trial court had the power to revoke the letters, and that the findings justify its exercise.

The statute forbids the appointment of a nonresident as administrator. Code Civ. Proc. § 1369. Nonresidence, however, is not made a disqualification to the appointment of an executor. Id. § 1350. It was held in Brown's Estate, 80 Cal. 384, 22 Pac. 233, that a nonresident named as executor in a will might apply for letters through an attorney, and would be held to be constructively present for that purpose; but it was added: "Of course, the appointee must come here within a reasonable time, and personally submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and personally conduct the settlement of the estate." The provisions for the "removals and suspensions in certain cases" of executors and administrators are found in sections 1436 to 1440, inclusive. The judge may suspend the powers of an executor for various causes, among them: "Whenever * * * any executor * * * has permanently removed from the state" (section 1436); and it then becomes the duty of the judge to cite the executor "to appear and show cause why his letters should not be revoked." If he appear, and "the court is satisfied that there exists cause for his removal, his letters must be revoked," etc. Section 1437. The sections following relate to the procedure upon the hearing. We do not think that the court must first suspend the executor before citing him to appear and show cause why his letters should not be revoked. The suspension looks to the removal of the executor, and is a step towards it, but not a necessary one. Usually the grounds of suspension would justify removal, but the former takes place without a hearing, while the latter cannot. But, as it becomes the duty of the court to issue the citation after the suspension, we see no reason why it may not reach the ultimate object (removal) by a direct proceeding, as was done in this case. Section 1354, Code Civ. Proc., provides, in the case of a person absent from the state who is named as an executor, when there is another who qualifies, the absentee may be admitted as joint executor upon his return. The phrase, "has permanently removed from the state," in section 1436, may more properly refer to a resident executor who has permanently removed from the state; but the reason for revoking the letters in such case applies equally to a nonresident executor who comes here to receive his appointment, and then permanently withdraws from the state and remains away. It is his permanent absence from the place where the business is to be transacted, beyond the process of the court, and where the creditors of the estate and others having business with it cannot reach him, that creates the disqualification; and this is equally true of both resident and nonresident executors. Our laws are made to promote the interests and convenience of our own citizens, and should be construed, if possible within the rules of construction, to promote their welfare. We do not wish to be understood as destroying, by construction, the right of the testator to name a nonresident as his executor; but we do say that the statute should be so construed as to give ground of removal of a nonresident executor when he fails to come to this state and personally conduct the business of the estate, at such times and as frequently as the interests of the estate and of those concerned in its settlement may require. And the court, exercising a sound discretion, must be the judge as to what will constitute the permanent absence from the state.

If it be said that the public administrator is a volunteer, without any interest in the estate, and ought not to be heard by this petition, the answer is that it is immaterial how the judge obtains the information on which he acts. He may proceed "whenever, * * * from his own knowledge, or from credible information," the facts may appear. Section 1436. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARIS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ROBERTS et al. (Cr. 464.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1898.)

CRIMINAL LAW—ALIBI—DEGREE OF PROOF—IMPEACHING WITNESSES—MODE OF EXAMINATION.

1. An instruction that if defendants were not present at the time it "was alleged or proven that the crime was committed, * * * and did not aid or abet in its commission," they should be found not guilty, is erroneous, as assuming a crime proven.

2. An alibi need be proven only so as to raise a reasonable doubt whether defendant was present when the crime was committed.

3. Informal or inartificial questioning of impeaching witnesses is not reversible error, unless it has resulted in injustice to accused.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

Frank Roberts and another were convicted of grand larceny, and they appeal. Reversed.

Goodwin & Goodwin and W. M. Boardman, for appellants. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendants have been convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and appeal from the judgment and order denying their motion for a new trial. They introduced evidence tending to establish an alibi, and, as bearing upon this branch of the case, the court gave the jury the following instruction: "You are instructed that if the defendant, or the defendants, was at some other place at the time it is alleged or proven that the crime was committed, it is what, in law, is called an 'alibi.' When satisfactorily proven, it is a good defense in law. Whether or not an alibi was proven and established to your satisfaction in this case is a fact for you to decide from all the evidence introduced before you; and if you believe that the defendants, or either of them, was not present at the time it was alleged or proven that the crime was committed, and therefore could not have committed the crime charged in the information, and did not aid or abet in its commission, then you should find him or them not guilty." The foregoing instruction is attacked by defendants. It is first claimed that the instruction is erroneous in assuming as a fact that the larceny was proven. Under the constitution of the state, a judge may state to the jury what the evidence introduced at the trial is, but the power there granted gives him no right to declare, as a matter of law, that certain facts are established by the evidence. It follows that the contention of defendants in this regard is well founded. But the most serious objection to the instruction is presented in the fact that it assumes throughout that an alibi is a matter of defense, and the jury are told that it must be established to their satisfaction. When a jury is told that any particular fact must be established to their satisfaction, such statement can only mean that such fact must be established at least by a preponderance of evidence; yet there is no such burden cast upon a defendant charged with a crime, except in certain particular instances, which are in no sense presented here. It is for the people to make a case against the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, and the element of alibi is included in the case which the law demands the people to make out, equally with all other parts of it. If the evidence offered by defendants tended to establish an alibi to the extent that it was sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jurors as to defendants' guilt, then those defendants should have been acquitted. It is thus apparent that the alibi, to be efficacious to a defendant, need not be "satisfactorily proven," and need not be established to the satisfaction of the jury.

It is next insisted that error was committed in allowing certain questions to be asked of witnesses who were called for impeachment purposes. The evidence of these witnesses bore upon the general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity of certain witnesses produced by the defendants. The objections here insisted upon go more to form than to substance. There is no rigid, inflexible rule to be followed by counsel in the form of the questions to be addressed to witnesses when testifying to general reputation as bearing upon the question of veracity. And any deviation from the general course to be followed, as marked out by the decisions of this court, will not be held reversible error unless those deviations have resulted in some injustice to the defendant. In this case we find nothing of the kind. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

CARTER v. MEULL. (Sac. 417.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1898.)

HIGHWAYS—TOLL ROADS—FRANCHISES — ASSIGNMENTS.

1. Where a public highway is vacated by the board of supervisors, they may grant a franchise to construct and maintain a toll road over the highway vacated, since it is then not a grant of a public highway to a private individual.

2. The requirement and acceptance by the board of supervisors of a bond from the assignee of a franchise, as owner of such franchise, which had been granted by the board, is a sufficient approval of the assignment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county.

Action by Mrs. J. B. Carter against George Meull. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Rooney, for appellant. F. W. Street, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought to recover the sum of five dollars, the season's tolls, alleged to be due from the defendant for traveling over the Sonora and Mono toll road. In 1860 a toll road was constructed from Sonora, in Tuolumne county, to Bridgeport, in Mono county, under franchises granted by the counties of Tuolumne, San Joaquin, and Stanislaus. Prior to May, 1883, the franchises had expired, and the road, under the law, became a public highway. The portion in question here is 58 miles in length, and extends over a rough, mountainous country. On the 7th day of May, 1883, the board of supervisors, "upon proper petition filed," vacated and discontinued the road as a public highway, and on the same day granted to J. B. Carter, "his associates and assigns," a franchise to construct and maintain a toll road for a period of 15 years "over that portion of the Sonora and Mono wagon road hereinafter described." Carter took possession of the road, and collected the tolls according to rates fixed by the board until January, 1893, when by deed he conveyed the franchise and road to plaintiff, soon after which he died. Since that time, plaintiff has been in possession, and has collected tolls. In August, 1896, the board of supervisors required her, as owner of the franchise, to give the bond provided for in the original grant of a franchise to J. B. Carter. In compliance with such order, plaintiff gave the bond, which was approved and filed.

1. It is contended that the grant of franchise to J. B. Carter is void because it was a grant of a public highway to a private individual. In Blood v. Woods, 95 Cal. 86, 30 Pac. 129, it was held that the board could not authorize an individual to collect tolls on a public highway. It is argued that the mode pursued here was a mere evasion. But by vacating the public highway the board destroyed the road as a public highway. If it passed over private land, the rights of way were lost, and the roadbed, the bridges, and other structures, if any, became the property of the landowners. The right to these did not pass to J. B. Carter by the grant of the franchise. Carter was authorized to construct and maintain a toll road. Since he was for years in possession, collecting tolls according to established rates, we must presume he did so. If he did not, a forfeiture could not be declared in this suit.

2. It is contended that the franchise could not be assigned without the consent of the granting power, as it is a personal trust. Wood v. Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 474; People v. Duncan, 41 Cal. 511; Electric Light Co. v. Sims, 104 Cal. 328, 37 Pac. 1042. We find, however, that after the assignment the board of supervisors recognized the assignment, and required Mrs. Carter to give a bond as owner of the franchise. The board also approved and filed the bond. This was a satisfaction and approval of the transfer. The judgment and order are affirmed.

FRASSI v. McDONALD. (S. F. 851.)<sup>1</sup>

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — SERVICE — EXTENSION OF TIME — BUILDING CONTRACTS — INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS — NEGLIGENCE — SIDEWALKS.

1. Under the statute authorizing an extension of 30 days for serving a bill of exceptions, the court may make three extensions of 10 days each, though the third is made on the eleventh day after the making of the second, where the tenth day was Sunday; Code Civ. Proc. § 12, authorizing the exclusion of the last day in which an act is to be done, if it is a holiday.

2. One contracting to erect a building under an architect's direction, the owner reserving a right to make any deviations from the contract, is an independent contractor, for whose negligence the owner is not responsible.

3. An owner of a building in process of erection, knowing that an independent contractor must take up boards of a sidewalk over an excavation to examine certain work, is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian falling into the excavation through its being negligently left open by such contractor without the owner's knowledge.

4. After a lot owner had caused an excavation to be made under an adequate sidewalk without consent of the city, an independent contractor made an opening in the sidewalk, through which plaintiff fell, to his injury. Held, that the owner was not liable, as the excavation was not the direct cause of the injury.

5. A lot owner is not responsible for injuries occasioned by an opening over an excavation under a sidewalk in front of his premises, where the opening was made without his knowledge by persons not in his employ, and only a few minutes before the accident.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county.

Action by A. Frassi against Thomas McDonald. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for appellant.
E. M. Adams, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff by reason of his falling through a sidewalk in front of a certain lot in the city of San Francisco, belonging to defendant, which sidewalk is alleged to have been in a dangerous condition by reason of defendant's negligence. The sidewalk was a temporary affair in use during the progress of the erection of a building for defendant upon the lot of land fronting thereon. At the time of the accident the building was in process of erection by three contractors,—one contractor for the plumbing; one for the excavating, brick, concrete, and iron work; and the third for the carpenter work, plastering, etc. There appears to be no material difference in the testimony of the various witnesses as to the occasion of the defect in the sidewalk. It was caused in the following manner: The excavating contractor had built a temporary sidewalk in front of the building, and made excavations thereunder. This sidewalk was securely fastened and properly constructed in all ways. Subsequently the plumbing contractor, at the request of the plumbing inspector of the city, and for the purpose of examining the fitness of the work under the sidewalk, took up two boards thereof. Within 15 or 20 minutes thereafter, this plaintiff, while passing by, fell through the opening thus made, and received serious injury.

Plaintiff first insists that the bill of exceptions found in the record was not served in time. The time to serve this bill expired upon June 7th, unless an order made by the judge upon June 8th extended it an additional 10 days; that is, the time expired upon June 7th, unless the fact that the 7th being Sunday gave appellant an additional day upon which to serve the bill. And that the law did give the appellant an additional day upon which to serve the bill there can be no question. If a bill served upon the 8th had been in time,—and that must be conceded (section 12, Code Civ. Proc.), then the court had the power upon that day to extend the time. The court had previously made two orders, of 10 days each, extending the time to serve the bill. Under the statute, it had power to extend the time 30 days in all. June 8th was within the life of the second order, and necessarily the court had the power to make a third order extending the time 10 days. Whatever time the law gave by reason of the fact that one of these orders expired upon a Sunday does not pro tanto exhaust the power of the court. If the 30-days time had been given in one order, and had expired upon a Sunday, the appellant would have had an additional day, by favor of the statute. The fact that the time fixed by an intermediate order fell upon a Sunday does not alter the case. The court made three orders, of 10 days each, extending the time. By any process of mathematical calculation this can only be reckoned as an extension of 30 days' time in all. The proposition here discussed has been directly passed upon in Muir v. Gallo-way, 61 Cal. 498; and we are satisfied with the construction of the statute as there declared, notwithstanding some doubt has been cast upon this decision in the later case of Reay v. Butler, 99 Cal. 477, 33 Pac. 1134. Even if the soundness of this construction of the statute be doubtful, it would not be advisable to change the rule at this late day. There certainly are no pressing reasons which demand it.

It is insisted by respondent that these contractors were servants of the owner, and not independent contractors, and therefore their negligence was his negligence, and consequently rendered him liable for the injuries received. This contention presents an important question in the case; for, if these contractors were independent contractors, they were not the servants of the owner, and he could not be held liable for their negligence. The contracts entered into by the owner with these men provided that the work should be done "under the direction and to the entire satisfaction of the architect"; that the owner should have the right at any time during the progress of said building "to make any alterations, deviations, additions, or omissions from the said contract," and the cost of the same should be added to or deducted from the amount of said contract price, as the case may be, by a fair valuation by the architect. Upon these provisions respondent rests his contention that the parties erecting this building were not independent contractors, but servants of the owner. The provisions found in this contract are the ordinary and usual provisions placed in building contracts, and, if the men doing this work were not independent contractors, it is difficult to find such. Many cases from foreign jurisdictions are cited by respondent to support his contention upon this branch of the case. Donovan v. Transit Co., 102 Cal. 245, 36 Pac. 516, is also relied upon, but that case is not in point. It was there said, "Since the negligence which caused the injury was that of failing to guard the hole after it was finished by the contractors, it must be imputed to the defendant;" and the conclusion deduced in that case rested upon that proposition. We will not review the cases cited from other states; for in this state the question has been carefully considered in the recent case of Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017, and a conclusion arrived at by this court contrary to the position taken by respondent. The case even was broader in its facts than this case, and it was held that the relation of master and servant did not exist. We are entirely satisfied with the conclusion there declared.

It is next contended that the opening in the sidewalk was a nuisance per se, and defendant, having caused it, was liable for the injury resulting. A sufficient answer to this contention is found in the fact that defendant did not cause or create the opening, but, upon the contrary, it was made by the independent contractor. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the opening in the sidewalk was made with the consent of the owner, or even with his knowledge. Even if it be conceded that the architect, as the agent of the defendant, must have known that the plumber, in order to do his work beneath the sidewalk, would be compelled to make an opening therein for the purpose of egress and ingress, still these facts do not bring the case within the principles of law laid down in Colgrove v. Smin, 102 Cal. 220, 36 Pac. 411. The law as there declared is not applicable, for here the making of the opening in the sidewalk was purely collateral to the subject-matter of the contract. This case would be no different in principle if this opening had been a trapdoor in the sidewalk, and had been negligently left open by the plumber in going to or from his work.

Some point is made by respondent that the excavation under the sidewalk made by the excavating contractor was a nuisance, inasmuch as no consent from the city to do the work had been previously obtained. Whatever may be the facts in this regard, we hardly see their materiality. The excavation was in fact made, and thereafter covered by a sidewalk entirely adequate for all practical purposes. The injury of which complaint is here made was the direct result of the opening in the sidewalk, and not the direct result of the excavation underneath. If a permanent sidewalk of concrete had been finally laid over the excavation, and some plumber had thereafter made an opening therein for purposes similar to those here disclosed, it could hardly be urged successfully that, the original excavation being made without a permit from the city, for such reason a party injured by falling through the opening could recover damages from the owner.

The trial court refused to give the jury the following instruction: "While it is the duty of the defendant to keep the sidewalk in front of his premises in a safe condition for pedestrians to travel upon, if such sidewalk is rendered unsafe by the negligent acts of a third person not in his employ, the defendant is not responsible therefor, unless he had knowledge of such unsafe and insecure condition of said sidewalk, or said unsafe and insecure condition had existed for a sufficient length of time for the defendant to have obtained knowledge thereof by the exercise of due care." It is suggested that this instruction was refused upon the authority of Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208, 37 Pac. 220;

but that case does not justify its refusal. The facts differ widely from the facts of this case. If there had been no sidewalk in this case, and plaintiff had fallen into the excavation made by the excavating contractor, then the two cases would probably have stood upon common ground. But here, as already suggested, the excavation was not the direct and proximate cause of the injury. The owner of property fronting on the street is not an absolute guarantor that no opening may be found in his sidewalk. The law does not demand that he shall guard his sidewalk at night, lest some evil doer shall make an opening therein to the great danger of the belated traveler. Before liability attaches to the owner in such a case, he must have known of its defective condition, or, as a careful, prudent man, should have known it. In the present case the defendant did not know of the opening in the sidewalk. The evidence also discloses that it had been made but 10 or 20 minutes when the accident occurred. In this state of the evidence, such instruction was entirely proper to be given to the jury.

The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "If the plaintiff has substantially shown you, so that your minds and consciences are clear on that point, that there was no contributory negligence on his part, then Mr. Frassi should recover damages in this case, because, as I shall presently instruct you, it is the law in this state and in this city, both by ordinance and by decision, that a man who owns property is responsible for a dangerous condition of the sidewalk, — a temporary sidewalk, at least, as was the fact in this case." In view of what has already been said, it is apparent that this instruction should not have been given. In conclusion, we would say that the court very properly submitted the question of contributory negligence to the jury. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of a felony, and now appeals. He was prosecuted under section 332 of the Penal Code, upon an information. The information is in the general form held sufficient in People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 152, 40 Pac. 107, and is clearly sufficient. The evidence also is ample to support the verdict. It is insisted that error was committed by the court in admitting certain declarations of the defendant before the jury, which were claimed to have been made under menace and undue influence. It is sufficient to say that the declarations made in no sense amounted to a confession of guilt, and therefore any question of menace and undue influence does not arise. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

MARRIAGE PROMISE—CONSIDERATION—DISMISSAL—BAR—ABATEMENT—EVIDENCE—CROSS-EXAMINATION—IMPEACHMENT.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, providing for dismissal or judgment of nonsuit where plaintiff fails to appear at the trial, and section 582, providing that in every other case judgment must be rendered on the merits, a judgment based on dismissal for want of prosecution is not a bar to another action, since there was no adjudication on the merits.

2. A judgment of dismissal, not being available as a plea in bar, cannot be pleaded in abatement.

3. A marriage promise is not without consideration because of a breach of a previous promise.

4. Admission of evidence that a person (not a witness) employed by defendant in a marriage-promise suit to shadow plaintiff was committed to the reform school was prejudicial error.

5. Witness for defendant in a marriage-promise suit was forced to admit on cross-examination that she had lived with her husband before marriage. Held not to be proper cross-examination.

6. Error in compelling a witness to admit that she lived with her husband before marriage is prejudicial, since she cannot be impeached in this way, and it tended to discredit her.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by Jessie Pyle against Edward M. Piercy. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Thos. V. Cator and E. E. Cothran, for appellant. Wm. P. Veuve and R. R. Syer, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. The action is one for damages, based upon a breach of a promise of marriage.

Defendant pleaded a judgment in bar, based upon the following facts: Plaintiff filed her complaint, and defendant answered. The time arrived for trial, and the plaintiff's attorney failed to appear. Thereupon defendant answered "Ready," and made a motion that the action be dismissed by reason of nonappearance of plaintiff. At this stage of the proceeding, plaintiff's attorney appeared, and declined to further prosecute the action. The court thereupon ordered the action dismissed for want of prosecution, and gave judgment in favor of defendant for his costs. Thereafter a new complaint was filed upon the same cause of action, and defendant, by his answer, pleaded this aforesaid judgment in bar to the prosecution of the present action. Section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that an action may be dismissed or a judgment of nonsuit entered in the following cases: "(3) By the court when the plaintiff fails to appear on the trial, and the defendant appears and asks for the dismissal." The succeeding section declares: "In every case other than those mentioned in the last section judgment must be rendered on the merits." In this case it may be fairly said that the plaintiff failed to appear at the time the case was called for trial, and under the authority of this section the court was justified in dismissing the action. We are not inclined to extend the doctrine of retraxit as recognized in the case of Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 543, and that case is essentially different in its facts from the case at bar. When there has been no adjudication of the cause upon its merits, it will only be in exceptional cases that this court will hold that a judgment of dismissal is the equivalent of a judgment of res adjudicata upon the facts. Upon reason, there is nothing to justify such a rule. Nothing has been litigated, and no principle of estoppel can be invoked. If plaintiff had proceeded with the trial until nonsuited upon the weakness of her evidence, such judgment of nonsuit would not have been a bar to the commencement of the present action. How much less reason to declare a bar under existing circumstances! We find no direct authorities in this state upon the question, but in the case of Laird v. Morris (Nev.) 42 Pac. 11, the matter is directly presented under a similar statute, and after careful consideration it was held that such a judgment was not a bar.

It is also insisted that if this judgment of dismissal may not be pleaded in bar, because not a final judgment, in the sense that the time for appeal therefrom had not expired, then it may be pleaded in abatement, and consequently the present action should have been abated. Having already held that the judgment of dismissal was not a judgment of the character that could be pleaded in bar, it necessarily follows that such a judgment cannot be pleaded in abatement and avoidance. In other words, if the judgment of dismissal be a final judgment, and still cannot be pleaded in bar, then, if it is not a final judgment, it cannot be pleaded for the purpose of abating the action. A judgment which has not the elements to constitute a bar has not the elements to support a plea in abatement.

It is contended that the action is barred by the statute of limitations. The action was begun in the month of August, 1895. The promise of marriage is alleged to have been made in September, 1893. The evidence disclosed that defendant had made promises of marriage to plaintiff as early as 1891; but the fact of a promise having been made in 1891 is no reason why a new and independent promise could not have been made in 1893. There would be the same character of consideration to support the last promise as the first, and the fact that a previous promise had been made by defendant, and a breach thereof taken place, was in no sense a bar to the introduction of evidence before the jury that a new and subsequent promise had been made in 1893, which defendant refused to carry out.

Upon cross-examination, defendant was asked, "Have you had detectives employed to shadow her [plaintiff]?" He replied that he had one, and, in answer to another question, stated that her name was Miss Katie Lewis. He was then asked, "Don't you know that this detective—this little girl—was committed by Judge Lorigan, a month or six weeks ago, to the reform school at Whittier?" Notwithstanding objection upon the part of his attorney, the witness was required to answer the question, and replied in the affirmative. The trial court appears to have admitted the evidence for the purpose of showing the character of the person employed by defendant as a detective. The admission of this evidence was clearly erroneous. Its single purpose was to create a prejudice against the defendant, and it was likely to serve that purpose well. The girl was not a witness in the case; hence, if for no other reason, the evidence was entirely incompetent as bearing in any way upon her credibility. It was an indirect attack upon the honesty and integrity of the defendant and his case, and wholly unauthorized by any principle of law. This evidence necessarily weighed against him with the jury.

Mrs. Tomlinson was an important witness for the defendant. Upon cross-examination, under objection, she was forced to say that she had been living with her husband, Tomlinson, prior to their marriage. This evidence was not cross-examination, and, in addition thereto, a witness cannot be impeached in this way. Such evidence tended strongly to discredit the witness, and the error committed in its admission was clearly prejudicial.

Numberless other objections are made to the rulings of the trial court in the admission and rejection of evidence. The court has examined them patiently and carefully, and nothing appears therein demanding a retrial of the case. Indeed, we find there nothing demanding extended consideration. Some objection is made to an instruction of the court, wherein the jury are told that, in the assessment of damages, defendant's financial ability is an element to be taken into consideration. In view of the fact that there was no evidence given at the trial as to the financial ability of the defendant, this instruction would seem to be without the facts. Upon an examination of the other instructions given and refused, we find no objection of merit. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

SMITH v. MASON. (Sac. 402.)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS—TRUSTS—PAROL EVIDENCE.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 852, forbidding an express trust in lands to be created or declared otherwise than by a written instrument, declarations of a grantor showing that a deed absolute on its face was intended as a trust is inadmissible.

2. The fact that a deed was made by a father to a daughter without consideration does not of itself raise a presumption of fraud.

3. Nor is it sufficient to create a resulting trust in favor of the grantor's other children.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Maud Smith against Hannah Mason to set aside a deed. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. C. Greene and Gibson & Ramage, for appellant. Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Plaintiff and defendant are members of a family of five children who survive their father, one Daniel Hoover, deceased. Said Hoover died November 30, 1891. About seven months previously he made to his eldest daughter, Hannah, the defendant here, a deed in form an absolute conveyance of a parcel of land, on which he then resided with his said family. In plaintiff's complaint it is substantially alleged that at the date of such deed said Daniel was sick, and expected early dissolution; that he reposed great confidence in said Hannah Mason (then Hannah Hoover), and because thereof, and in order to save expenses of administration, he signed and acknowledged said deed to her, with directions that she should hold the land described therein in trust for the benefit of herself and his other children, and convey to them their respective interests, etc.; that the deed was without consideration; that it was never delivered by the grantor, but that defendant obtained possession of the same after his death, and claims title thereunder in herself, and repudiates the trust. It is prayed that the deed be adjudged void, or that defendant be declared a trustee for plaintiff, etc. The complaint was not demurred to for uncertainty. The answer of defendant put in issue its more material allegations. We do not find it necessary to consider the point made by respondent, that the averment in the complaint of nondelivery of said instrument precludes the assertion of a trust which must rest on it as a deed delivered. There was evidence at the trial that it was delivered by Daniel Hoover to the defendant on the day of its date, and the court so found.

Plaintiff offered evidence of declarations of Daniel Hoover, uttered orally, regarding his purpose in executing said deed, and of oral admissions of defendant relative to her title in the land. Such evidence was rightly rejected by the court. Our statute of frauds forbids an express trust in lands to be created or declared otherwise than by a written instrument. Civ. Code, § 852; Code Civ. Proc. § 1971; Hasshagen v. Hasshagen, 80 Cal. 514, 22 Pac. 294; Doran v. Doran, 99 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 929; Moore v. Hamerstag, 109 Cal. 122, 41 Pac. 805.

It seems to be contended that the court erred in refusing to admit proof of a constructive trust, or to find such a trust from the evidence which was admitted. Allowing that any evidence offered or received had a tendency to establish a trust of that nature (which is by no means clear), it was yet irrelevant to the case before the court; for, leaving out of view the question of delivery of the deed, found in defendant's favor, the complaint contains no showing of other circumstances from which a trust arises by construction of law, as distinguished from one express. It is not alleged that Daniel Hoover was in any respect incompetent to execute the deed to defendant, nor that he at all mistook its contents, nor that defendant procured it by means of undue influence or fraudulent promises, or, indeed, that she made any effort whatever to obtain it. The fact that the instrument was made from father to daughter, and the alleged fact that it was without consideration, do not in themselves raise a presumption of fraud, nor suffice to raise a resulting trust in favor of other children of the grantor. Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 663, 47 Pac. 691; Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 671, 42 Pac. 303; Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 Pac. 910; Francis v. Wilkinson, 147 Ill. 370, 35 N. E. 150; Perry, Trusts, § 201; Civ. Code, § 1040. The judgment should be affirmed.

MORTGAGES—COSTS—COUNSEL FEES—LIEN.

A mortgage provided that the mortgagee, on foreclosure, should recover costs and counsel fees, but nowhere stated that they should be secured by the mortgage, nor provided for their payment out of the proceeds of a sale under it. Held, in foreclosure, that such costs and fees were not a lien on the mortgaged property.

Suit by R. W. Russell against J. E. Findley and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified.

A. H. Carpenter, for appellants. F. J. Solinsky and A. L. Rhodes, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure of mortgage on real estate. The mortgage contained the following provision: "In any action which may be brought to foreclose this mortgage, the said party of the second part shall recover in said gold coin not only all moneys which may be due on said note, but also any and all sums paid for taxes and assessments or incumbrances or insurance, with interest thereon as aforesaid, and also counsel fees, at the rate of ten per cent. upon the amount due, and all costs and charges attending the foreclosure, including such sums as may have been paid for searching the title of said premises since the date of the record of this mortgage, and that said counsel fees shall be paid whether judgment be entered in said action or not." The court found that there is owing as counsel fees the sum of $100, $2.50 paid out for search of title since the mortgage was recorded, and also the sum of $13 costs of suit; making the aggregate sum, with the principal and interest of the note, of $4,986.37, "* * * which is a lien upon and against said premises." Directions to docket any deficiency there might be after sale was given. Defendants appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone.

Appellants' contention is that the items of counsel fees, costs of search, and costs of suit were not secured to be paid by the mortgage, and it was error to declare them to be a lien on the mortgaged premises; citing Civ. Code, § 2920; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 756; Clemens v. Luce, 101 Cal. 432, 35 Pac. 1032; Mason v. Luce, 116 Cal. 233, 48 Pac. 72. Respondent claims that the court was authorized by the terms of the mortgage to include these items as secured; citing O'Neal v. Hart, 116 Cal. 69, 47 Pac. 926. The mortgage reads: "That for the purpose of securing the payment of a promissory note, a copy whereof is as follows [copy of note], the said parties of the first part hereby grant and mortgage," etc. First parties agree to pay all taxes and assessments, etc., "which appear to be liens upon the property," etc., keep the building insured, and the mortgage gives second party the right to pay these amounts, if first parties fail to do so, "and all sums so paid shall be secured hereby." Then follows the clause first above quoted. The only other clause bearing upon the question is a provision that, if the mortgage be foreclosed, "such judgment and decree of foreclosure and order of sale shall provide for the sale of the mortgaged premises en masse, and in one lot only," but makes no provision as to the application of the proceeds of sale. The mortgage specifically declares that certain sums shall be secured by it, but it does not purport to secure the liabilities in question, although it makes them the liabilities of the mortgagor. Clemens v. Luce, supra, held "that, where the mortgage does not provide that counsel fees shall be a lien, no such lien exists. O'Neal v. Hart, supra, presented a different case from the one here, as there the mortgage provided that on foreclosure a decree might be entered to sell the premises, and out of the proceeds of sale counsel fees might be paid. This express provision was held to create an obligation which was of the same nature as the obligation to discharge the other costs of foreclosure. No such obligation was entered into by the mortgagor in the present case. He agreed to pay the charges mentioned, but he did not agree that the land should stand security for payment. See, also, Irvine v. Perry, 119 Cal. 352, 51 Pac. 544, 949, citing Lee v. McCarthy (Cal.) 35 Pac. 1034. The decree should be so modified as that the items of charge above mentioned ($115.50 in all) shall not be secured by a lien on the premises, and in all other respects it should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the decree is so modified as that the items of charge above mentioned ($115.50 in all) are not secured by a lien on the premises, and in all other respects it is affirmed.

In re GREGORY'S ESTATE. (Sac. 506.)

APPEALABLE ORDER—REVIEW.

1. An order overruling a motion to vacate, for averred error therein, a dismissal of a petition to vacate a decree of distribution, is not appealable.

2. A refusal to make findings cannot be reviewed on appeal from an order overruling a motion to set aside a judgment in which the alleged error was committed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

In the matter of the estate of James Gregory. The petition of Mary A. Brind, administratrix c. t. a., to vacate a decree of distribution, was dismissed, and from an order overruling her motion to set aside the order of dismissal she appealed. Dismissed.

James Gartlan, for appellant. F. P. Tuttle, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. James Gregory died testate in the county of Placer on January 24, 1877; being at the time a resident of said county, and leaving an estate therein, consisting of real and personal property. The will of said deceased was duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary were issued to Mary Gregory, named in the will as sole executrix thereof; and such letters remained in full force and effect until December 1, 1880, when she died. On January 8, 1881, a decree of distribution was made and entered in the matter of the estate, whereby the whole of the estate was distributed to John H. Gregory and John S. Gregory. On February 18, 1895, an order of court was made and entered appointing Mary Ann Brind administratrix with the will annexed of the said estate, and on the same day letters of administration were issued to her. On May 3, 1895, the said administratrix, Mary A. Brind, filed a petition, and on October 31, 1895, an amended petition, setting forth, among other things, that between the times of the death of Mary Gregory, executrix, and the appointment of the petitioner as administratrix, there was a vacancy in the administration of the said estate; that the decree of distribution of January 8, 1881, was made without any petition therefor, or notice thereof, and is void on its face, and not conformable to law or justice; that the petitioner and three other persons named were pretermitted children of said James Gregory, and were entitled to his estate, or a portion thereof; and that the said decree of January 8, 1881, was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and in contravention of the constitution of the United States and of this state, in that it deprived the said pretermitted children of their property without due process of law. Wherefore the petitioner prayed that the said decree of January 8th be vacated and set aside. J. H. Gregory, J. S. Gregory, and five other parties interested answered the petition; denying that the said decree of distribution was made without any petition therefor or notice thereof, or is void on its face, or not conformable to law or justice; and averring that no appeal was ever taken from the said decree, and that the same is conclusive as to the rights of the petitioner, and the cause of action set forth in the petition is barred by the provisions of sections 1666 and 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The matter came on regularly to be heard before the court upon the issues presented by the petition and answer; and, after hearing the evidence and the arguments of counsel, it was on June 17, 1896, "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the prayer of said petition be, and the same is hereby, denied, and the said petition dismissed." On June 16, 1897, counsel for petitioner served notice on respondents that on the 28th day of that month he "would move the court for an order setting aside and vacating the judgment marked as made and entered herein on the 17th day of June, 1896, on the grounds that there are no findings or decision to support said judgment, and that the same is therefore void and of no effect." This motion was made and submitted on the papers and record in the case, and on an affidavit made by petitioner's attorney, in which it was stated that the issues of fact raised by the answer to the petition to vacate and set aside the decree of distribution "were tried by the court, sitting without a jury, on the 17th day of June, 1896; that the testimony having been introduced, and the arguments of counsel heard, the cause was submitted for decision, and thereupon the court announced that he would give judgment in favor of respondents; that, immediately on such announcement being made, this affiant, in behalf of his client, the said petitioner, and in open court, demanded findings, and requested that a copy of such findings as counsel for respondents prepared be furnished him, with the intent that he have opportunity to prepare amendments thereto; that subsequently, and without any findings ever having been made or filed or waived, a judgment was made and entered in favor of respondents and against petitioner." This motion was heard and denied on October 26, 1897, and from this last order the present appeal is prosecuted by the petitioner.

The only ground urged for a reversal is that the court erred in failing to find the facts when it made and filed its judgment or order denying the prayer of the said petition, and dismissing the same. The order appealed from is not, in our opinion, an appealable order. If appellant desired to have the alleged error complained of reviewed in this court, she should have appealed from the judgment of dismissal, in rendering which the error occurred. That judgment was not void because of the alleged error, and it could not be set aside in the manner sought to be availed of here. The appeal should be dismissed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the appeal is dismissed.

SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. PROSSER. (Sac. 284.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1898.)

LIMITATIONS—NEW PROMISE—LIENS—FORECLOSURE.

1. A letter written by a debtor to his creditor, referring to property bought of the creditor, and requesting employment of the creditor in order that he might pay for it in work, amounts to an unqualified admission of an existing debt which the debtor desires to pay (Code Civ. Proc. § 360), and is sufficient to interrupt the running of limitations; and the suggestion of a new mode of payment, not being made as a condition of the acknowledgment, did not impair the effect of the admission, the bar of the statute then being two years remote.

2. An action on a debt barred by limitations, except for an acknowledgment of the debt before the statute had run, is based on the original debt, and not on the new promise; and hence an action to foreclose a mortgage, brought after the original period of limitation, is not barred, where the debt has been acknowledged before the running of limitations, since Civ. Code, § 2911, provides that a lien is not extinguished by lapse of time short of that within which an action may be brought on the "principal obligation."

Temple, J., dissenting.

In bank. For opinion in department, see 52 Pac. 836.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage given to secure the promissory note of the defendant. The complaint was filed more than four years after the maturity of the note, and the superior court held, on demurrer, that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The judgment of the superior court was reversed in department on the ground that the note was taken out of the operation of the statute by a new promise or acknowledgment in writing (Code Civ. Proc. § 360), but at the same time it was held that the right to foreclose the mortgage was barred. As to this latter point only a rehearing was granted on petition of the appellant. Upon the first point we adopt the department opinion, as follows: "Plaintiff sued to foreclose a chattel mortgage made by defendant to secure payment of his promissory note. Such note fell due October 10, 1890. The property mortgaged was a certain traction engine at Auburn, Placer county. The action was brought more than four years after maturity of the note, and, in order to avoid the limitation of that period prescribed for actions on such instruments (Code Civ. Proc. § 337), the plaintiff set out in its complaint the following paper writing alleged to have been signed by defendant and delivered by him on October 8, 1892, to plaintiff's treasurer, who had authority to receive the same on its behalf: 'Dear Sir: Referring to that traction engine at Auburn, owned by me, and mortgaged to S. P. Co., I have not been able to sell it. * * * Now, sir, can't you give me a chance to pay you in work? The Co. employs many men, and, if you choose, you can procure some employment for me. I have a sick family, and am hard up personally, and need work, and want to pay you, besides. * * * W. S. Prosser.' Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the statute bars the action. The demurrer was sustained, and judgment passed in defendant's favor. The distinct and unqualified admission of an existing debt contained in a writing signed by the party to be charged, and without intimation of an intent to refuse payment thereof, suffices to establish the debt to which the contract relates as a continuing contract, and to interrupt the running of the statute of limitations against the same. From such an acknowledgment the law implies a promise to pay. Code Civ. Proc. § 360; McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180, 184, 185; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 374; Tugle v. Minor, 76 Cal. 96, 18 Pac. 131; Wood, Lim. §§ 68, 85. The defendant contends that his said letter was nothing but an inquiry whether plaintiff would accept payment in work. We think it was more significant than this. As we read the document, it was an unqualified admission of an existing debt which defendant desired to pay, and also a request for leave to pay in a manner more convenient to the writer than that provided in the original contract. The suggestion of a peculiar mode of payment, not being proposed as a condition of the acknowledgment, did not impair the effect of the admission. Evans v. Simon, 9 Exch. 282. This view of the import of defendant's letter is strengthened—'strongly fortified,' said the supreme court of New Hampshire—by the fact that the bar of the statute was then some two years remote, and defendant was in no position to impose terms of payment. Butterfield v. Jacobs, 15 N. H. 140, 142; Wood, Lim. § 78, and cases cited. To the extent of the value of the security, at least, payment was then enforceable in money. 'There is a great difference between the construction to be put on a letter written a short time after the debt has been contracted, and one written after the debt is already barred. Pollock, C. B., in Cornforth v. Smithard, 5 Hurl. & N. 14. We have no doubt that the latter interrupted the running of the statute as to the debt sued on. See, further, Farrell v. Palmer, 36 Cal. 187; Curtiss v. Insurance Co., 90 Cal. 245, 249, 255, 27 Pac. 211.'

As to the second point, it was assumed in the department opinion that the life of the original mortgage ended four years after the maturity of the note, and that the written acknowledgment of the debt, though sufficient to prevent the bar of the statute as to the personal obligation, was not such an instrument as is essential to create, renew, or extend a mortgage. The contention of the appellant is that this view ignores the effect of section 2911 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "A lien is extinguished by the lapse of the time within which, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, an action can be brought upon the principal obligation." The Code prescribes the manner of creating liens, and enumerates the various means by which they are extinguished. Civ. Code, §§ 2909-2913. This enumeration is no doubt intended to be exclusive, and the only provision applicable to this case is section 2911, above quoted. The question whether the lien of this mortgage was extinguished therefore resolves itself into the question whether an action such as this is based upon the principal obligation,—i. e. the note which the mortgage was given to secure,—or upon the new promise implied from the written acknowledgment of the debt. A wide diversity of opinion upon this point may be discovered in the reported decisions of this court, but it is to be observed that these expressions of opinion were generally unnecessary, and have generally ignored the distinction between a new promise made before, and one made after, the statute has run. This distinction is very clearly stated in section 81, Wood, Lim., as follows: "The distinction between the acknowledgment of a debt before, and one after, the statute has run, consists merely in its effect upon the debt and the remedy. An acknowledgment or promise made before the statute has run vitalizes the old debt for another statutory period, dating from the time of the acknowledgment or promise, while an acknowledgment made after the statute has run gives a new cause of action, for which the old debt is a consideration." This distinction seems to be recognized in the phrase "new or continuing contract," in section 360, Code Civ. Proc., and is clearly stated by Mr. Justice Rhodes in his opinion in McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 184, as follows: "There are two ultimate facts that may be proved in the mode prescribed,—a continuing contract, and a new contract. The acknowledgment or promise made while the contract is a subsisting liability establishes a continuing contract, and, when made after the bar of the statute, a new contract is created." In Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 477, it was held that the new promise is not the cause of action, but is only evidence that the original cause of action is not barred. In Chabot v. Tucker, 39 Cal. 438, Mr. Justice Temple says in his opinion that Smith v. Richmond was overruled in McCormick v. Brown as to this point. I think it is too strong an expression to say that the earlier decision was overruled by the latter, for it was not mentioned or referred to, and the two cases were not alike. In the former the new promise was made before the bar of the statute had attached to the original obligation, while in McCormick v. Brown the statute had run before the date of the new promise; and it seems clear from the language of Justice Rhodes, above quoted, that the express intention was to distinguish the two classes of cases, and the doctrine applicable to them, respectively. On principle, this distinction must exist. When a debtor makes a new promise before an action is barred upon the original contract, he does not make himself liable a second time for the same debt, and the old promise is not merged in the new. He merely continues his original liability for a longer term. In other words, he merely waives so much of the period of limitations as has run in his favor. But when his legal obligation is at an end, by reason of the lapse of the full period of limitation, or of a discharge in bankruptcy, a new promise creates a new obligation, and is itself the basis of the action. A clear recognition of this distinction reconciles all seeming conflict in the decisions of this court, and demonstrates the essential difference between this case and the case of Wells v. Harter, 56 Cal. 342, in which it appears that the action on the principal obligation had been barred before the new promise was made. In that case, of course, the lien of the mortgage was extinguished by the express terms of section 2911 of the Civil Code, and could only be renewed by compliance with the requirements of section 2922 of the Civil Code. But here the right of action never was barred. There never was a time when it could not be maintained on the principal obligation, and there was no occasion to renew the lien. If it should be claimed that the lien was "extended," the answer is that the extension of a lien is not the prolongation of its life, but is making it security for an additional obligation. Bank v. Bandmann, 120 Cal. 220, 52 Pac. 583.

Our conclusion is that, as between the parties, the lien of this mortgage was never extinguished. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

COWARD v. CLANTON. (Sac. 399.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 26, 1898.)

PARTNERSHIP—AGREEMENT TO SHARE PROFITS—ACCOUNTING—PLEADING—BROKERS—PERFORMANCE OF AGREEMENT.

1. In an action on a contract for the sharing of profits in a transaction, plaintiff may recover on facts showing that he is entitled to relief, although he wrongly alleged that the contract, which he correctly set out, was one of partnership.

2. To entitle one to an accounting under an agreement to share the profits of a transaction, he need not establish a partnership relation.

3. An agreement between plaintiff and defendant that the latter should buy land with his own funds, and have control thereof, and that the former should negotiate the sale thereof under defendant's direction, and that the proceeds, above the cost price and expenses of selling, be divided between them, is not a partnership.

4. The Code, defining "partnership" as the association of two or more persons to carry on business together and share the profits, does not make profit sharing the test of partnership.

5. Under an agreement between a landowner and a broker, whereby the latter was to sell the land for a share of the proceeds above the cost price and selling expenses after all the land was sold, the procuring of a purchaser for all the tract, who was accepted by the owner and with whom an executory contract was made, is a sufficient performance of the agreement to entitle the broker to his share of the profits.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Action by W. M. Coward against D. R. Clanton. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hurst & Hurst and C. W. Thomas, for appellant. N. A. Hawkins, R. C. Clark, and E. R. Bush, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action for an accounting. It is averred in the complaint that plaintiff and defendant, in 1882, formed a partnership for the purchase and sale of real estate. Clanton was to furnish all the funds and moneys for investment, and to purchase real estate for plaintiff to sell. Plaintiff was to furnish the skill and perform the labor of selling all or as much of said real estate as could be sold. From the proceeds, if any, there should be paid: (1) The cost of the land, with interest; (2) the expense of selling; and (3) the residue, if any, was to be divided equally. The plaintiff was to furnish office and the necessary clerks.

It is averred that in December, 1882, defendant purchased with his own funds a tract of land called the "Harlan Tract," containing the 160 acres which the parties subsequently caused to be divided into 5-acre tracts, and all of which plaintiff has negotiated and sold at a profit of $4,156.50. It is charged that defendant has received to his own use all of the proceeds of the sale, including the purchase price and interest stipulated, the costs and expense of sale, and $2,312.51 profits in excess of his share, and that plaintiff has paid certain sums as expenses, and the exact amount due plaintiff cannot be ascertained without an accounting. The defendant denies all the allegations of the complaint, but admits and avers that he employed plaintiff as a real-estate broker to sell the Harlan tract, and agreed that when all the land was sold at prices to be fixed and agreed to by the defendant, and the cost of the land, with 8 per cent. per annum interest, was paid from such proceeds, and the expenses incurred in subdividing and selling were paid, plaintiff was to have one-half of the remainder, if any there was, for his services, but that plaintiff has not sold all the land, but abandoned his contract, and refused to perform the same. The findings are for the plaintiff, and against the contention of the defendant, except that it is found that the sales resulted in an advance of $4,155 over the purchase price; that the current rate of interest was 8 per cent.; and, after deducting interest and expenses, there remained in the hands of Clanton $3,457.23 profits, to be divided between plaintiff and defendant, one-half of which belonged to plaintiff. Plaintiff, therefore, recovered judgment for $1,723.61, with interest and costs.

The chief contention between the parties in this court has reference to the character of the contract. Most of the averments in regard to it contained in the complaint are admitted, but the defendant contends that the contract did not create the relation of partners. But, since the statute of frauds is not relied upon, I cannot see how it was material for plaintiff to show that the contract created a partnership, if, as the court found, the entire Harlan tract was sold. The complaint shows a contract to sell the land for defendant for one-half of the profits, ascertained in a specified way. The contract admitted by the defendant is to the same effect, except that defendant contends that the contract was to sell the entire tract of land, and that plaintiff is not entitled to compensation unless the entire service contracted for has been rendered. The fact that the relation is wrongly averred to be that of partners is not material. If a case is stated which entitles the plaintiff to relief, it matters not that the contract which is correctly set out is wrongly called a contract of partnership. I do not understand the suggestion that the court has no jurisdiction to compel an accounting unless a partnership was created. If plaintiff has a cause of action of which the court has jurisdiction, and it is necessary to have an accounting to determine his rights, it will be done. Lumber Co. v. Reynolds (Cal.) 53 Pac. 410. Whether the facts would have given jurisdiction to a court of equity is of no consequence. We have no such courts, but our courts afford the remedies to which the facts may show the parties are entitled, whether legal or equitable.

I think the testimony of Coward did not establish a partnership, although he did testify to the facts stated in the complaint as constituting a partnership. It was not such, not only because Coward owned no interest in any partnership property or business, and had no control of any business, but throughout was to act under the direction and control of Clanton, and was simply, at the end, to be only a creditor of Clanton for the value of his services. He really was not to share in the "profits," as the term is understood among merchants or in the decisions concerning partnerships. The profits were not, according to his testimony, real profits. They were conventional profits only. If two persons agree to sell goods on a credit, one to take the accounts at their face, and the profits made on that basis to be divided equally, it is obvious that the division would not be of the profits of the business, if there were any bad debts. This is precisely the character of the business testified to by Coward. He was only a real-estate agent. As he testifies, he was in no way concerned in regard to the moneys actually realized from the sales, but only in the amount of sales, whether by executory contract or otherwise, which he could induce Clanton to accept. This is not a carrying on of business by partners.

Nor is it true that our Code makes profit sharing a test of partnership. It would not lack much of a good definition of a "partnership" if the clause in regard to a division of profits were omitted. It would read: "Partnership is the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together." This is now said to be the distinguishing feature of a partnership as established in Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas. 268. See full discussion and citation of authorities in Eastman v. Clark, 53 N. H. 276.

But in litigation between partners, or those who may be so considered, it is not often necessary to determine whether that relation exists or not. A partnership is not like a corporation, from which certain consequences necessarily follow. As to the parties to it the contract of partnership is like any other, and the powers conferred, duties enjoined, and liabilities imposed are to be deduced from its terms. This idea was expressed by Mr. Justice Lindley in Walker v. Hirsch, 27 Ch. Div. 260. He said: "Persons who share profits and losses are, in my opinion, properly called partners; but that is a mere question of words. Their precise rights in any particular case must depend upon the real nature of the agreement into which they have entered."

In this case, if the tract had all been sold, there would be no difference in the outcome, whether the contract be regarded as creating a partnership or not. If the property had not all been sold, and there were a partnership, still, if the proceeds were sufficient in amount to repay the purchase price and expenses, the residue would be profits to be divided. If a contract for services, as the contract was entire, if the land were not all sold plaintiff has not performed his contract. Either conclusion would be reached only by construing the contract, and although under one construction the relation might be that of partners, and under the other of employer and employé, they are both within the scope of the complaint.

It seems to be conceded that if the tract was all sold, and the pleadings are not defective in the respects noted, plaintiff is entitled to recover. Whether all had been sold or not—aside from the question of partnership—is the main fact in controversy; and I think, if the relation had been that of partnership in the ordinary sense, if plaintiff was to have a share of the profits made in the transaction it would be necessary to hold that it was not sold. Then plaintiff would be required to share in the risk of loss from the fact that some purchaser on credit might fail to complete his purchase. But if plaintiff was, as appellant contends, acting merely as a real-estate agent, and as compensation was to receive, not a share in the profits proper, but a share in the increment after certain specified deductions, then I think the contract has been performed on the part of plaintiff; or, rather, there is evidence sufficient to sustain the finding to that effect. There is evidence tending to show that purchasers for the entire tract, who were acceptable to and who were accepted by defendant, and with whom satisfactory contracts were made, were found by plaintiff.

As to the Eaton tract, there is a sharp conflict in the evidence, but the testimony of Coward is positive that it was a sale of a portion of the Harlan tract, and was accepted by Clanton as such. A similar remark may be made as to the other tracts. Only executory contracts were entered into, but there was evidence that Clanton accepted them as sales within the terms of their contract; and, if the relation was that of vendor and broker, he could not have done otherwise. I do not understand upon what ground interest was allowed, but no point is made as to that, and perhaps reason could have been shown for such action. The order and judgment are affirmed.

ALFERITZ v. PERKINS. (Sac. 388.)

CHattel Mortgages—Confusion of Goods.

A chattel mortgage covered 2,000 sheep and the increase thereof. Five hundred wethers, part of the flock, were, with the mortgagee's consent, exchanged for 500 ewes, which were commingled with the remaining 1,500, and could not thereafter be distinguished therefrom. Held, that mortgagee's right to the 500 ewes was merely an equitable one, which could not affect the rights of creditors of the mortgagor to attach them before the mortgagee had taken possession.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Madera county.

Action by Peter Alferitz against S. J. Perkins to recover the value of certain lambs sold by defendant as a constable under a writ of attachment. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Rhodes and L. I. Mowry, for appellant. R. L. Hargrove, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is from the judgment upon the judgment roll. The findings show the following facts: On December 7, 1893, one Miguel Lujea executed his promissory note to the plaintiff for the sum of $3,600, payable six months after date, and on the same day executed to the plaintiff, as security therefor, a chattel mortgage upon 2,000 head of sheep then owned by him and in his possession in the county of Fresno, and in which the mortgaged property was described as follows: "Two thousand sheep and the increase thereof, two mules and two horses, now in the county of Fresno, state of California." This mortgage was in all respects duly executed, and was recorded in Fresno county, and afterwards in the counties of Mariposa, Stanislaus, and Madera, and was made in good faith to secure said note and certain advances therein provided for. That in 1894 the mortgagor, being then in the county of Mono with said sheep, with the consent of the plaintiff, exchanged 500 wethers, part of said 2,000 sheep, to another party, for 500 ewes, which were mingled with the remaining 1,500 so mortgaged, and thereafter could not be distinguished from them. That in January, 1895, there were born to the ewes of said band of 2,000 sheep 1,000 lambs. That in May, 1894, Rosenthal and Kutner brought suit in justice's court in the county of Madera against said Lujea, the mortgagor, and procured a writ of attachment to be issued, under which the defendant in this action, a constable, attached 320 of said lambs, and afterwards sold the same for the sum of $288; and this action is prosecuted to recover from the defendant (said constable) the value of said 320 lambs so attached and sold, and damages; and, on the facts so found, the court gave judgment for the defendant.

Several grounds are urged by respondent in support of the judgment, and each ground is combatted and elaborately argued on behalf of appellant. These grounds, as stated by respondent, are as follows: (1) "The description 'two thousand sheep and the increase thereof' is insufficient and void as against respondent." (2) "The mortgage did not cover the offspring of the ewes." (3) "That the alleged mortgaged property was so confused and mingled with the unmortgaged property as to render it impossible to identify and segregate the same." (4) That an action for the conversion of the property will not lie. Our conclusion is that the judgment should be affirmed upon the third ground above stated, and therefore a decision of the other questions presented and discussed is unnecessary; since, if they were each resolved in favor of appellant, the result would be in no wise affected.

The findings that 500 wethers, part of the 2,000 sheep mortgaged, were exchanged with a third party for 500 ewes, which were comingled with the remaining 1,500, and could not thereafter be distinguished therefrom, and that said exchange was made with the consent of the plaintiff, and that 1,000 lambs were borne by the ewes of said band of sheep, are clear and unequivocal. In Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 483, it is said: "If the mortgagee, by his fault or neglect, permit the mortgaged goods to be intermingled by the mortgagor, so that an officer having a writ of execution against the latter is unable, after making reasonable inquiry and effort, to distinguish them, and the mortgagee does not himself identify and point them out, the officer is justified in taking and selling the whole as the property of the debtor. * * * The mortgage being ineffectual at law to convey the subsequently acquired goods, these are subject to seizure upon execution by a judgment creditor of the mortgagor; and, the confusion of goods having taken place by the permissive act of the mortgagee, he is not allowed to defeat the rights of the judgment creditor by claiming the goods under his mortgage." See, also, Cobbey, Chat. Mortg. § 765, and numerous cases cited by both authors; and the doctrine of these cases is based upon the familiar rule in relation to the confusion of goods. Upon this point, appellant cites three cases, namely, Abbott v. Goodwin, 20 Me. 411; Allen v. Goodnow, 71 Me. 420; and Davis v. Marx, 55 Miss. 376. It is not necessary to review these cases, in all of which there was given to the mortgagor the power of sale and the substitution of other goods. But, conceding that they support appellant's contention, the great weight of authority and

We do not doubt that, as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, the 500 ewes acquired by the exchange, and mingled with the remaining 1,500, could have been taken by the plaintiff under the mortgage; and, if possession had been taken by the plaintiff before the attachment was levied, his right to the whole band would have been undoubted. But, until possession taken, his right to the 500 ewes so brought into the band was merely an equitable right, which could not affect the right of another creditor to attach, there being nothing to distinguish them from those originally mortgaged; and it is equally true that no one could select from the 1,000 lambs those that sprang from the ewes not mortgaged. Hence it is immaterial, so far as this case is concerned, whether the mortgage was originally valid or not, or whether the increase born in 1895 were covered by it, or whether the 320 lambs seized and sold under the attachment were the offspring of the 500 ewes for which the wethers were exchanged. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

CLINE v. ROBBINS. (Sac. 349.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 21, 1898.)

APPEAL—MANDATE—JUDGMENTS—CONSTRUCTION—COSTS—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

1. A judgment declared an instrument in form a deed absolute to be a mortgage, and provided that it should be foreclosed, and that each party should pay his own costs and one-half of the jury fee. The jury fee had been paid by plaintiff, the mortgagor. The mortgagee appealed, whereupon the decree was modified by denying a foreclosure because not prayed for, and by directing that the decree fix a reasonable time within which the mortgagor should pay the balance due, and that, in default of such payment, the action should be dismissed. An "amended" judgment was then entered in the lower court, in accordance with the mandate, but it made no reference to costs or jury fees. Held, that the original judgment, in so far as it referred to the costs or jury fees, was not affected.

2. A judgment declaring a deed to be a mortgage, and ordering a foreclosure of it, found the amount due the mortgagee, and directed that "the commissioner * * * pay to plaintiff [the mortgagor] or his attorney, out of said proceeds [of the foreclosure sale], the sum of thirty-six dollars, jury fees, costs of this suit." Held, that the cost should be deducted from the amount due the mortgagee, and not from the proceeds of the sale.

3. A judgment declared a deed a mortgage, and ordered defendant, the grantee, to reconvey on payment of a certain sum, and directed that, unless the payment was made within a certain time, the action should be dismissed. Held, that it was no ground for dismissing the action that prior to a tender the grantor conveyed the property in fraud of creditors.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Action by J. T. Cline against H. A. Robbins. From an order made after final judgment denying defendant's motion to dismiss the action, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. S. Ford, for appellant. J. M. Walling, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is from an order made after final judgment denying appellant's motion to dismiss the action. Cline brought an action to have it adjudged that a certain instrument, in form a deed absolute, was in fact a mortgage, and for an accounting between himself and defendant Robbins, who was in possession of the property, and receiving its rents and profits, and offering to pay any balance that might be found due from him to the defendant. The defendant denied that said instrument was a mortgage, and alleged that it was a deed absolute. Upon the hearing, the court found that said instrument was a mortgage, and that there was due to the defendant $583; and, as conclusions of law, that the mortgage should be foreclosed, that each party pay his own costs, and that each party pay one-half of the jury fee. That fee amounted to $72, and had been paid by the plaintiff. Judgment was thereupon entered foreclosing said mortgage, and ordering a sale of the mortgaged premises. From this judgment, defendant Robbins appealed, making the points that the finding that said instrument was a mortgage was not justified by the evidence, and that the judgment foreclosing the mortgage was erroneous. This court sustained the finding that the instrument was a mortgage, but held that the action was to redeem from the mortgage, that a foreclosure was not sought by either party, and directing that the decree should fix a reasonable time within which the plaintiff must pay the balance found due, and that, in default of such payment within the time limited, the action should be dismissed, and ordering that the decree be modified accordingly. Cline v. Robbins, 112 Cal. 581, 586, 44 Pac. 1023. Upon the going down of the remittitur, what is styled an "amended judgment" was entered, in which it was recited that a former judgment had been entered foreclosing the mortgage, the appeal therefrom, and the judgment that the decree be modified, and then proceeded to decree "that the judgment heretofore entered be modified by striking out all that part thereof which forecloses the mortgage, and the same is hereby stricken out, and it is further adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff pay to the defendant the sum of five hundred and eighty-three dollars, together with interest at seven per cent. per annum from June 12, 1895, within forty days after the entry of this amended judgment; that, upon the payment of such sum, within said time, the said mortgage be decreed to be satisfied by this court; and, upon payment thereof, the defendant is ordered to duly make, execute, and deliver to the plaintiff a deed of conveyance of the said mortgaged premises; and, if within the said forty days the whole of said money and interest shall not have been paid, then, upon motion of the defendant, this action shall be dismissed." Within the time above limited, plaintiff's attorney tendered to defendant's attorney $590.60 in full payment of the amount due, and this tender was refused, upon the ground that it was $38.65 (the amount of half the jury fee, with interest) less than the amount of said judgment and interest. Plaintiff thereupon deposited the sum tendered with the clerk of the court for the defendant in satisfaction of the judgment; and the defendant thereupon moved the court to dismiss plaintiff's action, upon the ground that he had failed to comply with said amended judgment. This motion was denied, and from the order refusing to dismiss the action this appeal is taken.

It is contended by appellant that the amended judgment makes no reference to costs or jury fees, but requires that the full sum of $583, with interest, be paid. The former judgment, however, was only affected by the order of this court in the particulars specified. It was not reversed, and a new judgment ordered, but was modified in certain specified particulars, none of which referred to the costs of the action in the court below. It is further said by appellant that the original judgment as entered provided for the payment of said half of the jury fee out of the proceeds of the sale of the premises under the mortgage, and not out of the $583 found due to the defendant; in other words, that defendant was to "receive his five hundred and eighty-three dollars, and interest over and above the thirty-six dollars jury fee due to plaintiff." The decree in that respect was awkwardly drawn, but the intention of the court is apparent from the expression as to "one-half the jury fee, now due plaintiff," and the further direction "that out of the proceeds of said sale the commissioner retain his fees, disbursements, and commissions on said sale, and pay to the plaintiff or his attorney out of said proceeds the sum of thirty-six dollars, jury fees, costs of this suit." If it had been the intention of the court that plaintiff should not be repaid by defendant one-half of the jury fee of $72, paid by plaintiff, there was neither necessity nor propriety in saying anything about it in the decree, while the conclusions of law expressly directed that "each party pay one-half of the jury fee." The whole proceeding was an equitable one, and as the question of costs in the court below was not raised upon the former appeal, and as no order was made by this court upon that question, the court below properly found that this disbursement made by the plaintiff in the course of the action should be deducted from the amount found due the defendant, and that plaintiff's property should not be forfeited because of his refusal to pay to defendant money to which he was not equitably entitled.

It is further urged as "a more potent reason why this action should be dismissed," viz. that prior to the tender the plaintiff conveyed the property in question to his son, and, on the same day upon which the conveyance was made, he was adjudged an insolvent debtor upon his own petition. These facts were brought to the attention of the court by affidavit upon the hearing of the motion to dismiss the action. They were entirely immaterial. If the plaintiff was entitled to redeem, and by his tender effected a redemption, the defendant had no interest in the property to be affected by the conveyance; and, if no redemption was effected, the conveyance could not deprive him of the property; or if, as contended, the conveyance was a fraud upon creditors, it could only be so if redemption was in fact made, so that it became plaintiff's property; and in that case the creditors' remedy is not debarred, but is promoted, by the refusal of the court to dismiss the action. My conclusion is that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

BENTON v. BENTON. (Sac. 434.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 21, 1898.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—ACTION FOR SUPPORT—DESERTION—PLEADING—ALLOWANCE—JUDGMENT—FINDINGS—APPEAL.

1. A complaint by a wife, for support, which did not allege that the husband had willfully deserted her, but charged acts of cruelty which compelled her to leave the family dwelling, was sufficient, under Civ. Code, § 98, providing that the departure of one party from the family dwelling, caused by the cruelty of the other, is a desertion by the latter.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 137, providing that, if the husband willfully desert the wife, she may sue for support, without application for divorce, the wife may maintain such action where the husband, by cruelty, compels her to depart from the family dwelling, though she is entitled to a divorce, since Civ. Code, § 98, makes such conduct a desertion by the husband.

3. In an action by a wife for support, the amount to be allowed is an issuable fact, and hence it is erroneous for the court to allow more than is asked in the complaint.

4. Where an appeal is from the judgment, it will be sustained on the presumption that findings were filed or waived; hence an objection that the judgment was not based on the findings filed is unavailable.

5. The findings and decree speak from the date of the filing, and, where both are filed on the same day, it is presumed that the findings were first filed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Elizabeth Benton against T. N. Benton. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Modified.

J. G. Swinnerton, for appellant. Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover permanent support, without divorce. The court awarded plaintiff $150 per month, $100 for attorney's fees, and $50 for costs of action. Defendant appeals on the judgment roll alone.

The court found that plaintiff and defendant intermarried August 11, 1874, and are now husband and wife. Plaintiff has at all times since the marriage "been to defendant a good and dutiful wife, and has ever been regardful of her marital obligations, and has never at any time given defendant any cause or provocation to treat her in any manner other than in kindness." Plaintiff is "without means; is aged, and in delicate health. Defendant is possessed of property of the value of fifty thousand dollars and upwards," and is well able to supply and provide plaintiff with support and maintenance. The court further finds that, for more than a year last past, defendant has treated plaintiff in a cruel and inhuman manner (setting forth the acts of cruelty), and finds "that defendant's course of treatment during said time has been such as was calculated to and did inflict upon her great mental pain, suffering, and anguish, and she became seriously sick, * * * and is now unable, unassisted, to attend to herself or her common wants." Defendant's "course of treatment was such as made it impossible for her to continue to live in the family dwelling house, and she was compelled to and did on or about October 7, 1896, depart from said family dwelling house, and since said time she has lived away from said dwelling house and said defendant." Defendant has during said separation "refused to supply plaintiff with means for her support and maintenance," and she "is aged and infirm, and unable to longer endure the treatment of said defendant," and has not condoned defendant's offenses. The complaint is verified, and was filed October 29, 1896. As conclusions of law, the court found that defendant has been guilty of extreme cruelty towards plaintiff, by which she was compelled to depart from the family dwelling house as above stated; "that defendant deserted plaintiff on or about the 7th day of October, 1896, and ever since has lived separate and apart from plaintiff"; and that plaintiff is entitled to a decree awarding her permanent support. Judgment was accordingly entered.

1. It is contended that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to warrant the decree, because there is no allegation "that defendant willfully deserted the plaintiff. The words 'willful desertion,' 'abandon,' or 'desert,' or equivalent words, do not occur in plaintiff's averments, from first to last. It is not a complaint for willful desertion." A demurrer alleged insufficiency of facts. The complaint sets forth an action upon the ground of extreme cruelty, and avers that "by reason of the said acts of defendant towards her, and by reason of his cruelty towards her, this plaintiff was compelled to depart from the said family dwelling place"; and again, "Defendant's treatment of her has been such as to render it impossible for plaintiff to continue living with defendant." Section 98, Civ. Code, provides as follows: "Departure or absence of one party from the family dwelling place, caused by cruelty or threats of bodily harm, from which danger would reasonably be apprehended from the other, is not desertion by the absent party, but it is desertion by the other party." The complaint stated facts which constituted desertion, under this section. Having done this, it was not necessary, in such an action as this, to give those acts the statutory designation of "willful desertion." The desertion, as a legal conclusion, flowed from the facts constituting desertion.

2. It is claimed that extreme cruelty is not a cause for maintenance without application for divorce. Section 137, Civ. Code, provides, among other things, as follows: "* * * When the husband willfully deserts the wife, she may, without applying for a divorce, maintain in the superior court an action against him for permanent support and maintenance of herself, or of herself and children." The contention is that the section was not intended to give the wife a choice of remedies, but only to give the support while the statutory time is running, entitling the wife to a divorce for desertion; citing Peyre v. Peyre, 79 Cal. 336, 21 Pac. 838; Hardy v. Hardy, 97 Cal. 125, 31 Pac. 906. Defendant's contention finds no support in these cases. In Hardy v. Hardy the facts necessary to the action are thus stated: "If at the time she institutes the action she is living separate and apart from him, it is essential for her to show that it is by reason of his desertion, or that by reason of his cruelty or threats of bodily harm she was forced to leave the family dwelling place." Defendant's construction would require us to ignore the very terms of the statute which gives the action "without applying for a divorce." It would force the wife to ask for a judicial separation, whereas the law encourages reconciliation, and the husband and wife should be allowed to indulge the hope of its realization. Plaintiff is not seeking support on the ground of defendant's cruelty, but because through his cruelty she has been compelled to dwell apart from him. The statute gives the relief for desertion unaccompanied by cruelty, and it also gives the relief where the wife is compelled to depart from the dwelling place, caused by the cruelty of the husband, because the statute makes such conduct on his part desertion. Civ. Code, § 98.

3. It is claimed that the findings do not support the judgment, because plaintiff asked for only $100 per month, and the court gave her $150 per month. Defendant claims that his denial, being literal (the pleadings were verified), was in effect, an admission of the averment, and there was therefore no issue upon the fact, and no finding was necessary, and, as the finding was against the admission, it was erroneous; citing Code Civ.

Proc. § 580. It was held in Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 468, that, where there is no issue tendered as to a fact, any finding, whether it agrees or disagrees with the fact alleged, is nugatory, and that no presumption will be indulged that evidence was introduced to contradict the admission. See, also, Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278; Silvey v. Neary, 59 Cal. 97. The general rule is that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover more than his complaint demands, and we do not perceive that this case is exempt from its application. Respondent claims that the amount to be allowed was not an issuable fact, but rested in the discretion of the court. We think it was an important issuable fact, and was tendered as an issue by the complaint. In an action for divorce, where the complaint alleged that a certain sum was a reasonable amount to be allowed as counsel fees for the prosecution of the suit, it was held that the value of these services was no part of the plaintiff's cause of action, and need not have been named in her complaint; her estimate was only the opinion held by her when the action was commenced, which was subject to be changed by the development of subsequent circumstances. Rose v. Rose, 109 Cal. 544, 42 Pac. 452; citing Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 234, 39 Pac. 758, where in an action to foreclose a lien, the court gave an amount as attorney's fees larger than was asked for in the complaint. It was held not to be an essential averment, and therefore not conclusive, and that the court was authorized to exercise its discretion. In actions for divorce, with application for alimony or allowance for support pendente lite, the cause of action is divorce, and the support of the wife pending suit is an incident. And so, in the case of foreclosing a lien, the attorney's fees to be allowed are no necessary part of the cause of action. Where, however, the action is for support, without divorce, it seems to us that, although a matter largely within the discretion of the court, over which he retains subsequent control, and may increase or diminish the allowance, still the amount to be allowed becomes an important, and, we think, an issuable fact. See Kerry v. Supply Co. (Cal.) 54 Pac. 262 (opinion Aug. 26, 1898).

4. It is claimed as error that the judgment was entered before the trial was concluded. The transcript shows that the findings were signed by the judge, and were marked: "Dated January 5, 1897. Filed January 6, 1897." The decree was signed by the judge, and was marked: "Dated January 5, 1897. Filed January 6, 1897." The decree begins with the usual statement, "The court having made and filed herein its written findings," etc., and is dated January 5th. The point made is that the judgment imports absolute verity, and that, as the findings shown in the transcript were not filed until January 6th, they cannot be the findings referred to in the judgment, and therefore the judgment is without findings, and is destitute of vitality. The findings and judgment were signed of the same date, and were filed of the same date. There is nothing in this point. Where the appeal is from the judgment, it will be sustained, upon the presumption that findings had been filed or waived. Van Court v. Winterson, 61 Cal. 615. Furthermore, the findings and the decree speak from the date of the filing, and where they are filed on the same day it will be presumed that the findings were first filed. The judgment should be so modified as to make the amount of the allowance for support to be $100 per month, and otherwise to stand affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is modified so as to make the allowance for support the sum of $100 per month, and otherwise it is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KNOTT. (Cr. 393.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1898.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSANITY—SUBMISSION OF ISSUE—APPEAL—REVIEW—MURDER—EVIDENCE.

1. Where the only evidence of accused's insanity was an affidavit of his attorneys that, during two months last passed, they had frequently seen him, and that they were informed and believed he was insane, no question of his insanity having been raised during the trial, a refusal after conviction to submit a special issue of his insanity will not be disturbed, under Pen. Code, § 1201, providing for a trial of the issue of accused's insanity if, in the opinion of the court, there is a reasonable ground to believe him insane.

2. An instruction that, if the killing was with malice aforethought and by means of lying in wait, it was murder in the first degree, and that, irrespective of this, if the killing was unlawful and with malice aforethought, it would be murder in the first or second degree, according to the enormity of the act in view of the circumstances surrounding it, is not erroneous as assuming that there may be murder in the first degree, irrespective of that declared by statute.

3. On an issue whether the killing was by lying in wait, evidence that deceased was in the habit of going alone at night along the street on which he was killed is admissible, without showing that accused had knowledge thereof; its weight being for the jury.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county.

A. L. Knott was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from a judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and from an order denying a motion for suspension of judgment pending an inquiry as to his insanity, he appeals. Affirmed.

Lewis Morris and Augustus Tilden, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and judgment was rendered against him imposing the penalty of death. He appeals from the judgment, from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and from an order denying his motion for suspension of judgment pending an inquiry as to his insanity.

1. It is not necessary to determine whether or not the ruling of the court upon the motion to suspend the judgment on account of insanity can be inquired into on this appeal; for, if that question could be reviewed here, there is no reason for disturbing the ruling of the court on that subject. It appears that during the trial of the cause no point was made as to the insanity of the appellant, and no evidence introduced upon that subject. But a few days afterwards, when the appellant appeared for judgment, a motion to suspend the judgment was made, which motion was based entirely upon a short affidavit of his two attorneys, in which affidavit it was stated that the affiants were "informed and believe, and upon such information and belief allege, that the said A. L. Knott was not of sound mind." And that "during two months last past" they had frequently seen and talked with the appellant, and from his conversations and actions "believe and allege that he is insane," and that judgment should be suspended upon an inquisition, etc. Section 1201 of the Penal Code, under which this motion was made, provides that, "if in the opinion of the court there is reasonable ground for believing him to be insane, the question of insanity must be tried," etc. In denying the motion, the court declared "that no doubt had arisen in the mind of the court as to the sanity of the defendant"; and, under the circumstances of the case, we do not think that the slight evidence offered would warrant us in disturbing the conclusion at which the learned judge of the court below arrived.

2. The appellant contends that the case should be reversed because the court gave the following instructions: "As I have stated to you already, if Knott unlawfully took the life of Knauer with malice aforethought, and by means of 'lying in wait,' he is guilty of murder in the first degree, for it is so declared by the statute. Irrespective of this, if he took the life of Joseph Knauer,—took it unlawfully and with malice aforethought,—Knott is guilty of murder of the first degree, or murder in the second degree, according to the enormity of the act, and in view of all the circumstances under which Knauer's life was taken. Such unlawful killing with malice aforethought is murder." Counsel for appellant contends that this instruction assumes that there may be murder of the first degree "irrespective" of murder declared by the statute. But that view of the instruction is clearly incorrect. The prosecution contended that appellant took the life of the deceased by means of "lying in wait"; and the instruction clearly means that, irrespective of the question of lying in wait, he would be guilty of murder in the first degree if certain other circumstances existed. The latter part of this instruction is, however, one not to be approved as a proper addition to a correct statement of the distinction between murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree; but we do not see anything in it that could be understood in any sense prejudicial to the appellant. If the words "according to the enormity of the act" were not in the instruction, it would be colorless and of no importance at all; and we do not see how the words just quoted could possibly have injured the appellant. The instruction possibly might have had some little importance if it had stood alone; but, before it was given, the court had very fully and clearly and correctly defined murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree, and very explicitly stated the distinction between them. So that, while we cannot approve the instruction excepted to, we do not think it affords any ground for a reversal of the judgment. None of the cases cited by the appellant upon this question are in point.

3. The deceased was killed at night while going along a street called "Stevenson Street"; and it is contended that the court erred in allowing evidence to the point that deceased was in the habit of traveling that street alone at night after the close of his business, without showing that the defendant had knowledge of that habit. Evidence that the deceased was in the habit of traveling that street as aforesaid was proper evidence as tending to support the claim of the prosecution that he was killed by means of lying in wait; and, while that evidence would be weakened by the absence of proof that the appellant knew that fact, still it was not erroneous to admit proof of the fact, its weight and importance to be determined by the jury.

4. It is contended that the court erroneously allowed the introduction of the dying declaration of the deceased. We do not deem it necessary to state here the facts under which the declaration was made. It is sufficient to say here that, in our opinion, the admission of the declaration in evidence was clearly correct.

5. It is contended here that the evidence does not support the verdict. We think, however, that the evidence was legally sufficient to warrant the jury in finding the verdict which they rendered; and it would be a useless task to restate the evidence here. The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

HIGGINS v. CALIFORNIA PETROLEUM & ASPHALT CO. et al. (L. A. 431.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1898.)

IDENTITY OF NEW AND OLD CORPORATIONS—FRAUD.

A corporation held a lease under which it mined asphalt on a royalty basis. One individual held substantially all of its stock. A new corporation, with the same object, officers, and place of business, was organized, and substantially all its stock was issued to the principal stockholder of the old one, the sole consideration being a debt which the old corporation owed him. He afterwards sold some of his stock, but the old corporation received no part of the consideration. The old corporation transferred its lands and all of its business and assets, with the exception of the mining lease, to the new corporation, and practically went out of business. Held, that the new company was only the old one under another name, and hence was liable on the mining lease for royalties subsequently accruing; the transfer being fraudulent as to the lessor.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

Action by P. C. Higgins against the California Petroleum & Asphalt Company and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Canfield & Starbuck, for appellants. W. S. Day, S. J. Parsons, and E. M. Selby, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action by one of the lessors in a lease of certain asphalt mines to recover royalties reserved in the lease. The facts as to the lease, and the conveyance by Mary A. Ashley, the other lessor, to the California Petroleum & Asphalt Company of a portion of the leased premises, are set out in the case of Higgins v. Asphalt Co., 109 Cal. 304, 41 Pac. 1087, and need not be here repeated. After the decision of that case, the defendant therein conveyed to the Alcatraz Asphalt Company, a corporation (also made a defendant in this case), the property so conveyed to it by Mary A. Ashley. Since that conveyance, the latter corporation has mined and taken from the premises so conveyed to it large quantities of bituminous rock, for which royalties are claimed by the plaintiff. Prior to that conveyance, the former company had also mined and taken from the same premises other bituminous rock, for which the plaintiff also claims royalties. The plaintiff had judgment against the former company for the royalties accruing prior to the transfer to the latter company, and against both companies for those accruing after that transfer. From the latter portion of the judgment, both companies have appealed, but no appeal has been taken from the former portion.

The appellants contend that the latter company, being the owner of the land, and not being an assignee of the lease, is not liable on the covenants of the lease, and that the former company had done no mining on the land after the transfer, and therefore cannot be held liable for any royalties subsequently accruing. The lease in question contains no covenants as between the lessors, and therefore either of them, or the grantee of either of them, might mine bituminous rock on his portion of the leased premises without incurring any liability to the other lessor. When Mary A. Ashley conveyed her land to the lessee, this right fell into conveyance, by cause the lessee, as decided in the case referred to, was not by that conveyance absolved from its covenant to Higgins; but upon the conveyance by it to a third person, not an assignee of the lease, this right would revive in favor of its grantee; and such grantee would not be liable to Higgins for any mining it might do on that portion of the land. If this were the whole case, the judgment would therefore be erroneous.

But the court below found, in substance, that the California Petroleum & Asphalt Company and the Alcatraz Asphalt Company (its alleged grantee) are identical, and that the mining operations conducted by the latter company on this land were in reality conducted by the former company. On this ground the respondent contends that both companies are liable for the royalties in question. We think that there was evidence to sustain this finding. It shows that the new company was substantially a reorganization of the old one. In the old company there was only one real stockholder, and all of the stock issued by the new company was issued to him, the sole consideration being a debt which the old company owed him. It is true that shortly afterwards he transferred some of his stock to some Eastern capitalists, and had this in view when the new company was formed. But we cannot agree with appellants that this fact affects the case. The old company received no part of the consideration for that transfer. The objects of the two corporations were substantially the same. Each had the same officers and the same place of business, and the old corporation conveyed to the new one substantially all of its property, and practically went out of business upon making that transfer. The evidence, moreover, strongly suggests, if it does not establish, that the main and perhaps the sole purpose of this organization was to evade the obligations of this lease. While transferring to the new company its land and all of the business and assets, it retained the lease, which could be of no avail in its hands. It is a legitimate inference that this was done purposely, and, if so, the only possible object would be to prevent Higgins from collecting royalties. The old company was to continue to be the lessee, but was to do no mining; while it was to permit the new company, its alter ego, to mine without any responsibility therefor. We therefore think that the court below was justified in holding that the new company was only the old one under another name; and, that being so, it is plain that their responsibility to Higgins was not impaired by this merely nominal transfer. Railroad Co. v. Bee, 48 Cal. 398; Blanc v. Mining Co., 95 Cal. 524, 30 Pac. 765. It is true that the court did not find that there was any actual fraud in the transaction; but we think that such a transfer, as against the holder of an existing obligation, is constructively fraudulent, as a matter of law. The parties may have supposed, and no doubt did suppose, that the transaction was a legal and valid one; but, in so acting, they acted at their peril. The portion of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 537, OF YOLO COUNTY v. BURGER et al. (Sac. 479.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 26, 1898.)

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP LANDS—BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—JURISDICTION—FINDINGS—WITNESSES—OPINION EVIDENCE—ASSESSMENTS.

1. A petition to the board of supervisors for the organization of a district for the reclamation of lands must be signed by owners of one-half the acreage in the district, to give such board jurisdiction.

2. Proof of the existence of a reclamation district as a de facto corporation does not entitle it to proceed to assess an owner of land within such district without a hearing on notice of the petition to create the district.

3. The board of supervisors is authorized to determine whether a petition for the organization of a reclamation district is sufficiently signed, and their finding is conclusive.

4. On a proceeding to determine whether property in a reclamation district was properly assessed, it is incompetent to ask witnesses their opinion as to whether the assessments made were in proportion to the benefits.

5. Commissioners appointed to assess charges for the reclamation of lands in a district, in arriving at each owner's proportionate share, added the estimated value of an old levee bordering the district to the estimated cost of the new work, and, using the aggregate as a basis of calculation, ascertained what each owner should pay according to the number of acres he owned, crediting him with the estimated value of the portion of the levee on his land. Held, that the assessment was improper, as each owner's land should have been assessed in proportion to the benefits resulting from the work.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Action by reclamation district No. 537, of Yolo county, a corporation, against A. H. Burger and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order refusing a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

F. E. Baker, for appellants. Hall & Dunn, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This suit is by a reclamation district to collect an assessment. The appeal is from the judgment and a refusal of a new trial. It is denied that the district was duly organized, and that the assessment was in proportion to benefits. The alleged defect in organization is that the petition was not signed by the owners of one-half of the acreage of the district. After the petition had been presented and had been published, the board organized the district excluding therefrom about 300 acres, which was included in the district as described in the petition. It is admitted that the petition does contain the signatures of the owners of one-half of the land in the district, as reformed. It is contended that the board of supervisors cannot thus give themselves jurisdiction by forming a new district in which a majority of acreage would be represented on the petition. This position is certainly sound. A petition with the requisite number of signatures must be presented before the board can act in the matter at all.

The proceeding results in putting a burden upon property against the will of the owners, and the requirements as to proceedings of that character cannot be evaded by calling the governmental agency through which the proceeding is conducted a "corporation." As remarked in People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016, the proceeding greatly resembles those in which property is assessed for local improvements in proportion to benefits; and I see no reason why the same rules as to essential requirements should not apply. The board of supervisors is required to inquire and determine whether the petition is sufficiently signed. So far as this depends upon a fact to be determined, their conclusion may be final as an adjudication, but the question is not whether the district has so acted as to constitute a corporation de facto. Reclamation Dist. No. 531 v. Phillips, 108 Cal. 306, 39 Pac. 630, and 41 Pac. 335. If, upon due notice and a petition sufficient in form, the parties have been afforded an opportunity to be heard before a competent tribunal, they have had due process, according to the law of the land, and are concluded. They cannot be deprived of their property without such hearing, or opportunity to be heard, by proof of the existence of a corporation de facto. There must have been, in fact, a substantial compliance with the law.

Plaintiff does not concede that the petition as presented was defective, or that it did not have the required number of signers. The number of acres represented by each signer is stated in the petition, and one of the petitioners signs as administratrix. Deducting the amount represented by this signer, there would not be enough land represented to give the board jurisdiction. It is conceded that an administrator would not be a competent petitioner under the law, but the petition does not show that the person so signing was administratrix of any estate. The petition only shows that the word was affixed to her signature. 'This is ambiguous, and no proof of the real fact was offered at the trial, and, if offered, would not have been competent. The question was, after all, one of fact, upon which the determination of the board has been held conclusive.

It was not competent to ask witnesses for their opinions upon the precise issue being tried before the court, as to whether the assessment, as made, constituted a charge upon each tract in proportion to benefits. But, if such questions were allowable, there can be no doubt as to the right of the opposing party, on cross-examination, to ask upon what the opinion was based. These rulings, though erroneous, are not of supreme importance.

The important question in the case has reference to the method adopted in making the assessment. It is contended that by it the district was assessed to pay for an old levee which was used as a part of the plan of reclamation, and that, in the nature of things, it could not result in a charge upon each tract in proportion to benefits. The district fronts upon the Sacramento river, along which is an old levee, which is used as a county road. The district is about three-eighths of a mile wide, and slopes back from the river, so that the rear portion is some seven or eight feet lower than the front. Protected by the old levee, the higher land along the river can ordinarily be cultivated. Each tract fronts on the river, and most of them extend also to the rear boundary. The method pursued by the commissioners is set out in finding 3, which reads as follows: "That all the allegations of the third paragraph or subdivision of the complaint are true, but in relation to the allegation therein set forth 'that the commissioners assessed against each tract of land in said district a charge proportionate to the whole expense, and to the benefits which would result to each tract from the work of reclamation,' the court further finds that, at the time the engineer appointed by the board of trustees of said district planned, located, and reported the works necessary to effect a reclamation of the lands in said district, there was a levee along the river in front of the lands in said district. The commissioners, in making their view, considered the old levee in place as a part of the work necessary to reclaim all the lands in the district, and estimated its value at $31,718.60, which, with the cost of the new work, estimated at $55,000, aggregated the total sum of $86,718.60, the cost of the work necessary for the reclamation of all the land in said district if there had been no front levee. To ascertain the charge which should be assessed against the land of each landowner, the whole number of acres within the line of the proposed levees within the district was divided into $86,718.60, to find the rate per acre, by which rate the number of acres belonging to each landowner within the lines of the proposed levees was multiplied. And the result in each case was assumed by the commissioners as the amount he ought to pay if no front levees were in place, and if it was necessary to raise the entire sum of $86,718.60. From the result so obtained, in each case, was deducted the value of the old levee in place in front of each owner's land; and the balance was assessed by said commissioners against his tract of land as the proper proportion which he should pay of $55,000, cost of new work and incidental expenses; and the commissioners did not segregate the respective tracts of land into high land, middle class land, and low land, and assess different amounts upon each class, but assessed each tract described in the petition as a whole." Apparently by this method the district was assessed and was made to pay for the value of the old levee, and each landowner was credited with the estimated value of that portion which was on his land. Of course, the result was that those who had the most levee received the greater credit, and those who had least had to pay most; that is, those who did not have an average share of the old levee were forced to pay that much more of the cost of reclamation, while those who had the levee paid just that much less towards the cost of reclamation.

A weak attempt is made to show that this was a proper method of determining the relative benefits which the different tracts would receive from the proposed reclamation. There is certainly no natural relation between the number of cubic yards of old levee found on a tract and the amount of benefit that land would receive from the reclamation. A break in the levee at any point would flood the whole district, and work on any part of the levee was of as much benefit to any other landowner as to him upon whose land the work was done. To levy and collect an assessment upon the district for the value of the old levee was to make the district pay for it. To credit the landowners with the value of the portion of the levee on their land at  $12\frac{1}{2}$  cents per cubic yard—as was done—was to pay such landowners for it.

But it is said that the result was to give each tract the precise advantage it would be entitled to, from the fact that the high lands along the river received less benefit from the reclamation than the back lands. The commissioners did not determine, nor did the engineer of the district, what were so-called "high lands" or "low lands." The phrase "high land" is applied to the narrow strip along the river which can sometimes be cultivated, and it is found that the amount on each tract is in proportion to its frontage. A glance at the map furnished, which accords with the calculations in the record, will show that this proposition will not hold as to any two tracts in the district. Tracts 6, 7, 8, and 9 run across the district from the river to the back lines, and are bounded by parallel and rectangular lines. Under the finding, they must contain precisely the same proportionate amount of high and low lands. No two are assessed alike, and between the contiguous tracts 7 and 8 there is a difference in the assessment of over $8 per acre. The average was $18.11. Tract 5, as compared with tract 11, has, at least, three times as much high land (under the finding), in proportion to its area, as tract 11 has. It is assessed at $13.08, and tract 11 at $8.52, per acre. This condition of things would be reversed if respondent's contention were good. Under the method pursued, tract 1 was entitled to an allowance; that is, its levee, which the district bought, more than paid for its share of the cost of reclamation. The commissioners thought they were not authorized to make an allowance, and must assess all the land. So, they charged tract 1 and tract 2 five cents per acre each. But all this, and as much more, would hardly make the fact more obvious than it is from a mere reading of the finding.

Appellant's assessment is a specimen of all. Condensed it is as follows: Land benefited, 151.57 acres; total assessment which would have been necessary had there been no front levee, \$4,819.93; credit allowed for front levee at  $12\frac{1}{2}$  cents per cubic yard, \$1,147; net assessment, \$3,672.03. What a wonderful coincidence it would have been if there could have been found any relation between the value of the old levee, calculated at  $12\frac{1}{2}$  cents per cubic yard, and the relative amount of benefits received by that tract by the proposed reclamation! It may be that the owners of this old levee, if it was used in the reclamation, had some equity to be compensated for it. No such question is before us. If it was needed, and was a proper thing to be paid for, the trustees of the district could buy it, and its cost would constitute a portion of the expense of reclamation, and should have been included in the estimate of the cost of reclamation; but the commissioners have no concern with such a matter as that. Their function is simply and only, as assessors, to distribute the amount of the estimate for which the assessment was ordered upon the different tracts of land in proportion to the benefits which will result from the work. They are to take things as they are, and not as they were at some former period. When they assume to act as a legislature or a court of equity, they usurp functions which do not belong to them. The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

In re SLADE'S ESTATE. (Sac. 477.)

EXEMPTIONS—FARMING UTENSILS—VALUE—ADMINISTRATION—SETTING APART EXEMPT PROPERTY—APPEAL—REVERSAL.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 690, exempting farming utensils and implements of husbandry, is not confined to the tools used by the debtor in any one branch of farming, but exempts all the necessary tools used by a debtor engaged in diversified farming.

2. The power of the court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1465, on return of the inventory, or at a subsequent time in the administration, to set apart exempt property for the use of the surviving spouse, on her petition therefor, is not affected by the fact that there is money of the estate that could be used, and that the executor is willing to pay the survivor for her support, under section 1466, providing that, if the amount set apart be insufficient for the support of the family, the court must make a reasonable allowance out of the estate to properly maintain them during the settlement of the estate.

3. Since the court has jurisdiction to set apart exempt property of an estate for the use of the surviving spouse, on her petition, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1465, it is immaterial whether the relief was granted under an erroneous sense of compulsion, or in the exercise of a sound discretion.

4. Where the transcript of the record shows no limitation of the purpose for which a document was introduced in evidence, it is presumed that it was introduced for all legitimate purposes.

5. Where farm implements have been used, the cost of replacing them with new implements furnishes no measure of their value.

6. A finding that the farming utensils of a debtor are exempt is equivalent to a finding that their value is not in excess of the limit prescribed by St. 1897, p. 179, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 690.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

In the matter of the estate of V. Slade, deceased, a petition was filed by the widow to set apart personal property. From an order granting the relief prayed for, the executor appeals. Affirmed.

R. Clark and W. H. Grant, for appellant. Phil. Bouton and C. W. Thomas, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Petition by the widow of deceased to set apart personal property. The executor named in the will of deceased, who was also his son, and one of the devisees of the will, opposed the petition. The court made the order prayed for, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

Deceased left an estate worth about $30,000, consisting of 300 acres of land in one body. One hundred and fifty acres were devoted to growing orchard fruits and grapes, and about 10 acres to garden produce; the balance being used to grow hay. The farm was equipped with implements appropriate for, and which were used in, operating the entire farm. By his will, deceased devised to his wife about 90 acres, including the dwelling house of the family, and about 40 acres of the orchard and vineyard lands; and to his children and grandchildren he gave the residue of his property, without making any specific devise of the personal property. The estate was but little in debt, and there was money out of which an allowance could have been provided without disposing of the personal property. The court made its decree setting apart the property in question to the widow as property exempt from execution. Appellant, in his answer, claims that deceased carried on three distinct occupations, to wit, farming or agriculture, fruit growing or horticulture, and grape growing or viticulture, and that petitioner must elect to take under some one of these occupations, and no more; that this property is not necessary for her support, but that she is entitled to receive a full support from the estate, and appellant is willing to pay her therefrom (of which there is sufficient) for such support; that section 690, Code Civ. Proc., makes no provision for exempting the tools, implements, and machinery of a horticulturist or viticulturist, and none such are exempt; that only the household and kitchen furniture in use in the dwelling house is exempt, and this much appellant consents may be set apart to petitioner.

1. Section 690, Code Civ. Proc., is as follows: "The following property is exempt from execution, except as herein otherwise specially provided: * * * (3) The farming utensils or implements of husbandry of the judgment debtor; also two oxen or two horses or two mules, and their harness, one cart or wagon;" and some other articles not here involved. We do not think that, where a person engages in diversified farming, the law exempts only such of his farming utensils or implements as he may use in some one of the separate branches of his farming operations. Webster defines a "farmer" to be "one who is devoted to the tillage of the soil; an agriculturist; a husbandman"; and "farming" he defines to mean "the business of cultivating land." He defines "husbandry" to mean "the business of a farmer, comprehending the various branches of agriculture." The followers of this ancient and honorable occupation may call themselves "horticulturists," or "viticulturists," or "gardeners," but they are farmers and their occupation is that of farming, as contemplated by the statute. The law does not deal with classes of husbandry, nor does it limit the exemptions to one particular class of husbandry out of many that may be followed by the debtor. Embraced in the list of articles are a great many whose use is peculiar to the particular branch of farming carried on by deceased. But we do not understand appellant to deny that they were all used, and were necessary for use, in the several branches of agriculture carried on by deceased; and, as appellant makes no point as to any one article, we shall not undertake to examine the list to ascertain whether any particular utensil or implement is not exempt.

2. Appellant contends that the court was not compelled to set apart this property; that the will devised it to other heirs at law; that there was no necessity for setting it apart to the widow, as there was money of the estate that could have been used, and the executor was willing to pay her for her support; that the trial judge regarded the provisions of section 1465, Code Civ. Proc., as mandatory, leaving him no discretion; and if he did not so regard the section, but exercised his discretion, then it was an abuse of discretion, and should be corrected. When a person dies, leaving a widow or minor children, section 1464, Id., gives them the right to remain in possession of certain property, and also a reasonable provision for their support, until letters are granted and the inventory is returned. "Upon the return of the inventory, or at any subsequent time during the administration, the court may, on its own motion, or on petition therefor, set apart for the use of the surviving husband or wife * * * all the property exempt from execution, including the homestead selected," etc. Id. § 1465. Section 1466, Id., provides: "If the amount set apart be insufficient for the support of the widow and children, or either, the court or judge thereof must make such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family, according to their circumstances, during the progress of the settlement of the estate," etc. Whether, under these sections, it is the duty of the court to make provision for the support of the family in the order pointed out by these sections, or whether the court must, when petitioned to do so, set apart the exempt property, or whether such a petition may be refused, and provision be made under section 1466, are questions we do not think it necessary to decide. The court had the petition before it, and had jurisdiction to grant the prayer under section 1465, and it exercised that jurisdiction favorably to the petitioner. Whether it did so under a sense of compulsion, or in the exercise of a sound discretion, is immaterial, as it had jurisdiction over the subject-matter. The findings, we think, support the decree, and we are only to inquire whether the evidence justifies the findings. It is claimed that no necessity was shown for setting apart this personal property to the widow, and that the court erred in not finding upon contestant's answer, in which it is alleged that there are ample funds out of which the widow may be supported, and that the other devisees desired to retain these implements in kind. It appeared that the widow was to take by the will 46 acres of the orchard and vineyard land; and, although no direct evidence was offered that she needed this personal property, there was quite as much as there was to support the desire of the other devisees to retain it. The court had full power to grant the petition, and we find nothing in the record to warrant the claim that it abused its discretion. The dire consequences pointed out by counsel for appellant, should the decree stand, need not necessarily ensue, because, should the widow hereafter apply for an allowance under section 1466, the court, it must be presumed, will act with due regard to any previous order made for her support, and the subsequent condition of the estate.

3. It is further claimed that the court erred because the decree gave the widow property in value greater than $1,000. Deceased died May 12, 1897. It does not appear when letters were issued, but an inventory was returned July 10, 1897, and immediately thereafter respondent petitioned for the property. The hearing was continued to September 13, 1897, to which date, but no longer, an allowance of $40 per month was ordered. Section 690, Code Civ. Proc., was amended March 27, 1897, and the amendment took effect 60 days thereafter (St. 1897, p. 179), limiting the value of exempt implements of husbandry to $1,000. It is claimed that the law in force when the petition was filed, and not the law when the deceased died, must control. The inventory was admitted without objection, and shows that the implements of husbandry claimed were of less value than $1,000, although there was other of the property in question, which, together with the implements, was of an aggregate value greater than $1,000. Appellant claims that the inventory was offered for the limited purpose of showing what property belonged to the estate. But the transcript shows no such limitation, and we must presume that it was introduced for all legitimate purposes. A witness for contestant testified that "the property sought to be set aside could not be replaced for less than two thousand seven hundred or three thousand dollars." There was no other evidence as to values. We think the inventory values furnished some evidence, and that there was nothing in appellant's evidence necessarily disputing the correctness of the inventory values. To replace this personal property with new implements might cost $3,000, but that furnishes no measure of value for implements which have been in use. There is evidence sufficient to support the decree. It was not prejudicial error to omit making a separate finding as to the value of the property. The court found that the property was exempt at the death of deceased, and is still exempt. If the court regarded the law in force as it stood at the death of deceased, the value of the property was immaterial. If the court held the amended statute to be in force, the finding that the property is still exempt, we think, is equivalent to a finding that the property did not exceed the statutory limit; and, as the evidence sustains such finding, the question as to which statute should be applied does not therefore necessarily arise, and is not decided. It was not error not to find as to appellant's answer that there were funds sufficient with which to support the widow. Conceding this to be true, the court had the power to exercise its discretion, and give the property asked for under section 1465. There was no petition for an allowance under section 1466, and the alternative of substituting money for the property was not presented. The failure to find as to the sufficiency of the funds could not show error as to an order which did not involve such funds. The order and decree should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order and decree are affirmed.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF MADERA v. REDFIELD et al. (Sac. 451.)<sup>1</sup>

APPEAL AND ERROR — EXCEPTIONS — FINDINGS OF FACT.

1. A bill of exceptions to a decision, containing no specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 648, cannot be considered.

2. Where the ultimate facts are found by the court, though they are contradictory of probative facts, whether in the findings or in the bill of exceptions, they control.

3. Where it is competent for the parties to treat a question under their pleadings as an issue, and the court finds on such issue, it must be presumed that it was so treated at the trial, and that the evidence sustained the findings.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Madera county.

Bill by the Commercial Bank of Madera against O. T. Redfield and others. From a decree for plaintiff as to some of the defendants, but against it as to others, it appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Hargrove, for appellant. Bradley & Farnsworth and Evarts & Ewing, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure of mortgage on real property. It appears from the findings that the promissory note and mortgage, the subject of the action, were made by defendants O. T. and Phebe Redfield to defendant Roberts, and by Roberts was assigned to plaintiff before the maturity of the note, with written guaranty of payment at maturity indorsed thereon. Included in the mortgage, with other lots, was lot 14, block 60, town of Madera. November 11, 1893, the Redfields (mortgagors) sold this lot to defendant Lazar Popovich, who promised the Redfields that he would pay the note and mortgage. June 28, 1894, Lazar Popovich conveyed said lot (consideration love and affection) to his wife, defendant Viola Popovich; the deed reading, "Subject to the mortgages on the same to the amount of three thousand and eighty-six dollars, and interest on the same." The finding is that "she did not at that time or at any other time promise said plaintiff, Roberts, Lazar Popovich, or the Redfields that she would pay or discharge said note, or any part thereof." December 8, 1894, said Viola and Lazar Popovich conveyed a half interest in the lot to defendant Milan Vucovich, "subject to said mortgage." On or about May 24, 1895, said Milan "did verbally (and not otherwise) promise said plaintiff that he, said Milan Vucovich, would pay to plaintiff all sums due and to become due on said promissory note and mortgage; but said promise was without any consideration." On May 22, 1895, said Viola and Lazar conveyed to defendant Mitchell G. Vucovich the remaining half interest in said lot, subject to said mortgage, who entered into possession thereof. On May 24, 1895, Mitchell made a promise similar to that of said Milan Vucovich. Milan and Mitchell Vucovich composed the firm of Vucovich Bros., and the same persons and defendant Marco Vucovich composed the firm of Vucovich Bros. & Co.; and the finding is that neither the partnership of Vucovich Bros. & Co., nor any member thereof, promised to pay said note and mortgage. As conclusions of law, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the amount due against the Redfields and Lazar Popovich, and also judgment for any deficiency after sale of the premises; that said defendants Milan, Marco, and Mitchell Vucovich, Vucovich Bros., Vucovich Bros. & Co., and Viola Popovich are not, nor is either of them, indebted to plaintiff, nor is plaintiff entitled to deficiency judgment against them or either of them. Decree was accordingly entered, from which plaintiff appeals,—especially from that part carrying out the conclusion of law as to the defendants last above mentioned. The appeal is presented by bill of exceptions.

1. Respondents make the point that the bill of exceptions contains no specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision, and cannot be considered, except as to two alleged errors of law occurring at the trial. The point is well taken, and is not controverted by appellant in its reply brief. Code Civ. Proc. § 648. We have examined the only two exceptions taken to rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence, and do not find it necessary to pass upon them; for it seems that the facts sought to be elicited by plaintiff were brought out later, and the court made a finding as to them. The plaintiff, as to these two errors, says in its brief, "The judge of the trial court examined the witness Cox, and showed the forbearance intended by the questions specified in the exceptions." The appeal therefore is here, in effect, on the judgment roll alone; and the only question we can consider is whether the judgment is supported by the findings.

2. It is difficult to follow the argument of counsel for plaintiff in his contention that the findings do not support the judgment, because he refers frequently to the evidence set forth in the bill of exceptions, which we are forbidden to consider. Still another embarrassment presents itself in the findings, as they contain some of the probative or evidentiary facts as well as the ultimate facts, and plaintiff refers to these probative facts. However much these probative facts might tend to establish plaintiff's contention, we cannot assume that they are the only facts upon the particular matter. For example, finding 8 contains certain letters addressed to plaintiff,—one, signed "Vucovich Bros., per M. G. V.," inclosing some interest money to plaintiff; another, signed in the same manner, stating that "they" (who are meant by "they" does not clearly appear from the letters) would endeavor to meet the interest as soon as possible. These letters are no more appropriate as findings of fact than would be the testimony and statements of a particular witness. Evidentiary facts belong in the statement or bill of exceptions, but have no place in the findings; and unless the findings themselves show these probative facts to be the only facts proven, from which alone the court finds the ultimate fact deducible from them, they must be disregarded, and cannot be looked to in this present case any more than evidentiary facts found in the bill of exceptions. "The rule has been long settled that, when the ultimate fact is found, no finding of probative facts, which may tend to establish that the ultimate fact was found against the evidence, can overcome the finding of the ultimate fact." Gill v. Driver, 90 Cal. 72, 27 Pac. 64, citing Smith v. Acker, 52 Cal. 217; Pico v. Cuyas, 47 Cal. 174.

No question is raised as to the correctness of the findings and judgment as to the liability of defendants the Redfields and Lazar Popovich for any deficiency there may be after sale of the premises. The finding as to Viola Popovich and as to the co-partnership firms named as defendants is that neither of them ever promised to pay the note and mortgage, or any part thereof. Appellant does not seriously contend that Milan and Mitchell Vucovich, who now own the property charged with the mortgage lien, assumed the payment of the mortgage debt by the terms of their deeds; for they took the land, as the deeds declare, "subject to the mortgage," and this phrase carries with it no assumption of the debt. Jones, Mortg. § 748; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1205. But the claim is that, by their words and their acts subsequent to their purchase, they promised plaintiff to pay the mortgage debt. The ultimate facts as found by the court as to both these defendants are in the same language, as follows: "That after the purchase of said property, to wit, on or about the 24th day of May, 1895, said * * * did, at the town of Madera, * * * verbally (and not otherwise) promise said plaintiff that he * * * would pay to plaintiff all sums due and to become due on said promissory note and mortgage, but such promise was made without any consideration whatever." The court then finds that Mitchell V. Vucovich wrote the letters referred to above (one dated May 27, 1895, and the other August 13, 1895), and the finding concludes as follows: "That said plaintiff did forbear and delay foreclosure proceedings upon said note and mortgage from the 24th of May, 1895, up to the commencement of this action, December 12, 1896; but such forbearance was purely voluntary on the part of the plaintiff, and was without any agreement whatever between the parties, and wholly without consideration." There is no finding that the forbearance was based upon any promise to pay, verbal or otherwise, nor that it was in consideration of any promise contained in these letters. The verbal promise found by the court contains no condition looking to forbearance, but was made without any consideration, as the court finds. The court found that the forbearance was purely voluntary, and without any agreement between the parties, as well as wholly without consideration. We do not see how we can look beyond these ultimate facts found by the court. If they are contradictory of or inconsistent with the letters or other probative facts, whether set out in the findings or in the bill of exceptions, the ultimate facts found must control for the reasons already stated.

Appellant claims that the finding that the promise was without consideration was outside any issue in the case, and was reversible error. As the case comes here, we cannot look into the bill of exceptions to discover under what circumstances the court permitted evidence to be offered to show want of consideration. It was competent for the parties at the trial to treat the question of consideration for the promise as an issue upon the pleadings; and, as the court found upon that issue, we must presume that it was so treated at the trial, and we must also presume that the evidence sustains the findings.

Appellant presents many interesting and important legal propositions for decision, but we are precluded from giving them consideration, inasmuch as they require us to examine the evidence, which, as we have seen, we cannot do. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

DANERI v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY. CO. (L. A. 444.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1898.)

OVERFLOW OF LANDS—ACTIONS—LIMITATIONS.

An action was begun in 1892 to recover damages resulting from an overflow of land in 1889, which plaintiff alleged was occasioned by the construction by defendant, in 1888, of a levee, which deflected the river from its course. The damages were occasioned by an unusual rise of the river, which broke the levee. Held, that the action was not one for trespass to realty, within the statute of limitations, but was an action on a liability not founded on an instrument in writing, and barred, under Code Civ. Proc. § 339, within two years.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Andres Daneri against the Southern California Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. N. Sterry and Henry J. Stevens, for appellant. Works & Lee, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appeals from the judgment and from the order denying defendant a new trial. The action was prosecuted to recover damages from defendant for injuries caused to plaintiff's land. For the facts and for the circumstances giving rise to the cause of action reference may be had to the case of De Baker v. Railway Co., 106 Cal. 257, 39 Pac. 610. While the De Baker lands were riparian to the stream, the lands of this plaintiff were about six miles distant therefrom, but the new channel formed by the deflected river waters cut through the lands of plaintiff, to their great injury. In all other respects pertinent to this consideration the facts set forth in the De Baker Case are applicable to the case at bar.

The levee which deflected the water of the river was completed in March, 1888. In the latter part of the month of December, 1889, the river cut its new channel. The original complaint in this action was filed on April 1, 1892. Plaintiff was allowed to file an amended complaint, and to the amended complaint defendant, by demurrer, urged the bar of the statute of limitations. The trial court entertained the plea, but overruled the demurrer. If the injury was direct, and resulted immediately from the construction of the levee, the cause of action was clearly barred, since the original complaint was filed more than four years after the levee was completed. But if, however, the cause of action arose in December, 1889, when the new channel was cut through the lands of plaintiff, it is to be determined whether the action is an action for trespass upon real property, in which case, having been brought within three years, the statute did not bar a recovery (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 2), or whether it was an action upon a liability under Id. § 339, subd. 1; in which latter case, having been brought more than two years after the cause of action arose, it is barred. At common law such an action would not have been trespass, but an action on the case. While the forms of actions have been abolished in this state, yet, when our statute of limitations speaks of an action for trespass upon real property, for the meaning of the word "trespass," as thus used, we must go to the common law, and nowhere else. In Hicks v. Drew, 117 Cal. 305, 49 Pac. 189, the question was elaborately considered, and many of the authorities reviewed. That case is not dissimilar to the one at bar. The conclusion expressed is in accordance with the great weight of authority, that the action there was not trespass, but on the case. Hicks v. Drew correctly states the law, and we regard it as decisive of the proposition. But in the case of De Baker v. Railway Co., supra, which, as has been said, was in its facts well-nigh identical with the present action, and where the nature of the injury and the cause giving rise to it were in fact identical, it is said: "There was no taking of plaintiff's property in this case, either according to the facts alleged or facts found, even if tested by the doctrine of Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 166, which has been held to be an extreme case. Neither was the damage to it the natural, certain, and immediate consequence of the facts alleged." Unless the damage was the natural, certain, and immediate consequence of the wrong complained of, then unquestionably the action of trespass did not lie.

This conclusion renders unnecessary a consideration of the other points ably presented by counsel upon either side. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the trial court to sustain defendant's demurrer upon the ground that the cause of action pleaded is barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

COLUSA COUNTY v. WELCH, Treasurer
(Sac. 350.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 26, 1898.)

COUNTIES—CLAIMS—POWERS—CONTRACTS—LOBBY SERVICES—PUBLIC POLICY.

1. A claim against a county for a specific sum due on a contract cannot be repudiated because not itemized as required by County Government Act, § 41 (St. 1891, p. 311), where no notice to itemize it was given to claimant pursuant to said section, and the supervisors allowed it.

2. The invalidity of a contract as against public policy was shown by a complaint by a county to restrain payment of a warrant drawn in pursuance of the contract, where it was alleged that the contract was for the employment of an attorney "to secure, by means of personal solicitation, and by means of private interview with members of the legislature, * * * and by means of lobbying, the defeat of" a certain bill.

3. Under County Government Act, § 25, subd. 17 (St. 1891, p. 304), authorizing the supervisors "to direct and control the prosecution and defense of all suits to which the county is a party, and to employ counsel to assist the district attorney in conducting the same," the supervisors have no power to employ an attorney to defeat, by means of lobbying, a bill pending in the legislature, by the passage of which the county in question would be compelled to pay a large sum of money to another county.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county.

Action by Colusa county against R. F. Welch, treasurer of said county, to restrain him from paying a certain warrant. From a judgment in favor of defendant on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. F. Fitzgerald, W. G. Dyas, and Ernest Wyand, for appellant. E. T. Crane, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action brought by the county of Colusa, through its district attorney, to restrain the defendant, as treasurer of said county, from paying to one F. S. Sprague the sum of $1,000 upon a warrant issued by the auditor of said county on said treasurer, and payable to said Sprague. A demurrer was sustained by the court to the second amended complaint of plaintiff, and a judgment entered in favor of defendant dissolving a restraining order theretofore issued therein, and for costs. Plaintiff appeals.

The action is brought under section 8 of the act of March 31, 1891, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of county and township governments" (St. 1891, p. 295). The latter clause of that section makes it the duty of the district attorney to institute a suit to restrain the payment upon warrants or orders issued without authority of law. The amended complaint to which the demurrer was sustained, in addition to the merely formal parts thereof, alleged, in substance, that on the 1st day of April, 1893, one F. S. Sprague filed his claim, duly verified, against the county of Colusa for "services as special counsel in matters pending before the last session of the legislature of California, as per contract with J. O. Zumwalt, C. C. Felts, and D. H. Arnold, committee of the board of supervisors of Colusa county, one thousand dollars." The board of supervisors passed upon and allowed the claim for the amount thereof, and ordered the auditor to issue his warrant therefor on the treasurer, payable out of the "common fund." On the 12th day of April, 1893, the auditor drew his warrant accordingly. It is then averred that the county of Colusa never agreed to pay Sprague $1,000, nor any sum, for services before the legislature of 1893, and was not indebted to him in any sum for services rendered as in the claim alleged or otherwise. It is then averred that on March 11, 1891, the county of Glenn was, by act of the legislature, created and established from the territory of Colusa county. St. 1891, p. 98. It then shows that at the session of the legislature of 1893 a bill was introduced in the legislature entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of the indebtedness and assets between any county that has been created, or may hereafter be created, and the county or counties from the territory of which such new county may be created"; that by said bill the county of Colusa would have been compelled to pay to the county of Glenn a large sum of money, and that it was to the interest of the county of Colusa to defeat the said bill, and that the sum of $1,000, if agreed to be paid to Sprague, was agreed to be so paid "to secure, by means of personal solicitation, and by means of private interview with members of the legislature of California, and by means of lobbying, the defeat of the bill"; that the contract was illegal and void, and the board of supervisors was without authority of law to make such contract, or to pass upon or order the claim paid. The complaint also avers that the treasurer will pay the warrant unless restrained. The demurrer stated two grounds: (1) That the second amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) uncertainty. The grounds upon which the allegations of uncertainty are based may be epitomized thus: (1) That it does not certainly appear in the complaint with whom or with what body the alleged contract with plaintiff was made. (2) That it is not alleged of what the lobbying therein mentioned consisted, or whether the legislature or its members were to be influenced by dishonest means, or what members were to be influenced, or by what means, or that any members were in fact sought to be influenced under said agreement.

The first point made by appellant is that the claim is unlawful, because not properly itemized, as provided by section 41 of the county government act (St. 1891, p. 311). There seems to have been but one item in the claim. It is based upon a contract for the payment of a specific sum of money, and was properly set forth. If the board of supervisors was not satisfied with the claim as presented, it was its duty, under section 41, to give notice thereof to the claimant, that he might itemize and verify it. Not having done so, and having treated it as sufficient, and allowed it, the county is not now in a position to repudiate it for that cause. Are the facts pleaded sufficient to constitute a cause of action? Services rendered by an attorney at law in endeavoring to persuade members of the legislature to vote or to act favorably or unfavorably upon a bill introduced in the interest of a client, when no secret, unfair, or dishonest means are employed, is not lobbying in the sense prohibited by the constitution. Foltz v. Cogswell, 86 Cal. 542, 25 Pac. 60; Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335. The statute making certain lobby practices criminal does not, by implication, legalize others not within the purview of the criminal law, which are void as against public policy. Sweeney v. McLeod, 15 Or. 330, 15 Pac. 275. The general rule is thus stated by Judge Cooley: "The law also seeks to cast its protection around legislative sessions, and to shield them against corrupt and improper influences, by making void all contracts which have for their object to influence legislation in any other manner than by such open and public presentation of facts, arguments, and appeals to reason as are recognized as proper and legitimate with all public bodies. While counsel may be properly employed to present the reasons in favor of any public measure to the body authorized to pass upon it, or to any of its committees empowered to collect facts and hear arguments, and parties interested may lawfully contract to pay for this service, yet to secretly approach the members of such a body with a view to influence their action at a time and in a manner that do not allow the presentation of opposite views is improper and unfair to the opposing interest; and a contract to pay for this irregular and improper service would not be enforced by the law." Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) p. 163. See, also, note, and cases cited. Does the complaint sufficiently show a violation of this cardinal doctrine? The language of the complaint is, as before stated, as follows: That, if the sum of $1,000 "was agreed to be paid to said Sprague, it was to secure by means of personal solicitation, and by means of private interview with members of the legislature of California, and by means of lobbying, the defeat of said senate bill." These allegations bring the case within the rule enunciated by Cooley as being void. The term "lobbying" has a well-defined meaning in this country, and signifies to address or solicit members of a legislative body in the lobby or elsewhere with the purpose of influencing their votes. Webst. Dict.; Black, Law Dict. We think the allegations show that the alleged contract was void as against public policy. Waiving this, however, and we think that the contract alleged in the complaint was in excess of any powers conferred upon the board of supervisors, and hence void. Subdivision 17 of section 25 of the county government act (St. 1891, p. 304) defines, in part, the powers and duties of boards of supervisors, and the seventeenth subdivision is as follows: "To direct and control the prosecution and defense of all suits to which the county is a party, and to employ counsel to assist the district attorney in conducting the same." A county has power, among other things, to purchase and hold land within its limits; to make such contracts, and purchase and hold such personal property, as may be necessary to the exercise of its powers; and "to manage and dispose of its property as the interests of its inhabitants may require." St. 1891, p. 295. "Its powers can only be exercised by the board of supervisors, or by agents and officers acting under their authority or authority of law." Id. It has been said that boards of supervisors are the guardians of the property interests of their several counties; that they occupy a position of trust, and are bound to the same measure of good faith required of ordinary trustees and agents. "Legal assistance stands as a means for the protection of property, in relation to the general power to hold, acquire, preserve, and protect it. There is no difference in this respect between one sort of protection and another, between the charge of the lawyer and the charge of the clerk, between laying out money to buy a safe to keep the money in and laying out money to employ a lawyer to recover the money improperly withheld." Smith v. Mayor, etc., 13 Cal. 531. See, also, Hornblower v. Duden, 35 Cal. 670, and Ellis v. Washoe Co., 7 Nev. 293. In the very nature of things, the authority to manage and dispose of the property and assets of the county which are given to the supervisors carries with it the right to take such action as may, in their judgment, be necessary to their conservation. They are authorized by subdivision 35 of section 25 of the county government act (St. 1891, p. 307), "to do and perform all other acts and things required by law and not in this act enumerated," etc. In Lassen Co. v. Shinn, 88 Cal. 512, 26 Pac. 366, it was said: "It is settled law that, where a county has legal business to be transacted, its board of supervisors may employ counsel, other than the district attorney, to transact the business, if, in the judgment of the board, the public interest will thereby be subserved." A like doctrine was enunciated in Kelley v. Sersanous (decided Oct. 6, 1896), not reported in the California Reports, but found in 46 Pac. 299. In Merriam v. Barnum, 116 Cal. 619, 48 Pac. 727, it was held that the board of supervisors had no authority to charge the county with liability for special counsel for mere legal advice on matters pertaining to the reconstruction of a court house, or upon other matters, without contemplation of any suit. The court in that case reviews the cases of Lassen Co. v. Shinn, 88 Cal. 510, 26 Pac. 365, and Kelley v. Sersanous, 46 Pac. 299, and holds that the language used in the former case is broader than the authorities cited will justify, and in the latter case it was said, in substance, that, as the plaintiff was employed to collect money for the county by "action at law or otherwise, it came within the spirit, if not the precise letter, of the authority of the supervisors." These were both cases in which counsel were employed for the collection of money due, or supposed to be due, to the county; matters in which, as the custodians of the property and assets of the county, it was the duty of the supervisors to take action. See, also, Merced Co. v. Cook, 120 Cal. 275, 52 Pac. 721. In the case at bar the supervisors had no duty in the premises to perform. They had no authority to influence, or to employ others to influence, the legislature in the action which, in its wisdom, it should see fit to take. If the board could do so in the present case, then, by parity of reasoning, it could do so in all matters of revenue, and in all cases which might indirectly affect the interests of the county. If the board of a given county may exercise such authority, then like boards of all other counties may exercise like authority in like cases, and there is a possibility of a corps of attorneys being always in attendance upon sessions of the legislature to influence the action of members in matters confided to the judgment of the latter. There is no such authority given, either directly or by implication, to boards of supervisors, and the attempt to exercise it by the board in the case at bar was null and void. We recommend that the judgment be reversed, and the court below directed to overrule the demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to overrule the demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint.

RICHARDS v. FRASER et al. (Sac. 442.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1898.)
PARTNERSHIP—ACCOUNTING—FRAUD—OBLIGATIONS OF PARTNERS INTER SESE.

1. On an issue as to whether plaintiff and defendants were co-partners, and whether the latter had obtained from the former a release from liability to account to him, by false representations as to the condition of the business, plaintiff was entitled to prove, under the allegations of a partnership, in an action for an accounting, the representations made by defendants, and the actual facts, as every partner is required by statute (Civ. Code, § 2411) "to act in the highest good faith with his co-partners," and "he may not obtain any advantage over them, in the partnership affairs, by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind."

2. In an action for an accounting between alleged co-partners, it was unnecessary for plaintiff to offer to place defendants in statu quo respecting certain securities which they had discharged, where such securities were alleged to have been obtained from him by them through certain frauds practiced on him by them.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by L. A. Richards against P. B. Fraser and another, for an accounting and other relief. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Van R. Paterson and J. A. Louttit, for appellant. Nicol & Orr and Budd & Thompson, for respondents.

BRITT, C. Among other allegations of the complaint here, plaintiff charges, in substance: That in December, 1891, himself and the defendants, Fraser, Rosenbaum, and Guernsey, formed a co-partnership, for the purpose of buying and farming a tract of 3,000 acres of land, called the "Sargent Tract," the parties to share equally in profits and losses. That, by a conspiracy between defendants and the seller, the real purchase price of the land—$40 an acre—was concealed from plaintiff, and he was fraudulently induced to contribute, and did contribute, to the purchase of the same at the rate of above $75 an acre. That defendants and the said seller of the property shared among themselves the excess thus obtained from plaintiff by fraud. That plaintiff paid his share of the fraudulent price in the manner following: The sum of $6,250 at the time of the formation of the partnership, and the balance, of $56,000, by his note made to defendant Rosenbaum in August, 1893, secured by mortgage on various lands of plaintiff, including 750 acres of the said Sargent tract, which had been previously set over to him in severalty upon a division of the tract among the alleged partners. That subsequently plaintiff satisfied said note and mortgage by the conveyance to Rosenbaum of property which the latter accepted in payment thereof. That defendants knowingly kept false accounts of the business of said partnership. That they omitted therefrom certain considerable credits to which plaintiff was entitled, and rendered to him false statements of said accounts, and fraudulently misrepresented to him the amounts received and expended in the partnership business. That the concern is largely indebted to plaintiff. And that no complete accounting of its business has ever been had. It is further alleged that on September 11, 1894, at the request of defendants, plaintiff executed to them an instrument of writing, in form a release of all demands "upon or by reason of any matter, cause, or thing, from the beginning of the world" to the date last mentioned; that defendants "then and there" falsely, and for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to sign said instrument, and of defrauding him, represented that nothing was owing to him from them or from said co-partnership; that Rosenbaum threatened to foreclose the mortgage by which said note for $56,000, then past due, was secured, unless plaintiff signed said release; that plaintiff was then ignorant of the aforesaid frauds perpetrated by defendants; that, under the circumstances thus alleged, he signed said release; and that, subsequently to the execution thereof, he discovered the frauds charged. The prayer of the complaint is for an accounting, etc. The action was begun August 1, 1896. In their answer, defendants denied any partnership with plaintiff, and denied all the allegations of fraud. They pleaded affirmatively that on said September 11, 1894, they had a full and fair settlement of all previous business transactions with plaintiff, and that thereupon he executed to them the release mentioned in the complaint, and that the same remains in force; and they denied that Rosenbaum threatened any foreclosure proceedings against plaintiff, or that the latter signed said release in fear of foreclosure. At the trial, the court ruled that the issues concerning the execution of the release of September 11, 1894, should be first tried, plaintiff making no objection to the order of trial so adopted. Thereupon the plaintiff produced evidence tending to show that his said note for $56,000 and interest became due about four weeks before said September 11th; that Rosenbaum said he must have the interest due, or he would foreclose the mortgage; that plaintiff afterwards made an arrangement with Rosenbaum by which the latter agreed to accept, in satisfaction of the debt, a conveyance of plaintiff's 750 acres in the Sargent tract, together with a quantity of personal property valued at about $12,000; that, at this stage of the negotiation, defendant Guernsey presented to him the said written release, saying, "It don't amount to anything, but we would like to have you sign it," and plaintiff executed the same accordingly; whereupon the said arrangement with Rosenbaum was consummated. Plaintiff testified that the inducement moving him to execute the release was to prevent foreclosure of the mortgage to Rosenbaum, and also that, if he had then had the information he afterwards obtained concerning the accounts of the partnership, he would not have signed it. Plaintiff further offered evidence under the allegations of his complaint concerning the formation of a partnership with defendants, and, generally, what representations were made to him by defendants regarding the purchase of said Sargent tract, and also the price in fact paid for the same. Defendants objected on the ground that the release in writing executed by plaintiff estops any inquiry into previous transactions, unless it was fraudulently obtained, and that the evidence offered has no bearing on the execution of that paper, which objections the court sustained. The court also struck out the testimony of plaintiff concerning his receipt of a statement of firm accounts rendered by defendant Guernsey in the early part of the year 1894, and which, plaintiff testified, he discovered to be false after he had executed said release of September 11th. The court also rejected evidence of declarations regarding such statement made to plaintiff by Guernsey in May, 1894. The ground of these rulings seem to have been that the evidence was too remote in point of time from the release. Other rulings of similar general character, excluding evidence for plaintiff, appear in the record. The court held that, for the purpose of proving representations by defendants,—meaning, apparently, representations directed immediately to obtaining the said release,—plaintiff's counsel might interrogate the witnesses upon the assumption that a partnership existed between the parties; but it refused to try the question whether there was in fact a partnership until the presumptive effect of the release should be overcome by other evidence. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendants at the close of the evidence for plaintiff.

It has seemed proper to set out thus fully the condition of the case at the trial in order that the nature and scope of the action and the consequent bearing of the rulings of the court on the admission of evidence may be made clear. Our conclusions thereon may be stated more briefly. It is plain that the court circumscribed too narrowly the field of investigation. If the parties were partners, then in the matter of the acquittance of September 11, 1894, defendants were not dealing with plaintiff as with a stranger. They were trustees for him. It is statutory law with us that "in all proceedings connected with the formation, conduct, dissolution and liquidation of a partnership every partner is bound to act in the highest good faith with his co-partners. He may not obtain any advantage over them in the partnership affairs by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind." Civ. Code, § 2411. Now, if the other allegations of the complaint, upon which the evidence rejected seems to have been relevant, are true, then, when plaintiff gave defendants the said acquittance, they obtained a very decided advantage over him, by concealing information of their actions which, as his partners and as trustees for him, they ought to have divulged, withholding such information was equivalent to false representation operative at the time of the release, and the evidence offered was strictly pertinent to the issue made whether the release was fraudulently procured. Belden v. Henriques, 8 Cal. 87; Pomeroy v. Benton, 57 Mo. 548; Lindl. Partn. marg. pp. 486, 516; Caldwell v. Davis, 10 Colo. 490, 15 Pac. 696.

Defendants urge that plaintiff's action must fail in any event, for the reason that he has not offered to restore to them, or any of them, the advantages he gained by the discharge of his note for $56,000 and the mortgage on his property by which the note was secured. But, if the averments of the complaint are true, the note and mortgage to Rosenbaum were fruits of the alleged frauds practiced on plaintiff, and for that reason they ought not to be enforced. The parties should account together as if said note and mortgage had not been executed. And, if plaintiff fails to prove his charges of fraud, the said note and mortgage remain as they are,—discharged by the effect of the transactions of September 11, 1894. It was therefore unnecessary to offer to place defendants in statu quo as regards those securities. Mining Co. v. Gilson, 47 Cal. 597; Millard v. Farley, 15 La. Ann. 518. "One who attempts to rescind a transaction on the ground of fraud is not required to restore that which, in any event, he would be entitled to retain." Kley v. Healy, 127 N. Y. 555, 28 N. E. 593.

It is also argued that plaintiff is barred by his own negligence and delay. However this may be, the fact does not affirmatively appear on the face of the evidence rejected by the court. Plaintiff was entitled to have the same considered on that as well as other questions which it tended to illustrate. See Zebbley v. Trust Co., 139 N. Y. 461, 34 N. E. 1067. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

PEOPLE v. LYNCH et al. (Cr. 429.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1898.)

ROBBERY—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE—EVIDENCE OF COLLATERAL FACTS—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. One could not maintain that he was convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice where, though the only direct evidence of his connection with the crime charged was such testimony, there was other evidence which, without the aid of such testimony, tended to connect him with the commission of such offense.

2. On trial for robbery, testimony as to a certain conversation between defendant and his accomplices, on the night before such robbery, was erroneously admitted, where such conversation related to collateral transactions, which were incapable of affording any reasonable inference as to the matter in issue.

3. Where a witness for defendant, who was on trial for robbery, had testified that defendant had in his possession certain money, on the day before such robbery, it was error to show by him, on cross-examination, that he and defendant had been in jail together.

4. An instruction, in a trial for robbery, that if the jury believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, from the testimony of an accomplice who testified for the people, that defendant is guilty of the offense charged, and if they believe from the evidence, "outside of that which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, other than shown in the commission of the offense itself and the circumstances thereof," they should find defendant guilty, failed to state with sufficient clearness the rule that testimony of an accomplice is insufficient of itself to justify conviction, and the degree of proof sufficient to corroborate such testimony.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Harry Lynch, who was accused of the crime of robbery, jointly with two others, was convicted; and from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

J. O. Prewett and W. Renfro, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

CHIPMAN, C. Defendant Lynch was, jointly with Frank Davis and Fred Howard, informed against for the crime of robbery. This appeal is from a judgment of conviction against Lynch, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. Defendant contends that he was convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and that therefore, under section 1111, Pen. Code, the judgment cannot stand. The only direct evidence of defendant's connection with the crime was given by his co-defendant Davis. As we think the judgment and order must be reversed upon other grounds, it is sufficient to say upon the point just stated that we are unable to agree with defendant. It appears to us that there is evidence in addition to that of the accomplice which, without its aid, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged.

2. On redirect examination of Davis by the district attorney, he asked the witness to state "the conversation that occurred on Saturday night [the night before the robbery] when Lynch, Howard, and yourself were present; anything that was said between Howard and Lynch, or anything that was said between yourself and Lynch." Defendant objected as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and was overruled, and an exception was reserved. The witness answered: "Lynch started to tell us about a fellow named the Rambler. He told us that the Rambler and him were going down to hold up the station at Davisville; also the big hotel across the railroad. He only had one gun." Defendant's counsel moved to strike out this answer as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. The motion was denied. We think this ruling was prejudicial error. Testimony must be confined to the issues. Evidence of collateral facts are excluded under the rule, as being incapable of affording any reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal fact or matter in dispute. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 51, 52. It is under this rule that it is held to be incompetent for the prosecution to give evidence of facts tending to prove another distinct offense for the purpose of raising an inference that the person had committed the offense in question. So, also, it is incompetent to give evidence of the prisoner's tendency to commit the offense with which he is charged. *Rose. Cr. Ev. *81*; People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522; People v. Vidal (Cal.) 53 Pac. 558.

3. The witness Smith was called for defendant, and testified that he knew defendant, and that defendant had five or six dollars on Saturday, October 3d, the day before the robbery. On cross-examination the district attorney asked the witness if he and defendant were not together in Stockton, to which witness replied that they were once. The witness was then asked: "Weren't you there with him in the county jail?" The question was objected to as irrelevant and incompetent. Objection was overruled, and the witness answered, "Yes." The district attorney claimed that the evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing the relations of the witness and prisoner. If this fact had come out as part of a narrative in which the witness was endeavoring to explain their relations, it might be that, under the rule as laid down in People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 335, 38 Pac. 945, and People v. Kuches, 120 Cal. 566, 52 Pac. 1002, it should be allowed to stand; but the bare fact that the two were together in a jail at Stockton, or elsewhere, would not be sufficient to justify the inference of bias on the part of the witness. And in its effect upon defendant, as furnishing an inference pointing to the probability of his being guilty of the offense charged, it was inadmissible, for the reasons heretofore stated. People v. Vidal, supra.

The court gave the following instruction for the people: "If you believe that an accomplice has testified in this case, and you believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, from his testimony, that the defendant Lynch is guilty of the alleged offense in the information charged, and then, in connection therewith, you believe from the evidence, outside of that which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, other than shown in the commission of the offense itself and the circumstances thereof, then it will be your bounden duty to find the defendant guilty." The conviction of Lynch largely rested upon the evidence of his accomplice, Davis. I do not think this instruction clearly points out the rule that the evidence of the accomplice is insufficient in itself to justify conviction; nor does it clearly point out what degree of proof is sufficient as corroborative of that of the accomplice. The judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

In re SMITH'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1405.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 29, 1898.)

ALIMONY PENDENTE LITE—FINAL JUDGMENTS—PROBATE—PREFERRED CLAIMS—ORDERS
—NOTICE—RES JUDICATA.

1. A decree awarding a wife alimony pendente lite is a final judgment against the husband, so as to be a preferred claim against his estate, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1643, to the extent of the amount due thereunder on his death.

2. An order of the probate court deciding the respective status of two claims alleged to be preferred claims against an estate is without authority and void, even as to the contesting parties, where based on a hearing had without notice to the other creditors, heirs, and legatees.

3. Adjudications on the question of preferred claims of an estate should be litigated at the same time, and under the same notice, that is required on the settlement of accounts.

4. A creditor of an estate is not estopped from asserting his claim as a preferred claim, by reason of an order of the probate court made on the application of such creditor and another, deciding that the claim was not preferred, where the order was void for failure to give notice of the hearing to others interested.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

In the matter of the estate of William F. Smith, deceased. From an order settling the final account and ordering a distribution, one Lynch appeals. Reversed.

Lloyd & Wood, for appellant. Andrew Thorne, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is prosecuted from an order of the court settling the final account and ordering distribution of the estate of William F. Smith, deceased. The estate was insolvent. The claim of Andrew Thorne being a preferred claim, upon the settlement of the account it was ordered that the money of the estate be applied to its payment. Lynch, administrator of the estate of Eudora V. Smith, claiming that her estate also held a preferred claim against the estate of William F. Smith, appeals from the order made by the trial court. The only question presented by this appeal arises upon the contention of the administrator of her estate that the claim of that estate is also a preferred claim.

Is the claim presented by this administrator a preferred claim? Section 1643 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The debts of the estate subject to the provisions of section 1205 must be paid in the following order: * * * (4) Judgments rendered against the decedent in his lifetime, and mortgages in the order of their date." Was this claim based upon a judgment rendered against the deceased, William F. Smith, during his lifetime? The facts are these: Eudora V. Smith, his wife, brought suit against him for permanent support, alleging desertion. An order was made, pendente lite, allowing her alimony to the amount of $100 per month. At the time Smith died the action had not been tried upon its merits, but alimony had accumulated under this pendente lite order to the amount of about $10,000. Thereafter Eudora V. Smith died, and a claim against his estate to that amount is based upon these facts. This claim is a preferred claim, under section 1643, supra, if this allowance of alimony pendente lite constitutes a judgment rendered against Smith. In Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 196, 7 Pac. 462, 635, and 8 Pac. 709, the identical question here presented was carefully considered. And in speaking as to a decree awarding alimony pendente lite the court said: "It certainly possesses all the elements of a final judgment. Nothing remained to be done except to enforce it, and for that purpose an execution might issue and be proceeded on, as if the judgment had been rendered in an ordinary action for the recovery of a specific sum of money." A "judgment" is defined by the Code as a final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding. The decree in this case is, to all legal intents and purposes, a judgment, and not only a judgment, but, as to all matters upon which it takes effect, a final judgment. For as to those matters the litigation, as far as the trial court is concerned, has fully and completely ended. If the decree to pay alimony is a final judgment,—so final as that an appeal to this court may be taken from the decree,—and such is the law declared in Sharon v. Sharon, then the order in this case decreeing the payment of alimony is a final determination of the rights of the parties as to the matters with which it deals. It follows that the alimony accrued under the order of the court is a judgment rendered against the decedent, Smith, during his lifetime, and consequently a preferred claim against his estate.

It is next insisted that the question as to the dignity of the claim presented by the administrator of the estate of Eudora V. Smith, deceased, as to its being a preferred claim, is res adjudicata against her estate. This contention is rested upon the following state of facts: In the year 1895, and during the administration of the estate of William F. Smith, deceased, upon a citation issued to the administrator of his estate at the instance of Walter Thorne, who held a preferred claim against the estate, and upon consent of Thorne and said Lynch, as administrator of both estates, the question was litigated before the court, sitting in probate, as to the respective status of Thorne's claim and this claim, and the court upon such hearing adjudged and decreed that the Thorne claim was a preferred claim, and the alimony claim was not a preferred claim. That adjudication has never been questioned in any way, and is a perpetual bar to appellant's prosecution of this proceeding and this appeal, if the court had authority under the law to litigate the matter at that time. This order of the court was based upon a hearing had without notice. Devisees, heirs, and legatees were directly interested in the matter under consideration. Other creditors were likewise interested, and neither creditors, heirs, devisees, nor legatees had any notice whatever of the hearing and determination establishing the respective priority of these two claims. If a decree rendered under such circumstances is binding upon the world, then a decree settling the final account of an administrator, made without notice, would be binding. Two interested parties by stipulation attempt to give the court jurisdiction to hear and determine a matter in which many other parties are equally interested. This cannot be done. A hearing of the question here involved contemplates notice to the world. It is a proceeding in rem, and without notice to all the world the court has no jurisdiction to act. In such a proceeding it cannot be said that the court had jurisdiction over some of the parties, and that as to those the judgment is final and conclusive. The court only has jurisdiction over the subject-matter when the whole world is served with statutory notice. This question was incidentally touched upon when this case was heard upon a former appeal (In re Smith's Estate, 117 Cal. 508, 49 Pac. 456), where it was held that the claim of Thorne could not be paid under the order of the court made without the statutory notice required to be given upon the settlement of the administrator's accounts. If an order to pay the claim must fall because made without statutory notice, then an order adjudging a claim a preferred claim must likewise fall. In re Spanier's Estate, 120 Cal. 698, 53 Pac. 357, is directly in line with the last case cited. There is no specific provision found in the Code providing the procedure to be followed in adjudicating upon claims alleged to be preferred, but it is clearly apparent, from the various provisions of the Code, that such matters should be litigated at the same time and under the same notice that is required upon the settlement of accounts. At that time the assets are marshaled, and orders may then be made for the payment of the various debts, and these orders of payment necessarily include a determination as to what claims are preferred. It follows that the order here claimed as constituting matter res adjudicata is void by reason of lack of power in the court to make it. Neither do we see any principle of estoppel involved in the proceeding which might be successfully urged against the administrator of Mrs. Smith's estate.

There is no merit in the remaining positions taken by respondent in his brief, and for the foregoing reasons the order is reversed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—COLOR OF TITLE—EVIDENCE—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS.

1. A plaintiff suing for possession of land is not entitled to a judgment on the pleadings where defendant pleads res judicata.

2. A decree distributing certain land to certain persons is admissible to show color of title in support of their claim to the land by adverse possession, though there were such irregularities in the making and entering of the decree as would make it inadmissible as evidence of title.

3. Evidence in support of an issue which a party had a right to prove will be presumed to be relevant and material, if it is not set out in the transcript.

4. Findings will be presumed to be supported by sufficient evidence where it is not given in the transcript.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action by Mary A. Brind, administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of James Gregory, deceased, against John H. Gregory, guardian of the person and estate of John Shattuck Gregory, a minor, and others. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James Gartlan, for appellant. F. P. Tuttle, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action by plaintiff, as administratrix with the will annexed, to recover possession of certain lands as property belonging to the testate's estate. Defendants had judgment, from which an appeal was taken. Sac. No. 418. Judgment was affirmed. Opinion filed April 28, 1898, 53 Pac. 25. This present appeal is from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The facts in the case, and a general statement of the pleadings and findings, are given in the opinion filed in the appeal from the judgment, already referred to. As matter of law the lower court found plaintiff's cause of action barred by the statute of limitations, and that plaintiff is estopped from maintaining the action.

Plaintiff was not entitled to judgment on the pleadings. The answer pleaded the statute of limitations and an estoppel by reason of the former decision of this court between the same parties. Even if the statute of limitations was not a good plea (which we think it was), defendants were entitled to be heard on the plea of estoppel by the judgment in Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 Pac. 364. In Sac. No. 418 it did not appear that any motion for a new trial was ever made or passed upon, and the statement was held not to come within section 950, Code Civ. Proc., and could not be considered. By a bill of exceptions in this transcript it appears that, owing to the disqualification of the resident trial judge, some delay occurred in having the motion for a new trial passed upon, but it was finally heard and denied, and the appeal from the order was taken in time. Except as to these facts, the two transcripts are the same. It was held in Sac. No. 418 that there was nothing in that record which shows the finding as to adverse possession to be erroneous. Nor is there in this record.

The certificate of the judge to what is called an "engrossed statement on motion for a new trial," states that it is "but a skeleton, and does not contain all the evidence offered at the trial tending to prove the allegations of the answer of the defendants. I believe it correctly states the exception taken to certain documentary evidence, but for some reason unknown to me the attorneys have failed to make a full and complete statement containing all of the evidence. * * * Hence, with these limitations, I settle the statement as presented." We think the statement might well be entirely disregarded because of its utter failure to adequately present the evidence of which errors are claimed. Even the documentary evidence above referred to by the judge is not sufficiently given or identified to admit of intelligent review. However, so far as we can do so, the alleged errors will be noticed.

Exception 2 relates to the admissibility of a decree of distribution, offered by defendants and admitted. This decree was not, as near as we can find out, admitted because regularly made and entered, but as showing color of title under which defendants claimed in support of adverse possession. It was admissible for that purpose. Defendants did not claim title through this decree, and hence the cases cited by plaintiff are not in point.

Exception No. 3 was to the admission of "documentary evidence and testimony of witnesses to show title by adverse possession." None of this evidence is set out. As defendants had the right to prove that issue, we must, in the absence of the evidence, presume that it was relevant and material. The same may be said of exceptions 4, 5, and 6.

Whether the evidence was insufficient to support the findings we are unable to determine, because the evidence is not given in the transcript. An examination of the opinions in Gregory v. Gregory, supra, and in the appeal from the judgment in this case, will disclose the fact, we think, that the legal propositions on which appellant now relies have been passed upon adversely to her contention. Her rights were substantially determined in these appeals. So far as we can see, the questions already decided are sought to be reviewed by the appeals from the judgment and order in this action. The order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

SALE—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

Civ. Code, § 3440, providing that transfers of personal property by a person in possession or control thereof, unaccompanied by an actual and continued change of possession, shall be conclusively presumed to be fraudulent against the seller's creditors, does not apply to a transfer of property after the same is in possession of the sheriff under an attachment against the seller.

Action by J. W. Lillenthal and others against S. D. Ballou and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. Shipsey, for appellants. W. H. Spencer, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover a certain stock of goods formerly owned by Phillips Bros. & Co. There was a trial by jury, and the verdict and judgment were for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal from the Judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The goods in question were attached at the suit of creditors of Phillips Bros. & Co., and were held by the sheriff under the attachment for several weeks. While the goods were thus in the possession of the sheriff they were transferred by Phillips Bros. & Co. to the plaintiffs, who were trustees for all their creditors except the defendant Orman, who afterwards attached the goods as the property of Phillips Bros. & Co., and Orman and Ballou, the sheriff who served Orman's attachment, are the defendants and appellants in this action.

A thorough examination of the record in this case shows that there is really only one question on this appeal to be determined, and that is whether the following instruction given by the court to the jury was correct or erroneous: "If you should find from the evidence that when the property in controversy was transferred to the plaintiffs by Phillips Bros. & Co. said property was not in possession of Phillips Bros. & Co., but was in the possession of the sheriff of this county, then it is not necessary for you to pass upon the question of whether or not there was an immediate delivery or actual or continued change of possession of the property. If, however, you should find that when said property was transferred it was in possession of Phillips Bros. & Co., then you must pass upon the question of immediate delivery and an actual and continued change of possession." If this instruction be held to be correct, then there are no other points, exceptions, or specifications of error which need to be considered. We think that the instruction was correct. It is not absolutely perfect, because the words "or control" should have been used immediately after the word "possession," so as to make the clause read, "not in possession or control" of Phillips Bros. & Co.; but, for the purposes of this case, the omission of the word "control" was immaterial. No point is made upon such omission. The theory of appellants on this point was, and is, that, notwithstanding the fact that the sheriff was in possession at the time of the transfer, still section 3440 of the Civil Code applied, and the transfer was invalid unless there was an immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession of the goods, and they asked the court so to instruct. This theory would not have been affected by the use of the word "control" in the instruction, nor is it pretended by appellants that the instruction would have been good if that word had been used. It is clear that section 3440 does not apply to the transfer involved in the case at bar. The part of that section necessary to be here construed is as follows: "Every transfer of personal property * * * is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those," etc. We cannot insert words into the section, and as it stands it refers only to a transfer made by a person in possession or control of the property transferred; and in the case at bar the instruction in question assumes, and it is admitted, that at the time of the transfer from Phillips Bros. & Co. to respondents the property was not in the possession or control of the former, but was in the possession of the sheriff. We are not concerned with the suggestion that under this view certain creditors might gain preference over other creditors; such preference can be had, except where the law forbids it. Of course, actual fraud would vitiate a transfer, but there is no such question as that in this case. The provision of the statute with respect to actual and continued change of possession does not apply, under its express language, to a case where a party transferring the property is not in its possession. Williams v. Borgwardt, 119 Cal. 80, 51 Pac. 15, is a case directly in point; but, really, the language of the statute is too clear to leave any room for doubt on the subject. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HIGUERA. (Cr. 414.)

SEDUCTION—INDICTMENT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Questions whether two sisters of prosecutrix, with whom she lived, both had children born out of wedlock, being part of defendant's evidence, are inadmissible on cross-examination of a state's witness, when such matter was not gone into in the examination in chief.

2. An indictment charging that defendant, under a promise that he would marry prosecutrix, did seduce her, etc., being in the form of the statute, is sufficient, without alleging that the promise of marriage was made to prosecutrix.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Secundino Higuera was convicted of seduction, and appeals. Affirmed.

Dunnigan & Dunnigan, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant has been convicted of a felony, alleged by information to have consisted in the seduction of an unmarried female of previous chaste character, under promise of marriage. Upon cross-examination the father of the prosecutrix was asked by defendant's attorney as to the character of his other two daughters, and an objection was sustained to the question. Thereupon he offered to prove by the witness "that this girl's sisters, with whom she associated and lived, both had children out of wedlock, and that they were all raised up together, and that these illegitimate children were born in the house with this witness, while they were all living together with the father of the prosecuting witness." Aside from other considerations, it may be said this evidence was essentially a part of defendant's case. It certainly was inadmissible at this stage of the proceedings; for the witness upon the stand had been asked nothing in his examination in chief as to such matters, and under those circumstances the offer, at that particular point of time, was clearly improper, and properly rejected by the court.

It is claimed that the information does not state a public offense. It is there charged, "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, under a promise by him made that he would marry and take to wife one Josefa Valenzuela, an unmarried female person of previous chaste character, seduce," etc. It is insisted that the promise of marriage must be made to the female, and that here it is not so alleged. This allegation of the information is in the language of the statute, and we deem it sufficient. Probably it would have been better pleading if there had been a direct allegation that the promise was made to the female; but the statute clearly contemplates that the promise should be so made, and, the offense being charged in the language of the statute, we hold the information sufficient.

There is nothing in the contention of defendant that the judgment is void because the offense of which he had been convicted is there called "seduction." The defendant was found guilty by a jury of the crime of seduction as charged in the information. The facts there set out, if proven, clearly constituted the seduction of the prosecutrix; and the defendant was convicted of such seduction. In using the word "seduction" in the judgment, reference was had to the seduction referred to in the verdict of the jury.

We have examined with care the instructions given and refused. Those given embrace a full and sufficient disquisition of the law bearing upon the facts of the case, and we find no legal objection to any of them. Those refused were either not proper to be given under any circumstances, or their subject-matter was covered by others already given. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 29, 1898.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—PLEADING—CORPORATIONS—PLEDGE OF STOCK—TRANSFER—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS—EXECUTION—RETURN—SALE.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 853, providing that in the justice's court a copy of the note "upon which the action is based" is a sufficient complaint, the failure of such a complaint to show that plaintiff is a corporation is waived, where defendant objects neither by demurrer nor by answer.

2. The failure of plaintiff to allege its incorporation, which was waived by defendant, cannot be raised by third persons on a collateral attack on the judgment for plaintiff.

3. As against creditors, a pledge of corporate stock must be accompanied by delivery and a continued change of possession. Civ. Code, §§ 2988, 3440. Delivery, momentary possession, and return are insufficient.

4. A notation by the secretary of a corporation on the margin of the stubs of certain certificates that such certificates are held by a certain person "as security for money loan," when made without authority from either pledgee or pledgor, does not amount to a transfer of the stock on the books of the corporation, as against creditors of the pledgor.

5. The title of a purchaser at a sheriff's sale is not affected by the failure of the officer to show in his return that he levied before selling.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Action by T. E. McFall against the Buckeye Grangers' Warehouse Association and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants O. Michaelson and others appeal. Affirmed.

R. Clark, for appellants. C. W. Thomas and Phil. Bruton, for respondent.

BRITT, C. McFall, the plaintiff in this action, was the purchaser at a sale under execution of 14 shares of stock in the Buckeye Grangers' Warehouse Association, a corporation, one of the defendants here. The ultimate question on appeal is whether property in the stock passed by virtue of such sale. The court below held that it did. One Schautz owned the stock originally, and held certificates therefor issued by said warehouse association. Schautz was sued in a justice's court by the Bank of Winters, a corporation, on a promissory note, wherein he promised to pay a specified sum of money to "the Bank of Winters, at its office in Winters," the payee not being further described. The complaint in that action was a copy of such note. The justice issued a writ of attachment, under which the constable of the township attached the said shares of stock as the property of Schautz, in the manner prescribed by subdivision 4, § 542, Code Civ. Proc. Afterwards, Schautz having made no defense, judgment was rendered in said justice's court against him, and in favor of said bank, and an execution issued for the enforcement thereof. Thereunder the constable made the sale which gave rise to the present dispute. At the trial there was evidence that, some time before the levy of the said writ of attachment, Schautz indorsed the stock certificates,—two in number,—and delivered them to Michaelson, one of the appellants in this case, "as security for two hundred and fifty dollars." Michaelson held them in his hand for an instant, and returned them to Schautz, and Schautz kept them among his own papers 'for Michaelson' until after said attachment, when he delivered them again to Michaelson. Forthwith after said indorsement to Michaelson, Schautz gave notice of the fact to the president and secretary of said warehouse association, but said he did not want a transfer of the shares to appear on the books; and he continued thereafter to draw dividends on the stock. The secretary, however, without authority from any source, made an entry on the margin of the stubs of the certificates, as follows: "C. Michaelson holds as security for money loan." In his return of the execution, the constable did not in terms set forth a levy of the writ, but stated that, after due and legal notice, he sold the stock by virtue thereof, and that the property thus sold had been previously held under said attachment.

Appellants urge that all proceedings in the justice's court were void, for the reason that the complaint in the action of Bank of Winters against Schautz—consisting merely of a copy of the note sued on—did not show the plaintiff to be a corporation. It was, however, in fact a corporation; and in a justice's court a copy of a note "upon which the action is based" is a good complaint, by express provision of the statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 853. The defendant in that case, if he deemed that the plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue, or that the complaint was uncertain in that particular, might have presented the objection by demurrer or answer. Failing to do so, he waived the right to object, and certainly other persons cannot assert the right in a collateral attack on the judgment. See Montgomery v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 407, 9 Pac. 720.

As between the parties to a pledge of shares of corporate stock, the pledge may be effected by indorsement and transfer of the stock certificates (Spreckels v. Bank, 113 Cal. 272, 45 Pac. 329, and cases cited); but, when that mode of creating such a pledge is adopted, it must be subject to the same rules which govern the pledging of other instruments. The transfer, to avail against creditors, must be accompanied by delivery and continued change of possession; and it is too plain for discussion that the transaction between Schautz and Michaelson, by which the latter received momentary possession of the certificates in question, and at once returned them to Schautz, constituted no valid pledge as against creditors of the former. Civ. Code, §§ 2988, 3440; Coleb. Coll. Sec. §§ 9, 13. The note made by the secretary of the warehouse association on the margin of the stubs did not amount to a transfer of the stock on the books of the corporation, for the reason—among others which might be assigned—that a transfer was without authority from either Schautz or Michaelson, and was, indeed, contrary to the express desire of the former.

A further point is that it does not appear that the constable levied the writ of execution on the stock. The property having been held under attachment to satisfy the judgment, we doubt whether any levy of the execution, beyond giving notice of sale, was a necessary step in the proceedings. Code Civ. Proc. § 550; Lehnhardt v. Jennings, 119 Cal. 192, 48 Pac. 56, and 51 Pac. 195. But, however that may be, the title of the purchaser of the stock is not affected by the failure of the officer to show in his return that he levied before selling. Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 564, 4 Pac. 473, and 8 Pac. 46, and cases cited. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

McCURRIE v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(S. F. 521.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 6, 1898.)

CARRIERS—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—NEGLIGENCE —QUESTIONS FOR JURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. A passenger on a railroad, while standing in the door of the car, the train having stopped at a station, was thrown off his balance by a sudden backward and then forward jerk of the car, and grasped the door casing for support, when the door slammed upon his fingers. Held, that whether the injury was caused by the company's negligence was for the jury.

2. Whether a passenger on a railroad is negligent in attempting to go upon the platform of the car while the train is standing at a regular station is for the jury.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by J. P. McCurrie against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

F. J. Castelhun, for appellant. W. H. L. Barnes, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action to recover damages for personal injury alleged to have been sustained by reason of the negligence of the defendant. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendant and from an order denying a new trial. The plaintiff testified that he purchased from the defendant a ticket to go from San Francisco to Tennant's station, in Santa Clara county, and that he boarded the train at Third and Townsend streets in San Francisco. He further testified: "When we arrived at Twenty-Fifth and Valencia streets, the brakeman or conductor opened and fastened the front door of the car in which we were sitting in the usual way. I waited until I saw the door was fastened and the train stopped, and then got up to look for my son, who was waiting to see us. I went to the front to beckon to him, because the train does not stop long there. As I got to the platform, the train suddenly backed with a very great jerk, so violently that it threw me off my balance, and to save myself I caught hold of the casing of the door. Just then the door swung to and struck my hand, cutting three fingers very severely;" and on cross-examination he testified: "I left my seat after the train stopped, and went to the front platform of the car, and stood partly in and out of the car,—just in the doorway. I won't be certain whether I stood on the platform or whether I was in the doorway, because the time was short. I called my son and he came up. The car gave a lurch backward, I think. I caught hold of the casing of the door to save myself from falling, and just then the door swung to and caught my hand. I went back to my seat, led by my son." His wife testified: "We boarded the train together at Third and Townsend streets. At the Valencia street station the car stopped, and my husband went out to the platform to beckon to our son to come into the car and see me. The train gave a violent jerk backwards and then forwards. I thought it would throw him to the ground. He put out his hand to take hold of the door casing, and then the door became unfastened and swung to and struck his hand. My son assisted him back to his seat. He was very faint." His son testified that he was waiting at the Valencia street station to see his father, and said: "When I got opposite the platform I saw him coming through the door. Just as I was about to step up on the platform the train went back with a sudden jerk, and then went ahead with a jerk. I had to look out for myself, for the train was moving a little. I saw he was falling. I tried to save him. He had thrown his hand up and caught hold. I did not see the door strike his hand, but I saw it as it swung back again. I led him back to his seat. The jerk was very violent,—a jerk sufficient to make him lose his balance." Testimony tending to show the extent of the injury was also given on behalf of the plaintiff, and at the close of his testimony the court, upon the motion of the defendant, instructed the jury to find a verdict in favor of the defendant, which was accordingly done.

When the negligence of the defendant is the basis of the plaintiff's right of recovery, it is the province of the judge to determine whether the evidence submitted by the plaintiff has any legal tendency to establish negligence, and it is for the jury to determine whether it is sufficient therefor. If there is no evidence from which a jury would have the right to infer negligence, the judge may withdraw the case from them; but, if the evidence is such that negligence may be inferred, he has not the right to withdraw the question from the jury upon the ground that, in his opinion, they ought not to make such a finding, and thus substitute his judgment for theirs upon a question of fact which the plaintiff has the right to have determined by a jury. If the evidence in a case would authorize a jury to find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, the court is not at liberty to take the case from the jury, and substitute his own determination of that question for that of the jury. The rule is the same whether the court is asked to grant a nonsuit or to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant. In either case the motion should be denied if there is any evidence from which the jury would be authorized to find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff showed that the relation of passenger and carrier existed between him and the defendant at the time he received the injury, and there was also evidence tending to show that the injury was caused by the act of the defendant in the management and conduct of the train in which it had undertaken to carry him as a passenger. A prima facie case is established when the plaintiff shows that he was injured while being carried as a passenger by the defendant, and that the injury was caused by the manner in which the defendant used or directed some agency or instrumentality under its control. The carrier of passengers is required to exercise the highest degree of care in their transportation, and is responsible for injuries received by them while in the course of transportation, which might have been avoided by the exercise of such care. Hence, when it is shown that the injury to the passenger was caused by the act of the carrier in operating the instrumentalities employed in his business, there is a presumption of negligence which throws upon the carrier the burden of showing that the injury was sustained without any negligence on his part. The case then falls within the rule given by Shearman and Redfield on Negligence (section 59): "When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care." See, also, Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 460; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266; Bush v. Barnett, 96 Cal. 202, 31 Pac. 2; Judson v. Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 Pac. 1020; Madden v. Railroad Co., 50 Mo. App. 666; Dougherty v. Railroad Co., 81 Mo. 325; Lavis v. Railroad Co., 54 Ill. App. 637; Whart. Neg. § 661; Cooley, Torts, *663. At the time the plaintiff received the injury, the train had stopped at one of its regular stations upon the road, and after it had stopped was moved backward with a sudden jerk, and then suddenly forward, by reason of which the plaintiff lost his balance, and was compelled to steady himself by taking hold of the casing of the door. The evidence tended to show that the injury to him resulted from the manner in which the train was moved by the defendant after it had stopped. If the case had been submitted to the jury upon this evidence, it would have been sufficient to authorize a verdict in his favor (Bush v. Barnett, supra), and the court erred in directing a verdict for the defendant. It would appear that the door swung to by reason of the jerking of the train, and, if so, the sufficiency or extent to which it was fastened back by the conductor was immaterial. It cannot be said as a matter of law that the plaintiff, by leaving his seat after the train had stopped, and attempting to go to the platform for the purpose of meeting his son, was guilty of any negligence which contributed to his injury. The judgment and order are reversed.

Ex parte HENION. (Cr. 505.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1898.)

HABEAS CORPUS—MOOT CASES.

Habeas corpus cannot be resorted to, to obtain a speedy decision as to the validity of an ordinance, where petitioner is not in fact suffering imprisonment, or where the imprisonment terminates on the day of the hearing.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Solano county.

Petition by A. C. Henion for a writ of habeas corpus. Discharged.

C. P. Stevens, T. E. Dunlap, and J. A. Plummer, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. 'This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus.' At the hearing, it was shown that the petitioner was not in fact suffering imprisonment, and that the case was in its nature a moot case, by which a speedy decision was sought to be obtained upon the question of the validity of an ordinance of Solano county. Moreover, it was shown that the alleged imprisonment of petitioner would this day come to an end, and the judgment be fully executed by lapse of time. The business of this court between bona fide litigants is of altogether too great a magnitude to warrant or even to excuse us in pretending moot cases. The writ is discharged.

CLARE v. SACRAMENTO ELECTRIC POWER & LIGHT CO. (Sac. 372.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1898.)

APPEAL—DAMAGES—EXCESSIVENESS.

1. A verdict on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

2. Evidence that the hearing in one of plaintiff's ears had been permanently destroyed, that the sight of one eye had been seriously impaired, and that his nervous system had received a shock from which he might never recover, and which at the time of the trial impaired his facility for transacting his former business, warrants the granting of substantial damages, though the wages of plaintiff were not cut off or diminished by the injury, and he has not been subjected to any pecuniary loss.

3. A verdict for $2,000 for such injuries is not excessive.

4. The appellate tribunal cannot amend the transcript of record on the affidavits of appellant.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by Allan E. Clare against the Sacramento Electric Power & Light Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. T. Hatfield, for appellant. A. L. Hart, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for an injury alleged to have been sustained by him by reason of coming in contact with a wire used by the defendant to sustain one of the poles by which its trolley wire is supported, and which had been so negligently placed that, when the plaintiff came in contact with the wire, he received a current of electricity with which it had become charged, and was thereby permanently injured. The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $2,000.

The fact, as well as the extent of the plaintiff's injury, and whether it was caused by reason of the electric current, as well as whether the wire became charged with the electricity through the negligence of the defendant, were the issues which were submitted to the jury, and upon which evidence was introduced by each party. The evidence on the part of the plaintiff tended to support his allegations upon these issues, with which the evidence on the part of the defendant merely created a conflict, and the verdict of the jury thereon must be accepted as conclusive.

The jury were instructed that the plaintiff was not entitled to exemplary damages, but only such as would reasonably compensate him for the injuries which he had received; and it is urged by the plaintiff that, inasmuch as there was no evidence before the jury tending to show the amount of pecuniary injury which he had sustained, the amount of the verdict is not sustained by the evidence; that as he did not show that his earning capacity had been diminished by reason of the injury, or that he had been subjected to any pecuniary outlay or detriment, the jury should have given a verdict for only nominal damages. The evidence before the jury was such as to authorize them to find that the hearing in his left ear had been permanently destroyed; that the sight of his left eye had been seriously impaired; and that his nervous system had received a shock from which he might never recover, and which was such at the time of the trial as to impair his facility for transacting the business in which he had been engaged prior to the injury. In view of this evidence, it cannot be said that the jury disregarded the instructions of the court, or that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. There is no standard by which the value of an eye or of an ear or of a limb can be computed, or which will determine the amount of money which will compensate a person for the loss or impairment of one of his senses. The right to compensation for a personal injury is not dependent upon the fact that the wages of the injured person were cut off or diminished by reason of the injury, nor is the amount of compensation for such injury to be measured by the amount of his income or wages. In cases of this character, there can be no direct evidence of the amount of damage sustained, or the amount of money which will be a compensation for the injury; but it is sufficient to show to the jury the extent of the injury, and the amount of their verdict thereon is to be determined in the exercise of an intelligent discretion; and, unless the amount of the verdict is such as to indicate that it was given under passion or prejudice, it will be sustained. In view of the evidence in support of the injury to the plaintiff, the verdict in the present case cannot be regarded as excessive. Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266; Morgan v. Railway Co., 95 Cal. 501, 30 Pac. 601; Sloane v. Railroad Co., 111 Cal. 668, 44 Pac. 320.

Various exceptions were taken by the defendant to the rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence, and we have carefully examined the record and the exceptions so taken, but find therein nothing deserving of extended consideration, or which would justify a reversal of the judgment.

The record also contains certain instructions given to the jury by the court, but does not show that any exception was taken thereto, except to those given at the request of plaintiff, and in these we find no error.

The appellant has filed certain affidavits to the effect that other instructions of the court were excepted to on its behalf, and has asked that the statement on motion for a new trial be amended so as to show that fact. It is sufficient to say that the action of the trial court is to be reviewed here upon a transcript of the records of that court, and that we have no power to amend those records. The judgment and order are affirmed.

EDSALL v. SHORT et al. (ACKLEY, Intervener. S. F. 1,673.)

SUPREME COURT—APPELLATE JURISDICTION—JUSTICES' COURTS—EQUITY.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, cl. 1, authorizing an appeal to the supreme court in an action brought into the superior court from another court, does not apply to cases commenced in a justice's court, in which an appeal to the supreme court is denied by Const. art. 6, § 4.

2. Const. art. 6, § 11, giving justice's courts concurrent jurisdiction with superior courts in cases to enforce liens on chattels, where the amount of the liens and the value of the chattels does not exceed $300, does not give the supreme court jurisdiction of an appeal in such a case originally begun in a justice's court and appealed to the superior court; section 4 precluding the exercise of such jurisdiction in cases in equity arising in justices' courts.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Bert Edsall against William Short and another. Edward Ackley intervened. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial the intervener appeals. Dismissed.

Moses G. Cobb, for appellant. Thomas A. McGowan, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. Respondents move to dismiss this appeal upon the ground that it is not within the jurisdiction of the court. The case is this: The intervener, Ackley, obtained a judgment against the defendant Short. Defendant Whelan, who is sheriff of San Francisco, levied execution upon property of Short of a value less than $300. Edsall, for himself and as assignee of others claiming to have been employes of Short, made a demand upon Whelan, under the provisions of section 1206 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that he pay over to them the proceeds of the execution. The execution creditor, Ackley, disputed the indebtedness, and Edsall thereupon commenced an action in the justice's court to establish his own and the assigned claims, which altogether amounted to less than $300. Ackley intervened and contested the claims, but judgment passed for the plaintiff; and on appeal to the superior court, after a trial de novo, judgment was again given for the plaintiff. Ackley moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this is an appeal from that order.

Appellant, in opposition to the motion to dismiss, contends that this is a suit in equity, of which the superior court and justice's court had concurrent jurisdiction, or that it is a special proceeding, and that, having been brought into the superior court from the justice's court, an appeal lies to this court, under the first clause of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The mere fact that this case was brought into the superior court by an appeal cannot furnish the test of our appellate jurisdiction; for, if it did, there would be an ultimate appeal to this court in every action commenced before a justice of the peace. But if the case is one in which the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction, under the constitution, notwithstanding the fact that it was commenced in the justice's court, the practice of taking an appeal first to the superior court, and next to this court, is probably correct, in view of the first clause of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The question, however, is not as to the correct practice in such a case, but is a question as to the jurisdiction conferred upon this court by the constitution. Turning to that instrument, we find that the legislature is inhibited from conferring upon justices' courts concurrent jurisdiction with the superior courts, except in cases of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, and in cases to enforce and foreclose liens on personal property when neither the amount of the lien nor the value of the property amounts to $300. Const. art. 6, § 11. There can be no concurrent jurisdiction in the two courts of any special proceeding other than these two, and, since it is not pretended that this is an action in forcible entry or unlawful detainer, there was no concurrent jurisdiction, unless it was an action to enforce and foreclose liens, and therefore an action in equity. Conceding, without deciding, that such was the case, it is specially excepted from the appellate jurisdiction of this court by the fact that it arose in the justice's court. Id. § 4. If it was not an action to enforce or foreclose liens, it was not a special proceeding at all, but an ordinary action for wages due; the only thing to distinguish it from such an action being the fact that the claim, when established, would be the subject of a preferred lien upon the fund in the hands of the sheriff. In whichever light, therefore, it may be regarded,—as a suit in equity, or as an action at law,—no appeal lies to this court from the judgment or any order in the case. Appeal dismissed.

In re SHEID'S ESTATE.

CLAY et al. v. WALL (two cases. L. A. 451, 504).

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1898.)

PREMATURE APPEAL—PROBATE PRACTICE—PETITION FOR DISTRIBUTION.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1704, requiring orders and decrees to be entered on the court's minute book, and section 1715, requiring appeals to be taken within 60 days after entry of the order or judgment, an appeal from the findings and conclusions of law of a probate court directing the distribution of an estate, taken before the entry of a decree thereon, is premature.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1634, permits the personal representative of the deceased to file a petition for distribution with his final account. Section 1665 provides that on final settlement or thereafter the court shall make a distribution on application of the personal representative or the distributees. Section 1664 authorizes persons claiming to be distributees to apply for an order ascertaining the distributees after one year from the granting of administration. Held, that the court has no jurisdiction of a petition for distribution, filed by an alleged distributee before the expiration of a year after the granting of administration, after filing of the final account and before settlement thereof.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeals from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Petition by Mary T. Wall for a distribution to her of the estate of W. T. Sheid, deceased. From a finding that petitioner was entitled to distribution, and from a decree thereon, respectively, S. B. Clay and others appeal. The former appeal was dismissed, and judgment under the latter reversed.

Chas. A. Palmer and F. A. Dorn, for appellants. Lenham & McCall and Venable & Goodchild, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Respondent, Mary T. Wall, filed her petition asking that said estate (consisting principally of real estate, of which there were several parcels) be distributed to her as the sole heir of said decedent, who died intestate. Appellants contested her heirship and right to distribution. Upon the hearing the court made findings of fact and conclusions of law in her favor, followed by the words: "Let distribution of said estate be made accordingly." Before the entry of any order or decree thereon, the first of these appeals (No. 451) was taken, and respondent contends that it was premature, and must be dismissed.

Section 1704, Code Civ. Proc., provides that "all orders and decrees of the court or judge must be entered at length in the minute book of the court," and it is obvious that such order or decree, when it provides for the distribution of an estate, must describe the property distributed; and section 1715, Id., provides that "the appeal must be taken within 60 days after the order, decree, or judgment is entered"; "and for the purposes of an appeal it is 'entered' when it is entered at large upon the minutes." In re Blythe's Estate, 110 Cal. 226, 42 Pac. 641. This appeal (No. 451) was therefore premature, and should be dismissed.

The second of these appeals (No. 504) is taken by the same contestants from the judgment or decree subsequently made and entered pursuant to said findings and order. The transcripts in the two appeals are identically the same, except that the second transcript sets out the judgment which was entered after the first appeal was taken. The record contains two bills of exceptions, setting out the proceedings so far as is necessary to a decision of the questions made.

1. It is contended by appellants that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition for distribution, or to make any order directing distribution of the estate, or to determine who were the legal heirs of the deceased, for the reason that the petition therefor was prematurely filed. W. T. Sheid died intestate March 9, 1896, leaving an estate consisting of real and personal property. An administrator was appointed March 25, 1896, and letters of administration were issued to him on April 9, 1896. On May 2d notice to creditors was given, allowing 10 months for the presentation of claims; and on April 3, 1897, the administrator filed his final account, which was allowed and settled on April 15, 1897. On April 5, 1897, Mary T. Wall, claiming to be the only child and sole heir at law of the deceased, filed her petition for the distribution of said estate to her, and notice was given that said petition would be heard on April 20, 1897. A demurrer to this petition was interposed by appellants, and was overruled by the court, and contestants thereupon answered, denying that petitioner was the daughter of the deceased, or an heir at law, or was entitled to any interest in said estate; and also pleaded that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain or hear said petition, for reasons the substance of which is as follows: (a) That the same was filed here-in before the expiration of one year from the issuing of letters of administration upon said estate; (b) that said petition was filed before the settlement of the final account of the administrator; (c) that the same was not filed with the final or any account of the administrator. There are four leading sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the distribution of estates of deceased persons. Under article 2, c. 10, entitled "Accounting and Settlements by Executors and Administrators," section 1634 provides: "If the account mentioned in the preceding section be for a final settlement, and a petition for the final distribution of the estate be filed with said account, the notice of settlement must state those facts, which notice must be given by posting or publication for at least ten days prior to the day of settlement. On the settlement of said account, distribution and partition of the estate to all entitled thereto may be immediately had without further notice or proceedings." St. 1891, p. 428. Article 1 of chapter 11 provides for "Partial Distribution Prior to Final Settlement," and permits any heir, devisee, or legatee, at any time after the lapse of four months from the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration, to petition the court for his share of the estate to be given to him, upon giving bond, etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 1658. Article 2 of chapter 11 is entitled "Distribution on Final Settlement." The first section under this article (Code Civ. Proc. § 1664) relates to "determining heirship and title to estate," and permits any person claiming to be entitled to distribution in whole or in part of such estate, "at any time after the expiration of one year from the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration upon such estate," to file a petition "praying the court to ascertain and declare the rights of all persons to said estate, and all interests therein, and to whom distribution thereof should be made." This section is very long, and provides for the proceedings to be had therein, the effect of the judgment, etc. Section 1665, Code Civ. Proc., is, in part, as follows: "Upon the final settlement of the accounts of the executor or administrator, or at any subsequent time upon the application of the executor or administrator, or of any heir, legatee or devisee, the court must proceed to distribute the residue of the estate in the hands of the executor or administrator, if any, among the persons who by law are entitled thereto * * *." Said section 1634 permits the executor or administrator to file with his final account a petition for distribution; but whether any one else may do so it is not necessary to decide, inasmuch as in this case the petition for distribution was not filed with the final account, and was filed before the account was settled. Heirs, devisees, and legatees are not mentioned in that section, while they are mentioned in section 1658, providing for partial distribution, and in section 1665, where it is provided that at any time subsequent to the settlement of the final account they may apply to the court for distribution. Aside from the provision in regard to partial distribution, the only express authority for the heir, devisee, or legatee to apply for distribution is found in section 1665, and such application is limited to any time "subsequent" to the final settlement of the accounts. If, therefore, it be conceded that the heir might have filed her petition at the same time, or with the filing of the final account of the administrator, she did not do so, and, having so failed, she could not regularly do so until after the final account was settled; or, if her petition be regarded as one to determine heirship, as it was filed before the expiration of one year from the issuing of letters of administration, it was premature, and conferred no authority upon the court to entertain it. The provision in section 1634, permitting a petition for distribution to be filed "with" the final account, was probably intended to enable the administrator to hasten the closing of the estate, and to make one notice and one hearing serve both purposes. But, whatever the reason may be, we find no authority for filing a petition for distribution at any time prior to the settlement of the final account, unless it is filed "with" it. This is a special proceeding based upon the statute, and involving title to property, both real and personal, and in which the jurisdiction of the court can be acquired only by the observance of its provisions. Smith v. Westerfield, 88 Cal. 379, 26 Pac. 206. As the petition of respondent was filed after the final account was filed, and before it was settled, the judgment should be reversed, and her petition dismissed.

After respondent's petition was filed, viz. on April 10, 1897, and after the expiration of a year from the issuance of letters of administration, appellants, claiming to be the only heirs of said intestate, filed their petition under the provisions of section 1664, Code Civ. Proc., for the purpose of determining who were the heirs of said intestate, and entitled to said estate. Notice was duly given to all persons interested to appear and show cause against said petition on July 15, 1897. The hearing of respondent's petition for distribution was concluded, and the findings therein filed, on June 24, 1897, and before the time designated for the hearing of appellants' said petition. If the petition of respondent for distribution had been filed at the proper time, all the questions made thereunder to determine heirship and title to the estate could have been properly determined under it. In re Oxarart, 78 Cal. 109, 20 Pac. 367.

The question as to whether the court erred in refusing a continuance of the hearing until the return of a certain commission to take depositions need not be considered.

Appellants also contend that the court erred in denying their demand for a jury to try the issues of fact raised by said petition and the answer thereto. As we cannot assume that upon a new proceeding for distribution, or to determine the question of heirship, a jury will be demanded, or, if demanded, be denied, no opinion is expressed upon it, further than to say that said issue is of a character which would render its submission to a jury entirely proper. We advise that the first appeal (No. 451) be dismissed, and that the judgment from which the second appeal (No. 504) is taken be reversed, with directions to dismiss respondent's petition.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the first appeal (No. 451) is dismissed, and the judgment from which the second appeal (No. 504) is taken is reversed, with directions to dismiss respondent's petition,

—DEFECTS—PLEADING—UNCERTAINTY
—DEMURRER.

1. The street improvement act (section 9), authorizing a second assessment where an action to foreclose a lien for street work is defeated by reason of a defective assessment, does not authorize a second assessment where such an action is defeated for want of an engineer's certificate.

2. A demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a lien for street work, alleging that a second assessment had been made under the street improvement act (section 9) for the reason that the prior assessment and engineer's certificate were "never duly or properly or legally recorded," should be sustained for uncertainty, as the statement as to the defects in the first assessment is merely a legal conclusion.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by William Ede against Joseph Cuneo and others. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. J. P. Langhorne, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The complaint is in the ordinary form for the foreclosure of the lien of a street assessment, and alleges that the contract for doing the work was entered into August 13, 1890, and completed within the time fixed therefor, and that an assessment for the work was issued July 6, 1896. It alleges that on the 16th of November, 1891, the superintendent of streets issued an assessment for the work, with a warrant and diagram attached, upon which a suit was commenced, and in which a final judgment was entered against the plaintiffs therein, and that it appears by said final judgment that the plaintiffs were defeated by reason of the fact that neither the assessment, diagram, warrant, nor engineer's certificates were duly or properly recorded in the office of the superintendent of streets; that within three months after the entry of said final judgment, upon the application of an interested party, the superintendent of streets made another assessment, with diagram and warrant attached, upon which a suit was subsequently brought, and in which a final judgment was rendered that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover thereon; that it appears by the final judgment rendered in the last-named action that the plaintiff was defeated by reason of the fact that the city engineer had never made any engineer's certificate of the work, and that the assessment, diagram, warrant, or purported engineer's certificate had not been duly or properly or legally recorded in the office of the superintendent of streets; that within three months after the entry of this judgment the superintendent of streets made and issued the assessment, diagram, and warrant upon which the present action is brought. It is alleged that the suit upon the second assessment was entitled "Joseph Wells, Assignee of Said Contract, Plaintiff, against J. W. McDonald, Defendant," but the connection of either of these parties with the subject-matter of the suit is not shown. There is no direct allegation that the contract or the assessment was ever assigned to Wells, and it is alleged that Buckman and Perrine, assignees of Vincent, to whom the contract was awarded, did all the work of the contract. Neither is there any allegation that McDonald had any interest in the land assessed, while it is alleged that the defendants herein were the owners of said land during all the times of taking the proceedings for the improvement. To this complaint the defendants demurred upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and also upon the ground that it was uncertain in failing to show the particular defects, omissions, and irregularities in the assessments upon which the court determined that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The court sustained the demurrer, and from the judgment thereon in favor of the defendants the plaintiff has appealed.

Section 9 of the street improvement act provides: "Whenever it shall appear by any final judgment of any court in this state that any suit brought to foreclose the lien of any sum of money assessed to cover the expense of any street work done under the provisions of this act, has been defeated by reason of any defect, error, informality, omission, irregularity or illegality in any assessment hereafter to be made and issued, or in the recording thereof, or in the return thereof, made to or recorded by said superintendent of streets, any person interested therein may at any time within three months after the entry of said final judgment" apply to the superintendent of streets, and have issued to him another assessment in conformity to law. The authority of the superintendent of streets to issue a second assessment, as well as the validity of the assessment thus issued is purely statutory, and such assessment can be issued only under the conditions therein prescribed. The statute does not authorize a second assessment in all cases in which the plaintiff shall fail to obtain a judgment in his favor upon the prior one, but has specified certain grounds of his defeat as the only ones which will authorize the issuance of a second assessment, and has designated the evidence by which the fact and cause of his defeat is to be shown. It has not authorized a second assessment merely because the prior one did not create a lien upon the land assessed, or because there was an error, defect, or omission in any other document or proceeding requisite to create a lien than "in the assessment, or in the recording thereof, or the return thereof, made to or recorded by the superintendent of streets"; and it has declared that the evidence upon which the superintendent of streets is authorized to issue a second assessment, and which is to be presented to him therefor, is a final judgment in a suit upon the former assessment, in which it will appear that the suit was defeated by reason of such defect. In Gray v. Lucas, 115 Cal. 430, 47 Pac. 354, it was said: "Under this provision of the statute the right to a second assessment does not exist, unless it 'appear' by the final judgment in a suit upon the prior assessment that the suit was defeated by reason of some infirmity in the 'assessment,' or in the recording thereof, or in some matter connected with the return of the warrant. If the suit is defeated by reason of a defect or infirmity in any other step taken in the proceedings, or by reason of a lack of evidence, or failure to prove any other fact essential to a recovery, the statute does not apply." It is unnecessary to consider the defects alleged to have existed in the assessment originally issued for the work, since, unless the conditions required by the statute for the issuance of a second assessment existed at the time the superintendent made the assessment upon which the present action is brought, this assessment was unauthorized, and created no right of action or lien upon the property assessed. Whatever may have been the defects in the original assessment, a subsequent one had been issued, and it was necessary for the plaintiff to allege facts which would authorize the issuance of another, otherwise it would be assumed that the second one was correct; and, as against the pleader, it must be assumed that there were no other defects in regard to the second assessment than he has alleged. These are that in the suit of Wells against McDonald the plaintiff was defeated "by reason of defects, errors, informalities, omissions, irregularities, and illegalities in recording said last-mentioned assessment, diagram, warrant, and purported engineer's certificates, and the failure of the city engineer of said city and county to make any engineer's certificate for said work, in this: that it appears from said last-mentioned final judgment as follows: That the city engineer of said city and county had at the time of said last-mentioned judgment never made any engineer's certificate of said work; that neither said last-mentioned assessment, diagram, warrant, nor purported engineer's certificates were duly, or properly, or legally recorded in the office of said superintendent of streets." The words used at the close of this allegation of the cause of the defeat, viz. "in this: that it appears from said last-mentioned final judgment," limit the allegation in general terms of the cause of the defeat to the defects thus enumerated, and show that the failure of the plaintiffs to recover judgment was not the result of any defect in the assessment, but from the fact that the city engineer had never made any certificate of the work. In Gray v. Lucas, supra, it was held that the certificate of the engineer is no part of the assessment, and that the mere want of such certificate did not constitute a defect in the "assessment" which would authorize the superintendent of streets to issue a second assessment. A distinction is observed by the statute itself (section 9) between the several documents essential to the creation of a lien, each of which is to be complete in itself. In Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512, it was held that the assessment must be authenticated by the signature of the superintendent, and that his signature to the warrant attached thereto was insufficient. See, also, Shipman v. Forbes, 97 Cal. 572, 32 Pac. 599. As the provision of section 9, above quoted, does not authorize the issuance of a second assessment for a defect or omission in respect to any other document essential to the creation of a lien than the "assessment," if we should hold that its provisions include defects or omissions in reference to other documents we would be adding terms to the statute which the legislature has not seen fit to enact.

The allegation in the complaint that the prior assessment, diagram, warrant, and purported engineer's certificates were "never duly or properly or legally recorded" in the office of the superintendent of streets, is the averment of a legal conclusion, and not of a fact. This allegation imports that the assessment was recorded, but whether it was "properly" or "legally" recorded was to be determined by the court upon the facts shown in reference thereto, and the opinion of the plaintiff as to the effect of these facts could not be substituted for the judgment of the court. He should have pointed out the defect in the record upon which he relies, in order that the court might determine whether it impaired its sufficiency. The demurrer upon the ground of uncertainty was also properly sustained. The plaintiff should have pointed out and specified the defects or omissions which appeared in the judgment as the ground upon which the suit upon the former assessment was defeated. The judgment is affirmed.

BENNETT v. WILSON et al. (Sac. 440.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1898.)

JUDGMENTS—CONCLUSIVENESS—FRAUD—EXECUTION
SALES—REDEMPTION—TENDER—CONFLICTING REDEMPTIONS—AGENCY—ACTION TO REDEEM—PARTIES.

1. Property was sold under execution, and a judgment lienor redeemed, and demanded a sheriff's deed. A junior judgment lienor redeemed afterwards, but before the deed was demanded, and paid the sheriff an amount sufficient to redeem from the prior judgment. Held that, as the prior lienor acquired the title of the purchaser under the execution sale, he had such an interest beyond the right of redemption as he was entitled to protect by showing that the subsequent judgment, though regular on its face, was void.

2. The rule that a judgment debtor may confess judgment before expiration of the time for redemption for the purpose of making the judgment creditor a redemptioner is inapplicable to judgments void for fraud as against a prior redemptioner.

3. While it is immaterial whence the money comes with which a redemption from an execution sale is offered to be made, it must be tendered by a lawful redemptioner.

4. A complaint to establish a right of redemption over another redemptioner by showing that the judgment under which the latter redeemed is void need not allege that there was a defense to such judgment on the merits.

5. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 704, authorizing the sheriff to receive money paid by a subsequent redemptioner from an execution sale for a prior redemptioner, the sheriff is not such an agent in receiving the money as will bind the prior redemptioner to accept it.

6. Where property has been redeemed from a purchaser under execution sale, such purchaser is not a necessary party to a suit by his redemptioner to enforce the right of redemption against a subsequent redemptioner.

7. A redemptioner of corporate property from execution sale does not prejudice a subsequent redemptioner who is a stockholder by joining the corporation with him in an action to establish as against him a prior right of redemption.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county.

Action by Sanford Bennett against J. B. Wilson and others. There was a judgment dismissing the complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Goodwin & Webb, for appellant. L. N. Peter and W. W. Kellogg, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to determine the invalidity of a certain judgment lien, and that the holder thereof is not a redemptioner, and that plaintiff, under his redemption, is entitled to sheriff's deed. A demurrer, interposed to the amended complaint upon several grounds, was sustained, and defendants had judgment dismissing the action, from which plaintiff appeals.

The facts alleged which are necessary to illustrate the main question discussed by counsel may be briefly stated. Defendant company is a foreign corporation, and owned and operated mining property in Plumas county. Defendant Bransford is sheriff of said county. Defendant Wilson is a stockholder in, and the managing agent and in actual control and management of, the property of defendant corporation. In 1885 one Swearingen obtained a judgment lien against the property of defendant corporation, which was sold on execution; and one Cole became the purchaser at sheriff's sale, July 18, 1896. The defendant corporation did not redeem. Plaintiff obtained a judgment lien before the time of redemption expired, and with it redeemed from the purchaser, and 60 days thereafter demanded a deed from the sheriff, which was refused, for the alleged reason that defendant Wilson was a lawful redemptioner, and had within the 60 days provided by law made redemption. Wilson's judgment lien was junior to plaintiff's. It is alleged that Wilson's judgment was obtained by fraudulent collusion between him and said sheriff, whereby the sheriff made a false return of service of summons on defendant corporation; that no service was in fact made, and said corporation had no knowledge or notice of the action commenced by Wilson, and did not appear or answer, and judgment was obtained by default, and said judgment is fraudulent and void. Plaintiff refused to accept the money tendered, and demanded a deed from the sheriff, which was refused.

The demurrer admits that defendant Wilson is seeking to enforce the rights of a redemptioner while holding a judgment which is void. Plaintiff admits that defendant Wilson paid to the sheriff money sufficient to fully redeem from plaintiff's judgment and the original judgment and all attendant costs, interests, and charges. Plaintiff's injury therefore consists, not in losing any money he has paid out, nor any of the money due on his judgment, but in losing whatever of advantage he might gain by acquiring the property of the judgment debtor.

The contention of appellant is: That the corporation debtor, by failure to redeem in time, lost all equitable title, to which plaintiff succeeded by redemption, and the corporation now holds only the naked legal title to be conveyed by the sheriff. The title being in this condition, defendant Wilson presented himself to the sheriff as a redemptioner, with a judgment regular in form, and must stand upon his strict legal rights arising from his judgment. He has no equities, nor can he urge any. That plaintiff acquired an inchoate right to the property by his redemption, and became the equitable owner, and that equity will protect him in the enjoyment of such right against a void judgment; and the judgment which gives the right to redeem must be a bona fide existing judgment. The position of respondents, briefly stated, is: That the Wilson judgment, being regular on its face, is valid as against the corporation until the latter proceeds to set it aside, and became a valid lien at its entry. If it was a fraud on the corporation, it was not such on plaintiff, as it was subordinate to his judgment. No collusion is charged between Wilson and the corporation, and no rights of plaintiff have been violated. He has received all he can rightfully ask, and has shown no injury by Wilson's redemption, and no relief can be asked where no injury is shown. That Wilson's judgment was voidable, but not void; and no person not a party to the original action can be heard to call it in question in equity unless the rights of such person were injuriously affected by it at its rendition. That plaintiff does not seek to set aside Wilson's judgment, but to have it declared not to be a lien, as entitling Wilson to the right of redemption, and the attack is collateral, and not direct.

1. There is no dispute that Wilson on the face of his judgment was a redemptioner, under section 701, Code Civ. Proc., and the only question is: Can plaintiff, as a prior redemptioner, prevent Wilson from redeeming by showing that his judgment is void? Plaintiff, by his redemption from the purchaser, acquired something more than a lien by which was secured the right to be reimbursed what he had paid out, and the amount of his judgment and attendant charges. He succeeded to the rights of the purchaser, to which are to be added the rights of a redemptioner. The interest of the purchaser has been defined to be "an inchoate right, which may be perfected into a perfect title, without any further act than the execution of a deed in pursuance of a sale already made. * * * The purchaser has already bought the land, and paid for it. The sale is simply a conditional one, which may be defeated by the payment of a certain sum by certain designated parties, within a limited time." Page v. Rogers, 31 Cal. 294. It was there shown that the purchaser acquires an equitable estate in the lands, and, although conditional, it may become absolute by mere lapse of time. The legal title remains in the judgment debtor, with a right to defeat the sale within the statutory time, failing in which the estate of the purchaser becomes indefeasible, and only the dry, naked title remains in the judgment debtor, which may be divested by the sheriff's deed; and during this redemption period the statute regards the purchaser as the owner in equity, and gives him the rents and profits. As a further incident of this estate, it is shown that the purchaser's interest may be attached and sold on execution both before and after the expiration of the time for redemption. Id. This case has been frequently cited, and the general propositions above stated were reaffirmed as late as Robinson v. Thornton, 102 Cal. 675, 34 Pac. 120. Section 700, Code Civ. Proc., provides that, where real estate is sold by a sheriff, "the purchaser is substituted to and acquires all the right, title, interest, and claim of the judgment debtor thereto," subject only to redemption as the statute prescribes. In Footman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. 680, it was held that a sheriff's certificate of sale of real property is the evidence of the equitable interest which the purchaser has in the land, and is an instrument whereby an interest or title is created, within the meaning of section 1107 of the Civil Code. See Freem. Ex'ns, § 323. See Walker v. McCusker, 71 Cal. 594, 12 Pac. 723, as to right of purchaser and redemptioner to rents, issues, and profits, under section 707, Code Civ. Proc. It seems to us very clear that the law should give to the holder of such an estate in land some appropriate proceeding by which to protect it against the operation or lien of a void judgment. "A void judgment is, in legal effect, no judgment. By it no rights are divested. From it no rights can be obtained. Being worthless in itself, all proceedings founded upon it are equally worthless. It neither binds nor bars any one." Freem. Judgm. § 117. The general rule is that none but the parties to a judgment can have it set aside. But this rule is not without its exceptions, and third parties—persons not nominal parties—who are necessarily affected by the judgment may be protected from its operation. Id. § 92.

Respondents urge with great earnestness that when plaintiff was tendered all he had paid out, and all penalties and the amount due on his judgment and interest, he had no right to ask more; and whether defendant Wilson's judgment was void or valid was of no concern to him. He was not injured, and only the judgment debtor could complain. It is true that only such strangers to the judgment as would be prejudiced thereby in some pre-existing right should be allowed to impeach the judgment. But we think the interest or estate vested in the purchaser or redemptioner, as already shown, was something more than the right to what respondents would limit him; and to permit plaintiff to be deprived of this estate by the lien of a void judgment would prejudice his pre-existing rights. Respondents claim under a judgment procured through alleged fraud,—a default judgment obtained against defendant corporation, that was never served with summons, and did not appear at the trial, and did not redeem from the sale. Plaintiff was not a party to that action, and had no opportunity to be heard in any way to impeach the validity of the judgment in that action. Unless he can do so by bill in equity, he can never have relief, but must surrender the rights acquired as a redemptioner under a valid judgment to a junior redemptioner who holds a judgment alleged to be void because the judgment debtor was not served with process, and void also because of alleged fraudulent collusion between the judgment creditor and the sheriff who made return of service. We think plaintiff's right of action comes clearly within the principles discussed by Mr. Freeman, and supported by the cases cited in his work upon Judgments, in sections 334-337. Among the cases cited is that of Downs v. Fuller, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 135. In that case the junior redemptioner (plaintiff) held a judgment obtained as the judgment is alleged to have been obtained in this case, i. e. without due service of summons; but no fraud was alleged. His offer to redeem was refused, and he brought a bill in equity to enforce redemption. Defendant pleaded that plaintiff's judgment was void, and his plea was sustained, and the bill dismissed. The court said: "Although the judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the present case was not recovered by collusion with the debtor, or with any fraudulent intention, yet we think the defendant has a right to avoid it in the same manner, because he is neither party nor privy to the plaintiff's judgment, and is not entitled by the rules of law to reverse it by a writ of error. This was so decided in Warter v. Perry, Cro. Eliz. 199, and in Randal's Case, 2 Mod. 308; and the same principle is laid down in Com. Dig. Error, D, and in 5 Dane, Abr. 255. This rule of law does not appear, in any case, to have been controverted; and it seems reasonable and just that where a judgment is recovered contrary to law, and prejudicial to a third party, he should have a right to avoid it." The principle was applied in favor of a junior judgment creditor who was permitted to show that a prior sale of the premises under execution was invalid. Clark v. Fowler, 5 Allen, 46. See other instances cited in note to Downs v. Fuller, supra. Downs v. Fuller is cited approvingly in Pierce v. Strickland, 26 Me. 277, and the principle was also fully affirmed in Caswell v. Caswell, 28 Me. 232.

Respondents cite several cases and Freeman on Executions to show that the judgment debtor may confess judgment before the time of redemption has expired for the express purpose of making the judgment creditor a redemptioner. It was held in McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365, that a creditor of a mortgagor, obtaining a judgment after sale under foreclosure, but before the execution of the conveyance thereunder, acquired a lien on the estate entitling him to redeem. And Mr. Freeman states that it is immaterial whether the judgment is the result of contested litigation, or was confessed for the purpose of creating a right to redeem after the sale was made. Freem. Ex'ns, § 317. But the cases cited and the author quoted have reference to valid judgments,—judgments confessed or entered in good faith. They can have no reference to a void judgment obtained by fraud, and without the knowledge or consent of the debtor.

People v. Doane, 17 Cal. 476, is cited to the proposition that it is immaterial whence the money comes with which redemption is offered to be made. That may be true, but it must be tendered by a lawful redemptioner. The statute declares who alone are redemptioners. In the case cited, the board of supervisors were empowered to redeem the property of the city and county of San Francisco; and having the power to protect the property, but having no money with which to redeem, it was held that the redemption was good, and it was immaterial who furnished the money.

Respondents further claim that the complaint is not sufficient, because it does not appear that there is any defense to Wilson's judgment on the merits; citing Freem. Judgm. § 486, and numerous California cases. The principles discussed in these cases relate to the rights of the parties to the action, and have no application to a case such as the present one. Respondents' contention would shut out relief where the judgment was collusive between the debtor and creditor, and had no merit whatever. It is because the judgment is in fact void, not because it might have been made valid, that the relief is afforded.

Respondents further contend that plaintiff is estopped by section 704, Code Civ. Proc. The part of the section relied upon reads: "The payment mentioned in the last two sections may be paid to the purchaser or redemptioner, or for him to the officer who made the sale." It is claimed that the sheriff is, by this section, made the agent for plaintiff, and payment to and acceptance by such sheriff (Bransford) of the money paid by Wilson on redemption was conclusive as against plaintiff. There is nothing in the point. The sheriff is authorized to receive the money of a redemptioner or a purchaser for a previous redemptioner; but the statute does not make the sheriff such an agent as that, by receiving the money, it would necessarily bind the purchaser or previous redemptioner to accept it.

2. It is claimed that there is a defect of parties defendant, because Cole, the purchaser of the property sold, was not made a party. The complaint shows that plaintiff redeemed from him. He is not a necessary party.

3. It is claimed that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant, because it does not appear from the complaint that the corporation is either a necessary or proper party. We do not at this moment see why the corporation should have been joined as a defendant, but we do not see that respondents would be injured thereby.

Respondents state in their brief that the trial judge overruled the demurrer upon the special grounds alleged, and sustained it on the general ground of insufficiency of facts. We think the court erred in sustaining the demurrer on the grounds alleged, and advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to the defendants to answer.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to defendants to answer.

WINCHESTER v. MABURY et al. (L. A. 376.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1898.)

CORPORATIONS—MISAPPROPRIATION BY OFFICERS—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS—REMEDY OF CREDITORS—EQUITY.

Under Const. art. 12, § 3, providing that "the directors or trustees of corporations and joint-stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint-stock association during the term of office of such director or trustee," the only proper remedy of a creditor of a bank, where certain sums of money are alleged to have been misappropriated by a certain officer thereof, is a bill in equity, in which all the creditors are parties or represented, and under which there can be an accounting, after all the facts have been ascertained, as the moneys misappropriated constitute a fund for the benefit of all the creditors who have been injured by such wrongful acts.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by John Winchester, trustee, against Hiram Mabury and others. From a judgment for defendants on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Withington & Carter and C. H. Rippey, for appellant. S. F. Leib and W. F. McNally, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action at law brought by the plaintiff, as assignee of some of the creditors of the Savings Bank of San Diego County, against Mabury, Howard, and Witherby, directors of said bank, for certain sums of money alleged to have been misappropriated by the defendant Bryant Howard, who was president, treasurer, etc., of the bank, for which it is alleged Mabury and Witherby were liable under the latter clause of section 3, art. 12, of the constitution of the state. That clause reads as follows: "The directors or trustees of corporations and joint-stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint-stock association during the term of office of such director or trustee." The defendant Mabury demurred to the complaint upon various grounds. The demurrer was sustained by the court below, and judgment was rendered for defendants, and from this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It is conceded that the alleged liability of the respondents rests entirely upon the clause of the constitution above quoted. There has never been any legislation with respect to said constitutional provision. No legislative act has been passed touching any character of action that may be brought under the provision, or defining its meaning, or referring to it in any manner whatever. Conceding, therefore, for the purposes of this case, that the clause of the constitution in question is self-executing, and requires no legislative aid in carrying it into effect, its meaning, the parties who may take advantage of it, and the form of action by which its provisions may be enforced, are all matters of judicial construction. Whether or not the averments in the complaint constitute "misappropriations," within the meaning of the constitution, and as construed in Fox v. Mining Co., 108 Cal. 422 et seq., 41 Pac. 308, need not, under our view of the case, be here determined. There are also some other questions raised by the demurrer which are not necessary to be here discussed. It is stated in the brief of appellant that the court below sustained the demurrer upon the ground that the action should be one in equity and for the benefit of all the creditors, and we think that the demurrer was properly sustained on that ground. The clause in question provides that in case of embezzlement or misappropriation the directors shall be liable "to the creditors and stockholders" for moneys embezzled or misappropriated, and the phrase "the creditors" evidently means all the creditors. For the purposes of this case, we need not consider the other phrase, "and stockholders." The moneys embezzled or misappropriated constitute a fund for the benefit of at least all the creditors who have been injured by the wrongful acts; and the only proper remedy in such a case is a bill in equity, where all the creditors are parties, or are represented, and in which there can be an accounting, and equities adjusted, after all the facts have been ascertained. The equitable principle applicable here is that, "as between creditors, equality is equity." Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 262, 11 N. E. 504. The above view is amply sustained by the authorities, and the rule cited has been held to apply even under statutes imposing liabilities like those here in question, which provide that "a creditor," or "any creditor," or "any person," wronged, etc., may sue. Our attention has not been called to any statutory or constitutional provision exactly like the one here involved; but there have been many decisions under statutes of states and of congress imposing liabilities of similar character on directors and officers of corporations, and the principles declared in those decisions are equally applicable to the case at bar.

The rule above stated is declared to be law in Mor. Priv. Corp. § 910, and reference is there made to the case of Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228. The syllabus of that case, which correctly states the matter decided, is as follows: "The act of congress (16 Stat. 98) under which certain corporations are organized in the District of Columbia contains a provision that, 'if the indebtedness of any company organized under this act shall at any time exceed the amount of its capital stock, the trustees of such company assenting thereto shall be personally and individually liable for such excess to the creditors of the company.' Held: (1) That an action at law cannot be sustained by one creditor among many for the liability thus created, or for any part of it, but that the remedy is in equity; (2) that this excess constitutes a fund for the benefit of all the creditors, so far as the condition of the company renders a resort to it necessary for the payment of its debts." In that case a demurrer had been sustained to the complaint, and Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The demurrer raises the right of a single creditor, among many, of the corporation, to bring his separate action at law for his own debt, and recover a judgment for it against the trustees, though the allegations of his declaration be true." After some discussion he says: "Nor can we believe that an act intended for the benefit of the creditors generally, when the bank proves insolvent, can be justly construed in such a manner that any one creditor can appropriate the whole or any part of this liability of the trustees to his own benefit, to the possible exclusion of all or of any part of the other creditors. But such may, and probably would, often be the result, if any one creditor could sue alone while there were others unsecured. We are of opinion that the fair and reasonable construction of the act is that the trustees who assent to an increase of the indebtedness of the corporation beyond its capital stock are to be held guilty of a violation of their trust; that congress intended that, so far as this excess of indebtedness over capital stock was necessary, they should make good the debts of the creditors who had been the sufferers by their breach of trust; that this liability constitutes a fund for the benefit of all the creditors who are entitled to share in it, in proportion to the amount of their debts, so far as may be necessary to pay these debts. The remedy for this violation of duty as trustees is in its nature appropriate to a court of chancery." He further says: "In the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, under the identical form of words which we are construing in the present case, it has been repeatedly decided that the only remedy is a suit in equity, in which all the creditors are parties, and that even in equity one creditor cannot sue alone, but must either join the other creditors, or bring his action on behalf of himself and all the others." In Stone v. Chisolm, 113 U. S. 302, 5 Sup. Ct. 497, it was held (we quote from the syllabus) as follows: "A suit in equity is the proper remedy, in the courts of the United States, to enforce the statutory liability of directors to a creditor of the corporation (organized under the act of legislature of South Carolina of December 10, 1869) by reason of the debts of the corporation being in excess of the capital stock. An action at law will not lie." Although the statute under review there provided that, when the officers of a company were liable, "any person to whom they are so liable may have an action against any one or more of said officers," still it was held that an action at law would not lie, but that a bill in equity was necessary, in which all creditors were made parties. Mr. Justice Matthews, in delivering the opinion of the court, said that the directors liable had a right to have all the facts determined "once for all, in a proceeding which shall conclude all who have an adverse interest, and a right to participate in the benefit to result from enforcing the liability. Otherwise, the facts which constitute the basis of liability might be determined differently by juries in several actions, by which some creditors might obtain satisfaction, and others be defeated. The evident intention of the provision is that the liability shall be for the common benefit of all entitled to enforce it, according to their interest, an apportionment of which, in case there cannot be satisfaction for all, can only be made in a single proceeding, to which all interested can be made parties. The case cannot be distinguished from that of Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228, the reasoning and result in which we reaffirm. It is immaterial that in the present case it does not appear that there are other creditors than the plaintiffs in error. There can be but one rule for construing the section, whether the creditors be one or many. To the question certified, therefore, it must be answered that an action at law will not lie, and that the only remedy is by a suit in equity." Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 42 N. E. 338, is a case where the question under consideration is fully discussed, and decided as above stated. The individual liability of stockholders, and their relation to the creditors of a corporation, are not the same in the state of New York as they are here, and there is some discussion in the opinion in that case which is not relevant here, and it seems to have been held that an action to enforce the liabilities of directors guilty of misconduct could not be maintained until after the usual remedies against the corporation itself had been resorted to, and all those parts of the opinion are not in point here; but it was there held that in no event could the liability of the directors be enforced except by suit in equity. The full syllabus of that case, which shows accurately what was decided, is as follows: "The personal liability imposed by the provisions of section 24 of the stock corporation law (chapter 564, Laws 1890, as amended by chapter 688, Laws 1892), to the effect that the directors of a stock corporation creating or consenting to the creation of any debt of the corporation unsecured by mortgage, in excess of its paid-up capital stock, 'shall be personally liable therefor to the creditors of the corporation,' is secondary, and can be resorted to only after the usual remedies against the corporation itself have been exhausted, and then can be enforced only by a suit in equity, where all the creditors and the corporation itself are parties or represented, where an accounting can be had, all the facts ascertained, and equities adjusted." See, also, Shoe Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Sup.) 35 S. W. 473; Bank v. Stevenson, 10 Gray, 232. The fact that the language to be construed here is a part of the constitution of the state, and not a statutory provision, makes no difference. The rules of construction by which the meaning of the language is to be ascertained, and the rights and remedies which grow out of it, are the same, no matter where the language to be construed is found. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PORTER v. LASSEN COUNTY LAND & CATTLE CO. et al. (Sac. 459.)

APPEAL—NECESSARY PARTIES.

A defendant, who held a second mortgage, conditioned that, if the first mortgage was foreclosed, his mortgage should not be foreclosed, by cross complaint or otherwise, and who answered a foreclosure action, praying the application of surplus, if any, to his mortgage debt, and who was by the decree adjudged to hold a second mortgage, on which a certain amount of money was due, is a necessary adverse party, on whom notice must have been served of an appeal from such decree, though it merely directed the payment of the surplus into court to await a further order.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

Action by Benjamin F. Porter against the Lassen County Land & Cattle Company and others. There was a decree for plaintiff, and defendant cattle company appealed. Dismissed.

Spencer & Raker, for appellant. A. E. Bolton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendant the Lassen County Land & Cattle Company from an order of the court below denying its motion for a new trial. With the final submission of the case here there was also submitted a motion by the respondent to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the defendant George K. Porter was not served with notice of appeal. In our opinion, the motion to dismiss the appeal should be granted. The action was brought by the plaintiff, B. F. Porter, to foreclose a mortgage executed to him by the corporation defendant on the 28th day of January, 1893. The said George K. Porter was made a party defendant; it being averred in the complaint that he claimed some interest in the lands and premises mortgaged, which, it was alleged, was subsequent and subordinate to the mortgage of plaintiff. George K. Porter filed an answer, in which, after denying certain averments of the complaint as to the nonpayment of certain amounts due on plaintiff's mortgage, he averred that subsequent to the date of plaintiff's mortgage, to wit, on January 22, 1894, the said corporation defendant executed to him a mortgage upon the property described in the complaint, as well as upon certain other property, to secure the sum of $16,061.50. This mortgage was set out in full in his answer, and it provided that, in the event of a suit brought by plaintiff to foreclose his mortgage, George K. Porter should not ask to have his mortgage foreclosed, by cross complaint or otherwise, and that he should not ask to have his mortgage foreclosed, except in a separate action brought by him. He averred in his answer that no part of the principal or interest of his mortgage had been paid, and prayed "that the proceeds of sale of the mortgaged premises over and above the amount found due to the plaintiff be applied to the payment of the amount found due to this defendant, and that he have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises." The court found that a mortgage had been executed by the corporation to George K. Porter, as averred in his answer, to secure the said sum of $16,061.50, and that no part of the principal or interest thereof had been paid. It was further found and decreed that any balance that should remain after paying the amount due on plaintiff's mortgage, with costs, expenses of sale, etc., should be "paid into court to await the further order and judgment of said court." Appellant's notice of appeal was not addressed to, or served upon, the said George K. Porter. George K. Porter was an adverse party, upon whom the notice of appeal should have been served, within the rule declared by numerous decisions of this court. In re Castle Dome Mining & Smelting Co., 79 Cal. 246, 21 Pac. 746, and cases there cited; Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103; Lancaster v. Maxwell, 103 Cal. 67, 36 Pac. 951; Society v. Lewis, 111 Cal. 519, 44 Pac. 175. It was adjudged that he held a subsequent mortgage on the premises described in the complaint, and that a certain amount of money was due thereon; and, under the decision, he was entitled to have any surplus of the proceeds of the sale, over and above that necessary to satisfy the plaintiff's judgment, applied on his mortgage. He seemed to have been satisfied with the judgment, as he did not appeal from it, and he was interested in having his rights under the judgment maintained. A reversal would have altered his position, and left him without his right to said surplus. He was a second mortgagee, with certain rights secured to him by the judgment. His position of advantage as to the surplus was not affected by the fact that the court in its decree did not expressly declare that he was entitled to the surplus. The surplus was ordered to be paid into court, "to await the further order and judgment" of the court, and he was entitled to have the surplus under such further order and judgment. He was, therefore, an adverse party, upon whom it was necessary to serve the notice of appeal in order to give this court jurisdiction thereof. The appeal is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. WORTHINGTON. (Cr. 474.)

MURDER—EVIDENCE—MANSLAUGHTER—INSTRUCTIONS—MENTAL CONDITION—ANIMUS OF WITNESS.

1. Shortly prior to the killing, accused had a fight with deceased and his son, during which accused threatened to get his gun. Being separated, accused went to the house, and, on seeing a man coming towards it, procured a gun and extra shells, and awaited the arrival of the man, who turned out to be deceased. An altercation arose, and, when a distance of several paces divided them, accused told deceased to come no nearer, which command being unheeded, he shot him. Held, that a verdict of murder would not be disturbed, since the question whether the two affrays were separate and distinct encounters was for the jury.

2. A homicide is not manslaughter because defendant had shortly prior thereto become incapable of acting with deliberation and premeditation, by reason of injuries inflicted on him, unless they were caused by the unlawful act of deceased.

3. An instruction that if, at the time of the homicide, accused was suffering from injuries, so as to be in a dazed condition of mind, impairing his faculties, that must be considered in determining whether he was guilty of murder or of any criminal offense, and that no one is guilty of murder unless at the time of committing the act he is able to act deliberately, sufficiently submits the issue of the effect on accused's mind of injuries inflicted on him by deceased shortly before the homicide.

4. Where accused testified that immediately following a fight with deceased, after which he had gone into the house, he saw a man coming towards it; that he knew the man was coming after him, and then he got his gun, and, after having repeatedly warned him to keep away, shot him while he was approaching and threatening to kill accused,—the issue of accused's irresponsibility by reason of injuries inflicted on him shortly prior thereto need not be submitted.

5. Where the homicide was committed shortly after a fight between accused and deceased, which had terminated, and during which deceased used no deadly weapon, the question who was the aggressor in such fight is immaterial.

6. In a prosecution for homicide, a witness' animus is sufficiently established by showing that he is a son of deceased, and that he was an active participant in behalf of his father in a fight between the parties shortly preceding the homicide.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Charles Worthington was convicted of murder, and from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

F. H. Short and N. C. Coldwell, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. His counsel now strenuously contend that the evidence, at most, only shows a case of manslaughter. The facts surrounding the homicide are few, and it can hardly be said that a substantial conflict is disclosed by the evidence upon any important matter. The defendant, Worthington, the deceased, Motley, and Capt. Motley, his son, all worked upon a ranch. In its general features the trouble may be pictured by the following statement: In the early morning, angry words arose between the deceased and the defendant, and they engaged in a scuffle. Thereupon, possibly at the suggestion of the deceased, his son injected himself into the altercation, and struck the defendant a violent blow upon the head with a heavy stick. Thereafter the defendant struck deceased with a stick, and the parties were then separated. Defendant at this time threatened to go to the house and get his gun. The deceased and his son turned towards the barn, and defendant proceeded to the house, a distance of 413 feet. Almost upon his arrival at the house, he saw a man coming from the direction of the barn. He thereupon secured from the Japanese cook a loaded shotgun and some extra shells, which he placed in his pocket, and, standing upon the porch, awaited the arrival of the man, who at this time was disclosed to be the deceased. When a distance of several paces still divided them, angry words arose, the defendant testifying to the effect that he "ordered the deceased to come no nearer, but deceased gave the command no heed, whereupon he fired both barrels of the gun, inflicting mortal wounds." The deceased was unarmed.

If this lamentable occurrence from beginning to end may be said to comprise but a single broil or affray, then the killing by the defendant of the deceased may well have been declared by the jury to have constituted the crime of manslaughter; but, if the immediate affray resulting in the death of the deceased may be considered as a separate and distinct encounter,—and this was a pure question of fact for the jury,—then, clearly, this court cannot say in law that the killing was not murder. The first trouble may well have filled the heart of the defendant with malice,—a malice that satisfied itself only with Motley's death. The deceased was not armed when killed. He was several paces distant, standing upon the ground. The defendant was upon the porch, at an elevation of several feet, with his gun loaded and ready, and extra ammunition at hand. It was an open question, also, whether deceased came to the house in pursuit of defendant. Again, before going to the house, defendant had threatened to use his gun. Under all these circumstances, we are not prepared to say that the evidence is too weak to support a verdict of murder. In People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26, the question here presented is fully discussed, and the conclusion now declared is in direct line with the views of the court as embodied in that decision.

There was no claim made at the trial that defendant was insane, but a great number of instructions—entirely too many under any conceivable state of facts—were asked by defendant to be given to the jury bearing upon the condition of defendant's mind, viewed in the light of the blow upon his head administered by the son of the deceased. There is some evidence that this blow was given by the son at the request of his father, and for that reason it may be conceded that the case as to this branch of it stands exactly as though the blow had been given by the deceased himself. For present purposes, it may also be conceded that the blow was unjustified by the law. Upon close inspection, we find these instructions differ more in form than in substance. They were refused, and, as illustrative of the general principle attempted to be covered by them, we cite the following: "If you believe, gentlemen of the jury, from the evidence, that in the same combat in which the fatal shot was fired, or immediately prior thereto, the defendant received at the hands of the deceased, or his son acting by his direction, such injuries as produced in him a dazed condition of mind, impairing his reasoning faculties, judgment, and powers of perception, and that, after receiving such injury, the defendant in good faith abandoned such struggle, and notified the deceased of his so doing, and thereafter the deceased followed the defendant, and used towards him threatening and abusive language, and advanced upon him, and that at that time the defendant was in a dazed condition of mind, and his faculties, judgment, and powers of perception were impaired by reason of having just before received such injury, and that he (the defendant) was not at that time capable of acting with deliberation, premeditation, and clearness, but was dazed and uncertain and apprehensive of mind, by reason of said blow, and his condition resulting therefrom under such state of facts,—if you find the same to be the facts from the evidence in this case,—you cannot find the defendant guilty of murder, but must find him not guilty of murder."

It is attempted by the aforesaid instructions, illustrated by the one quoted, to raise the novel proposition of law discussed at length in the case of People v. Button, 106 Cal. 628, 39 Pac. 1073; but, in passing, it might be well suggested that the principle discussed in that case may almost be said to be a new departure or a new principle in criminal law. The facts of the two cases are entirely different in this: that in the Button Case the deceased had received the blow upon the head, while here the defendant received the blow. And, if we should consider a second application of the principle upon a different state of facts, we would be groping to some extent in unknown seas. In the application of the principle contended for by defendant's counsel, this variance in the facts of the two cases may not be material, and the principle of law may be equally invokable in both. Yet in the present case we will not enter into a discussion of that matter, for the record does not squarely present the question. This is apparent from the reasons hereinafter stated.

As an incidental objection to this class of instructions, we find in substantially all of them inherent defects, some of these defects appearing in one, others appearing in another. For example, in the instruction quoted, a vital element is omitted, the presence of which element is absolutely necessary in order that the principle contended for might be presented. This defect is found in the fact that the unlawfulness of the blow inflicted by the deceased or his son upon defendant's head is a material element; yet the instruction makes no mention of it. If the blow was justified in law, then the fact that it was received at the hands of deceased or his son is wholly immaterial, and the case under such circumstances would stand exactly as though it were administered by a stranger. Conceding defendant was in a dazed condition of mind, if such condition was not caused by the unlawful act of the deceased, then, surely, the defendant may not be held guiltless of murder of the second degree, at least. Voluntary intoxication may prove such a condition of mind; yet a defendant is not guiltless of crime for that reason. If this condition of mind is not produced by the deceased, and does not amount to insanity, then the defendant may not be acquitted of the crime of murder for such reason.

Presumably in the exercise of extreme caution, the trial court gave the jury the two following instructions, bearing generally upon the proposition under discussion, and, if instructions were demanded, they fairly and sufficiently cover the ground: "If you believe from the evidence that, at the time of the killing, the defendant was in pain and suffering from a painful injury inflicted upon his head a few minutes before by a blow received from a heavy club, sufficient to produce a dazed condition of mind, and impairing the reasoning faculties, judgment, and powers of perception of the defendant, then you should take such condition of the facts and circumstances into consideration in determining whether the defendant was guilty of murder or any criminal offense at the time he fired the shot resulting in the death of the deceased." "No person can be found guilty of the crime of murder unless he is at the time in such a condition of mind that he is able to act with deliberation and premeditation; and, if you find from the evidence that the defendant at the time of the killing was not in such a condition of mind, you cannot find him, the defendant, guilty of murder, but must acquit him of that offense." In view of the giving of the instructions just quoted, the court was justified in declining to go to greater depths in the matter of further instructions to the jury upon this question of the condition of defendant's mind at the time of the killing. This is so for the additional reason that the evidence does not justify it. While the doctors testified to the nature of the wound upon defendant's head, and gave their opinions as to the possible temporary results following to him in the nature of concussion, etc., from such wound, yet defendant's own evidence shows that he was in no such dazed condition of mind as is pictured for him by the instructions refused. Let us look at his mind in the light of his account of the killing, commencing at his arrival at the house. We quote: "I seen a man coming from the barn. I couldn't tell exactly who it was at that time. I knew it was one of the men coming after me, because I knew they had not done their work, and they had no other business at the house. So, I rushed to the door, and told Ben, the cook, to get me the gun. Ben came and got the gun for me as quick as he could, and I walked out on the porch; and Mr. Motley was coming then six or seven feet, I suppose, from the porch, and he says: 'Get off this ranch, you damned son of a bitch, or I will kill you.' I says: 'Stop, Motley, stop. I don't want any more trouble. I am hurt. I can't stand any more of this.' He says: 'Yes, damn you, if you don't get off this ranch, I will kill you.' I told him to stop, and, when I told him to stop the second time, he says: 'You go, damn you. I will make you stop.' And he was right on the second step there, and I told him to stop again, and he kept coming right along, and I shot the first time, and says, 'Stop now!' He kept coming right along, and I shot again, and the last time I shot he says, 'Oh, you have shot me,' or 'You have killed me,'—I don't recollect. He rushed on into the kitchen. That was the last I saw of him for a while, and I went over into the hall, and was trying to reload the gun. I asked the Jap to unbreech the gun for me. He took the gun, and gave it back to me, and said he need not unbreech it. When I saw Mr. Motley coming towards the house, I looked at him, and could see his left hand. I couldn't see his other hand. He had his right hand in his coat pocket,—arm up like that. I looked as carefully as I could. I looked close. I couldn't see whether he had any weapon or not; but I supposed from his action and the way he was coming that he surely did have, or he wouldn't be coming at me in that manner. When I came out on the porch with the gun, I supposed that the man certainly would stop if he didn't aim to kill me; and I intended to bluff him if I could, and stop him. That was my intention. I supposed when I ordered him to stop, and he saw I had a gun, that he would stop. When I shot, I believed that I had to, or that he would come right along and assault me. I supposed from his actions that he intended to do violence." We are quite clear, upon this state of the evidence, the court was justified in refusing the instructions asked.

There is no merit in the exception taken to the rulings of the court upon the cross-examination of young Motley. As to that portion of the cross-examination tending to show who was the first aggressor, it is sufficient to say no deadly weapons were used by the deceased in the first altercation, and under such circumstances it is immaterial as to who in fact began it. As showing the bias, prejudice, and animus of the witness Motley, it may be suggested that he was a most active participant in the first fight, and also a son of the dead man. Under such circumstances, his animus, interest, and bias in giving his testimony was sufficiently established. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

RAYMOND v. GLOVER et al. (L. A. 344.)

PURCHASE OF MORTGAGE—NOTICE—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCEPTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

1. The owner of land sold it through an agent, who fraudulently inserted his own name as payee in the note given for the price and as mortgagee in the mortgage to secure its payment, and borrowed money from a bank thereon. There was evidence that when the loan was made the deed from the owner to the purchaser was of record; that the transfer was made about a month before the loan was made; that the agent told the bank that he sold the property as the owner's agent, and the mortgage was made payable to him in settlement of accounts between himself and the owner, and also told the cashier of the bank, while inspecting the property, that he purchased the mortgage of the owner. Held, that there was evidence to sustain a finding that the bank was put upon inquiry, and took the mortgage with notice of the owner's equities.

2. The opinion of a nonprofessional witness as to whether two people were within hearing distance of each other is inadmissible, but, having stated that they were sitting together in a carriage, its admission is harmless error.

3. An exception to the admission of evidence need not be taken until the court finally rules upon its admission.

4. An exception to the admission of evidence should be ruled on in time to allow the admission of other evidence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Ellen D. Raymond against George W. Glover and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant German-American Savings Bank appeals. Reversed.

Walter Bordwell and J. S. Chapman, for appellant. Lee & Scott, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This action was brought by Ellen D. Raymond, the plaintiff, to procure a decree that the defendant the German-American Savings Bank holds a certain note and mortgage as the trustee of the said plaintiff, or that in lieu thereof she be decreed to have a vendor's lien upon the land covered by said mortgage. Plaintiff had a decree in her favor, from which defendant the German-American Savings Bank appealed to this court, where such proceedings were had that the cause was finally remanded, with directions to the court below to find whether or not the defendant bank took the note as security without notice of the facts showing the equities in favor of the plaintiff; such fact to be determined from the evidence already taken, with such further evidence as might be adduced, etc. 37 Pac. 772, 918. Upon the return of the cause to the superior court additional evidence was taken, whereupon it was found as follows: "The defendant German-American Savings Bank, at and before the time of the assignment by defendant George Munroe to it of the note and mortgage from defendants George W. Glover and Sarah J. Glover to said Munroe, mentioned in the pleadings and original findings herein, and at and before the time of the payment by said defendant bank to said defendant Munroe of any part of the money loaned by said bank to said Munroe on the security of said note and mortgage, had notice that the plaintiff, Ellen D. Raymond, had sold the land described in the complaint to said defendants Glover and wife, and that there was, at the time of said assignment, owing and unpaid to plaintiff from said defendants Glover and wife, on account of the balance of the purchase price of said property on said sale, the sum of thirteen hundred dollars, with interest from the 11th day of February, 1892; and the court finds that said defendant German-American Savings Bank took the assignment of said note and mortgage with notice of the facts showing the equities of plaintiff in the premises, as alleged in her complaint." And judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant bank again appeals from the judgment, and supports its appeal by a bill of exceptions. By stipulation, the record on the first appeal to this court (except the bill of exceptions contained therein) is made a part of the record here. A synopsis of the facts as found in such record may be stated thus:

Ellen D. Raymond, the plaintiff, a resident of the state of Massachusetts, was the owner of a tract of say 10 acres of land, situate in the county of Los Angeles, state of California. About July, 1892, plaintiff contracted with defendants George W. Glover and Sarah J. Glover to sell to them said 10-acre tract of land for $1,800, to be paid for as follows: $500 cash, and $1,300 by note, payable in three years, with interest at 9 per cent. per annum, to be secured by a mortgage on the premises executed by Glover and wife to the said plaintiff. The defendant George Munroe was the agent at Los Angeles of plaintiff, and conducted the negotiations leading up to the sale. Under date of January 11, 1892, plaintiff executed a deed to Glover and wife of the land in question, which was duly acknowledged January 22, 1892, and forwarded to Munroe, with instructions to deliver the same to Glover and wife upon the execution to her of the note and mortgage aforesaid. Munroe, without authority, fraudulently inserted his own name as payee of the note and as mortgagee in the mortgage, and Glover and wife, being deceived by Munroe, and supposing the papers ran to plaintiff, signed the same without reading them, and paid the $500 in cash. The date of the note and mortgage is February 11, 1892. About February 22, 1892, Munroe presented the note and mortgage to the appellant bank, and applied for a loan of $1,000, offering said note and mortgage as collateral security for the payment thereof. The offer was accepted, the money loaned to him, and the note and mortgage taken as such security. Upon this state of the case the question is, was the evidence at the second trial sufficient to uphold the finding of the court that the defendant "German-American Savings Bank took the assignment of said note and mortgage with notice of the facts showing the equities of plaintiff"? Appellant attacks this finding as being unsupported by evidence.

(1) The deed from plaintiff to the Glovers was of record, and imparted constructive notice to the appellant that plaintiff had conveyed the property to said Glovers.

(2) Munroe, when applying to appellant for a loan, produced to it a certificate of title to the mortgaged premises, showing, among other things, that on February 15, 1892, the plaintiff was the owner of the premises, and that on the 16th day of the same month the defendants Glover and wife held the title thereto, and that on February 23d it was still vested in the latter.

(3) Munroe, the agent of the plaintiff, in his deposition, testifies that he informed the bank he was the agent of plaintiff in selling the property to Glover and wife, and that the mortgage offered as security was for the unpaid balance of the purchase money, and was made payable to him (the witness) in settlement of accounts between him and the plaintiff.

(4) U. S. Glover and G. E. Glover, sons of defendant George W. Glover, testified in substance, that Munroe and Moses N. Avery, agent and cashier of the defendant bank, visited the mortgaged land, where it was stated that the bank was about to loan Munroe money on the mortgage, and that Munroe then said, while sitting in a buggy with Avery, that he (Munroe) had purchased the mortgage of Mrs. Raymond, the plaintiff.

We think this evidence taken together was sufficient, if believed by the court, to warrant it in finding that the defendant bank was put upon inquiry, and, having failed to probe the facts, was, as a matter of fact, to be deemed as taking the mortgage with notice. In other words, that there was such a substantial conflict in the evidence as to preclude us from disturbing the finding of the court that appellant took the mortgage with notice of the equities in favor of plaintiff. The court below was the judge of the credit to be given to the several witnesses, and we cannot disturb its conclusions in the premises except in cases of patent error. At the last trial of the cause counsel for plaintiff, for the purpose apparently of proving that Mr. Avery, the cashier of the defendant bank, heard the declaration of Munroe that he had purchased the note and mortgage from the plaintiff, asked of his witness U. S. Glover, "Where was Mr. Avery at the time that Mr. Munroe made that statement to your father?" Counsel for the defendant bank (appellant) objected to the question upon the ground that on the former trial there had been a finding upon that question, and that it was incompetent to again go into the matter. We may here state that the finding of the court on the first trial was that the declaration in question was made by Munroe without the hearing of Avery. The court admitted the evidence, reserving its ruling as to its admissibility, and, so far as appears from the record, failed to decide the question. The witness answered that "Avery was with Munroe in the—" when counsel for plaintiff said, "And he was within hearing of the remark made by Mr. Munroe?" Counsel for the bank objected, which objection was overruled and an exception noted. The witness answered, "Yes, sir." The witness then stated, in answer to other questions, that at the time Munroe made the statement that he had purchased the note and mortgage he and Avery were sitting side by side in the buggy, and that witness and his brother and father were standing beside the buggy. The brother and father testified to like effect, the brother adding that Mr. Avery "was listening to the conversation."

Nonprofessional witnesses are allowed to express opinions based on facts within their personal observation, when the facts cannot be so described as to enable another to draw any intelligent conclusion therefrom. Under such circumstances, opinions, it is said, must be received in evidence from the necessities of the situation. Examples of this kind are cases in which the identity of a person, his apparent age, appearance, whether intoxicated or sober, angry or not, or sad, or nervous, etc., become important. Also in matters of size, color, weight, and quantity; in estimates of time and distance; in questions of value, etc. Rog. Exp. Test. pp. 10-13. But the opinions of a witness are not admissible where the jury, or the court acting as such, are equally capable with the witness of forming an opinion from the facts stated. Id. p. 13, and cases there cited. In the case at bar the opinion of the witness was not asked as to whether Avery did in fact hear what was said, but whether said Avery was within such distance that he might have heard. The evidence of other witnesses showed that Avery and Munroe were sitting side by side in a buggy beside which the witnesses stood, and the witness was permitted without objection to testify that he (the witness) heard what was said, and that Avery seemed to be giving attention to the conversation. We think the evidence comes within the rule as above stated, but at all events, under the circumstances, the ruling was not injurious to appellant.

The more important error alleged by appellant relates to the failure of the court to pass upon the question of the admissibility of the evidence which was taken subject to a subsequent ruling as to such admissibility. Respondent contends that no exception was taken to the testimony on the part of appellant, and hence it is not in a position to avail itself of the error, if any there was. The manifest answer to this objection is that appellant never had an opportunity to except. An exception is an objection upon a matter of law to a decision, and must be taken when the decision is made, except as provided in sections 646, 647, Code Civ. Proc. As no decision was ever made by the court, appellant had no opportunity to except. The error of the court consisted in failing to decide the reserved question at all. The bill of exceptions containing the errors assigned shows that this is the gist of error assigned. From the adjudicated cases in this state, including Sharp v. Lumley, 34 Cal., at page 614, Mayo v. Mazeaux, 38 Cal., at page 445, and Martin v. Lloyd, 94 Cal. 204, 29 Pac. 491, it may readily be seen that this court has repeatedly discouraged the practice of deferring rulings upon the admissibility of proffered evidence, but that to do so is not necessarily erroneous. When, however, the practice is indulged in, the ruling should be made at such time and under circumstances allowing the party against whom the ruling is had to supply other testimony, if that proffered and taken is rejected, provided he desires and can do so, and, if the testimony is admitted, that the party deeming himself aggrieved thereby may rebut the same if in his power so to do; non constat, but that in the present case appellant, if advised by a decision of the court admitting the evidence, might have rebutted such evidence by showing, as it must have done on the former trial, that the declarations of Munroe were made without the hearing of Avery, its cashier and agent. At all events, it was error to not decide the question. For this error we recommend that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to find whether or not the bank took the note as security without notice of the facts showing the equities in favor of the plaintiff. This fact may be found upon the evidence already taken, with such further evidence upon that subject as the parties may see fit to submit. If the court finds that the appellant took the note as security without notice of the facts showing such equities, judgment should be rendered giving to the appellant a first lien upon the property for the amount of its claim, and to the plaintiff a second lien thereon to the extent of $1,300 and interest, as provided in the contract of sale.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions as above stated.

HINES et al. v. MILLER et al. (Sac. 409.)
READER et al. v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1898.)

MINES—MECHANIC'S LIEN—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, providing for a lien on property for labor done thereon with knowledge of the owner, does not necessitate a notice to the owner, where the labor was done at the request of one in charge of the work, and who was believed by those performing the labor to be the agent of the owners.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, providing that courts will take judicial notice of "the true significance of all English words and phrases and of all legal expressions," courts will take notice that the terms "shafts, tunnels, levels, chutes, stopes, uprisers, crosscuts, and inclines," as applied to mines, are instrumentalities by which mines are opened, developed, prospected, improved, and worked.

3. One who performs labor on a mining shaft, tunnel, level, chute, stope, uprise, crosscut, or incline is entitled to a mechanic's lien on the mine for such services.

4. The owners of a mine contracted to sell it on time, and authorized the purchasers "to enter into immediate possession," "and proceed to work and develop the same in such manner as may be deemed most expedient and advisable"; and one-fourth of the gross product of the mine was to be paid on the purchase price. Held, that the owners had sufficient notice of improvements on the mine by the purchasers to entitle those who performed the labor to a mechanic's lien.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county.

Action by William Hines and others against Frank Miller and others, and by H. G. Reader and others against Frank Miller and others. The actions were consolidated, and from judgments for plaintiffs defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. A. Rogers and F. W. Street, for appellants. F. P. Otis, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. Two actions to foreclose mechanics' liens upon the Pampa Hill quartz mine, situated in the county of Tuolumne. The actions were consolidated, the cause tried by the court sitting without a jury, and written findings filed, upon which judgment of foreclosure was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs. Defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Appellants interposed a demurrer to the complaint, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This demurrer was properly overruled. The precise objection to the complaint is that it shows that certain of the defendants (the appellants here) were the owners of the mining claim, and that it fails to show that they had notice of the performance of the labor performed thereon by plaintiffs, while it was being so performed, as provided by section 1192, Code Civ. Proc. The response to this contention is that the complaint does not show that the labor was performed for any person or persons other than the owners. It avers that the several plaintiffs performed the labor at the special instance and request of one William Moorehead, who was in charge of and superintending the work, and who was, as they are informed and believe, during said time, "the agent of defendants in the working of said claim." If this was true, the doctrine of notice to the defendants required in cases where the improvements are made by others than the owners had no application. There are several causes of action set out by the several plaintiffs in each of the cases, but, as they are all precisely alike in the respect noticed, what is said of one applies equally to all.

2. The contention that plaintiffs failed to show that the labor which they performed entitled them to a lien upon the mine cannot be maintained. The allegations of the complaint are (and the evidence sustains them) that the several plaintiffs performed labor as miners in sinking a shaft on that certain mining claim, describing it as a "quartz mining claim." Section 1875 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that courts will take judicial notice of certain things, among which are "the true significance of all English words and phrases, and of all legal expressions." The true meaning of such expressions as shafts, tunnels, levels, chutes, stopes, uprisers, crosscuts, inclines, etc., when applied to mines, signifies instrumentalities whereby and through which such mines are opened, developed, prospected, improved, and worked. Helm v. Chapman, 66 Cal. 291, 5 Pac. 352; Silvester v. Mine Co., 80 Cal. 512, 22 Pac. 217. He who engages in the construction of those prime requisites upon or in a mine is engaged in mining, equally with one who extracts the gravel or ore therefrom. It follows that there was no error in this respect in the findings or conclusion of law deduced therefrom.

3. The third and fourth assignments of errors may be considered together. The third avers a want of evidence to support a finding that certain of the defendants (lessees of a mine) were working the mining claim "under a written agreement so to do with the owners thereof." The fourth assignment of error is based upon an alleged want of evidence to support a finding that the labor of the lienholders "was performed with full knowledge of all of said defendants," among whom were the owners of the mining claims. The answer of the defendants, Frank Miller, R. B. Lane, Andrew Sweetzer, and Ellen Staples, who are the appellants here, sets up, and the evidence shows, that they were the owners of the mining claim known and designated as the "Pampa Hill Quartz Mine"; that on the 28th day of August, 1895, they entered into a written agreement with H. S. Brown, whereby they agreed to sell and convey said mine to the latter for $7,000, to be paid in installments between that date and on or before June 1, 1896. The agreement contains the following clause: "And the said above-named Frank Miller, R. B. Lane, Andrew Sweetzer, and Ellen E. Staples, owners of said Pampa Hill gold quartz mine, hereby grant permission unto the said H. S. Brown, or to his heirs, associates, or assigns, to enter into the immediate possession of said Pampa Hill mine, and proceed to work and develop the same in such manner as may be deemed most expedient or advisable, either by sinking shafts, running tunnels, or otherwise, and granting permission to remove and mill, or mill upon the premises, all ore extracted from said mine during the life of this agreement," etc. The agreement then provides that one-fourth of the gross product taken from the mine shall be paid to the owners, and applied as a partial payment on the purchase price. E. W. Roberts and W. H. H. Hart became equally interested in the contract with H. S. Brown, and they caused the shaft to be sunk on the mine, for which the liens were taken by the laborers thereon; one William Moorehead acting as superintendent under them, and employing the lienholders. The lessees (so called) and superintendent were made parties defendant, duly served with process, and made default. The foregoing quotation constituted the only notice to appellants of the prosecution of the work, and there was no proof that they gave the notice provided for in section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that section every building or improvement constructed upon any lands with the knowledge of the owner shall be held to have been constructed at the instance of such owner, and his interest is subject to a lien, unless he shall, within three days after he shall have obtained knowledge of the construction, etc., or the intended construction, etc., give notice that he will not be responsible for the same, by posting a notice in writing to that effect in some conspicuous place on the premises. Was the evidence offered by the agreement sufficient to authorize the finding that appellants had notice? In Evans v. Judson, 120 Cal. 283, 52 Pac. 585, Judson held a lease from the owner, which provided that the lessee might remove all improvements made by him on the premises, unless the same should be so incorporated with existing structures that removal would leave the latter in worse condition than at the date of the lease, in which case the added improvements were to become the property of the lessor. Judson made improvements, for the construction of which liens were filed. The court below found that the owners had knowledge at the date of the lease of the contemplated improvements by Judson, the lessee, and that the lessor had no other or further notice or knowledge of the said intended improvements until after the liens were filed. The lessor posted no notice disclaiming responsibility.

On appeal this court held that the lease being a short one (six months), and the lessor being entitled thereunder, in a contingency, to the benefit of the improvements, and being a party thus interested, it had notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to the improvements which followed shortly thereafter, and was charged with knowledge thereof, etc.,—citing Civ. Code, § 19; Moore v. Jackson, 49 Cal. 109; Gould v. Wise, 18 Nev. 253, 3 Pac. 30; Mill Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 376, 51 Pac. 555. The validity of the liens against the lessor was upheld. In Mill Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 376, 51 Pac. 555, Hege, being the owner of a lot of land in the town of Santa Monica, upon which there was a dwelling house, verbally leased the same to one Naumann. Subsequently, Naumann, being in possession, obtained leave from his lessor to construct certain additions to the building, in the construction of which he purchased certain materials from the plaintiff, for the price of which a lien was taken. A judgment of foreclosure having been entered against the lessor, an appeal was taken to this court. It was here held "that the building was constructed with the knowledge of the appellant, and that his failure to give the notice required by section 1192, Code Civ. Proc., rendered his interest in the land subject to the lien." See, also, Mill Co. v. Hege (Cal.) 48 Pac. 69. We think those cases are, in principle, on all fours with the case at bar. Here the agreement specially authorized, among other improvements on the mining claim, the sinking of a shaft. The lessors were to receive 25 per cent. of the gross output of the mine, and to that extent were interested therein. It is quite apparent that the appellants contemplated the working of the mine, and the making of such improvements was essential thereto. Having so consented, they must be deemed to have had notice of the contemplated improvements; and, having failed to disclaim liability by giving the notice as required by section 1192, the findings and judgment are correct, and we recommend that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BOO DOO HONG. (Cr. 420.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1898.)

PHYSICIANS—LICENSE—BURDEN.

In a prosecution for illegally practicing medicine, the burden is on accused to show that he had a license to practice as required by law, since it is a matter peculiarly within his own knowledge.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county.

Boo Doo Hong was convicted of practicing medicine without a license, and, from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

J. T. Matlock, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

BELCHER, C. The defendant was charged by information, filed in the superior court of Tehama county, with the crime of willfully and unlawfully practicing medicine in the state of California, without having first procured a certificate to so practice as required by law. He demurred to the information, and, his demurrer being overruled, then pleaded not guilty. He was subsequently tried, and found guilty of the offense charged; and judgment was entered that he pay a fine of $350, etc. From that judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he has appealed.

The demurrer was properly overruled. The facts stated in the information were sufficient to constitute a public offense, and it was not necessary to allege the existence of the medical societies referred to. People v. O'Leary, 77 Cal. 30, 18 Pac. 856. At the trial, uncontradicted evidence was introduced by the prosecution sufficiently showing that, for several months prior to the filing of the information, defendant had been practicing medicine at Red Bluff, in the county of Tehama. People v. Lee Wah, 71 Cal. 80, 11 Pac. 851. But no evidence was introduced on either side showing, or tending to show, that defendant had or had not a certificate to so practice, as required by law. St. 1875-76, p. 792, and St. 1877-78, p. 918. And, at the conclusion of the evidence, the court instructed the jury quite fully upon all the questions of law involved in the case, and, among other things, told them, in effect, that the burden was upon the defendant to establish that he had a certificate to practice medicine as provided by law, and, if he failed to prove that he had such certificate, then it must be taken as true that he had not procured a certificate to so practice medicine.

It is contended for appellant that the said instruction was erroneous and misleading, and that the verdict was not justified by the evidence, because in a criminal action the defendant is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and this presumption continues through the entire trial, and the burden is upon the people to establish his guilt by proving every material allegation of the information; and that, as the information charged that defendant had practiced medicine without having a certificate to do so, it devolved upon the people to prove that fact, and, having entirely failed to offer any such proof, he ought not to have been convicted, and his motion for new trial should have been granted. The general rule is undoubtedly as above stated, but there is a well-recognized exception to the rule, where there is a negative averment of a fact which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant. Mr. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence (volume 1, § 79), under the heading "Negative Allegations," says: "But, when the subject-matter of a negative averment lies peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party, the averment is taken as true, unless disproved by that party. Such is the case in civil or criminal prosecutions for a penalty for doing an act which the statutes do not permit to be done by any persons, except those who are duly licensed therefor; as, for selling liquors, exercising a trade or profession, and the like. Here the party, if licensed, can immediately show it without the least inconvenience; whereas, if proof of the negative were required, the inconvenience would be very great,"—citing a large number of cases. See, also, 3 Rice, Ev. § 260, where the same rule is declared. In 1 Jones, Ev. § 179, under the heading "Burden as to Particular Facts Lying Peculiarly within Knowledge of a Party," it is said: "This is often illustrated in prosecutions for selling liquors or doing other acts without the license required by law. By a few authorities the rule is prescribed that in such cases the prosecution must offer some slight proof of the fact that no license has been granted, for example, by producing the book in which licenses are recorded; and, if the book fails to show that a license has been granted, the burden is shifted upon the defendant to prove the fact claimed by him; but the greater number of authorities hold that, where a license would be a complete defense, the burden is upon the defendant to prove the fact so clearly within his own knowledge,"—citing cases. We think the rule upon this subject generally recognized and followed the correct one, and therefore conclude that the court did not err in giving the instruction complained of, and that the verdict was justified by the evidence. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

SLOCUM et al. v. BEAR VALLEY IRR. CO.
et al. (L. A. 305.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1898.)

STATUTES—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—CORPORATIONS —LABORERS' LIENS.

Act March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 195), giving liens on the property of corporations for the wages of only such mechanics and laborers as may be employed by the week or month, is repugnant to the constitution prohibiting special legislation.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

M. L. Slocum and three others bring separate actions against the Bear Valley Irrigation Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying their motion for new trial, the receivers of said company appeal. Reversed.

Wm. J. Hunsaker, for appellants. Paris & Allison, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the receivers of the corporation defendant from a judgment declaring and enforcing certain asserted liens of plaintiffs upon the property of the corporation, and from an order denying a new trial. The liens are based upon the act of the legislature entitled "An act to provide for the payment of the wages of mechanics and laborers employed by corporations," approved March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 195). The act is quoted in full in former decisions of this court hereinafter referred to, and need not be republished here. It is contended by appellants that the act in question is unconstitutional for various reasons, and, among others, for the reason that it is special legislation, inhibited by the constitution, because it attempts to provide for the creation of liens in favor of a special class of laborers, and thus attempts a mere arbitrary classification not founded upon natural differences, or differences defined by the constitution, within the meaning of the principle declared in Darcy v. City of San Jose, 104 Cal. 642, 38 Pac. 500, and other decisions of this court to the same point. This contention is correct if the said act provides a lien only for those laborers and mechanics who are employed by the week or month, and does not provide liens for those who are not thus employed. But this court has already declared such to be the construction of the act in two cases,—one decided by one department of this court, and the other by the other department. In Keener v. Irrigation Co., 110 Cal. 627, 43 Pac. 14, the court, referring to this act, and quoting it in full, says: "By the terms of the first section of this act it does not apply to all corporations, but only to those who, while doing business in this state, employ laborers and mechanics by the week or month, whose wages, under the terms of their employment, are payable weekly or monthly. It does not purport to impose upon those corporations any duty or liability towards all the mechanics or laborers whom it may employ, or to create a right in favor of those of its employes whose wages are not earned or payable by the week or by the month." The petition for a hearing of the case in bank was denied. In Ackley v. Mining Co., 112 Cal. 42, 44 Pac. 330, the same construction was given to the act, and the language of the court in Keener v. Irrigation Co. was quoted and approved. The former of these two cases was decided in 1895, and the latter a few months afterwards. They must be held to have definitely established the construction of the act as therein declared. Since the date of the decisions in those cases the legislature has been in session, and has not seen fit to change the statute; and whether the statute as thus construed is a proper and wise law, or whether it should be in any manner changed, are now questions for legislative discretion. Following the construction given to the act by the decisions above noticed, we hold it to be unconstitutional. In this case there are four separate complaints, each made by a different plaintiff; and, as there were no liens to be enforced, of course these different causes of action were not properly joined. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The first section of the act of March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 195), reads as follows: "Every corporation doing business in this state shall pay the mechanics and laborers employed by it the wages earned by and due them, weekly or monthly, on such day in each week or month as shall be selected by said corporation." No rule of statutory construction is more firmly established than this: that if an act of the legislature is open to two constructions, one of which harmonizes with the constitution and the other does not, the latter must be rejected. Now, whatever may be the more obvious meaning of the section above quoted, regarded by itself, and without reference to the constitutional limitations upon the power of the legislature, it cannot be denied that, without doing violence to the language employed, it may be held to mean simply this: that every corporation employing laborers and mechanics is required to establish a regular pay day in each week or in each month, as it may elect, and on that day to pay all wages then earned and due, no matter what the term of employment. No reason can be given for rejecting this construction, except that in two cases formerly decided the law was otherwise construed. But in those cases the point here presented was not raised or considered. If it had been foreseen that the construction then adopted would have the result of nullifying the law, there can be no doubt that it would have been rejected in favor of the construction above suggested, which has always seemed to me the more reasonable of the two. Now that our attention is called to this unforeseen consequence of our former decision, it is not too late, in my opinion, to rectify the error.

CROCKER et al. v. CUNNINGHAM. (Sac. 441.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1898.)
ATTACHMENT—PROPERTY SUBJECT—CLAIMS OF THIRD PARTIES—SALE—DELIVERY.

1. Plaintiffs contracted with E. to crop their land for half the grain raised, the grain to be divided "on the ground" at the conclusion of the threshing, and E. to deliver "the remaining one-half of the crop retained" by plaintiffs at a place to be designated by them. The entire crop was to be the property of plaintiffs until their half was so delivered. When all the grain but one stack was threshed, E. delivered one-half of the threshed grain at a certain place under plaintiffs' directions, and in sacks marked with their names. The remainder, together with the unthreshed stack, was levied on by the sheriff under an attachment against E. Held, that plaintiffs could recover from the sheriff only the unthreshed grain.

2. Where there is no delivery or change of possession of grain conveyed by a bill of sale, the right of an officer who attaches it under a writ in an action against the vendor is superior to that of the purchaser, under Civ. Code, § 3440, providing that transfers of such personal property without delivery are fraudulent as to creditors of the vendor.

3. Plaintiffs contracted with E. to crop their land, and were to give him half the crop, but were to retain possession of his half until he paid all advances made to him. Held, that such a lien could not be enforced as against E.'s creditors on E.'s share of the grain after it had been divided where the possession remained in E.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Crocker and others against Cunningham. From a part of the judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Woods & Levinsky, for appellants. James A. Louttit, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action of claim and delivery to recover from defendant, as sheriff of the county of San Joaquin, certain grain held by him under a writ of attachment against one John Enos. By the terms of an agreement between the plaintiffs and Enos, commonly called a "cropping contract," Enos agreed to perform the labor required for the cultivation in grain during the year ending September, 1896, of a tract of land on Roberts Island, in San Joaquin county, belonging to the plaintiffs, and at the maturity of the crop to harvest and sack the same, and haul and deliver one-half thereof at such place on the river bank as the plaintiffs might direct. In consideration thereof the plaintiffs agreed to give to Enos one-half of the crop, the said one-half to be segregated on the ground at the conclusion of the threshing and sacking of the grain. The agreement also contained a provision that the entire crop should remain the exclusive property of the plaintiffs until said one-half part should have been delivered to Enos in payment and satisfaction as aforesaid. During that year Enos raised upon the land the grain in controversy, with other grain, and on the 23d of July all of the grain, with the exception of one stack of wheat, had been threshed and sacked, and one-half of it had been hauled by him to Frewert's landing, upon the river bank, for the plaintiffs, and under their direction, and the sacks were there marked "McLaughlin Company." (The plaintiffs constitute the McLaughlin Company.) On that day there were remaining in the field the 1,056 sacks of barley and 183 sacks of wheat in controversy herein, together with the above stack of unthreshed wheat, and the same were attached by the defendant, who was the sheriff of that county, as the property of John Enos, under a writ of attachment issued out of the superior court of that county in an action against him. The defendant had received a writ of attachment against him on the 18th of July, and by virtue thereof had taken the grain into his possession on that day, and on the 23d of July, while it was still in his possession, he made a levy upon it by virtue of the writ then issued, and the levy under the prior writ was subsequently released. At the trial the jury, under the directions of the court, rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for the wheat that was in the unthreshed stack, and upon the evidence before them awarded to the defendant the right of possession for the 1,056 sacks of barley and the 183 sacks of wheat. The plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment entered upon this portion of the verdict, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

From the evidence before the jury they were authorized to find that at the time the defendant levied upon the grain there had been a division and segregation of that which had been threshed and sacked, and that the sacks of wheat and barley then in the field and taken by the defendant were the property of Enos, and consequently subject to seizure under the writ of attachment against him. By the terms of the contract the one-half of the crop which Enos was to have was "to be segregated on the ground" at the conclusion of the threshing and sacking of the crop. Under this provision the parties could have postponed the division and segregation until the whole of the crops were ready for division, but they were not required to do so. The crops might mature at different times in the year, and it was reasonable that they should divide the different crops from time to time as they were sacked and ready for division, rather than postpone the division until the entire products had been harvested. If they so desired, it was competent for them to make such division; and it was shown that at the time the defendant levied the writs an actual division had been made of all except the unthreshed stack of wheat. The provision in the contract that Enos was to haul and deliver "the remaining one-half of the crop retained by the plaintiffs," to their order, at such point on the river bank as they should direct, implies that the division or segregation was to be made before he was to haul their half of the crop, as does also the use of the phrase "the remaining one-half retained by the plaintiffs." There would be no "remaining" half until after the crop had been divided into halves, and one-half had been set apart; and designating the remaining half as "retained" by the plaintiffs carries with it the idea that they had parted with the other half. The fact that at this time Enos had hauled and delivered one-half of the sacked grain to the order of the plaintiffs at Frewert's landing leads to the conclusion that this portion of the crop had been divided, and that the other half had been segregated to Enos "on the ground," and was his property, and subject to seizure by the defendant. The plaintiffs could not claim that, after such division and delivery to them of their half of the crop, they would have had a right to demand from Enos a delivery to them of any portion of the half which had been segregated to him and left on the ground. On the 17th of July Enos made a bill of sale to the plaintiffs of his interest in the grain in consideration of the sum of $150 then received by him from them. This transaction was had at Stockton, and the grain was at that time in the sacks upon the ground at Roberts Island. There was no act between them purporting to be a delivery of the grain, nor was there any change of possession from Enos to the plaintiffs, but the grain remained upon the ground in the same condition until it was taken by the defendant upon the next day. As there was no change of possession or delivery of the grain, the right of the creditors of Enos to attach it in an action against him was not affected by this transaction (Civ. Code, § 3440), and, consequently, the right of the defendant as the attaching officer to the possession of the grain is superior to that of the plaintiffs.

It was also provided in the contract between the plaintiffs and Enos that they might retain possession of Enos' half of the crops until they should have been fully paid the amount of any loans or advances they should make to him; and evidence was introduced on their behalf tending to show that at the time the defendant took the grain Enos was indebted to them for moneys advanced to him. But the principles which governed the right of the creditors of Enos to attach the grain in his possession, after he had made the bill of sale to the plaintiffs, are equally applicable under this provision. The plaintiffs' claim to hold the grain as security for the indebtedness of Enos rests upon the proposition that the grain belongs to him, since there would be no occasion to provide that they might retain their own property to secure the payment of his debt to them; and the provision in the contract that they might retain the one-half of the crop "hereinbefore agreed to be given to him," and might sell the same, and out of the proceeds pay and discharge their claim against him, and pay the surplus to him, implies that it is his property which is to be retained and sold. A secret lien of this kind cannot be enforced against the claims of the lienor's creditors. Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 293, 13 Pac. 858; Society v. Purvis, 112 Cal. 236, 44 Pac. 561. Irrespective of these considerations, moreover, the division of the grain and segregation to Enos of the half belonging to him must be regarded as a surrender to him of any possession which the plaintiffs might have previously had, and would supersede the declaration that it might be held as security for his indebtedness. The judgment and order are affirmed.

EVIDENCE—CONTRACTS—PAROL PROMISE—FRAUD—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

1. In an action for damages for defendant's failure to deliver certain personality, pursuant to a contract in writing, effected through the agent of plaintiff's assignor, and providing for payment on delivery, where it was averred in the answer that defendant had been induced to enter into such contract by means of a fraudulent parol promise, by such agent, that a portion of the agreed price should be paid in advance of the time of delivery, it was error to reject evidence that such promise was made without any intention that it should be performed, and was therefore one of the forms of actual fraud, as defined in Civ. Code, § 1572, though, if honestly made, it was within the rule forbidding proof of a contemporaneous or prior oral agreement to detract from the terms of a contract in writing.

2. The fact that no damages were shown to have resulted from the breach of a promise was immaterial, where the performance of such promise was a condition precedent, and the breach was set up as a defense.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kings county.

Action by T. E. Langley, assignee of the Cutting Fruit-Packing Company, against Joseph V. Rodriguez. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. L. Smith, for appellant. L. L. Cory, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Rodriguez, the defendant here, and the Cutting Fruit-Packing Company, a corporation, the latter acting by one Bates, its agent, made and signed a contract in writing, of date July 6, 1896, by the terms whereof Rodriguez agreed to sell to said packing company his crop of raisin grapes, then growing, and said company agreed to pay him at the rate of two cents per pound for the same when delivered "in sweat boxes" at its packing house. This is an action by the assignee of the packing company to recover damages for defendant's refusal to deliver the goods pursuant to said written agreement. In his answer, defendant pleaded, in substance, that his signature to said instrument was procured by fraud of said Bates, consisting in this: To induce defendant to sign the paper, Bates orally promised and agreed, on behalf of the packing company, that, when the grapes should be ready to gather, said company would advance to defendant, on the said agreed price thereof, the sum of $350, to enable him to pick and cure the same; that, without the prior promise of such advance, defendant would not have signed said writing; that Bates, when he made the said oral promise, did not know and was without reasonable ground to believe that the packing company would advance anything on the contract price, as promised by him; that said company refused such advance when, at the proper time, defendant requested the same; and that, because of such refusal, defendant on his part refused to deliver the raisins as stipulated in said instrument of writing. At the trial, defendant submitted evidence tending, though with varying degrees of cogency, to prove the said allegations of his answer. The court seems to have held the affirmative defense pleaded to be itself insufficient, and rejected the evidence offered in support thereof, and rendered judgment for plaintiff.

The oral promise to pay part of the agreed price in advance of the curing of the crop was in conflict with the provision of the written contract that payment would be made on delivery of the raisins at the packing house; and, if the promise was honestly made, it was undoubtedly within the rule forbidding proof of a contemporaneous or prior oral agreement to detract from the terms of a contract in writing. The rule cannot be avoided by showing that the promise outside the writing has been broken. Such breach in itself does not constitute fraud. Feeny v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 Pac. 984; Fisher v. New York Common Pleas, 18 Wend. 607. But a promise made without any intention of performing it is one of the forms of actual fraud (Civ. Code, § 1572); and cases are not infrequent where relief against a contract reduced to writing has been granted on the ground that its execution was procured by means of oral promises fraudulent in the particular mentioned, however variant from the terms of the written engagement into which they were the means of inveigling the complainant. Newman v. Smith, 77 Cal. 22, 26, 18 Pac. 791, and authorities cited; Hays v. Gloster, 88 Cal. 560, 26 Pac. 367.

Now, if, as defendant alleged, and as the evidence he offered had some tendency to show, when Bates agreed that the company would make an advance payment he had no reasonable ground to believe that it would do so, it is impossible to see how his promise could have been made in good faith; that is to say, with intent that it would be kept. Therefore it was equivalent to a promise made without such intention, and was fraudulent. It was not essential that the answer should charge in so many words that there was no intention to fulfill the promise at the time it was made. It is sufficient that such was the effect of the averments on the subject. Hays v. Gloster, 88 Cal. 565, 26 Pac. 367. The case is close, but, in our opinion, the evidence produced by defendant should have been considered, plaintiff being allowed to rebut by any relevant matter, including facts tending to establish the good faith of Bates' oral promises.

Respondent makes the point that defendant was not shown to have been damaged by failure to receive the expected advances.

That is not the question. If, as defendant claims, the advances were to be made in order to enable him to pick and cure his crop,—processes necessarily preceding delivery under the contract,—then the payment of the promised advance was a condition precedent to the duty of defendant to deliver the goods. The judgment should be reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. CUFF. (Cr. 473.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1898.)

CRIMINAL LAW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—HOMICIDE—POISONING—MOTIVE—INTENT—EVIDENCE—INFORMATIONS.

1. It is error, in a criminal case, to instruct that the evidence is to be estimated, not only by its own intrinsic weight, but according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict; and, therefore, that if less satisfactory evidence is offered, when more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust, though it is based on Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subds. 6, 7, where there is no suggestion that any important witness who could have been produced by defendant was not produced, but it was applicable to defendant, in that he did not become a witness, but stood on his constitutional right of not testifying and requiring the state to prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt.

2. In a prosecution for an attempt to kill by poisoning, the prosecution claimed the motive to be revenge, prosecutor being a rival and more successful lover. Evidence was introduced that some time before the offense the lady had spent several nights with a friend, and that during such time defendant, on several evenings, had secretly gained entrance to the friend's house, and had taken articles of trifling value, and poisoned the dog. Prosecutor was not at the friend's house during such time. Held inadmissible, as not tending to show motive, and as entirely foreign to the issues.

3. Prosecutor was alleged to have been poisoned by defendant, a rival lover. Defendant had obtained chloroform two weeks before. The lady at whose home the feminine cause of the trouble was staying testified that she smelled chloroform in her room the morning after the night it was claimed defendant had secretly entered the house, which was some time before the attempt to kill, and when the prosecutor was not at said house, and possibly not in the neighborhood. Held irrelevant and immaterial.

4. In a prosecution for an attempt to kill by administering strychnia, evidence that defendant had purchased chloroform some time before the offense, and had it in his possession when arrested, is admissible as tending to show his intentions towards the prosecutor.

5. False reasons given by the accused for being in the town where the offense was committed on the day of the offense are admissible.

6. Evidence of the prosecutor that he saw a person resembling defendant some weeks prior to the offense, when he was in company with the lady for love of whom it was claimed defendant had attempted to poison prosecutor, is admissible.

7. In a prosecution for an attempt to kill, the state showed that defendant had been a persistent and unsuccessful suitor of a lady, and that prosecutor was the successful suitor. Held that, while the establishment of such facts in a general manner was proper, it was prejudicial error to go into details of defendant's courtship, showing his conduct, which was such as to prejudice the jury against him.

8. Evidence that one accused of an attempt to kill by using strychnia had purchased such poison, and had it in his possession when arrested, may be rebutted by evidence that he owned a ranch, and that ranchers in that locality generally had strychnia in their possession for poisoning "varmints."

9. An information is not fatally defective because of a false date therein, where defendant suffered no possible injury by reason of the mistake, and the offense was alleged to have been committed in the proper year, and prior to the filing of the information.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county.

James Cuff was convicted of felony in an attempt to kill by administering poison, and he appeals. Reversed.

G. F. Harris and D. W. Jenks, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant has been convicted of a felony, alleged to have consisted in an attempt to kill one Miller by administering poison. The evidence is entirely circumstantial, but tends to show that defendant surreptitiously placed the poison (strychnia) in the sugar bowl out of which Miller was in the habit of using sugar, and out of which, in fact, upon this eventful day, he used sugar, and nearly died as a result. The evidence is sufficient to support a finding of fact that Miller suffered from strychnia poisoning, and that defendant was the instrument by which it was administered. The case is one of circumstantial evidence alone, and the prosecution at the trial relied upon innumerable and somewhat minute circumstances to establish the two aforesaid salient facts. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and, in addition to denying the commission of the act, claimed that he was insane at the time.

The following instruction of the court should not have been given to the jury: "The court instructs you that the evidence is to be estimated, not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict; and, therefore, that if weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered, when it appears that stronger and more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust." The basis for this instruction is found in subdivisions 6 and 7 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We have had occasion in the past to examine various subdivisions of this section, and to point out the error of applying the principles there declared to cases indiscriminately. Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 283, 29 Pac. 481; People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 180, 31 Pac. 45. Indeed, as to subdivisions 4, 6, and 7 of the section, upon the trial of criminal cases it were best they should not be noticed, for, as generally applied, they trench upon the constitutional rights of the defendant in depriving him of a verdict rendered by jurors who should be the sole and exclusive judges of the weight and effect of evidence. The danger lurking in these subdivisions of the section is found in the fact that they attempt to deal with the weight and effect of evidence,—matters for the jury, and not matters for legislative action. The aforesaid section of the Code declares that the principles stated in the various subdivisions thereof may be given by the court to the jury upon all proper occasions. In criminal cases the proper occasions are so few, and the improper occasions are so many, that it were best that they should be given rarely, if at all. The instruction given in this case fully and fairly illustrates the danger suggested. Let us consider one objection to it. Here there is no suggestion whatever in the record that any important witness could have been produced by the defendant before the jury, and was not produced. Under such circumstances, certainly, the occasion was not a proper one upon which to give the instruction. But, upon the other hand, the defendant did not take the witness stand, and the practical application of the instruction necessarily points to that fact as a strong circumstance to be taken against him. To the ordinary mind there seems to have been no other reason or purpose in the giving of the instruction. Yet a defendant has the constitutional right to stand mute, and demand that the prosecution prove a case against him beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Streuber (Cal.) 53 Pac. 918. Aside from the exception mentioned in the O'Brien Case, we think the principles embraced in these subdivisions of section 2061 had best not be given to juries in criminal cases.

The defendant was a rejected suitor for the hand of a young lady, Miss Lush. Miller, the man alleged by the information to have been poisoned, was apparently more successful in securing her kind graces. It is claimed upon the part of the prosecution that, for these reasons, revenge was the motive actuating the defendant in the administration of the poison. Presumably in support of this theory of revengeful motive actuating the heart of the defendant, a great mass of evidence was introduced under objection. We say this evidence was introduced presumably in support of the motive theory, for we are entirely unable to conjecture any other ground upon which to base even a contention of its legal admissibility. The scene giving rise to this case is laid in the village of Alturas, and all the parties concerned lived in and about the village. John E. Raker resided in the village. Miss Lighty lived at his residence. During the absence of himself and family, at a period shortly before the time this offense is claimed to have been committed, Miss Lush spent several nights with Miss Lighty as her companion. Miller lived a considerable distance from the Raker residence. The mass of evidence introduced went to the effect that, upon several nights during this period, some person had secretly gained entrance to the Raker residence; that a handkerchief had been found upon the floor of one of the rooms upon the following morning after one of these mysterious visits, which handkerchief was probably the handkerchief of the defendant; that some articles of trifling value belonging to one of the young ladies had been taken from the house at these times, and were afterwards found in the possession of the defendant; that Raker's dog was found poisoned in the yard; that mysterious noises were heard in and about the house, and footprints found in the yard. Following this line of evidence, it was attempted to connect defendant with all this mysterious work; and, for present purposes alone, it may be conceded that this attempt was successful. Upon this concession, we are clear that the whole mass of evidence should have been rejected, as improper matter to go before the jury. That this character of evidence was prejudicial to defendant cannot be gainsaid for a moment; but that it in any appreciable degree tended to show the motive for the attempted murder of Miller must be denied. These events all occurred some time before the offense here under investigation was committed. Miller was not at the house of Raker at the time, and possibly not in the neighborhood. He is in no way connected with these midnight visits, and the entire evidence is collateral to the question at issue, and foreign to the investigation at hand.

The offense was committed about August 26, 1896. A doctor testified that upon the 9th of August he gave the defendant a prescription calling for chloroform. It was also shown that the chloroform was obtained by defendant. Miss Lighty testified that, after one of these mysterious midnight visits already referred to, she smelled chloroform in her room the following morning. This item of testimony was clearly irrelevant and incompetent. As to the purchase of the chloroform, and the subsequent possession of it by defendant when arrested, it was proper evidence as tending to show to some degree defendant's intentions towards Miller.

Conversations had with defendant by the witness Beecher were relevant and competent evidence. If the defendant gave false reasons for being in the town of Alturas upon this particular day, the prosecution had the right to show that fact. The same rule also applies to the statements made by defendant as to his visit to the Dorris ranch. Miller's testimony as to seeing a party resembling the defendant when he was in the company of the two aforesaid young ladies, some weeks prior to the 26th of August, was also properly admitted.

For the purpose of establishing a motive for the crime, the prosecution was permitted to show that the defendant had been a persistent and unsuccessful suitor for the hand of Miss

Lush, and that Miller was the successful suitor. While the establishment of these facts was entirely proper, the matters should have been shown generally, and the details of defendant's conduct in the manner of his courtship were not proper evidence. Evidence was introduced in detail as to this point, and his conduct was clearly reprehensible, and was such as to prejudice the jury against him. At the same time, it was not germane to the question upon trial, and should have been kept from the jury.

The prosecution offered evidence tending to show that defendant had purchased strychnia, and had it in his possession at the time of his arrest. To rebut the effect of this evidence, it was proposed to show that other persons living in the neighborhood where defendant resided purchased strychnia, and had it in their possession. Defendant owned a ranch, and it was proposed to show that ranchers generally in that locality had strychnia in their possession for the purpose of poisoning "varmints." This character of evidence was improperly rejected. It had a direct and legitimate tendency to weaken the effect of the evidence showing the possession of strychnia upon the part of defendant.

The information charging defendant with the offense was not objectionable upon the ground of duplicity. People v. Thompson, 111 Cal. 246, 43 Pac. 748. The further objection to the information, made by reason of the false date inserted therein, is not fatal to it. The court should have corrected the error by some appropriate proceeding; but defendant has suffered no possible injury by reason of the mistake made and the failure of correction. The pleader charged the offense to have been committed in 1896, and prior to the filing of the information. See People v. Dinsmore, 102 Cal. 382, 36 Pac. 661.

We have examined with care other points made by defendant's counsel, and find nothing further demanding extended consideration. We see no serious objection to the remaining instructions given by the court to the jury. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

ATTACHMENT—SUBSEQUENT JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION—EFFECT OF INSOLVENCY PROCEEDINGS.

The insolvent act of 1880 (section 17) provides that an adjudication in insolvency shall dissolve any attachment made within one month next preceding the commencement of the insolvency proceeding. Held, not to affect an execution on a judgment in an action begun by attachment within a month preceding insolvency proceedings by the judgment debtor, where judgment was obtained before such proceedings, though prior attachments before judgment against the same debtor were thereby dissolved.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Action by J. G. Elliott, assignee of the estate of C. W. Agee, an insolvent debtor, against C. A. H. Warfield, as sheriff for conversion. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. H. Marks and F. H. Farrar, for appellant. J. W. Knox, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Appeal upon the judgment roll by defendant from the judgment against him as sheriff, and in favor of plaintiff as assignee of C. W. Agee, an insolvent debtor, for $515 and costs. The only question on the appeal is whether or not a certain adjudication of insolvency dissolved or affected the lien of an execution levy which had been made by appellant before, but within one month of, the commencement of the proceedings in insolvency, and the question arises under the insolvent act of 1880. On the 18th of March, 1895, in a suit commenced in the superior court of San Francisco by John Featherston, plaintiff, against the insolvent, C. W. Agee, defendant, to recover $380.84, an attachment issued, and was levied by appellant, as sheriff, upon a certain stock of goods belonging to said Agee. On the 20th of March, 1895, another writ of attachment was issued out of the justice's court of San Francisco in the case of Freestone Distillery Company, plaintiff, against said Agee, for $149.62, and was levied by the appellant upon the same property. On the 22d of March, 1895, Mary Minor commenced a suit against Agee in the superior court of Merced county, where he resided, for something over $2,000, and in said action a writ of attachment was also issued and levied upon said property. Such proceedings were had that on April 2, 1895, Minor obtained judgment against Agee in said action for $2,360, and on the same day an execution was issued upon the judgment, and levied upon the said property; and on April 10, 1895, the appellant, as sheriff, under and by virtue of said writ of execution, sold at public auction all the said property to said Mary Minor for the sum of $515, which sum was the value of the property thus sold. The appellant paid the $515 realized on the sale to Mary Minor. On April 4, 1895, two days after the levy of said execution, Agee filed his petition in insolvency in the superior court of Merced county, and on said day was adjudged an insolvent by said court. The respondent was afterwards appointed assignee in the insolvency proceeding, and, after having demanded of the appellant that he pay to him, as assignee, the said $515, and the appellant having refused to do so, he commenced this suit.

There is no doubt of the general rule that an adjudication in insolvency does not dissolve or affect the lien upon final process of the levy of an execution made prior to, and existing at the time of, the commencement of the insolvency proceeding. Section 17 of the insolvent act of 1880 provides that the assignment by the clerk to the assignee shall vest title to the property of the insolvent in the assignee, "although the same is then attached on mesne process as the property of the debtor, and shall dissolve any attachment made within one month next preceding the commencement of the insolvency proceedings," and thus leaves a lien created by final process unaffected. This is not only the clear meaning of the section, and has been held to be the meaning under the general authorities, but it was so expressly declared by this court in Vermont Marble Co. v. Superior Court, 99 Cal. 579, 34 Pac. 326. In that case the court say: "By the levy of the execution upon the property of Black prior to the filing of the petition in insolvency against him, the petitioner herein acquired a lien upon that property which would not be divested by his subsequent adjudication of insolvency. Howe v. Insurance Co., 42 Cal. 533. In the absence of any statute, an adjudication in insolvency does not affect any lien upon the property of the insolvent existing at the institution of the proceedings for such adjudication, but the assignee takes the property of the insolvent subject to all such liens. Section 17 of the insolvent act provides that the effect of the adjudication is to dissolve any attachment made within one month next preceding the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, and this designation is equivalent to an express declaration that it does not affect liens of any other nature." Respondent does not deny that this is the general law, and admits that the rule would apply here if there had been no other attachments on the property at the time the execution in the suit of Mary Minor was levied; but he contends that the existence of these prior attachments for an amount in excess of the value of the property prevented the subsequent execution levy from being effective, and that the dissolution of the attachments by the proceedings in insolvency did not inure to the benefit of execution creditors. He has cited some authorities by inferior federal courts, under the federal bankruptcy law, as supporting his contention; as, for instance: In re Klancke, Fed. Cas. No. 7,864; In re Steele, Fed. Cas. No. 13,345; Johnson v. Rogers, Fed. Cas. No. 7,408; In re Beisen-thal, Fed. Cas. No. 1,236; and In re Baden-heim, Fed. Cas. No. 716. These cases are not all harmonious on the subject, but some of them seem to give support to respondent's contention. We have not been referred to any case in the supreme court of the United States holding any such doctrine. The reasoning of those cases cited by respondent which seem to give color to his contention is not satisfactory to us. The conclusions arrived at in those cases seem to be based upon a consideration of the fact that the prior attachments were for an amount equal to, or exceeding, the value of the property, and upon a sort of notion that in such a case there could be no effective levying of the execution until the attachments had been in some way removed. But the fact that there were prior attachments to any amount seems to us to be immaterial. "When goods are held under one writ, they are also held under all other writs that may come to the hands of the same officer. The mere receipt of a second execution operates as a levy of the property already in the officer's hands under a former writ." 2 Freem. Ex'ns, § 267, and cases there cited. Moreover, it is difficult to see how it could be determined that prior attachments in cases which never went to judgment were equal to the whole, or any part, of the property attached. There may have been no legal causes of action in the suits in which the former attachments had been issued, and the value of such attachments is therefore an unknown quantity. In the case at bar, therefore, we see no way in which the lien created by the levy of the execution in the case of Mary Minor against Agee was dissolved, invalidated, or in any way affected by the subsequent adjudication in insolvency. Indeed, this conclusion has been declared in the recent case of Hefner v. Herron, 117 Cal. 473, 49 Pac. 586. That case involved section 21 of the subsequent insolvent act of 1895. That section provided for an enumerated instance where a dissolution of an attachment by an adjudication in insolvency should also dissolve and set aside an execution levied under certain circumstances, and it was there contended that a certain execution was set aside by an insolvent proceeding. But the court said: "The section does not provide for dissolving a lien existing by virtue of final process, except in the one enumerated instance. In the absence of any statutory provision, a levy upon property by virtue of an attachment or execution creates an interest in the property superior to the rights of the assignee in insolvency, and only an express provision to that effect will make the proceedings in insolvency paramount to such a lien." The case of Beamer v. Freeman, 84 Cal. 554, 24 Pac. 169, is not controlling here. In the case at bar there was no charge of actual fraud, and no claim that the insolvent, Agee, had wrongfully done any affirmative act with intent to give preference to any creditor. His conduct was innocent, within the rule elaborately stated by the supreme court of the United States in Wilson v. Bank, 17 Wall. 473. The point here involved is presented by the demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and upon the findings; and the court below erred in holding that the insolvency proceeding dissolved the lien of the levy under the judgment of Mary Minor. The judgment should have been for appellant. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

EMINENT DOMAIN — RAILROADS — CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—DESCRIPTION OF LAND—OB-JECTIONS—DEMURRER—WAIVER.

1. A complaint in a proceeding for condemnation of a right of way for a railroad described the land as a strip 100 feet wide, lying equally on each side of the center line of the road, "where the same is located through" defendant's land, beginning at a point where such center line intersects the northwest boundary of such land, "at or near engineer's station 2218+66, running thence in a general southeasterly direction" for 5,090 feet, "more or less, to where said center line intersects the east boundary" of the defendant's land "at or near engineer's station 2269+56"; containing 11.7 acres, more or less. A map of the road was attached, but in neither the map nor the complaint were the points of intersection given by courses and distances, nor were any courses or distances of the line itself shown; and the radii or lengths of the curves were not given. Held, that the description was insufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1244, subd. 4, providing that the complaint must show the location, general route, and termini, and must be accompanied by a map, and must contain a description of each piece of land sought to be taken, and whether the same includes the whole or only a part of an entire tract.

2. In condemnation proceedings, defendant does not waive his right to appeal from an order overruling his demurrer by answering and going to trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by the San Francisco & San Joaquin Valley Railway Company against George H. Gould. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

George H. Gould, in pro. per. E. F. Preston and Bradley & Farnsworth, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action is prosecuted by said railway company to condemn a right of way for its railroad over lands owned by defendant. The defendant demurred to the complaint specially that the description of the land sought to be condemned is uncertain, and generally that a cause of action is not stated. These grounds of demurrer are based substantially upon the same alleged defect, and are aimed at paragraph 3 of the complaint, which reads as follows: "That the following is a description of the land so as aforesaid required for the right of way of said railroad of plaintiff, viz.: A strip of land one hundred feet wide, lying equally on each side of the center line of plaintiff's railroad, where same is located through the east one-half (E. ½) of section 9, township 24 south, range 24 east, M. D. B. & M.; said center line being more particularly described as follows: Beginning for same at a point where said center line intersects the north-west boundary of lot one of said section 9, at or near engineer's station 2218+66, running thence in a general southeasterly direction a distance of five thousand and ninety feet, more or less, to where said center line intersects the east boundary of the east one-half of said section 9, at or near engineer's station 2269+56; said tract of land containing an area of eleven and seven-tenths ( $11\frac{7}{10}$ ) acres, more or less." It is also alleged that a map of the road, so far as it is involved in this proceeding, is annexed to the complaint as an exhibit, and made part thereof. Appellant contends that the description and map of the land sought to be condemned are each and both insufficient.

Section 1244, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "If a right-of-way be sought the complaint must show the location, general route, and termini, and must be accompanied by a map thereof, so far as the same is involved in the action or proceeding; (5) a description of each piece of land sought to be taken, and whether the same includes the whole or only a part of an entire parcel or tract. * * *" In Railway Co. v. Hooper, 76 Cal. 404, 413, 18 Pac. 603, it was said: "The judgment must be so far certain as that the parties, and any ministerial officer who may be called on to enforce the judgment, may know what land is to be taken and paid for." The "description" of each piece of land sought to be taken obviously means such description as will readily and conveniently identify the land before the road is constructed, and upon which alone its construction is to be authorized by the judgment. The beginning point is alleged to be "where said center line intersects the north-west boundary of lot one of said section 9, at or near engineer's station 2218+66." The complaint does not inform us how it happens that there is a "northwest" boundary of lot 1, though the map referred to as exhibit A purports to be a map of "all of section 9 east of swamp-land line," and there is laid down a line running in a southwesterly direction, if we assume that the top of the map is north; for there is no indication of the points of the compass, nor is it marked on the map as the swamp-land line. The judgment describes the parcel taken as it is described in the complaint, without any reference to the map. It will also be noticed that the point where the center line of the road intersects the northwest line of lot 1 is not given by course and distance from the north line of section 9, and the only indication of that point of intersection is, "at or near engineer's station 2218+66." How such stations are marked does not appear; but assuming, as I think we may, that they are marked by temporary stakes, which may be readily changed, or be destroyed in the construction of the road, there could be no certainty that the road, if now constructed, is where said stations indicated it would be, or, if the stake were found, there is no way by which it could be determined that it is now where it was when the complaint was filed. So, the point of exit from appellant's land is "at or near" station 2269+56, "where said center line intersects the east boundary of the east half of said section 9." But whereabouts on that line? How far from a section corner? The distance between these two points or stations is stated to be "five thousand and ninety feet, more or less," and the course "a general southeasterly direction." Is it a straight line, or a curved line? How is it marked between these stations, or is it marked at all? Is the point of entrance upon appellant's land, and the exit therefrom, at or near said stations? If not at, how near, or in what direction from, said stations? What distance may be included or meant by the word "near"? All that was said in Railway Co. v. Hooper, supra, in relation to the map in that case applies here, except that in this case the map is marked, "Scale 1,000', 1", while in that case no scale was marked. Section 1242, Code Civ. Proc., permits an entry upon land desired to be taken for public use, to "survey and locate the same"; and therefore there should be no difficulty in making a map that would show precisely the location of the road in all its parts. In Convers v. Railroad Co., 18 Mich. 466, it was said: "We understand by 'map and survey,' not only a delineation on paper or other material, giving a general or approximate idea of the situation of the road, but also such full and accurate notes and data as are necessary to furnish complete means for identifying and ascertaining the precise position of every part of the line, with courses and distances throughout, so that there can be no doubt where any portion of it is to be found. A map can be made to contain all these data, so as to need no reference to field notes, but the information must exist somewhere. The map before us is singularly deficient. It purports to be drawn by a scale, but the lines of the road are not so laid down as to enable any one by the use of instruments to ascertain its location with any degree of accuracy. There is nothing to show its distance from corners or other boundaries at any part of the line. There are no courses or distances given, either on straight lines or on curves." In the case before us, as before stated, the description in the complaint does not indicate whether the line of the road sought to be condemned is straight or curved, and the judgment follows the language of the complaint. The map shows that a portion of the line is curved, but the map is neither copied nor referred to in the judgment, which becomes the evidence of title of the railway company, so that if a surveyor were to take the judgment, and go upon the land, it would be impossible for him to locate the line of the road between the two engineers' stations there named, or, if these were destroyed, he could only determine that the right of way entered appellant's land somewhere on the northwest side, and left it somewhere on the east side. It is true, the complaint alleges "that said railroad has been definitely located by plaintiff over and through the parcel of land hereinafter described"; but it is not shown or alleged that it was marked upon the ground by stakes, or in any manner, other than the mention of two "engineers' stations," nearly a mile apart, with no intimation as to whether the line between them is straight or curved, though the map shows that a portion of the line is curved, but the radius of the curve, or where it begins, cannot be accurately determined by the map.

Respondent contends that as the appellant answered, and had a trial, to which he has taken no exceptions, the judgment should not be reversed upon the ground that his special demurrer was overruled, because it does not appear that he was injured, and cites Shade v. Lumber Co., 115 Cal. 371, 47 Pac. 135. The reference is to a dissenting opinion, and not to the opinion of the court; but, without discussing the question there involved, it is sufficient to say that that case was an ordinary action upon an account, while this is a special proceeding by a railway company to acquire a portion of defendant's land without his consent and against his will, and therefore the requirements of the statute must be fully and fairly complied with. Respondent also cites several cases with reference to the significance of the word "located." West v. Railroad Co., 61 Miss. 536, was an action of trespass quare clausum fregit to recover damages caused by the construction of the road, and the defendant justified its entry by setting up a condemnation of the land under the provisions of its charter. The second replication was that the defendant trespassed by digging other parts of the land than that condemned. It was said that "the verdict of the jury shows that the jurors had carefully examined the land along the line of the said railroad," and that "it is shown by the evidence that the road had not been constructed at the time of the award by the jury, but we think it is sufficiently shown that the 'location' had been made by visible marks indicating the line." No objection was taken by the plaintiff at the time of the proceedings to condemn. In Sioux City & D. M. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 27 Fed. 770, the line was first located by the defendant "over the premises by a survey thereof, and had staked off such line, and placed stakes along the center of the line upon the premises at intervals of one hundred feet." The bill in this case was to enjoin the defendants from proceeding with the condemnation of the right of way over said premises. The third case cited is Railway Co. v. Alling, 99 U. S. 463, and it involved the conflicting claims of two railroads to occupy the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas in Colorado, under the act of congress of 1872, and subsequent amendments, regulating the occupation of narrow cañons in the public lands. We find nothing in this case which will aid us in deciding the case before us. Section 269, Wood, Ry. Law, cited by respondent, relates to the "mode of construction," and damages arising therefrom, and not at all to damages for right of way, or of proceedings to condemn. It may be that it is a matter of little real consequence to appellant, in a pecuniary sense, whether the road shall be constructed on any particular line across his land, which for aught we know is unimproved and of little value; but there may be cases where a proper description and a proper map may be of vital importance, and, so long as the law does not distinguish between cases, the courts cannot; for, if property of little value may be taken under materially defective proceedings, property of the greatest value may be so taken. We advise that the judgment be reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint and map.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint and map.

HODSON v. VARNEY. (Sac. 352.)

PAROL EVIDENCE.

Oral evidence is inadmissible to show that from a sale of a photograph gallery by bill of sale transferring all the material and working apparatus and all cameras and negatives in the gallery, the parties orally reserved a lens and camera, and a stated number of negatives located therein.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by J. R. Hodson against A. K. Varney. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. H. McKune and A. M. Johnson, for appellant. A. E. Bolton and J. C. Brusie, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action of claim and delivery, and defendant appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. Defendant purchased the photographic business of plaintiff under a written contract of sale which provided: "It is the purpose of this agreement to transfer all the materials and working apparatus now contained in said gallery, No. 521 J street, Sacramento, Cal., including everything essential to the working of the operating room, the printing room, furnishing, dressing, and reception rooms, and all furniture therein contained, also sixteen oil paintings and other various pictures and their frames, also all signs and advertising cases, also all the cameras, material and negatives therein contained." Plaintiff now seeks to recover possession of certain personal property which he claims did not pass to defendant under this sale, evidenced by the foregoing written contract. The plaintiff sold to defendant "all the materials and working apparatus now contained in said gallery, No. 521 J street, Sacramento, Cal." Upon the same floor of the building in which this gallery is located Hodson had the possession of two rooms, Nos. 10 and 11, in which was situated certain of the property sought to be recovered in this action. By an inspection of the contract of sale it will be perceived that plaintiff only disposed of property situated in the gallery (Hodson's Art Gallery). If rooms 10 and 11 were part of the gallery, then the title to the property situated therein passed to defendant under the bill of sale. As to what constituted Hodson's Art Gallery was a question of fact upon which the evidence of witnesses was properly received, and upon the evidence introduced the court held that rooms Nos. 10 and 11 were no part of the gallery. A Mammoth Peerless lens and camera was located in the gallery at the time of the sale, but it is claimed upon the part of plaintiff that it was specially reserved from the property sold. Under objection from defendant, plaintiff offered oral evidence to show that this instrument was reserved from the sale. In the face of the written contract, which in direct and explicit language declared that title to all the property in the gallery passed to defendant, and which also declared that "all cameras therein contained" passed to defendant, this evidence was clearly inadmissible. The offer of such evidence was a bald attempt to vary and contradict the terms of a written contract, and principles of elementary law forbid it being done. If six horses are sold by an instrument in writing, oral evidence will not be allowed to show that one of these horses was excepted from the effect of the sale. The writing in such a case contains no exception or reservation, and the writing must be held to contain all the terms of the contract. Oral evidence of reservations or exceptions of certain property from the effect of the bill of sale presented in this case should have been rejected by the trial court. The 200 sample negatives located in the gallery, and which it is claimed were also reserved, stand hand in hand with the Mammoth lens and camera. They passed to defendant by the terms of the sale. If the other articles of personal property involved in this litigation were located in rooms 10 and 11 at the time of the sale, and those rooms, as a matter of fact, were no part of Hodson's Art Gallery, then they were not included in the sale, and title to them still remained in the plaintiff. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

CHASE v. CITY TREASURER OF CITY AND COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES
et al. (L. A. 351.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1898.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS--ASSESSMENT FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT--INJUNCTION--CITY COUNCIL-- JURISDICTION TO ORDER IMPROVEMENT--DELE-GATION OF POWERS.

1. By Street Improvement Act March 17, 1891, § 41, the provisions of the Political Code relating to sales for the nonpayment of taxes are made a part of the act. Pol. Code, §§ 3786-87, make the deed prima facie evidence that the property was assessed and the taxes levied as required by law; that the taxes were not paid, and that the sale was in all respects according to law; that the property was not redeemed, and that the person who executed the deed was the proper officer; and conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings, from the assessment up to the execution of the deed. The act makes an assessment a lien on the property of an abutting lot owner, and also the bond issued on nonpayment of the assessment executed by the city. Held that, where there is nothing on the face of the assessment or bond to show that the lien is invalid, an action would lie to enjoin a sale of property to pay the amount claimed to be due on such a bond, and to set aside as void the assessment and bond, since, to defeat such an assessment and bond or a deed thereunder, it would be necessary to resort to evidence extraneous of any recitals to be found therein, and either therefore constitutes a cloud on the title.

2. The fact that plaintiff neither tendered any part of a local assessment, nor offered to pay what might be found legal, does not deprive him of his right to relief against the assessment, where he shows that it is void in toto.

3. Failure to appeal to the council to correct irregularities making void an assessment, under Act March 17, 1891, for a street improvement, in accordance with provisions for appeal therein, does not preclude injunction against the assessment.

4. Street Improvement Act March 17, 1891, § 3, provides that the resolution of intention by the city council shall be published in a newspaper "designated by said council for that purpose," and, after this and other requirements mentioned have been complied with, "the city council shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order any of the work to be done * * * which is authorized by this act." Held, that designation of a newspaper is jurisdictional.

5. The exclusive power over street improvements conferred by the legislature on the legislative department of the various city governments cannot be delegated, but must be exercised by that department as a body.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Delia W. Chase against the city treasurer of the city and county of Los Angeles and M. N. Sheldon. From a judgment for defendants, and an order dissolving a preliminary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

C. W. Chase, for appellant. F. W. Burnett, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. This action was brought to restrain the city treasurer of Los Angeles from selling the real property of plaintiff to pay the amount claimed to be due by defendant Sheldon on a bond issued against said property under the provisions of the act of March 17, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 116), for work on Ohio street, in said city, which work was done under the provisions of the so-called "Vrooman Act" of March 18, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 147). A perpetual injunction was prayed for, and that said bond and assessment be declared to be void so far as they affect plaintiff's property. The court granted a preliminary injunction. Later an amended complaint was filed, to which defendants demurred for insufficiency of facts. At the hearing the demurrer was sustained, the injunction was dissolved, and defendants had judgment, from which, and from the order dissolving the injunction, plaintiff appeals. By stipulation, both appeals are to be heard upon one transcript.

The complaint sets out all the proceedings of the council, and the steps taken subsequently leading up to the issuance of the bond provided for by the act of 1891, and sets forth the notice of sale of plaintiff's property because of default in payment of said bond, and that the said city treasurer threatens to sell, and will sell, plaintiff's property, unless restrained, and will in due course execute a deed under the terms of the statute, which will be conclusive evidence of the regularity of some of the proceedings, and prima facie evidence of the regularity of all the proceedings under said acts, and will cast a cloud upon plaintiff's title to said property.

1. Appellant contends that injunction is a proper remedy, and that equity will enjoin the collection of, and set aside, a void assessment. This contention is supported by numerous citations from text-books and decisions of this and other courts of last resort. Respondents make no reply to these, but plant themselves upon Esterbrook v. O'Brien, 98 Cal. 671, 33 Pac. 765 (cited), it is claimed, with approval, in Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 141, 44 Pac. 915, and 45 Pac. 1057, as conclusively determining the question, and as holding that, even though the assessment be absolutely void, the injured party must litigate his rights in an action at law. We do not think these cases or those to which reference is made in the opinions necessarily lead to the proposition stated by respondents. It is well settled, as a general rule, that, where an officer is about to sell real property to enforce the collection of a delinquent tax, the equity court will interpose to restrain the sale if, when consummated, it would cast a cloud upon the title. The true test by which to determine whether a deed, following such sale, would cast a cloud upon the title of plaintiff, was stated in Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 128, to be: "Would the owner of the property, in an action in ejectment brought by the adverse party, founded upon the deed, be required to offer evidence to defeat a recovery?" This test has been many times since affirmed in substantially the same but varying forms of expression. It is equally well settled that a court will not restrain the sale for taxes when it is apparent that the sale would be void on the face of the proceedings upon which the purchaser must necessarily rely to make out a prima facie case to enable him to recover under the sale. Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 71, and cases there cited.

By section 41 of the act of March 17, 1891, the provisions of the Political Code relating to sales for nonpayment of delinquent taxes are made a part of the act. Sections 3786 and 3787 of that Code make the deed prima facie evidence that the property was assessed, and the taxes levied as required by law; that the taxes were not paid, and that the sale was in all respects according to law; that the property was not redeemed, and that the person who executed the deed was the proper officer; and such deed is "conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings, from the assessment by the assessor, inclusive, up to the execution of the deed." The statute makes the assessment a lien upon the property of plaintiff, and so also the bond issued upon nonpayment, and there is nothing upon the face of the assessment or the bond to show that the lien is not in all respects valid. It is obvious that, to defeat such an assessment or such a deed, the plaintiff must resort to evidence extraneous of any recitals to be found in it; and this brings the case directly within the test as to what constitutes a cloud upon her title. In such a case it was said, in Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 244, 38 Pac. 881: "Although she can assert the same matters as a defense to any action for the enforcement of the assessment, she is not required to wait until such action may be brought, and in the meantime suffer the injury of having the title in her hands impaired by this apparent lien, but may herself invoke the equitable aid of the court to remove the cloud and to enjoin the holder of the assessment from asserting any claim upon her lands by virtue thereof." In that case the plaintiff sought to stop the progress of the proceedings at a stage a little earlier than did the plaintiff here; but we cannot see that she had any greater right to maintain the action than this plaintiff. The work had been done, and the assessment levied, and the lien had attached so far as it could. The issuing of the bond gives the contractor no greater or better lien than he had under the assessment and warrant, but in effect takes the place of the warrant; and the owner of the lot may prevent the issuance of the bond by exercising the election given by section 40 of the act, "and the payee of the warrant, or his assigns, shall retain his right for enforcing collection, as if said lot or parcel of land had not been so listed by the street superintendent." We think it true here, as was said in the Hellman Case: "So far as the questions in this case are concerned, the bonds really cut no figure, and might as well be eliminated from the case." We are unable to discover any distinction between this case and that of Bolton v. Gilleran, supra, so far as the right of action is involved. The fact that plaintiff made no tender of any part of the tax, and makes no offer to pay that portion which may be found to be legal, cannot, we think, deprive her of the right to the relief, where she shows that the entire assessment is void. Why should she make tender of a claim no part of which has any validity? If this were an action to quiet plaintiff's title, her action would lie. Kittle v. Bellegarde, 86 Cal. 556, 25 Pac. 55, and cases there cited. That was an action to quiet plaintiff's title, and to restrain defendant from executing a deed upon a certificate of sale given for nonpayment of delinquent street assessment. The action rested upon a showing that the assessment was void. The injunction was held to be proper as ancillary to the principal relief, and to make that relief effectual. The principal relief asked there was to have the assessment annulled and set aside, and to have the certificate canceled; here it is to have the assessment and bond declared void as against plaintiff's property. Both are equitable actions, and while one is in form to quiet title, under section 738, Code Civ. Proc., and the other is an appeal to the general equity powers of the court, both aim at the same result, and afford the same relief. We can discern no reason why the one should be afforded and the other refused.

As we regard the case, the only debatable question relating to the remedy, assuming the assessment to be entirely void, is: Did plaintiff lose her relief in this action by failure to avail herself of the opportunities afforded by the statute to correct the errors and irregularities of which she now complains? It is hardly necessary to summarize the provisions of the act as to the matters made the subject of appeal to the council. They have been frequently stated in former cases. It was held in Manning v. Den, 90 Cal. 610, 27 Pac. 435, that section 11 of the act of March 18, 1885, authorizing street assessments, to the effect that no assessment shall be invalid except upon appeal to the city council, etc., does not apply to a case where an appeal is not authorized, or in which, if taken, the council could not have remedied the defect, the assessment being void by reason of incurable defects; and if, in such case, the owner appeals, and the decision of the council is against him, he is not estopped. It was held in McBean v. Redick, 96 Cal. 191, 31 Pac. 7, that, where the contract is absolutely void, its invalidity could not have been remedied or avoided by the trustees of the city, and, this being so, the property owner was not required to appeal to the trustees for its correction. In Frick v. Morford, 87 Cal. 576, 25 Pac. 764, it was said, in respect of the act of 1885: "The owners were interested in having a legal and correct assessment. If the assessment was illegal, and created no lien upon the land, Williams (the owner) was not a person who would feel 'aggrieved,' and was not required to appeal for the purpose of giving to the plaintiff a valid assessment." See Perine v. Forbush, 97 Cal. 305, 32 Pac. 226; Brock v. Luning, 89 Cal. 316, 26 Pac. 972. If the alleged irregularities in this case were such as to show want of jurisdiction to order the work, or that the council delegated to the superintendent powers which the council alone could exercise, these, if no other, would be sufficient to render the assessment void, and no appeal by plaintiff to the council could have availed him.

2. Several defects are pointed out, the result of which, it is claimed, rendered the assessment void.

(a) It is alleged in the complaint that the only paper designated by the council for the publication of notice of intention was the Los Angeles Daily Times, and that the only publication of notice was in the Los Angeles Evening Express. Section 3 of the act of 1891 provides that the resolution of intention "shall be * * * published by two insertions in one or more daily, semi-weekly or weekly newspapers published and circulated in said city, and designated by said council for that purpose." The act requires the street superintendent to post notices headed "Notice of Street Work," and to publish like notice in one or more newspapers. At the expiration of a certain period thereafter, if no objection to the work has been filed, "the city council shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order any of the work to be done * * * which is authorized by this act." An act required that notice of awards of contracts by the board of supervisors should be published for five days. It was published, but without a previous order of the board. Held, that the publication of the notice was void. Donnelly v. Tillman, 47 Cal. 40; Donnelly v. Marks, Id. 187,—followed in several subsequent cases. So held with regard to the publication of ordinances. City of Napa v. Easterby, 61 Cal. 509. Held, in Shipman v. Forbes, 97 Cal. 572, 32 Pac. 599, that, "in proceedings where the property of a citizen is to be taken, every requirement of the statute having the least semblance of benefit to the owner must be complied with." No one can doubt that the purpose of notice is to give the owner of property an opportunity to object to the proposed work, and that notice is for his benefit, and is of benefit. Here the act required the council to designate the newspaper, and the ordinance directed the publication to be made in that paper. It was, we think, mandatory upon the council to designate the paper; and, being so, a publication in some paper not designated would not be a compliance with the statute, and would, in effect, be no publication. Wade, Notice, §§ 1106, 1108, 1123; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 605, and cases cited. See, also, Donnelly v. Tillman, 47 Cal. 40, followed in many cases; City of Napa v. Easterby, 61 Cal. 509; Shipman v. Forbes, 97 Cal. 572, 32 Pac. 599; Hewes v. Reis, 40 Cal. 255.

(b) It is alleged in the complaint that amended specification No. 5 contains certain provisions which, when examined, we think, will be found to delegate duties which the council alone can perform. In Bolton v. Gilleran, supra, the question as to the power of the supervisors of San Francisco to delegate the authority given them by the statute was very fully considered. It was cited with approval in Perine Contracting & Paving Co. v. City of Pasadena, 116 Cal. 6, 47 Pac. 777. We think those cases are determinative of the point here relied upon,—that there was an unauthorized delegation of power by the council.

Counsel for appellant presents several other alleged fatal defects, but we do not think it necessary to notice them. It is obvious that sufficient has been shown to render the assessment void and the bond invalid. Respondents' counsel make no objection to the sufficiency of the complaint, except in the single contention that the case is not one for equitable relief. While we might well have assumed that the assessment was void, it appears clearly from what has been said that in at least two vital particulars the complaint shows it so to be. We think the demurrer should have been overruled, and that it was error to dissolve the injunction and enter judgment for defendants. The order dissolving the injunction and the judgment in favor of defendants should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order dissolving the injunction and the judgment in favor of defendants are reversed, and the cause remanded.

SLINKARD v. MANCHESTER FIRE ASSUR. CO. (Sac. 430.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1898.)
INSURANCE—USE OF INSURED PROPERTY—CHANGE OF USE—LIABILITY OF INSURER.

1. A policy of insurance on a harvester "while in use in Tulare county" does not cover a loss occurring while it is stored in a shed, and is not being actually used for harvesting purposes.

2. Civ. Code, § 2754, providing that "an alteration in the use or condition of a thing insured from that to which it is limited by the policy, which does not increase the risk, does not affect the contract of insurance," does not apply where the policy, in terms, restricts the use to certain definite purposes.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county. Action by J. M. Slinkard, Jr., against the Manchester Fire Assurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Van Ness & Redman, for appellant. C. G. Lamberson and Hannah & Miller, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action on insurance policy for loss of a combined harvester by fire. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Defendant issued its policy to plaintiff to cover a period of three months from June 25, 1896, at noon, "against all direct loss or damage by fire, except as hereinafter provided, * * * while located and contained as described herein, and not elsewhere, to wit: Twelve hundred dollars on combined harvester, Haines-Houser, makers, while in use in Tulare county, Calif.," etc. The court found that at the time the policy was issued the harvester "was being actually used in the field by plaintiff for the purpose of harvesting grain upon his ranch in Tulare county, and continued to be so used by him until the 25th day of July, 1896, when said harvester was placed in a shed upon the said ranch of plaintiff; * * * that the placing of said harvester in such shed was the usual manner in which such machinery is taken care of and provided for in such neighborhood, and was a proper and careful manner for the safe-keeping of such property." The court found that the risk was not thereby increased, but materially decreased, and was less liable to loss by fire in said shed than when in use in the field. On September 26, 1896, while in said shed, the harvester was destroyed by fire, without plaintiff's fault. The italicized words of the policy as shown above were in writing upon the face of the policy, and, except the signature, the rest of the policy was in print. The liability of defendant depends upon two questions: (1) Was the harvester, at the time of the loss, "in use," within the meaning of the policy? And (2) is section 2754 of the Civil Code applicable to such case as this?

1. Without reference to the section of the Civil Code referred to, we think the words "while in use" were intended to be employed, and have the effect, to limit the liability of defendant to loss by fire of the harvester while being used for harvesting purposes, and do not cover the loss as it occurred. The liability would probably attach in an interval of disuse in the field, as at night, or the noon hour, or while undergoing temporary repairs where being used; for it would be a narrow—and, we think, unwarranted—construction to hold that the policy covered those periods only while the machine was actually engaged in cutting grain, and did not include temporary stoppages. But we think it would do violence to the language used, as well as to the manifest intention of the parties, to hold that the policy covered a risk after the harvest was over, and plaintiff had ceased using it, and the machine was dismantled and stored away in a building. It had then ceased to be used in the sense contemplated. A policy insured against loss by fire a threshing machine engine and separator "while not in use." The outfit had been used, but was hauled to another place, and was left standing near a farm house, preparatory to its intended use a few days later, and while standing there was destroyed by fire. It was held that the machines were "not in use," within the meaning of the policy. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 57 Minn. 35, 58 N. W. 819. This is a case the converse of the one we have here, but it shows—and we think properly—that, when we speak of a machine "in use," we do not mean a machine "not in use." The language of the policies in Benicia Agricultural Works v. Germania Ins. Co., 97 Cal. 468, 32 Pac. 512, and Mawhinney v. Insurance Co., 98 Cal. 184, 32 Pac. 945, was not the same as in the present case, but the principle there decided governs here. Among other things, it was said in the latter of these cases: "An insurer is not liable, except upon proof that the loss has occurred within the terms of the policy, and when making the policy he is at liberty to select the character of the risk he will assume. If the terms of the risk are distinct and without ambiguity, the assured cannot complain, if the risk assumed does not cover the loss. * * * Whatever may have been the motives for limiting the extent of the risk, he [the insurer] cannot be made liable for a loss that was not covered by the risk assumed in the policy." It has been similarly held in many adjudicated cases. Wood, Ins. § 47. Respondent contends that the language, "while in use in Tulare county," was not intended to mean any particular or special use, but was intended to mean only the general use made of such property in the county, and while it remained in such county. We are cited to Astor v. Merritt, 111 U. S. 202, 4 Sup. Ct. 413, and Snow v. Insurance Co., 48 N. Y. 624. We are unable to see that these cases warrant our holding the intention of the parties in the policy before us to be as broad as contended for by respondent. If he had intended to have a general risk covered for the three months, why were the terms "in use" written into the policy? If such had been the intent, the expression would have been "while in Tulare county," not "while in use in Tulare county." We cannot speculate as to whether the risk was greater or less while in actual use than while stored in the shed, to ascertain the true meaning of the terms used; for, whether greater or less, we are held to the terms in fact used. When insured, the machine was in the harvest field, "in use" to harvest grain; and it seems to us that this was the use, and the only use, meant by the parties. In Langworthy v. Insurance Co., 85 N. Y. 632, the policy read: "Frame, shingle-roof hop house, while drying hops," from August 15th to October 15th. The hop house was destroyed September 30th, after the plaintiff had ceased drying hops. The court said: "The defendant did not undertake to insure the hop house against fire generally during the time specified, but during the time specified only 'while drying hops.' * * *

If this had been intended as an absolute general insurance for the full term of sixty days, the words 'while drying hops' were purposeless, having no signification." And so it seems to us, in the case here, the words "in use" would be purposeless, if we were to hold as contended by respondent; for we do not think a machine can be said to be in use when it is stored away in a shed after the harvest is over, and is in fact in disuse.

2. Respondent claims that, while it may be said that the use to which the machine was limited by the terms of the policy was the special use of harvesting grain, respondent has by his pleading and by the evidence shown that he is fairly within the provisions of sections 2611, 2753, and 2754 of the Civil Code. Section 2611 reads, "A policy may declare that a violation of specific provisions thereof shall avoid it, otherwise a breach of an immaterial provision does not avoid the policy." Section 2754 reads, "An alteration in the use or condition of a thing insured from that to which it is limited by the policy, which does not increase the risk, does not affect a contract of insurance." Section 2753 gives the insurer the right to rescind in the case mentioned in section 2754, under circumstances stated. It is claimed that these sections "abrogate the rule which had formerly obtained, that any change in the use or condition of a thing insured from that limited in the policy avoided the insurance." It is not to be supposed that the legislature intended by section 2611 to give the insurer the right to insert a condition in the policy which, if violated, should avoid it, and by section 2754 take away that right. Respondent's construction would abrogate the warranties specially declared to exist in certain policies as shown by section 2603 et seq., and would practically take away from the parties the right of contract altogether. We think that the term "alteration in the use or condition" has reference to policies silent upon the subject, in which case the general rule is that the contract is not thereby avoided, unless the change of use or condition materially increases the risk. But where the policy in terms stipulates against the use for certain purposes, or restricts the use to certain definite purposes, we do not think section 2754 was intended to apply; nor do we think it introduces a rule under which the insured could, by proof that there was less hazard in the changed use, enforce a policy which stipulated against such changed use. When the insurer has thus stipulated, the violation of the agreement is not to be tested by the effect upon the risk, for it makes no difference whether the risk is increased or not. The stipulation has made any change of use a material part of the contract. The cases in 97 and 98 Cal., and 32 Pac., supra, while not referring to section 2754, could not have been decided in ignorance or disregard of its provisions. The case in 97 Cal., we think, was decided with a clearly-implied reference to section 2754, and that section was cited by appellant in its brief. The court said: "The appellant took exceptions to the rulings of the court excluding certain offered evidence, by which appellant sought to show that the risk or hazard was not increased by the fact that the machine was not employed in the fields or in transit at the time of the fire; but those objections and that testimony were immaterial, under the view which we have taken of the contract itself." And so, in 98 Cal., and 32 Pac., it was distinctly held that an insurer is at liberty to select the character of the risk he will assume, and he is not liable, except upon proof that the loss occurred within the terms of the policy. The dissenting opinions clearly show that upon the point now raised there was no disagreement in the court. In McKenzie v. Insurance Co., 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922, it was said: "Parties may contract as they please. When a condition precedent is adopted by them in their contract, the courts will not inquire as to its wisdom or folly, but must exact its strict, or at least substantial, observance." We do not think section 2754, supra, was intended to apply to such a case as this, nor that the stipulations in the policy could be avoided by showing that the risk to the machine from fire was less in the shed than in the field while in use. It was error to admit evidence under this section, over defendant's objection, upon that question of fact. Benicia Agricultural Works v. Germania Ins. Co., supra. The judgment and order should be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed.

SPRIGG v. BARBER. (L. A. 311.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1898.)

APPEAL—RECORD—REVIEW—PAYMENT—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

1. On dissolution of a firm of attorneys, they divided their business, and one of them agreed to pay the other a stated sum from the proceeds of the business retained by him. A case assigned to the latter was, at the client's request, transferred to the former, in consideration of which the client agreed to pay the latter a certain sum for his fees therein, which sum the former attorney afterwards assumed and paid. Held, in an action to recover the sum agreed to be paid by the former from the business retained by him, wherein defendant alleged that there was but one agreement, and that the sum paid for the transfer of the case was included in the first-mentioned sum, that the payment of the latter sum could be shown as a defense.

2. An order denying a new trial, which is not reviewable because the statement contains no specifications of error, is not made reviewable because on appeal from the judgment there came before the court for review rulings on evidence admitted on a special issue, and having no other connection with the case.

3. An answer in an action to recover an agreed sum, which denies that it is owing, and alleges that all of defendant's agreements have been duly performed, paid, and discharged, and all of the demands sued for fully paid, satisfied, and discharged, makes the question of payment an issuable fact.

4. The objection that a finding is not within the issues cannot be raised on appeal, where the parties tried the question on which the finding is based without objection.

In bank. On rehearing. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 54 Pac. 899.

CHIPMAN, C. 1. Respondent submits, in limine, "that the record fails to disclose for review, either on the appeal from the judgment or from the order, any question arising out of any proceedings upon the trial, outside of the judgment roll; for the reason that the statement specifies no ground of alleged insufficiency of evidence, or of alleged errors of law argued before the court for the new trial." Judgment was entered March 20, 1896, and filed March 21, 1896. On March 28th plaintiff served notice of motion for a new trial. The transcript contains what purport to be minutes of the court, to show that on April 10th, the parties being present, plaintiff by his attorneys and defendant in person, plaintiff moved the court to set aside the decision rendered March 20th, wherein judgment was given, and to grant plaintiff a new trial upon the grounds stated in the notice. The motion was made upon the minutes of the court, the record in the case, and evidence taken. Motion was denied, and plaintiff excepted and served notice of appeal April 17th. This part of the record (except notice of appeal) is not authenticated in any manner except by the clerk's certificate at the end of the statement, and follows immediately after the judgment roll in the transcript. Then follows the statement, which was settled by the judge September 11, 1896. In the statement there is no copy of the notice of motion, or its specifications, and no copy of the motion itself, and no reference made to them, and no specifications of error in any form. The statement contains only the evidence introduced at the trial and the rulings of the court as they there occurred, the notice of appeal, and the clerk's certificate. The question is, can this court look beyond the judgment roll and the statement, and consider the motion and the grounds stated therein, and the specifications found with the notice of motion? These questions, we think, are answered in the negative in Leonard v. Shaw, 114 Cal. 69, 45 Pac. 1012. There, as here, there was a failure to embody in the statement any specifications whatever of the errors or particular reasons on which the moving party relied, and it was held that the motion could not be considered. The clerk certified, among other things, in the case now here, that certain original documents were of record and on file in his office "in said entitled case, * * * to wit, judgment roll, notice of motion for new trial, order of court denying said motion, statement on appeal, notice of appeal, and service thereof." We do not think the clerk can supply by certificate what the law requires should be made to appear in the statement. The judge settles the statement, and in this case he certified to its correctness as it appears in the transcript. The clerk has no power to add to or take from that statement as thus settled. In Leonard v. Shaw it was said that, although the notice contained the required particular errors and objections relied upon, "this did not, however, obviate a specification of the errors and objections in the statement to be made in such cases after a hearing of the motion." This must necessarily be so, since the notice forms no part of the record.

Appellant's counsel say in their brief: "The language of the court in repeated cases would lead the practitioner to the conclusion that the place for the specifications was in the notice, and, if found therein, they had served their purpose, and need not be brought up in the record." In support of this statement we are cited to Buckley v. Althorf, 86 Cal. 643, 25 Pac. 134. That case held that, where a motion for a new trial is submitted on the minutes of the court, the notice of the motion must specify the particulars wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient, and the errors of law relied upon; and that, failing in this, no subsequent statement is authorized, and, if made and settled, will not be considered on appeal. But it is nowhere intimated in the opinion that, having made the requisite specifications in the notice, they need not be restated in the statement. On the contrary, it was there said: "His motion for a new trial having been submitted on the minutes of the court, he could only bring to this court, on appeal, matters other than those appearing in the judgment roll by bill of exceptions, or a 'statement of the case subsequently prepared';" citing Code Civ. Proc. § 661. Subdivision 4 of section 659 prescribes that, if the ground of the motion, when made upon the minutes of the court, be for insufficiency of the evidence, or errors of law, the notice must specify the particulars, failing in which the motion will be denied; but this subdivision does not dispense with the statement, or give the slightest intimation that the statement need not contain what subdivision 3 of the same section says the statement must contain, to wit, "The statement shall specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely." In Re Westerfield, 96 Cal. 113, 30 Pac. 1104, cited by appellant, the question was only as to the sufficiency of the notice. Pico v. Cohn, 78 Cal. 384, 20 Pac. 706, is also cited. That case would seem to be against appellant's contention. It was there held that the notice of intention to move for a new trial is not made a part of the record on appeal, and need not be embodied in the statement or presented on appeal in any form unless the respondent insists that it is insufficient. The notice was held to be the basis of the motion, "and that, upon the proper statement being filed, and the necessary motion made and passed upon by the court below, the notice has performed its functions, and is not a necessary part of the record on appeal, or to be presented in any form. When the case comes to us, we look to the statement or bill of exceptions, and the specifications in which the court below is not sustained by the evidence, and the specifications of errors of law, as our guide in reviewing the case, and to these alone. If a question is presented by such specifications, and is properly saved in the statement or bill of exceptions, this court will look no further, but must presume that the question was properly presented to the court below, and passed upon in its rulings upon the motion for a new trial." Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 105 Cal. 84, 38 Pac. 627, is also cited. The opinion affirms Pico v. Cohn on the point as to the notice of intention above noted, and decides that the order denying the motion is deemed excepted to, and need not be embodied in the bill of exceptions. We find in the opinion no intimation that specifications of particular errors may be dispensed with in the statement beyond this. We are unable to verify from the decisions the claim that this court has encouraged the belief that the only place for the specification of errors is in the notice. It seems to us that when it was held that the notice formed no part of the record the plain inference would be that the specifications must appear in the statement, for surely they should appear somewhere. Counsel claim that this court must presume, when the trial court has settled a statement showing the exceptions, and the evidence pertinent thereto, that the ground was argued before the trial court. But this is to ask the court to supply by presumption what the Code says must be embodied in the statement. Section 659.

2. Error is claimed in admitting on behalf of defendant the judgment roll in the case of Patterson Sprigg (plaintiff here) against C. L. Barber (one of the defendants here) and F. E. Bates, numbered 9,458, of the cases brought in the superior court of San Diego county. The ground of objection was irrelevancy to any issue pleaded, and that it was incompetent and immaterial. The present action arises out of partnership relations between plaintiff and defendant in the practice of law. Terms of dissolution were agreed upon, and a division of the partnership assets was made by agreement in writing, by which it is alleged in the complaint defendant agreed to pay plaintiff $7,500 from the fees to be received by defendant from certain professional business of the firm which devolved upon defendant to prosecute, and which it is alleged has been concluded, and the fees received by defendant. The answer denied that defendant had agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $7,500, "or any other sum greater than $1,000"; denies that defendant has received "the sum of $7,500, or any other sum greater than $1,000, or that said sum has never been paid by defendant to plaintiff, or that the same is due or payable, or that defendant refuses to pay the same. The foregoing admissions as to $1,000 apply to one and the same sum of $1,000, and not to more than one sum." Several special defenses are set up in the answer. In one of these it is alleged that in the division of the litigation in the hands of the co-partnership at its dissolution was a certain case entitled "Frank E. Bates [one of the defendants in the action No. 9,458, supra] vs. E. S. Babcock and the Coronado Beach Company [spoken of in the evidence and pleadings as Bates vs. Babcock]." By the agreement of dissolution plaintiff, Sprigg, was to be substituted in place of Sprigg & Barber as attorney in Bates v. Babcock. Bates had no previous knowledge of this disposition of his case, and, when informed of it, objected, and, before any services had been rendered by Sprigg, obtained the consent of Sprigg that Barber should be substituted, and in consideration agreed to pay Sprigg $500 in full satisfaction of his interest in any fees accrued or to accrue to Sprigg, and Barber was retained by Bates to act as sole attorney in place of Sprigg & Barber. Later, Bates assigned to Barber, for certain considerations, all his interest in the pending action of Bates v. Babcock; that all sums due from Bates to Sprigg & Barber were liquidated and settled, by which settlement the share due Sprigg was adjusted at the sum of $1,000, and Barber agreed to pay him this sum. Of this agreement Sprigg was informed, and consented thereto, and ratified the same. It is also alleged in the answer that the action No. 9,458 was brought by Sprigg December 27, 1895, and after his consent to said agreements. In this action Sprigg set up the agreement of Bates to pay plaintiff $500, which indebtedness, it was alleged, was assumed by Barber. The liability grew out of Bates' promise to Sprigg, already referred to. Plaintiff recovered judgment for $500 in that action, which was paid by Barber. These matters were set forth in the present case by the pleadings, and became issuable facts therein, and we think the judgment roll was, therefore, properly admitted, as it showed part payment of plaintiff's claim. As we understand plaintiff's reply brief, it is claimed further that the admission of this judgment roll opened up the whole controversy on this appeal from the judgment, even if the motion for a new trial cannot be considered. We do not so understand the effect of offering the judgment roll in No. 9,458 in evidence. It has no apparent connection with this case except as it shows a payment of $500 to plaintiff on account of fees in Bates v. Babcock, and therefore opened up no controversy beyond this.

3. Plaintiff claims that defendant admitted a liability of $1,000; that the findings are against this admission; and that, therefore, the judgment should be modified so as to give plaintiff judgment for $1,000 instead of $500, and his costs of appeal. Ortega v. Cordero, 88 Cal. 225, 26 Pac. 80, and numerous other cases are cited to the point that a finding at variance with an admission must be disregarded, and that findings should be confined to the facts in issue. There can be no doubt that plaintiff correctly states the rule. The court found as follows: "That said sum of one thousand dollars, so promised to be paid by defendant as aforesaid, included the sum of five hundred dollars specified in the agreement referred to in said amended answer." In addition to the matters set forth in the answer as shown above, it was alleged "that all of defendant's alleged agreements have been duly performed, paid, satisfied, and discharged." It was also alleged that by reason of the facts set forth in the answer "all of plaintiff's demands sued for were fully paid, satisfied, and discharged." The answer, taken as a whole, we think made the question of payment an issuable fact, and that the court properly found upon it. Besides, the parties seem to have proceeded to trial upon the answer, without objection to its sufficiency to raise the issue, and evidence was received as to the facts set up in the answer, and the issue was passed upon. In such case objection will not be heard in this court for the first time that the finding is not within the issues. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Pacific Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 285, 47 Pac. 60. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

NELSON v. MERCED COUNTY. (Sac. 406.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1898.)

PLEADING—DEMURRER—HARMLESS ERROR—CLAIMS AGAINST COUNTIES—LIMITATIONS.

1. A demurrer to a complaint containing only one cause of action should be overruled, if there can be a recovery for any part of the account sued for.

2. After the court had erroneously sustained defendant's demurrer to a part of the items of an account sued for, no judgment was rendered on the order, and defendant answered without objection by plaintiff, but without leave of court or a vacation of said order, and the case was tried on the answer. Held, that plaintiff was not harmed by the irregularity.

3. St. 1893, p. 363, § 41, precluding county supervisors from allowing a claim against the county where a statement is not filed within a year after the last item of the account accrued, does not bar a claim by a surveyor for his daily compensation due under St. 1893, p. 497, for a period more than a year before the statement was filed, where it also demanded pay for a period within the year.

4. Employment by the day in the service of a county under the same contract, at a stipulated compensation, is a proper subject of an account to be embraced in a single cause of action, the statute nowhere fixing a time for the payment of per diem compensation of officers.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Action by C. C. Nelson against Merced county. From a judgment for plaintiff for only a part of the amount sued for, he appeals. Reversed.

F. H. Farrar, for appellant. F. G. Ostrander, Dist. Atty., and W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Plaintiff brought this action to recover from the county of Merced $1,884, for services rendered by the plaintiff as supervisor of said county while acting as road commissioner in his district. His claim for said services, itemized and verified as required by law, was duly filed and presented to the board of supervisors May 19, 1896, and by said board referred to the district attorney, who indorsed thereon the following disapproval: "The annexed claim is disapproved, the reason for disapproval being that claimant has already received compensation in full from Merced county for the services rendered by him as road commissioner during all the times mentioned in this claim; also for the reason that all that portion of the claim for services rendered prior to May 19, 1895, is barred by the provisions of the county government act (St. 1893, § 41,—County Government Act)." The claim was thereupon rejected by the board of supervisors, and this action was brought.

The first charge in the itemized account is dated February 1, 1893, and the last is April 29, 1896, and it was filed with the clerk of the board May 19, 1896. Under the act of 1893, Merced was a county of the thirty-ninth class, and by section 201, subd. 15, the compensation of supervisors in counties of that class is fixed at "six dollars per day for each day while in service of the county" (St. 1893, p. 497); and it is conceded that supervisors of said county were entitled to that compensation for each day's service as road commissioner. The complaint consisted of one count or cause of action covering the entire claim, and defendant demurred thereto (1) for want of sufficient facts; (2) that it is barred by section 41 of the county government act of 1893; (3) that it is barred by section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (4) that it is barred by section 339 of the same Code. Upon the hearing of the demurrer, the following order was made: "It is ordered that the demurrer herein be, and the same is, sustained as to all items of the account prior to one year before the filing of claim." No judgment was entered upon this order, and afterwards the defendant answered, and admitted that plaintiff performed the services alleged in the complaint, but denied that defendant was indebted to the plaintiff on account thereof in said sum of $1,884, or in any sum greater than $540, and alleged that plaintiff's claim for all services rendered prior to May 19, 1895, is barred by section 41 of the county government act of 1893.

The ruling upon the demurrer was erroneous. There being but one cause of action pleaded in the complaint, if a recovery could be had for any part of the claim it should have been overruled. Regularly, the order should have been vacated, and the demurrer overruled, with leave to answer. But appellant was not prejudiced, and, besides, the appeal is from the judgment upon the judgment roll; and there is nothing in the record showing that appellant objected to the filing of the answer, or to the trial of the issue made thereby. It must be assumed, therefore, that the answer was filed by consent, and the judgment subsequently rendered is not affected by the irregularity.

Upon the trial, findings were waived, and the plaintiff had judgment for $540, being that portion of the account or claim which had accrued within one year prior to its presentation to the board of supervisors, and which amount the answer conceded was a legal claim. The sole question therefore is whether the remainder of the claim was barred by section 41 of the county government act of 1893, no other defense, under other statutes of limitation or otherwise, having been pleaded. Said section 41, so far as material here, is as follows: "The board of supervisors must not hear or consider any claim in favor of any person, corporation, company or association against the county, nor shall the board credit [audit?] or allow any claim or bill against the county or district fund, unless the same be itemized, giving names, dates, and particular services rendered, * * * number of days engaged, materials furnished, to whom, and quantity and price paid therefor, duly verified as to its correctness, and that the amount claimed is justly due, is presented and filed with the clerk of the board within a year after the last item of the account or claim accrued. * * *" St. 1893, p. 363. The contention of respondent is—and the court below sustained it—that only those items of the claim which accrued within a year prior to the presentation of the claim could be allowed under the provisions of the section above quoted. This contention cannot be sustained. The language of the statute is too plain to admit of construction. It provides that the board shall not allow any claim against the county "unless the same be filed with the clerk of the board within a year after the last item of the account or claim accrued." The limitation imposed by said section does not begin to run until the date at which the last item accrued; and the claim may be allowed if presented at any time within a year after that date. Statutes of limitation are to be strictly construed, and the court must find the intention of the legislature from the statute itself. Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634. If it had been the intention of the legislature to bar all items of a claim which did not accrue within a year before the presentation of the claim, it would have been easy to say so, or to say that no claim shall be allowed unless the first item thereof shall have accrued within a year before its presentation.

It is suggested by respondent that "the claim of the plaintiff is composed, not of items constituting one claim, but of numerous claims incorporated into one." The statute nowhere fixes a time for the payment of per diem compensation of officers. All employment by the day, under the same contract, at a stipulated compensation, is the proper subject of an account to be embraced in a single cause of action. The services rendered by the plaintiff form no exception to the rule, as clearly appears by section 51 of the same act (St. 1893, p. 365), which provides: "All claims against the county by members of the board of supervisors for per diem and mileage, or other service rendered by them, must be itemized and verified as other claims." The answer states no defense to the action, and the plaintiff might have had judgment on the pleadings upon motion therefor. I advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

BROOKS v. JOHNSON et al. (Sac. 412.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1898.)
PLEADING—DENIAL OF EXECUTION OF INSTRUMENT —DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VACATION—
IGNORANCE—SURPRISE.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 448, provides that, when a defense is based on a written instrument, a copy whereof is contained in the answer or is annexed thereto, the genuineness and due execution thereof are admitted, unless plaintiff files an affidavit denying the same. Held, that under section 462, providing that the statement of any new matter in the answer in avoidance or defense must be deemed controverted by the opposite party, an instrument set up as a defense may be controverted as without consideration, though no affidavit denying its genuineness and due execution has been filed.

2. Where plaintiff gave defendant's attorney notice, as required by the rules of court, that he would move to set the cause for trial, and defendant's attorney did not appear, misbelieving that he was entitled, under the rules, to a notice of the time for which it was set, and plaintiff, without further notice, took judgment by default, the attorney's ignorance of the rules does not authorize relief from the judgment as for surprise.

3. Unless it is shown that a different result might have been reached, a court cannot set aside its decision because of surprise or failure of the attorney to be present at the trial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Action by one Brooks against one Johnson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. H. Maxwell and W. F. Gibson, for appellants. Lucius L. Solomons, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The complaint is in the ordinary form, setting forth the promissory note whose payment is secured by the mortgage, and alleging that it was made October 6, 1893, payable one year thereafter, and has not been paid. The complaint herein was filed September 1, 1896; and the defendant Johnson, one of the makers of the note, in his answer thereto alleged that on the 19th of February, 1895, the plaintiff, by a written instrument, extended the time of payment of the note until the 6th day of October, 1896,—setting forth in his answer a copy of said instrument,—and denied that there was any sum of money due from the defendants to the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of this action. The plaintiff did not make or file an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of this instrument. The cause was tried by the court, and a finding made by it that the written instrument, and the extension of time therein provided, were made by the plaintiff without consideration; and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the note, and for the foreclosure of the mortgage. The appeal therefrom is urged here upon the ground that by failing to file the affidavit authorized by section 448, Code Civ. Proc., the genuineness and due execution of the instrument set up in the answer were admitted, and that it was not competent for the court to receive evidence, or determine that it was made without consideration. The effect of a failure by a plaintiff to file such affidavit was fully considered in the recent case of Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630, and it was there said: "Where the defendant has pleaded a written instrument in defense (not by way of cross complaint), and the plaintiff has not served and filed an affidavit denying the instrument, and has offered no evidence controverting it on any ground, the instrument is to be deemed admitted, and must be taken for what it appears on its face to be. But the plaintiff may controvert the instrument by evidence of fraud, mistake, undue influence, compromise, payment, statute of limitations, estoppel, and the like defenses, under section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In short, he may by evidence controvert the instrument upon any and all grounds, except that he cannot controvert its due execution or its genuineness. By 'genuineness' is meant nothing more than that it is not spurious, counterfeit, or of different import on its face from the one executed, but is the identical instrument executed by the party. [Citing several cases in support thereof.] It could never have been intended that the plaintiff is required to make an affidavit denying the instrument, or be precluded from making any defense whatever. There are many defenses which he is, and should be, entitled to make, while possibly compelled to admit that he executed the instrument, and that it is genuine, and which defenses it was intended by the Code he might make under section 462." In Water Co. v. Raynor, 57 Cal. 588, a written instrument was annexed to the answer; and at the trial the maker thereof testified, in answer to a question put to him, that there was no consideration therefor. The question was objected to by the defendant upon the ground that there was no denial of the consideration in the pleadings; and it was said by this court, upon an appeal therefrom, that there was no error in the ruling, and that "the genuineness and the execution of the instrument was not at all impeached by the evidence admitted." It was held that the provision of section 462, Code Civ. Proc., "The statement of any new matter in the answer in avoidance, or constituting a defense or counterclaim, must on the trial be deemed controverted by the opposite party," allows the plaintiff, in reply to such new matter, to introduce on the trial any evidence which countervails or overcomes it, as if it were inserted in a replication, and pleaded with all the precision and fullness which the strictest rules of law ever required. The court, therefore, did not err in receiving this evidence, and, upon its findings in accordance therewith, properly held that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

By the rules of the superior court of Butte county, where this cause was pending, the calendar of the causes at issue of fact in that court is made up on the first Monday of each month, and on that day set down for trial. The answer of the appellant to the complaint herein was served and filed October 22d, and on October 24th the attorney for the plaintiff served upon the attorney for the defendant a notice that on Monday, the 2d of November, he would move for an order setting the cause for trial on a day to be named by the court; and on said 2d day of November, in pursuance of said notice, the court, upon motion therefor by the plaintiff, set the cause down for trial on the 9th of November. The cause was tried on the last-named day, but neither the appellant nor his attorney were present at the trial. Upon a motion for a new trial the attorney for the appellant read an affidavit to the effect that he received the notice of the motion to set the cause for trial, but supposed that he would receive a notice of the time for which it would be set; that he did not receive such notice, or have any knowledge that the case had been set for trial, until after the trial had been had, and judgment entered. He does not, however, say that he would have been present at the trial if he had received such notice, nor does he say that he would have been able to present any evidence to countervail the testimony of the plaintiff, or to show that there was any consideration for the execution of the instrument annexed to the answer. An attorney is presumed to know the rules of the court in which he appears, and his want of such knowledge does not authorize the relief from a judgment taken against him upon the ground of surprise. The failure of the attorney to give any attention to the notice that on the 2d of November an application would be made to have the cause set for trial cannot give him any greater right than he would have had if he had been present on that day, nor was the plaintiff required to give him any notice of the day that had been set by the court for the trial of the cause. It was, moreover, essential to show that the defendant had sustained injury by the action of the court. Unless it is made to appear that a different result might have been reached, a court is not authorized to set aside its decision on the ground merely of surprise or failure of the attorney to be present at the trial. Haight v. Green, 19 Cal. 113; Ekel v. Swift, 47 Cal. 619; McGuire v. Grew, 83 Cal. 225, 23 Pac. 312. The motion was addressed to the legal discretion of the superior court, and, upon the evidence contained in the record, we cannot say that this discretion was improperly exercised. The judgment and order are affirmed.

FLINT v. LOVDAL et al. (Sac. 343.)

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCE.

On an issue whether defendants forcibly entered a disputed strip of land between them and adjoining proprietors, evidence that an entry had been made prior to the alleged entry mentioned in the complaint, under an agreement to establish the line by a survey, is admissible on the question of who was in possession at the time of the alleged entry.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Action by Daniel Flint against T. B. Lovdal and another. There was a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McKune & George, for appellant. R. Clark, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover possession of a strip of land in Yolo county, described as being about 72 feet wide and 2,200 feet long. The complaint was filed February 13, 1893, and contains two counts, the first alleging a forcible entry upon the land by defendants on January 24, 1893, and the second alleging an entry upon the land on the same day, and a forcible detention thereof. The answer of defendants denies all of the material averments of the complaint, and alleges that "they have been in the quiet and peaceable possession of the premises mentioned in the complaint for more than one whole year continuously next before the commencement of the action, and that their interest therein has not ended or determined, and that by reason thereof plaintiff is barred from asserting any claim, or complaining in any way of or concerning any forcible entry, or forcible detainer, or unlawful entry or detainer." The cause was tried before a jury, and the verdict and judgment entered thereon were in favor of defendants. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and his motion was denied. From that order this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting certain evidence, and in giving a certain instruction to the jury, and that the verdict was not justified by the evidence. It appears that plaintiff and defendants owned adjoining farms, and that the land in controversy was a strip along the dividing line between the farms, as to the ownership of which there had been some controversy. To make out his case, the plaintiff introduced evidence showing that the land in dispute had been in his possession, and used by him partly for raising alfalfa and partly for pasturage, and had been inclosed with other land by a good substantial fence, for more than six years prior to January 24, 1893, when the defendants, in the absence of plaintiff and without his knowledge, removed the fence along the south line of said strip to the north line thereof, and there put it up in a substantial manner. On the other hand, T. B. Lovdal testified for defendants that he and his brother had had possession of the said land for the last three or four years; that he had exercised dominion over the land by going on it, keeping the levees up, cutting the timber off it, keeping others from using it, and preventing Mr. Flint from using it. The witness was then asked whether or not three or four years ago he had an agreement with Mr. Flint in relation to this particular piece of land, whereby he obtained possession, and had since had possession of it. Counsel for plaintiff objected to the question, on the ground that it was irrelevant, but the court said, "I think he can prove he went into possession under that agreement," and overruled the objection. The witness then testified that he did not remember the exact time the agreement was made, but that Mr. Flint came to him and said, "I think you are on my land; let us have a survey made to establish the lines between us;" that they agreed upon getting the county surveyor to make the survey, and so wrote to Mr. O'Farrell; that, when O'Farrell came to make the survey, Mr. Flint said, "Take my patent, and run by it;" that they took the patent, and O'Farrell ran the lines in accordance with it, and caused stakes to be set at the corners, following the survey; that Mr. Flint was present, and saw the stakes; that witness took possession under that agreement, and the first thing he did after the line was fixed was to raise a levee in front of the piece in dispute, and that he had been raising it every year since; that Mr. Flint knew he was raising it, and did not object to it; that he cut trees a year ago, cut hop poles in front, and last fall cleared it off, commencing in November, without objection on the part of Flint; and that he had pulled up trees which Flint had planted.

The court gave to the jury an instruction reading as follows: "Defendants, for purposes of proving that they, and not the plaintiff, were in the possession of the premises at the time of the alleged forcible entry, have given evidence pertaining to a survey made by O'Farrell for the purpose of establishing the division line between plaintiff's and defendants' lands. Now, if you should believe from the evidence, taken with all the other evidence given, that the defendants, and not the plaintiff, were in possession of the land described in the complaint, or were exercising acts of ownership over it inconsistent with plaintiff's peaceable possession at the time of the alleged forcible entry, your verdict will be for defendants." We see no error in the ruling of the court upon the admission of the evidence objected to. The evidence tended to show that the parties had, by agreement, fixed the location of their dividing line, and that defendants took possession of the disputed strip with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff. So, we see no error in the instruction complained of. It was proper for the jury to consider the said agreement as a circumstance tending to show who was, in fact, in possession of the land at the time of the alleged entry. There was a conflict in the evidence, but that given on behalf of defendants was sufficient, if believed by the jury, as it must have been, to justify and support the verdict. The judgment cannot therefore be reversed on this ground. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

NOFSINGER v. GOLDMAN et al. (Sac. 378.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1898.)

PARTNERSHIP AS TO THIRD PERSONS—AGENCY—MASTER AND SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—FELLOW SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—NOTICE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Merchants who owned a threshing outfit let it in consideration of half of the net profits of its operation, but the lessees were to have the exclusive management of it. In accordance with their custom, they furnished supplies on credit for operating the machine, and money to pay the help, to be repaid them after the close of the threshing season. The lessees were operating another outfit, which they owned, and for which they purchased supplies on credit from the lessors; and to distinguish the two accounts, and without the lessors' knowledge, their bookkeeper charged the advancements for the leased outfit to a firm name composed of the names of lessees and one of the lessors. One of the lessors stated to third persons that they were running a threshing outfit, and the bills for the threshing done with such outfit were settled at their store. Held, that there was no actual partnership.

2. As to one employed on the outfit without knowing or relying on such facts, there was no representation of a partnership, within Civ. Code, §§ 2444, 2445, providing that a person shall be liable as a partner only where he is such in fact, unless he permits himself to be represented as a member of a firm to another who extends credit to such firm on the faith of such representation.

3. Where plaintiff seeks to hold defendant liable for negligence as master, by virtue of a contract of employment made with a third person, he must show that such person was defendant's agent.

4. Acts of ostensible agency, unknown to plaintiff until after he accepted the employment, are irrelevant.

5. A master may be liable to a servant if he employs an incompetent co-servant, though the latter be not negligent in the performance of his duties.

6. Instructions not addressed to the evidence are properly refused.

7. A servant's knowledge of defects in machinery about which he is employed does not relieve the master from liability for injuries to the servant caused by such defects, unless the servant knew of the danger and risk incident to the defects.

8. A person, not an engineer, employed about an engine which is inadequate for the work being done with it, and makes steam badly, is not chargeable with knowledge of the specific dangers to which his employment subjects him.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by one Nofsinger against J. Goldman and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed as to defendants Hannaford Bros., and reversed as to defendants Goldman & Co.

Bradley & Farnsworth and G. N. Zartman, for appellants. C. L. Russell and W. B. Wallace, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. These appeals are from the judgment, and from the order denying defendants a new trial. Plaintiff sued the defendants as co-partners, doing business under the firm name of Hannaford & Goldman, to recover damages for injuries which he received by the explosion of the boiler of a threshing machine engine. He averred that the defendants engaged him to labor in and about their business of threshing grain, and that in the discharge of his duty it was necessary for him to be about and close to the threshing engine; that the engine and boiler were inadequate, unsafe, and defective in specified particulars; that by reason of its defects the boiler exploded, causing the injuries complained of. The defendants

G. Hannaford and W. E. Hannaford answered, denying that they were or ever had been partners with J. Goldman, I. W. Goldman, and J. Wolfrom, the other defendants, or with any or either of them, but averred that they two, as sole partners, were engaged in the business of threshing grain, under the firm name of Hannaford Bros. They admitted their employment of plaintiff to labor about the threshing machine, but denied the defectiveness of the machine and any negligence upon their part. The defendants J. Goldman, I. W. Goldman, and J. Wolfrom, answering separately, denied that they ever had been in the business of threshing grain under the firm name of Hannaford & Goldman, or under any other name, or that they were ever partners with the Hannaford Bros., or with either of them, and denied that they ever employed the plaintiff to labor in and about the threshing machine, or in the business of threshing grain. Upon the issues joined, trial was had, and a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against all of the defendants followed.

Of the questions presented upon the appeal, some may be quickly disposed of. The Hannafords admit the employment of defendant. That plaintiff was horribly injured, nearly flayed, by the escaping steam, is abundantly shown. From the evidence given as to the nature of his injuries, it may not be said that the verdict of $5,000 is excessive. That the engine and boiler were old, rusty, defective, and imperfect is left in no doubt by the evidence, and in as little doubt is left the question that the boiler exploded because of its defects. Defendants Hannaford admit that they were engaged as partners in the threshing business with this machine, and that they employed plaintiff to labor upon and about it. Their responsibility for the injury and their liability for damages in compensation thereof are thus both established.

Coming to the defendants Goldman and Wolfrom, a very different case is presented. These defendants, it appears, were themselves partners, engaged in business under the firm name of J. Goldman & Co. The firm of J. Goldman & Co. was doing a general merchandise business in Tulare city. The members of the firm owned the threshing machine the boiler of which exploded; that is to say, the engine and boiler belonged to the three members, while the separator and other parts of the outfit belonged to the two Goldmans alone. The Hannaford Brothers rented the threshing outfit, and the firm or J. Goldman & Co. leased the threshing outfit to the Hannaford Brothers for one-half of the net profits which might be made by the latter in the threshing of grain. The Hannaford Brothers were engaged in the business of threshing grain, or of 'running threshing machine outfits.' They had one such outfit of their own, and, after taking into possession under their lease the outfit in question, they were engaged in operating two.

They purchased supplies for both their outfits at the store of Goldman & Co., as they had been wont to do in previous years. In accordance with their method of doing business, Goldman & Co. would furnish supplies to threshing outfits upon credit, receiving their pay from time to time as money for the threshing was paid in. In their dealings with the Hannaford Brothers they do not seem to have departed from their usual business methods. When Hannaford first went to the store of Goldman & Co. to purchase supplies for the threshing outfit which had been leased from the firm, he requested the bookkeeper to keep the accounts of the two threshing outfits separate, in order that there might be no confusion in arriving at the true state of their business affairs. The clerk thereupon, without consultation with any of the members of the firm, caused an account to be opened upon the books of the firm in the name of Hannaford & Goldman, thus to distinguish the supplies bought for that outfit from the supplies bought for the other outfit, which were charged against the account of Hannaford Bros. Not until some time afterwards did a member of the firm discover the account of Hannaford & Goldman upon their books; and demanding to know what it meant, and by whose authority it was opened, the explanation was made to him, in accordance with the foregoing statement, that it was for the sake of accuracy and convenience in keeping the accounts.

By respondent it is insisted that the evidence establishes three propositions: First, that the defendants Goldman and Wolf from permitted themselves to be represented as partners with the Hannafords, and held themselves out as such, and thus incurred liability to plaintiff, under section 2444 of the Civil Code; second, that, regardless of such holding out, the evidence establishes that the defendants were in fact co-partners; and, third, aside from the question of partnership, that the evidence proves that plaintiff was employed by the firm of J. Goldman & Co., whose members therefore became liable for his injury. Upon the first two of these propositions, it is maintained that the evidence establishes the following facts: That the business was done under the name of Hannaford & Goldman; that the books of J. Goldman & Co. showed an account in the name of Hannaford & Goldman; that the books kept at the threshing machine outfit were likewise in the name of Hannaford & Goldman; that orders for supplies and drafts for moneys were drawn upon Goldman & Co., and signed by the bookkeeper in the name of Goldman & Hannaford, and that such orders and drafts were always honored; that the arrangement between the Hannafords and the firm of Goldman & Co. was for a division of the profits; that the defendants, members of the firm of J. Goldman & Co., owned and furnished the machinery the groceries and provisions, and the money to pay the employes, and received all the earnings; that J. Goldman stated that they were running a threshing outfit; that Wolf from and J. Goldman stated that Raymond was employing help on the machine; that Raymond did employ men to labor on the machine; that the books were closed at the business place of J. Goldman & Co.; and that that firm claimed all the earnings of the venture when the moneys were garnished.

Upon the first contention of respondent—viz. that the evidence establishes an ostensible partnership, and a holding out by the Goldmans and Wolf from as partners with the Hannafords—little need be said. Whatever force the evidence might have to establish such a partnership, the fact remains that there was no such holding out to plaintiff. The rule of responsibility and liability declared in section 2444 of the Civil Code is founded upon the equitable principle of estoppel. One who has suffered another to give credit or incur a liability upon the strength of his representations, made or permitted, that he is in fact a partner, will not thereafter be allowed to deny those representations. But, as is declared in the succeeding section of the Code (2445), no one is liable as a partner who is not such in fact, excepting as is provided in section 2444. The facts and circumstances which respondent contends establish such ostensible partnership lose all force in the light of the fact that none of the so-called "representations" was made directly or indirectly to plaintiff, and, indeed, that few, if any, of the facts set forth were even known to plaintiff until after his injury. There was, then, no holding out to plaintiff by these defendants; nor did this plaintiff, upon the faith of any of defendants' representations, "give credit to the partnership."

Upon the second proposition—that is to say, upon the question of an actual partnership—respondent insists that, considering all of the evidence in the case, there was sufficient for the jury to have found the fact as it must have found to have rendered its verdict as it did. In this discussion all question of ostensible partnership or of holding out must be eliminated, and the question narrowed to this single consideration, were they in fact partners? For, as there was no holding out of the partnership relation to plaintiff, it is not to be forgotten that the defendants are not liable as partners unless in fact they were such. Whatever weight or value the facts which respondent contends are established by the evidence would have in a case where ostensible partnership was sought to be shown, those facts, even if established, cease to be of weight against the proved contract and relationship of the parties, by which it unmistakably appears that in law they were not partners. The contract between the firm of Goldman & Co. and the Hannaford Brothers was, as has been stated, a mere contract of leasing and hiring, whereby the firm of Goldman & Co. leased to the Hannaford Brothers a threshing machine outfit, for the use of which they were to receive one-half of the net profits which might be earned by the Hannafords in their exclusive management and conduct of it during the threshing season. Such a contract, this court has more than once declared, does not constitute a partnership. Vanderhurst v. De Witt, 95 Cal. 57, 30 Pac. 94; Bank v. Same, 97 Cal. 78, 31 Pac. 744. But, more than this, the evidence urged as constituting a partnership is found to be entirely conformable to the evidence of the defendants. Thus, the fact that an account was opened upon the books of Goldman & Co. in the name of Hannaford Bros. is explained. The circumstance that supplies were furnished and moneys advanced is shown by uncontradicted evidence to have been in accordance with the uniform business method of the firm in dealing with Hannaford Bros., as well as with other threshing outfits, and to have been not at all peculiar to this particular transaction. The fact that after the explosion the accounts were settled in the office of J. Goldman & Co. is quite natural, in view of the advances that had been made by Goldman & Co., and of the further fact that, in the final adjustment of accounts, they were entitled as rents to one-half of the profits which the outfit earned. Cases may arise where an actual partnership will be denied to escape legal liability. Men may go even further, and offer false evidence as to the relations which existed between them to escape a partnership liability. In such cases a fraud would have to be met and overcome; but, as the law never presumes fraud, the evidence to overcome it should be inconsistent with any reasonable theory of truth and right dealing. But in the vast majority of cases, as here, where the question of ostensible partnership is eliminated, the proved relationship between the parties must overcome any slight evidence tending to show that the relations of the parties bore a likeness to the partnership relation, and particularly must that be so when, as in a case like the present, the acts of the so-called "partners" are shown to be quite consistent with their general method of business, and with the contractual relations which they proved to have existed between themselves and their fellow defendants.

Upon this branch of the case there is left for consideration the third proposition, viz. that the defendants Goldman and Wolfrom are liable because they employed the plaintiff to labor upon the machine. Plaintiff testified that one Raymond employed him to work upon the machine, and told him that Hannaford & Goldman were going to run the machine, and that he would get his pay through J. Goldman, the same as he did when previously he had been employed by J. Goldman; that afterwards Raymond presented him to one of the Hannaford brothers, and said, "Here is the man I hired to go on the machine; I want you to reserve a position for him on the machine, sure;" that thus he was employed, and went to work in due time. Aside from the fact that this evidence is stoutly contradicted by Hannaford and by Raymond,—the one testifying that he and his brother employed all the men, the other testifying that he never employed the plaintiff nor any other man to labor upon the machine, and had no authority from anybody so to employ labor,—and aside, also, from the fact that this evidence is impeached by witnesses who testified that Nofsinger told them that he was going to work for Hannaford Bros., that Mr. Raymond had told him that the Goldmans had leased the machine to Hannaford Bros., and that he would try and get him a job, which facts but raise a conflict in the evidence,—it must be shown, before the defendants Goldman and Wolfrom can be legally held to have employed the plaintiff, that Raymond, who, by the plaintiff's own testimony, did the employing, was actually or ostensibly the agent of the defendants, with power so to do. Upon this there is a total failure of evidence. Raymond disclaimed such authority; the members of Goldman & Co. did the same. As to the question of ostensible agency, one witness testified to a conversation which he had with Raymond, looking to his employment as engineer upon the engine; but it nowhere appears that this conversation with Raymond was made known to plaintiff, so that it cannot be contended that the plaintiff could have relied on any ostensible show of authority. Saving for this evidence, there is nothing which we have been able to discover upon the question.

The conclusion is thus reached that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court against the defendants Goldman and Wolfrom. In reaching this conclusion, consideration has been paid to all of the evidence admitted in the case. To the introduction of much of this evidence, however, the defendants objected, and some of it was unquestionably improperly admitted. It becomes unimportant, however, to consider in detail these specifications of error, since most of them are addressed to alleged errors in the admission of evidence to prove the partnership relation, and since, as has been said, the admitted evidence, taken as a whole, fails to establish that relationship. The judgment and order as to the Goldmans and Wolfrom must therefore be reversed. There are other propositions upon the appeal of the Hannaford Brothers which demand consideration.

Plaintiff also sought to fix responsibility upon the defendants by charging them with the employment of an unfit and incompetent engineer. Defendants asked an instruction to the effect that there was no evidence of any special acts of carelessness upon the part of the engineer from which the jury would be authorized to find that the engineer was either careless or incompetent. This instruction was properly refused. The carelessness of the engineer was not made a charge. An engineer might not be careless. He might exercise extreme care within the limitations of his knowledge, and yet, for lack of adequate knowledge, might be unfit and incompetent for the position. Defendants' proposed instruction 9 was to the effect that when an employé assents to occupy a place prepared for him, and to incur the dangers to which he will be exposed thereby, if the employé have sufficient intelligence and knowledge to enable him to comprehend the risks and dangers, his assent dispenses with the performance upon the part of the employer of the duty of making the place reasonably safe. If an employé agree with his employer to undertake the performance of a specific task, either working in an unsafe place, or with unsafe and inadequate appliances, and in so contracting the employé knows and understands the danger of the situation, and knows and understands that the appliances are unsafe, and further appreciates the risks which may follow the use of such inadequate appliances, it is truly said that in these respects he has by his contract and by his assent relieved his employer from duty in these particulars. So far as the proposed instruction bears upon this proposition of law, it is unobjectionable; but it is not, as we read the record, addressed to the evidence in this case. It was properly refused.

Defendants' proposed instruction 17 was correctly refused, as not containing an exact statement of the law. It declared that, if the plaintiff knew of the alleged defects in the machinery, or had equal opportunity with the defendants of knowing such defects, he could not recover. The instruction omits the important element that the employé must not only know of the defects, but must know the dangers and risks attending the operation of the machinery by reason of the defects. Sanborn v. Trading Co., 70 Cal. 261, 11 Pac. 710; Colbert v. Rankin, 72 Cal. 197, 13 Pac. 491; Magee v. Railroad Co., 78 Cal. 430, 21 Pac. 114.

The instructions given by the court upon behalf of the plaintiff relative to the duty of the employer and the knowledge of the employé were unobjectionable as propositions of law.

The contention that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence is not tenable. He was employed as a "roustabout" for the threshing outfit, and worked at various occupations as need arose, at times carrying water, and again firing upon the engine. He does not appear to have contributed to his injuries, other than by being at his post of duty at the time of the explosion. He did know that the engine seemed to be inadequate for the performance of the work, and made steam badly; but he was not an engineer, and was not chargeable with knowledge of the specific dangers to which he was subjected in his employment. Considering the nature of his injuries, the damages awarded may not be said to be excessive.

As to the defendants Hannaford Bros., the judgment and order are affirmed. As to the defendants Goldman and Wolfrom, the judgment and order are reversed.

CLARKE v. POLICE LIFE & HEALTH INS. BOARD. (S. F. 1342.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—INSURANCE TO POLICEMEN—NONCONTRACTUAL CHARACTER—SURRENDER THEREOF—STATUTES—SCOPE OF TITLE—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—AMENDMENT AND REVISION.

1. St. 1877-78, p. 879, which created a police life and health insurance fund, and provided that, on the death of a member of the police force after a certain date, $1,000 be paid to his legal representatives, did not constitute a contract of life insurance with such officers.

2. Act March 4, 1889, entitled "An act to create a police relief, health and life insurance and pension fund in the several counties, cities and towns in this state," is sufficiently comprehensive in its title to include section 13, providing that such fund provided by a former named law should be merged with, paid into, and constitute a part of the fund under the latter act.

3. Act March 4, 1889, creating a police relief, health, and life insurance and pension fund in the several counties, cities, and towns in the state, is not unconstitutional as being local or special legislation.

4. Act March 4, 1889, § 13, providing that any fund created under St. 1877-78, p. 879, for a police life and health insurance fund, should be merged with and paid into a fund to be created under the latter act, does not violate Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring statutes which are amendatory of other statutes to set out in full the statute as amended.

5. Under St. 1877-78, p. 879, creating a police life and health insurance fund, and providing that, on the death of a member of the police force, a certain sum should be paid to his legal representatives, a police officer was not entitled to a surrender of the value of his share in such insurance on the passage of act of March 4, 1889, merging such fund into a new fund to be created, since the officer has no contractual right in the former fund, it being subject to legislative action.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county.

Action by Alfred Clarke, administrator, against the police life and health insurance board. A demurrer to the petition was sustained, and from a judgment refusing a writ of mandate plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred Clarke, in pro. per. H. T. Cresswell, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This appeal is from the judgment of the superior court refusing a writ of mandate, entered on sustaining a demurrer to the petition. From this petition or complaint it appears that plaintiff, as administrator of one Joseph Maguire, sought to compel the board to pay $1,000 out of the funds as insurance upon the life of said Maguire. Maguire became a member of the police department of San Francisco on the 10th day of February, 1889, and continued to be a member until the 10th of November, 1895, when he died. The claim is made under the provisions of an act of the legislature passed April 1, 1878 (St. 1877-78, p. 879), which made provision for a police life and health insurance fund, and which also provided that upon the death of any member of the police force after the 1st day of June, 1878, there should be paid from such fund, to his legal representatives, $1,000. On the 4th day of March, 1889, the legislature passed another act, entitled "An act to create a police relief, health and life insurance and pension fund in the several counties, cities and towns in this state." By section 13 of that act it was provided that any such fund as that provided in the law of 1878 should be merged with, paid into, and constitute a part of the fund created under the provisions of the later act.

Appellant contends that section 13 of the act of 1889, which is the section which contains the provision above set out, is unconstitutional and void, for many reasons, the most important being that: (1) The first statute amounted to a contract of life insurance with the members of the police department, and the later act, if valid, would impair the obligations of the contract. (2) The title of the later act is not sufficiently comprehensive to include section 13; the purpose is not stated in the title. (3) It is special and local legislation. (4) In many ways it violates the prohibitions contained in section 25 of article 4 of the constitution of the state. And (5) it revises or amends the law of 1878 in a mode not warranted by section 24 of article 1 of the constitution. Counsel also claim that the deceased was entitled to a surrender value of his alleged policy of insurance. I do not think he would have any such right even if the earlier statute had not been repealed; but, conceding that his representative can make such claim, his alleged rights would rest upon the same legal propositions as his claim to the insurance. In either event, to be entitled to any consideration as a claimant to any part of the fund, he must have had a contract which legislation could not impair. All the other questions could as well be made under one claim as the other. The act of 1889 took effect long before the death of Maguire, and, if valid, there was at the time of his death no fund from which he could be paid.

Pennie v. Reis, 80 Cal. 266, 22 Pac. 176, was the same in all essential respects as the case at bar. It was there held that the later act did repeal the act of 1878 by implication, and did effect a merger of the insurance fund created by the first act with the fund created by the later act; that the act did not violate the constitution of the United States, because the member of the police department had no contract which he could assert against the legislative will. The office was accepted with the distinct understanding that the legislature may modify or amend all laws providing for his compensation during the term. The other points raised here were also determined adversely to the contention of appellant. The points and objections to the act of 1889 were presented in a different manner, but they are really the same objections. The case of Pennie v. Reis was taken by writ of error to the supreme court of the United States, and all questions raised under the limitations imposed by the constitution of the United States were determined in accordance with the conclusion of the state court. The main question was again determined by this court in Clarke v. Reis, 87 Cal. 543, 25 Pac. 759. Under the circumstances, we do not feel that it is incumbent upon us to restate the argument against the appellant. Upon a careful review of the case and the authorities, we are content with the former rulings. The judgment is affirmed.

GREEN et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (L. A. 393.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1898.)

RAILROADS—ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW—WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—NEGLECT—NOTICE.

1. In an action by a child against a railroad company for negligently causing her father's death, evidence that she has no property is inadmissible, though she is an adult.

2. A party who has once formally excepted to a line of evidence need not renew the objection on the examination of other witnesses in order to have the exception reviewed.

3. It is error, in impeaching a witness by inconsistent statements, not to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, providing that a witness may be thus impeached, provided the statements are related to him, with the circumstances of time, place, and persons present, and he is asked whether he made such statements, and, if so, allowed to explain them.

4. The measure of damages for the death of a relative is the pecuniary loss suffered by plaintiff, and not the loss of society, comfort, and care, regardless of pecuniary loss.

5. Where an instruction improperly leaves the jury to infer that a verdict for plaintiff may not be confined to his pecuniary damages, it is not cured by instructing, at defendant's request, that they should confine their verdict to the pecuniary damage.

6. In an action against a railroad company for killing a person at a crossing, an instruction that defendant's negligence may be inferred, if it did not sound the whistle "continuously" for 80 rods before reaching the crossing, is erroneous, since Civ. Code, § 486, provides that the whistle shall be sounded only "at intervals" within that distance.

7. Where there is no evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that a man strong and healthy is in full possession of his faculties, though he is comparatively advanced in years.

8. Unless a railroad company knows or has reason to believe that a person on a crossing does not possess ordinary ability to care for himself, it may presume that he possesses such ability, and will take ordinary precautions to protect himself from injury.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county.

Action by Mary Green and others against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. B. Canfield, for appellant. Murphey & Gottschalk, for respondents.

VAN FLEET, J. Action by the widow and children of George N. Green to recover damages suffered by them as heirs at law of said George N. Green, through his death, alleged to have been occasioned by defendant's negligence. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant appeals therefrom, and from an order denying a new trial. It will not be necessary to notice the ground of contributory negligence by deceased, urged by appellant, nor that of excessive damages, since those questions will not necessarily arise upon another trial, and the judgment and order must be reversed because of errors of law occurring at the trial of the case, to the manifest prejudice of the defendant.

1. The trial court very clearly committed prejudicial error in admitting before the jury, over defendant's objection, the testimony of the witness Hayes, to the effect that the plaintiff Salona Green, one of the daughters of deceased, who was living with him at his death, had no property of her own upon which to maintain herself. This evidence had no pertinent or competent bearing upon the extent of injury suffered by plaintiffs, for which defendant could be held responsible; and its only effect and inevitable tendency was undoubtedly to excite the sympathies of the jury, and improperly influence their finding upon the question of damages. Such evidence is never admissible in a case of this character, for the very simple reason that the extent of a defendant's responsibility for the results of his negligence is not to be measured by the condition, as to affluence or poverty, of the injured party at the time of suffering the injury, since that is a condition for which the defendant is in no way responsible; and as suggested by this court in Mahony v. Railway Co., 110 Cal. 471, 476, 42 Pac. 968, in discussing the same question, "Such testimony could have been offered for no other purpose than to create prejudice, and should have been excluded." See, also, Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409; Railway Co. v. Johnson, 103 Ill. 512; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451; Railway Co. v. Moore, 61 Ga. 151. Respondents contend that the evidence was material and relevant on behalf of this plaintiff, to show that she had not the means of support, otherwise there would have appeared no obligation on the part of her father to support her, the evidence in the case showing that she was beyond the age of majority at his death; and it is urged that, being dependent upon her father, she had, under the law, a greater right or interest in his life than the other children, who, although of age, were able to maintain themselves. But, obviously, whatever additional right or claim upon her father the fact of her indigence may have given her, it conferred no higher right against this defendant, nor put her in any different legal attitude, as to the latter, from that of her co-plaintiffs. Whatever her condition in life, she was entitled, under the law, in common with her co-plaintiffs, to maintain the action as one of the next of kin and heirs at law of the deceased; and it was solely in that capacity that the action was prosecuted. The suggestion that the objection cannot be entertained because the plaintiff Salona was subsequently permitted, without objection, to testify to substantially the same matter as that stated by the witness Hayes, is without weight. Where a party has once formally taken exception to a certain line or character of evidence, he is not required to renew the objection at each recurrence thereafter of the objectionable matter arising in the examination of other witnesses, and his silence will not debar him from having the exception reviewed. None of the other witnesses referred to in the brief made any mention of the question of the plaintiff Salona's property, and consequently no occasion for objection to their testimony on this ground arose.

2. The court also erred in admitting, for the purpose of impeaching the witness Harbard, the statements of the witness Todd as to the conversation had by the latter with Harbard, for the reason that no foundation was laid for such impeaching testimony. The conversation about which Harbard was interrogated was one supposed and referred to in the examination of the witness as having taken place between Todd and Harbard during the progress of the trial of this case in the court below in March, 1896, while the conversation about which Todd was permitted to testify, for the purpose of contradicting him, occurred in September, 1895. Apparently, there was no serious attempt made to comply with the requirements of the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure (section 2052) prescribing the method of impeaching a witness by showing that he has made contradictory or inconsistent statements, and the testimony of Todd should, therefore, not have been admitted. Birch v. Hale, 99 Cal. 299, 302, 33 Pac. 1088.

3. On the subject of the measure of damages the court charged the jury, at the request of the plaintiffs, in the twelfth instruction, that in determining the amount of damages they had the right to take into consideration "the pecuniary loss, if any, suffered by these plaintiffs by the death of said George N. Green, * * * and also the relations proved to have existed between the plaintiff Mary Green, the wife of the deceased, and the deceased at the time of his death, and the damage, if any, sustained by her by the loss of his support, society, comfort, and care"; and again, in the nineteenth instruction, that the jury could "take into consideration the loss of the comfort, society, and protection of the deceased to his widow and children; and also you may take into consideration what the deceased would have probably earned by his labor in his business or calling during the residue of his life, and which would have gone for the benefit of his heirs or personal representatives, taking into consideration his age, ability, and disposition to labor, and his habits of living and expenditure. And the jury have the power to assess such pecuniary damages as, under all the circumstances of the case, may be just." These instructions do not correctly state the rule or measure of damages in such cases. In Morgan v. Southern Pac. Co., 95 Cal. 510, 30 Pac. 603, it was held that in an action like the present, to recover damages for the death of a relative caused by negligence, the plaintiff can recover only for the pecuniary loss suffered by the plaintiff through the death of the relative, and that the loss of society, comfort, and care, suffered through the bereavement, can only be considered for the purpose of estimating such pecuniary loss. And this rule has been repeatedly upheld by this court in other cases. Pepper v. Southern Pac. Co., 105 Cal. 389, 38 Pac. 974; Harrison v. Railway Co., 116 Cal. 166, 168, 47 Pac. 1019. We think the instructions here given are clearly obnoxious to these principles. While the court did not in express terms so charge, its language is such as to clearly convey the impression to the minds of the jury that they were at liberty to assess the damages upon a basis outside of and beyond that solely of mere pecuniary loss. As said in the Harrison Case, supra, in discussing an instruction of precisely similar import: "While the jury have the right in such a case to consider the loss suffered by the widow in being deprived of the comfort, society, and protection of her husband, they can regard these things only for the purpose of fixing the pecuniary value of his life. The form of the instruction here was calculated to lead the jury into the error of supposing that they could on this account add something more than pecuniary loss." This vice in the charge was not cured by the instruction, given at the request of the defendant, that they should confine their verdict to the pecuniary damage suffered, since it cannot be told which instruction the jury followed. Pepper v. Southern Pac. Co., supra.

4. At the request of the plaintiffs the court instructed the jury that negligence of the defendant might be inferred, if it did not "ring the bell or sound the whistle continuously for the distance of eighty rods before reaching the crossing." This instruction imposes a greater burden upon the defendant than that with which it is charged by the statute. Civ. Code, § 486. That provision requires that the bell shall be rung at a distance of 80 rods from the crossing, and kept ringing until it is past the crossing, or that the whistle be sounded at the like distance, and kept sounding at intervals. The fault in the instruction is that it contemplates the necessity by the defendant of either ringing the bell continuously, or that the whistle shall be continuously sounded. In this respect the instruction is not in accord with the statute.

5. The court also gave to the jury, at plaintiff's request, the following instruction: "The jury are further instructed that an elderly person has a right to drive and travel upon the highway and cross railroad tracks. And while such persons must use ordinary care and prudence in crossing a railroad track, and use such ordinary care as is necessary to protect themselves, having in view their condition, yet the railroad company must also conduct its business, and it and its servants must keep in view that old persons may have occasion to cross its tracks on a public road." This instruction was not only not pertinent to anything in the case, but it did not correctly state the law. It would seem to imply that there was that in the age or condition of the deceased which called for the exercise of greater care by defendant than in the case of an adult person of less advanced years. There was nothing in the evidence to sustain such implication. While the deceased was a man of comparatively advanced years, he was strong and healthy; and, the evidence being silent on the subject, he was presumptively in the full possession and enjoyment of his faculties, including the senses of sight and hearing. But, moreover, had the evidence disclosed a different state of facts in this regard, the instruction wholly ignores the element of knowledge on the part of the defendant or its servants of any such defect. Unless the defendant knew or had reason to believe that the deceased was from some cause not possessed of the ordinary ability to care for himself, it had the right to presume that he possessed such ability, and would take the ordinary precautions to protect himself from injury. Holmes v. Railway Co., 97 Cal. 161, 168, 31 Pac. 834. There are some further criticisms upon the instructions, which we have examined, but do not deem it necessary to notice particularly, as, in our judgment, they involve no material error. For the reasons given the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. WEINEKE et al. (L. A. 441.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1898.)
LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — ACTION AGAINST TAX COLLECTOR.

Pol. Code, § 3753, requires the tax collector on the first Monday in each month to settle with the county auditor for all moneys collected, and pay the same to the county treasurer; and section 3754 provides that a failure so to do for five days shall render such collector liable for the full amount of taxes on the assessment roll, for which suit may be brought. It is also provided (section 3758 et seq.) that the collector shall on the third Monday in January, at the office of the auditor, compare his duplicate with the original assessment book, and deliver the delinquent list to the auditor, who shall thereupon make a final settlement with him. In an action against a tax collector and his sureties, the complaint, which was filed December 29, 1896, alleged that such collector was elected for two years from the first Monday after the first day of January, 1891, and that on the first Monday in December (December 7) 1891, and for five days thereafter, he wholly failed to settle with the county auditor for the taxes collected by him, and had ever since wholly failed to settle therefor, but had ever since December 7, 1891, wrongfully retained a certain balance thereof. Held, that such action was barred by the limitation of four years prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 337, as to actions founded on instruments in writing, as the complaint set up a cause of action which accrued December 7, 1891, and failed to state a cause of action accruing at any other time, and such statute began to run on the third Monday of January, 1892, at least, though the term of office of such collector expired within such period of limitation.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by the people of the state of California against H. W. Weineke, lately tax collector of San Diego county, and the sureties on his official bond. Judgment was rendered in favor of the state and against defendant Weineke by default, and in favor of the other defendants on demurrer to the complaint. From the judgment on the demurrer, the state appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Sweet, for the People. Collier & Evans, H. E. Doolittle, and Haines & Ward, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. This is an action to recover the sum of $15,946.27 from defendant Weineke, lately tax collector of San Diego county, and the other defendants, his sureties upon his official bond. Judgment was given against defendant Weineke by default, and in favor of the other defendants upon their demurrer to the complaint. The appeal is from the judgment on the demurrer.

The complaint alleges: That defendant Weineke was the duly qualified and acting tax collector for two years from the first Monday after the first day of January, 1891. "On the first Monday in December, 1891, and for five days thereafter, the said defendant H. W. Weineke, as said tax collector, wholly failed and neglected to settle with the county auditor of said county for all moneys collected for said state and county taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, and wholly failed to pay the same to the county treasurer of said county, and has ever since said first Monday in December, 1891, wholly failed to settle, and has never settled, with the county auditor of said county for all said moneys collected by him, the said Weineke, * * * and has wholly failed and neglected to pay, and has never paid, all the moneys, * * * and failed, and ever since said day has failed, to deliver to or file in the office of the said county auditor the statement showing an account of all his transactions and receipts as such tax collector, and the payment of all the money collected by him as tax collector." The complaint further alleges: That defendant Weineke on December 7, 1891, had collected and received for the use of the state and county $24,532.73 as state and county taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, of which $15,946.27 has never "been paid to the county treasurer of said San Diego, as required by law. * * * Defendant Weineke never at any time settled with the auditor of said county for said balance, * * * or any part thereof, * * * and has ever since said December 7, 1891, wholly failed and neglected to settle with the county auditor for said balance, * * * and has never paid said sum, or any part thereof, to the county treasurer, * * * and the whole thereof is still wrongfully and unlawfully retained, * * * and is wholly unpaid, due, and owing," etc.

The only question discussed by counsel is whether the action is barred by the four-year limitation of the statute. The complaint was filed December 29, 1896,—more than five years after December 7, 1891, but less than four years after Weineke's term of office expired. Section 3753, Pol. Code, is as follows: "On the first Monday in each month the tax collector must settle with the auditor for all moneys collected for the state or county, and pay the same to the county treasurer, and on the same day must deliver to and file in the office of the auditor a statement, under oath, showing: (1) An account of all his transactions and receipts since his last settlement. (2) That all money collected by him as tax collector has been paid." The next section (3754) is as follows: "A tax collector refusing or neglecting for a period of five days to make the payments and settlements required in this title is liable for the full amount of taxes charged upon the assessment roll." The next section (3755) makes it the duty of the district attorney to "bring suit against the tax collector and his sureties for such amount," and, if he fails to do so, the board of supervisors or controller of the state "may require him to do so." The contention of appellant is that, although section 3753 made it the duty of the tax collector on December 7, 1891, to account for and pay over the moneys he then had on hand, and a failure to do so created a statutory liability, under section 3754, yet it was not exclusive, and there was still a liability at the expiration of his term for the failure to pay over the same money for which his sureties were liable. The argument is that this same duty was placed upon him each month under the statute, and the liability was a continuing one, and the statute of limitations did not begin to run until his term of office expired. Respondents concede that there may be a liability, in a certain sense, resulting from the default of the officer at the expiration of his term of office, but they say that the complaint is not so framed as to charge such liability. It is contended that the complaint fixes the liability definitely and specifically, as having accrued on the first Monday of December (December 7th), and must be so treated. The complaint, we think, clearly sets forth a cause of action which accrued December 7, 1891, and fails to set forth a cause of action accruing at any other time. The allegations that the tax collector has ever since failed to pay over the money, and like allegations, are nothing more than would be required to negative payment at some date subsequent to December 7th, and before action brought. None of these allegations refer to any delinquency, except the one specifically alleged; and none of them point to the withholding of, or failure to pay over, any other moneys. If plaintiff had desired to charge a liability by reason of failure to turn over funds in the hands of the collector at the expiration of his office, or without fixing any period for the default other than during his term of office, plaintiff might have done so by a separate count, or otherwise framing the complaint to allege the facts, in which case defendants would probably have been compelled to plead the statute of limitations by answer. As the complaint stands, we do not feel warranted in treating it as stating more than one cause of action; and for that reason we need not decide whether the liability was a continuing one, which became a new liability each succeeding month, and did not finally accrue, so as to start the statute in motion, until the close of the collector's term of office.

It may be contended that sections 3753, 3754, and 3755 do not authorize the action for any balance collected but not turned over, and therefore the statute of limitation does not then begin to run. Possibly the settlements referred to in these sections are not such as would start the statute in motion when these monthly payments and settlements referred to occur. It is not necessary, in the case now here, to decide that question. Subsequent sections, however, require the tax collector, on the third Monday in January of each year, "to attend at the office of the auditor with the duplicate assessment book, and carefully compare the duplicate with the original assessment book, and every item marked 'Paid' in the former must be marked 'Paid' in the latter." Section 3758. "The tax collector must, at the time specified in the preceding section, deliver to the auditor a complete 'delinquent list' of all persons and property then owing taxes." Section 3759. "The auditor must carefully compare the list with the assessment book, and, if satisfied that it contains a full and true statement of all taxes due and unpaid, he must foot up the total amount of taxes so remaining unpaid, credit the tax collector who acted under it therewith, and make a final settlement with him of all taxes charged against him on the assessment book, and must require from him the treasurer's receipt, or, if the treasurer is the collector, require from him an immediate account for any existing deficiency." Section 3761. After this settlement he is charged with the delinquent list, and it is to be delivered to him by the auditor (section 3762); and "within ten days after the final settlement the auditor must transmit * * * a statement to the controller of state," etc. We think that, in any view of these provisions and the pleadings, the statute of limitations would certainly begin to run in this case on the third Monday of January, 1892, and as the action was not brought until December 29, 1896, it was barred by section 337, Code Civ. Proc. People v. Melone, 73 Cal. 576, 15 Pac. 294; San Francisco v. Ford, 52 Cal. 198; People v. Burkhardt, 76 Cal. 607, 18 Pac. 776. See, also, Board v. Van Slyck (Kan. Sup.) 35 Pac. 299.

Appellant claims that San Francisco v. Heynemann, 71 Cal. 155, 11 Pac. 871, is decisive of plaintiff's contention, where it was said, "There can be no doubt that the tax collector is bound to pay over to the treasurer all public moneys in his possession upon the expiration of his term of office." Undoubtedly this is so, but that is far from deciding that the cause of action alleged in this complaint did not accrue at the time alleged. What we should hold if the action had been laid as a breach of duty occurring at the close of Weineke's term of office (1893), and the facts had shown the breach to have first occurred in December, 1891, need not be considered, for the pleadings present no such case. People v. Van Ness, 79 Cal. 86, 21 Pac. 554, is also relied upon by appellant. It was there held that for a breach of the official bond the statute did not begin to run until the expiration of the officer's term of office. Van Ness was a commissioner of immigration. The question as to whether the statute commenced to run when he converted the funds was not considered, but it was assumed, as the most favorable to defendants, that it did not commence to run until the close of the term of office. When this default arose there was no law requiring the commissioner to pay over to the state treasurer monthly the moneys received by him. Section 2969, Pol. Code, requiring him to do so, was passed March 15, 1883. The case is therefore unlike the one here. We think the trial court was right in sustaining the demurrer, and therefore advise the affirmance of the judgment appealed from.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DOLE. (Cr. 257.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 29, 1898.)

FORGERY — RAISED CHECK — SUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION — EVIDENCE — WITNESSES — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DEFENDANT — EXPERTS — INSTRUCTIONS — PRINCIPAL OFFENDERS — PRESUMPTIONS — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE — DEFINITION OF OFFENSE — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE — REASONABLE DOUBT — DUTY OF INDIVIDUAL JURORS — CONTENTS OF WRITING — PROOF OF INCORPORATION.

1. An information charging that defendant, having in his possession a certified check for a certain amount, raised it to a greater amount, forged certain indorsements on it, and, knowing its fictitious character, passed it on a certain corporation, with intent to defraud such corporation, was not vitiated because it failed to show that the bank on which such check was drawn had any existence, or that the person whose name was signed to the certification had any authority to certify, as defendant was well charged with the forgery and utterance of a check uncertified.

2. Where an information, charging defendant with the forgery and utterance of a certain check, alleged that, after raising such check, defendant forged several indorsements on the back thereof, and passed it on a certain corporation, with intent to defraud such corporation, but one offense was charged, as the whole series of acts charged against defendant was alleged to have been done with the single intent to defraud the corporation named.

3. Where defendant, on trial for the forgery of a certain check, testified in his own behalf that he had won such check in a game of poker, it was proper to ask him, on cross-examination, whether he had stated such fact to the arresting officer, or to the officers of the prison, on being informed of the nature of the charge against him, in order that the jury might determine whether or not his conduct was consistent with his testimony. McFarland, Henshaw, and Temple, JJ., dissenting.

4. On trial for forgery of a check, where it was claimed that certain writing thereon had been removed and other writing substituted, testimony of an expert was admissible to prove that writing may be removed from paper by means of a certain fluid, without first showing that the writing in question had been so removed, or that defendant was conversant with the use of such fluid.

5. An instruction that if the jury believed from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant committed the offense charged, or aided, abetted, "or assisted" in the commission thereof, they should find him guilty, was erroneous, under Pen. Code, §§ 31, 971, declaring guilty as principals all persons concerned in the commission of a criminal offense, whether they directly commit the act constituting such offense, or aid "and" abet in its commission, where defendant was on trial for having raised and passed as genuine a certain check; but such error was cured where the jury were also instructed that, if the evidence did not establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant fraudulently altered the check in question, or uttered such check, knowing its spurious character, and with intent to defraud, the mere possession thereof by him, and his indorsement and negotiation thereof, were not, in the absence of a guilty intent or guilty knowledge, sufficient to convict.

6. Where defendant, who was on trial for the forgery and utterance of a certain check, testified that he received such check from one of two persons named, in a game of poker,—having won from them a sum less than the face thereof and paid them the difference, after which they both disappeared,—it was error to instruct that "where weaker evidence is produced, when in the power of the party to produce higher, it is presumed that the higher evidence would be adverse if it had been produced," as the presumption referred to (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 6) is "that higher evidence would be adverse from inferior, being produced," and as such instruction was inapplicable to the testimony of defendant, which was of as high a character as would have been that of the persons mentioned, if they had been called as witnesses.

7. An instruction that, "where the evidence is entirely circumstantial, yet it is not only consistent with the guilt of defendant, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, the law makes it the duty of the jury to convict, notwithstanding such evidence may not be as satisfactory to their minds as the direct testimony of credible eyewitnesses would have been," though inexact and illogical, in intimating that a conviction may be had on less satisfactory evidence where it is circumstantial than would be required where it is direct, was corrected by special instructions to the effect that every fact essential to sustain the hypothesis of guilt, and to exclude the hypothesis of innocence, must be fully proved.

8. It was not error, on a trial for forgery, to give to the jury, as a definition thereof, Pen. Code, § 470, defining such crime.

9. A request for an instruction as to the weight and effect of evidence was properly refused.

10. On a criminal trial, defendant was entitled to an instruction that "if, after consideration of the whole case, any juror should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it is the duty of such juror * * * not to vote for a verdict of 'guilty,' nor to be influenced in so voting for the single reason that a majority of the jury should be in favor of a verdict of 'guilty.'"

11. On trial for forgery by raising a certain check, where there was no theory on which defendant could be convicted, under the information and the evidence in the record, if such check was not raised as charged, it was error to refuse an instruction that, if the jury entertained a reasonable doubt as to whether or not the check in question had been so raised, they should acquit.

12. It was error to permit the cross-examination of defendant, on trial for forgery of a check, for the purpose of showing that he obtained money on passing it, where he had not testified as to such matter in his direct examination.

13. Where there was no material variance between a certain check offered in evidence and the paper set out in an information charging the forgery thereof, such check was properly admitted.

14. On an issue as to whether defendant had an account with a certain bank, at a time specified, testimony of an employé of such bank that he had made an examination for such purpose, and ascertained that he had not, was competent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5, authorizing parol proof of the general result of an examination of numerous books and accounts, where they cannot be examined in court without great loss of time.

15. It was error to permit a witness to testify, over objection, that a certain bank was a corporation, where it was competent and sufficient to prove by reputation that it was a de facto corporation.

Garoutte and Harrison, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. For opinion in department, see 51 Pac. 945. Reversed.

BEATTY, C. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment convicting him of forgery and from an order denying a new trial.

The specific charge in the information is that the defendant, having in his possession a certified check for $2.50, raised it to $850, forged certain indorsements on it, and, knowing its fictitious character, passed it on the State Loan & Trust Company, a corporation, all with intent to defraud said corporation. A demurrer to this information was overruled, and this ruling is the first error assigned in support of the appeal.

The most serious objection to the information is that it does not show that the Exchange Bank, upon which the check was drawn, had any existence, corporate or otherwise, or that the person whose name was signed to the certification had any authority to certify. It may be conceded that this criticism is just, but it does not follow that the information is therefore bad. An uncertified check is as much the subject of forgery as a certified check, and, if it does not appear from this information that the check was certified, it remains true that the defendant is well charged with the forgery and utterance of a check uncertified.

Another objection to the indictment is that it charges more than one offense. This objection is based upon an allegation that defendant, after raising the check, forged several indorsements on the back of it. This part of the charge is not well laid in the information, because the words "falsely" and "feloniously" are omitted, and there is therefore nothing to negative the authority of defendant to make the indorsements. But, even if the charge had been sufficient in itself, it would not have specified a distinct offense. The intent to defraud is the essential element of the crime of forgery, and the whole series of acts charged against defendant is alleged to have been done with the single intent to defraud the State Loan & Trust Company. But one offense, therefore, was charged, and the court did not err in overruling the demurrer.

It is next contended that the court erred in overruling defendant's objections to certain questions asked him on cross-examination. He had testified in his own behalf that he had won the check in a game of poker from one Adams in the rooms of one King, at Los Angeles. He was soon after arrested in San Francisco by an officer from Los Angeles, and it appeared from his own statements that at the time of his arrest, or shortly thereafter, he was informed that the charge against him was the forgery of this check, i. e. the raising of a check for $2.50 to $850. He was then asked whether he stated the manner in which he became possessed of the check to the arresting officer, or to the officers in whose custody he was subsequently placed, or to the person who informed him of the particulars of the charge against him. Being compelled, against his objection, to answer these questions, he admitted that he had not stated to any of the persons mentioned anything in regard to the manner in which the check came into his possession. It is contended that evidence of the silence of defendant while under arrest and in the presence of his keepers would not have been competent evidence against him if offered by the state as part of its case in chief, and that a fortiori the fact could not be drawn out of him on cross-examination.

Whether silence under accusation of crime amounts to an admission of guilt, or whether the failure of a person accused to dispute an incriminating statement made in his presence amounts to a tacit admission of the truth of such statement, depends upon circumstances, and undoubtedly there is very high authority for holding that the silence of the accused cannot be given in evidence against him without first showing that the circumstances of the accusation or incriminating statements were such that he would feel at full liberty to reply and would be called upon to reply. Accordingly it has been held that the silence of a prisoner in the presence of the arresting officers or jailers was incompetent as evidence of guilt. Com. v. McDermott, 123 Mass. 440, and cases there cited. But upon this point the authorities are not uniform, and the decisions of this court do not furnish us a precedent. None of the cases cited by appellant is clearly in point, and the one upon which he principally relies (People v. Elster [Cal.] 3 Pac. 884) is rather against him. In that case the court was discussing instructions to the jury, not rulings upon the admission of evidence, and the error pointed out was not in the admission of the evidence,—as to which no question seems to have been made,—but in the inference of guilt which the trial court assumed was to be drawn from the silence of defendant. What this court said with respect to this was: "If such an inference could be drawn at all from the conduct or statements of the defendant, it was for the jury to draw it. They only could determine whether the conduct of the defendant on the occasion of his arrest was contrary to the ordinary behavior of a person charged with crime, or attributable to his mental characteristics, or evinced guilt or innocence." From this expression it would seem that the court decided, not that evidence of this character is incompetent, but merely that the weight of such evidence must be left for the jury to determine, unaffected by any intimation from the court that it tends to prove the guilt of the defendant.

It is not necessary, however, to decide in this case whether the silence of the accused, while in custody, can be given in evidence against him by the people as a part of their case in chief. The question here is a very different one, viz. whether when an accused person, testifying in his own behalf, has offered an explanation of circumstances tending to incriminate him, he may be asked on cross-examination whether he has not done, or omitted to do, something which it might be thought he would probably have done, or omitted to do, if his explanation was true. Such was the course pursued in this case. Defendant testified that he won the check from Adams in the presence of King, and he was asked if he stated that fact to the arresting officer, or to the officers of the prison. He admitted that he did not, and it was for the jury to determine whether or not his conduct was consistent with his testimony. Counsel for appellant contend for the extreme proposition that, because he did not testify on his direct examination in regard to his conduct at the time of and subsequent to his arrest, therefore he could not be cross-examined as to that matter. But the rule of cross-examination is not so restricted. Any fact may be called out on cross-examination which a jury might deem inconsistent with the direct testimony of a witness, and a defendant testifying in his own behalf is in this respect put upon the same plane with other witnesses. People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 475, 35 Pac. 80. The superior court did not err in this matter.

Nor did the court err in admitting the evidence of Logan that there is a fluid by means of which writing may be removed from paper. It was a part of the case of the prosecution to prove that certain writing on the check had been removed and other writing substituted in its place, and certainly it was proper to prove that there is a known means by which this may be accomplished. The point of this objection, however, seems to be that evidence of this character is inadmissible until a foundation for it has first been laid by showing that a solvent fluid has been used, and that the defendant is conversant with its use. We know of no such rule with respect to such evidence. Each of these facts is independent of the others, and has some tendency to prove the fact in issue. All of them being proved, the case would certainly be stronger than if only one or two of them are proved, but neither is to be excluded because the others are wanting. As to the competency of the witness, his testimony showed that he had made use of the fluid in question, and was in fact an expert, and the matter to be proved was the subject of expert evidence.

The trial court, in submitting the case to the jury, gave the following instruction: "If you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant committed the offense charged in the information, or aided, abetted, or assisted any other person or persons to commit the same, then you should find the defendant guilty." This instruction is clearly erroneous. Aside from the person who directly commits a criminal offense, no other is guilty as principal unless he aids and abets. Pen. Code, §§ 31, 971. A person may aid in the commission of an offense by doing innocently some act essential to its accomplishment, and this is especially true in regard to the crime of forgery, for he may pass the forged instrument without knowing that it is forged. The word "aid" does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas the definition of the word "abet" includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator and counsel and encouragement in the crime. The error in the instruction is therefore clear, and it cannot be held that it is harmless error to instruct a jury that they must convict upon proof of a fact which does not necessarily imply guilt. It was certainly possible for the jury to have found consistently with the evidence in this case that defendant did not forge or raise the check himself, but that it was forged by some other person, and that his only connection with it was to pass it to the Loan & Trust Company after winning it from the forger, and without any knowledge of its spurious character, in which case he would have been innocent of any crime. But the court, at the request of the defendant, instructed the jury as follows: "If the evidence does not establish beyond reasonable doubt that the defendant made or altered or forged or counterfeited the check in question, or any part thereof, with intent to defraud another, and if the evidence does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant uttered or published or passed, or attempted to pass, as true and genuine, the said check, knowing the same to be false or altered or forged or counterfeited, with intent to prejudice or damage or defraud any person, then the mere possession by the defendant of the said check, and his indorsing and negotiating the same, is not sufficient, standing alone, to convict; for proof of the mere possession and negotiating of a forged check is insufficient to convict a defendant of forgery, in the absence of a guilty intent or guilty knowledge." This specific instruction, on the precise point affected by the error above noted in the charge of the court, we think cured the error; for, construing the two instructions together, the jury could not have failed to understand that merely aiding or assisting in the commission of a crime, without guilty knowledge, is not criminal. In other words, they could not, in view of this instruction, have taken the charge as to aiding or assisting in its narrow and literal sense.

At the request of the prosecution, the court instructed the jury as follows: "Where weaker evidence is produced when in the power of the party to produce higher, it is presumed that the higher evidence would be adverse if it had been produced." The giving of this instruction was error for two reasons: In the first place, because the word "weaker" is substituted for "inferior," a word of different meaning (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 6); and, in the second place, because it was wholly inapplicable to the evidence in the case. The defendant did not introduce inferior evidence—i. e. evidence of a lower class—upon any point as to which he could be supposed to have had higher evidence in his power. The use made of the instruction seems to have been to found an argument against the defendant upon the ground that he had not hunted up and called as witnesses the men Adams and King, from one of whom he claimed to have won the check at poker. But the evidence of Adams and King would have been of no higher class than his own evidence, and, besides, they could not have exonerated the defendant without criminating themselves. All the evidence in regard to King and Adams, contained in the record, is to the effect that King was a frequenter of the race track and pool rooms of Los Angeles; that Adams was a "sure-thing" confidence man, and a companion of King; that King proposed the game in which defendant claims to have won the check; that defendant won from them about $150 less than the face of the check, and paid them the difference when it was transferred to him, after which they disappeared from Los Angeles. All this may have been a fiction, and the jury may have been justified in so considering it; but it was certainly an error, and a highly prejudicial error, in the court to instruct the jury not only that they were to presume that the evidence of King and Adams would have been adverse if they had been called as witnesses, but that it would have been higher and stronger evidence than that of the defendant. The objections to instructions 1 and 2 are removed by an amendment to the record, and instruction 3 is a correct statement of law applicable to the case.

In charging the jury concerning circumstantial evidence, the trial judge used the following language: "Where the evidence is entirely circumstantial, yet it is not only consistent with the guilt of the defendant, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, the law makes it the duty of the jury to convict, notwithstanding such evidence may not be as satisfactory to their minds as the direct testimony of credible eyewitnesses would have been." This language is quoted literally from the opinion of Justice Sander-son in People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 202, and since the decision of that case has been repeated in hundreds of criminal trials in this state. It is, nevertheless, not a correct and logical statement of the law, and has been repeatedly criticised in later decisions of this court, though it has never been deemed a sufficient ground of reversal. In cases of circumstan- tial evidence facts should be proved which are not only consistent with the guilt of the defendant, but inconsistent with any reasonable hypothesis of innocence, and every single fact from which the deduction of guilt is to be drawn must be proved by evidence which sat- isfies the minds and consciences of the jury to the same extent that they are required to be satisfied of the fact in issue in cases where the evidence is direct. It is therefore inexact and illogical to say that a conviction may be had on less satisfactory evidence where it is circumstantial than would be required when it is direct. The vice of this instruction, however, is generally corrected, as it was in this case, by special instructions to the effect that every fact essential to sustain the hy- pothesis of guilt and to exclude the hypothesis of innocence must be fully proved.

The court did not err in giving section 470 of the Penal Code as a definition of "forgery." It certainly was law, and, although parts of it were superfluous in this case, we cannot see how the jury can have been misled by it.

Nor did the court err in refusing instructions 6, 9, and 10, asked by defendant. They were substantially given in instructions 19 and 20.

Instruction 5 was properly refused, because it was a request to the judge to instruct the jury, not as to a matter of law, but as to the weight and effect of evidence.

Among other instructions requested by de- fendant and refused by the court was the fol- lowing: "If, after consideration of the whole case, any juror should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it is the duty of such juror so entertaining such doubt not to vote for a verdict of 'guilty,' nor to be influenced in so voting, for the single reason that a majority of the jury should be in favor of a verdict of 'guilty.'" This is a correct statement of the duty of a juror and should have been given. If any juror needed an in- struction upon this point, it was harmful to refuse it; if no juror needed the instruction, it would have been harmless to give it.

Instruction 7 was properly refused. Against his conscientious convictions, a juror has no more right to vote not guilty than guilty.

Instruction 13 requested by defendant, and refused by the court, was in the following language: "Gentlemen of the jury, if you entertain a reasonable doubt as to whether or not Exhibit A has been raised from a two dollar and a half check to an eight hundred and fifty dollar check, it will be your duty to acquit." This instruction was correct, and should have been given. There is no theory upon which the defendant could have been convicted under this information, and the evi- dence in the record, if the check was not raised as charged. The refusal of the instruc- tion probably did no actual harm, for the evi- dence as to the raising of the check was all one way, but it was error to refuse it.

Instruction 14 was properly refused, because it does not state a proposition of law, but deals with the effect of evidence.

The court erred in permitting the cross-ex- amination of defendant for the purpose of showing that he got money from the loan and trust company on the forged check. This was a part of the people's case in chief. Counsel for the prosecution seem to have thought their case weak on that point, and sought to prove it more fully by the cross-examination of the defendant. This they had no right to do. He had not testified as to that matter in his direct examination, and they could not compel him to be a witness against himself.

The court did not err in admitting the check in evidence. There was no material variance between it and the paper set out in the in- formation. Nor did the court err in overrul- ing the objections to the questions asked the witnesses Brunjes and Daniels relating to the identification of the defendant.

A teller of the loan and trust company tes- tified that he had examined the books of the bank to ascertain whether the defendant when he passed the check and received an ad- vance on it had any account with the bank, and, over the defendant's objection, was al- lowed to state that he had no account at that time. The ruling of the court upon this point was correct. The fact called for was a gen- eral result, that could only have been arrived at by the examination of numerous books and accounts, which could not have been exam- ined in court without great inconvenience and loss of time, and was therefore properly provable by parol, under subdivision 5 of sec- tion 1835 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The same witness was allowed to testify, over the objection of the defendant, that the State Loan & Trust Company was a corpo- ration. This ruling was technically errone- ous. It was competent and sufficient to prove that the bank was a de facto corpora- tion, and to prove this by parol, but it was a fact to be proved, like character, by reputa- tion, and not by the direct statement of the witness.

As the result of the foregoing discussion, it is apparent that the judgment and order ap- pealed from must be reversed, and therefore it is unnecessary to decide whether the trial court exceeded the bounds of legal discretion in refusing a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. This point cannot arise on a new trial, and all other points presented by the record have been decided. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and cause remanded.

I concur: VAN FLEET, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in reversing the judgment and the order denying a new trial upon the grounds stated in the opinion of the Chief Justice. I do not concur, however, in the views expressed in that opinion respecting the alleged error of the court below in overruling defendant's objections to certain questions asked him on cross-examination. I think that the ruling of the court below in that matter was erroneous, and that such ruling is an additional ground for reversing the judgment and order appealed from. In the first place, I do not think that the questions asked the defendant were cross-examination, under section 1323 of the Penal Code. They were not as to matters "about which he was examined in chief." I do not understand it to have been established by this court that a defendant in a criminal case, who has gone upon the stand as a witness for himself, can be cross-examined to the full extent to which the examination of ordinary witnesses may be carried. My views on that subject are expressed in my opinion in People v. Meyer, 75 Cal. 386, 17 Pac. 431. See, also, recent case of People v. Arrighini (Cal.) 54 Pac. 591, where this subject is thoroughly discussed. But the matter sought to be proved by the questions was in itself inadmissible. If a case can be imagined where it would be competent to prove what a prisoner under arrest "didn't say" to the officer who holds him in custody, and who is often his hostile prosecutor, the circumstances disclosed by the record here do not make such case. The silence of a person arrested in the presence of the arresting officer, or a refusal to answer a question of the officer, is not a circumstance incriminating the person arrested, and constitutes no evidence against him. Of course, there are some circumstances under which a man's silence may be evidence against him,—circumstances under which it would be natural for men similarly situated to speak; but it would be unwise and foolish, particularly in this state, where arresting officers are frequently prosecuting officers, for a man arrested for a crime to say anything whatever to such officers. And it has been held frequently that the silence of a prisoner in the presence of the officer having his custody cannot be given in evidence. Greenl. Ev. par. 197, and cases there cited; Com. v. McDermott, 123 Mass. 440; Com. v. Walker, 13 Allen, 570; Com. v. Kenney, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 235. I think that this rule is also substantially stated by this court in People v. Elster, 3 Pac. 884. The appellant was not called upon at all to explain in any way why he had not told a police officer what he then testified to, and it was not proper to put him in a position where some such explanation would be expected. The question here involved differs materially from a mere general question asked an ordinary witness as to whether or not he had ever stated to any person what he was testifying to until he came upon the stand. My opinion is that the allowance of these questions over the exception of the appellant constitutes error that was prejudicial to the appellant.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.

GAROUTTE, J. (dissenting). I concur in the views of the Chief Justice as to the scope of the cross-examination of the defendant. When a defendant goes upon the witness stand for the purpose of securing his acquittal, and for the first time tells a Munchausen tale as to his connection with the affair, I think it proper and legitimate cross-examination to ask him: "Did you ever tell this tale to anybody prior to this time? Did you tell it to the arresting officers?" I believe it is the universal practice to ask such questions, and until now I never heard the practice questioned. To ask and compel answers to those questions is certainly no invasion of defendant's constitutional rights. There is no power in the law to compel the defendant to take the witness stand in his own behalf, but when he does it he may be asked any question which will show his past conduct to be inconsistent with his present testimony. The rule of law is so declared in the recent case of People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 475, 35 Pac. 80. As a general principle, defendant's silence may not be proven against him as a circumstance tending to show guilt. But upon cross-examination, if this silence be inconsistent with his present testimony, inquiry may be had upon it.

This case is reversed upon the error committed by the trial court in giving the following instruction to the jury: "Where weaker evidence is produced when in the power of the party to produce higher, it is presumed that the higher evidence would be adverse if it had been produced." This instruction embodies a very poor attempt to express the principle of law of presumptions declared in subdivision 6, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc. This subdivision of the section, properly quoted, is as follows: "That higher evidence would be adverse from inferior being produced." It will be observed that the adjective "weaker" is not used in the subdivision, and we are not prepared to say that "weaker evidence" and "inferior evidence" cover the same ground. Again, under the evidence in this case, we find no demand for the giving of the presumption of law attempted to be declared by the foregoing instruction, even if it be conceded to be a proper principle to be applied in any criminal case. Yet it is said in Peo- ple v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 486, 29 Pac. 30: "The practical administration of justice should not be defeated by a too rigid adherence to a close and technical analysis of the instructions of the court. Instructions are for the enlightenment of the jury as to the law of the case, and the jury never enters into such a character of analysis in considering them." The evidence called for no such instruction. By the record it is nowhere disclosed that the defendant offered "weaker" evidence when it was in his power to produce "higher" evidence. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the defendant had in his power any higher evidence to produce. In fact, there is nothing to show that there was any higher evidence anywhere. The instruction, when we consider its effect, is a blank. Neither in law nor in fact does it amount to anything. Defendant insists that it charged him with the responsibility of failing to produce King and Adams as witnesses at the trial. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the instruction was aimed at those persons; for, as suggested, there is nothing to indicate that defendant could have produced them at the trial, even by the exercise of the greatest effort. Again, it was as much in the power of the people to produce these two men as witnesses as it was in the power of the defendant, and the presumption would therefore work against the prosecution exactly as against the defendant. These suggestions only show that the attempted declaration of law was purely an abstract matter, and the jury, as intelligent men, could not have been misled thereby. Defendant's counsel is incorrect in saying that the prosecuting officers in their arguments to the jury invoked this principle against defendant by reason of his failure to produce Adams and King as witnesses at the trial. The record does not bear out such statement. In conclusion, upon this branch of the investigation, it may be said that defendant's counsel in their opening brief concede the instruction was not based upon any "particular facts" in the case. Such concession alone demands that a new trial should not be granted upon this ground. While the defendant has the constitutional right to appeal, he must show some substantial violation of the law in the trial of his case. Some material right must be taken from him, or his conviction must stand. If judgments of conviction in hotly-contested, complicated criminal trials are to be set aside for every technical violation of the law occurring during the progress of those trials, it might almost be said that no conviction would stand the test of appeal. If in the multitude of rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and upon the procedure of the trial in general, a judge does not make some mistake, it would be a wonder indeed. Only a few men possess that amount of legal wisdom. The constitutional right of appeal granted a defendant does not contemplate that this court should find grounds for a new trial in any and every mistake the trial court may make. For the reasons here given, the contention of defendant discloses a matter too small to demand a retrial of the case. The other matters are of even less importance. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

I concur: HARRISON, J.

STONESIFER et al. v. KILBURN et al.

(Sac. 382.)<sup>1</sup>

REFORMATION OF DEED—VENDOR AND PURCHASER —NOTICE.

1. Two deeds to different grantees, executed in fulfillment of one contract to convey a specific quantity of land, by mistake conveyed less; and, to give the grantees their proper quantity, grantor agreed with them that defendant grantee, whose land adjoined the remainder of the tract, should from his land make up the other grantee's deficiency, and then recoup himself from the balance of the tract, grantor agreeing to execute new deeds conforming to the change. He caused the land to be surveyed, designating the changes to be made; and, relying on his agreement, defendant surrendered to the other grantee the quantity of land designated by the survey, and took possession of a portion of grantor's land, as indicated by the survey. Grantor never executed the correction deeds, but for 12 years acquiesced in defendant's possession. Held, that defendant was, in equity, entitled to a reformation of the deed to him so as to include the parcel occupied by him under the agreement with the grantor.

2. A finding that grantees had notice of the possession and equitable title of one in possession of the premises finds that they had actual notice of such person's rights.

3. Evidence that, under an agreement with the owner to convey it to him to make up a deficiency in prior conveyances, defendant took possession of land, and improved the greater portion of it, and, while in possession, the owner conveyed it by deed reciting that the former conveyances conveyed the full amount intended to be conveyed thereby, and with the conveyance delivered a lease of the tract conveyed, which excluded that portion held by defendant, warrants a finding that the owner's grantee, and his grantees, who took while defendant continued in possession, took with notice of his equitable title.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

Action by A. G. Stonesifer and others against Paris Kilburn and others to quiet title. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. J. Pringle and C. A. Stonesifer, for appellants. Wright & Hazen, for respondents.

VAN FLEET, J. Appeal by plaintiffs from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. The action is one to quiet title to a parcel of land which is within the calls of the deed under which plaintiffs claim title, but is held in possession by the Kilburns under a claim of equitable title thereto. As disclosed by the findings, the material facts are these: William S. Chapman, the owner of a tract of some 5,000 acres in the Orestimba grant or rancho, in Stanislaus county, in the year 1868, in pursuance of an agreement theretofore made by him with S. and E. Randall and Paris and Guy Kilburn to sell them 2,040 acres of said land at the rate of $10 per acre, and upon payment of the purchase price of $20,400 in full, made two deeds, one to the Randall brothers, and the other to the Kilburns, each describing by metes and bounds a tract intended to, and designated as, containing 1,020 acres, the two deeds being designed to cover together the whole amount to be conveyed; the Randall deed calling for land on the north end of the Chapman tract, and that of the Kilburns a tract immediately adjoining the Randalls on the south. Possession was immediately taken by the grantees thereunder. At this time it was supposed and believed by all the parties to the deeds that the instruments carried the full acreage designated in each; but subsequently, in 1872 or 1873, it was discovered that there was a deficiency of land in each deed, amounting in the Randall deed to something over 100 acres, and in the Kilburn deed to over 30 acres. This fact being brought to the attention of Chapman, he agreed with his grantees that the mistakes in quantity should be corrected by the Kilburns surrendering to the Randalls sufficient land on their north line to make up the deficiency to the Randalls, and that the Kilburns should recoup from the land of Chapman on the south by moving their south line over on to the land still owned by Chapman sufficiently to make up to them the amount so surrendered, together with the amount of the deficiency in their deed, and thus give to each their full quantity of 1,020 acres. To accomplish this purpose, Chapman procured an accurate survey of the land to be made; and, immediately upon the running and marking of the lines thereof in the field, directed and requested his grantees to change their respective lines of possession in accordance therewith, which they accordingly did, Chapman promising to thereafter make new deeds to conform to such survey. The findings show that the Kilburns, "at the request and on the faith of the agreement of Chapman, and relying thereon," gave up and surrendered to the Randalls the quantity of land required to make up their deficiency, and placed them in possession thereof, and that they and their successors have since held and possessed said land as their own; that at the same time the Kilburns, in pursuance of the said agreement, and relying upon the promise of Chapman, moved their south line over on to the Chapman land in conformity with the said survey, and took possession of the parcel of land in dispute, and have since held and possessed the same, claiming to be the owners thereof, against the plaintiffs and all other persons, and have continuously since "subjected the said tract of land, and the whole thereof, to their will and control; have cultivated the same, and pastured the same, used the same for a supply of fuel and fencing material, and for the ordinary use of the occupants, and have built fences thereon and valuable improvements, and have inclosed a large part thereof." This change of possession was effected in November, 1873; but it appears that Chapman has never made a new deed to the Kilburns. In 1885, Chapman sold his land to the south of the Kilburn tract to Montgomery, the deed covering by its terms the parcel of land in dispute; Montgomery conveyed to Page; and the latter, in 1887, sold to the plaintiffs,—each of said parties paying an adequate and valuable consideration, and, as found by the court, "believed that they could rely, and they did rely, upon the description of the land of the Randalls and the Kilburns as the same appeared from their deeds of record in the office of the county recorder of Stanislaus county, as also the description of the land of Chapman as the same then appeared from his title papers as recorded in said recorder's office; but that, at the same time, each of them had notice of the possession and equitable title of the Kilburns." And, in a mixed finding of law and fact, the court found "that, at the commencement of the action, the legal title to the disputed premises was vested in the plaintiffs; but that the equitable title to the land in dispute, which is included within the description in the complaint, was then vested in defendants, the Kilburns, who were then in possession, and entitled to the possession, of said disputed land." As a conclusion of law, the court held that the deed from Chapman to the Kilburns should be reformed so as to include the land in dispute; and that the plaintiffs should execute and deliver a deed sufficient in form and substance to convey to the Kilburns and their grantee, Jeanette Kilburn, the legal title to said land.

Although questioned by appellants in some particulars, we are satisfied that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the findings in all material respects; and upon those findings we think the judgment was clearly right. The facts make out a perfect equity in the Kilburns to the relief granted. Appellants contend that there was no direct promise by Chapman to reform the Kilburn deed which was capable of enforcement; that, whatever the terms of that promise, it was, at best, but executory, and was recalled by the conveyance to Montgomery. But, while the promise was not in express terms to reform either of the deeds in question, such was the necessary effect and implication as to the intent of Chapman from his acts, which were accepted and relied upon by both the Randalls and the Kilburns, and upon the faith of which the latter parted with and surrendered a valuable part of the premises originally conveyed to them. The agreement by Chapman was not wholly executory, but was an executed agreement in all respects except the passing of the deeds necessary to complete it; nor is there anything to necessarily indicate that Chapman intended to recall his promise by his subsequent conveyance to Montgomery, even could he have been permitted to do so. For more than 10 years prior to that conveyance, he had, with knowledge of the facts, acquiesced in the change of possession effected at his instance and direction; and that he had no intention of revoking such promise is shown by the terms of his conveyance to Montgomery, wherein he excepted "two thousand and forty acres conveyed by said Chapman to Randall and Kilburn." It is not material that no reformatory deed has ever passed from Chapman to the Kilburns. At the time of this transaction, the rights of no one other than the grantor, and his then grantees, were involved, and, as aptly stated in the opinion of the learned judge of the court below: "The agreement to convey two thousand and forty acres of land at the price of ten dollars per acre vested the equitable title to that quantity of land in the purchasers; and as, by mutual mistake, the deeds executed in pursuance of the agreement do not include all the land intended to be conveyed, a court of equity will reform the deeds so as to include the land intended. [Citing cases.] Then, as a court of equity would reform the deeds so as to give effect to the contract according to the intention of the parties by correcting the mistake, there is and can be nothing in the policy of the law to prevent the parties from doing equity between themselves by agreeing to correct the mistake."

But it is urged that the Kilburn deed cannot be reformed as against the appellants, for the reason that the finding that plaintiffs and their predecessors purchased with notice of the equitable rights of the Kilburns is based solely upon the fact that the latter held possession of the disputed premises, which fact is not the equivalent of notice, either actual or constructive, but only a fact tending to prove notice; that there is nothing to show any actual notice, and plaintiffs and their grantors, being bona fide purchasers for value, cannot be affected by anything less than that. But the finding of the court must be construed as a finding that plaintiffs and their predecessors had actual notice of the rights of the Kilburns; and, as we have suggested, there was evidence to sustain that finding. The objection may best be answered in the language of the learned judge of the court below, from which we again quote: "The fact that the Kilburns had been in the actual, exclusive, and notorious possession of the land under the parol agreement from early in 1873 to the time this action was commenced, and had fenced, cultivated, and improved the greater portion of it, with the line between the Kilburn and Chapman possessions distinctly marked; and the fact that the agent of Chapman and the agents of Montgomery, in leasing the lands to the south of the disputed strip or piece, recognized and acquiesced in that line; and when Montgomery conveyed the land to Timothy Paige, April 11, 1887, he delivered to him a lease which had been made by the agent of Montgomery of the land to the south of the land in dispute, which did not assume to include the land in dispute,—are circumstances sufficient to justify the inference that the plaintiffs and their grantors had notice of the equitable title of the defendants Kilburn. It is said in Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 467, that, 'where a party has an equity and also actual possession of the property, a purchaser of the legal title is bound to take notice. The law permits an equity to exist, but does not require or permit it to be recorded; and, when the party holding the equity does all the law will permit him to do, his equity will be protected, and all who purchase of a grantor out of possession must take notice.' The principle of equity jurisprudence announced in Bryan v. Ramirez has been asserted in many subsequent cases, but differently expressed. In some of them such possession has been held to impart notice per se; but in others such possession was treated as evidence of notice only. The result, however, should be the same in either view. [Citing cases.] There are other circumstances tending to show notice to the subsequent purchasers, and the facts bring this case within the authorities cited. The plaintiffs and their grantor, Paige, and his grantor, Montgomery, having purchased with notice of the equitable title of the defendants Kilburn, the parol agreement made by Chapman must be specifically enforced against them. This principle of equity is sustained by all the cases. Civ. Code, § 3395; Peasley v. Hart (Cal.) 4 Pac. 537."

These are the only considerations to which we deem it necessary to give particular attention. There are some others urged, but we do not regard them as material. The errors of law assigned are not specially urged. We have examined them, but do not discover that they present any obstacle to sustaining the action of the court below. The judgment and order are affirmed.

KUHLMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY & COUNTY OF SAN FRAN-
CISCO. (S. F. 1,129.)

STATUTES—REPEAL—CORONERS—WITNESSES—CONTEMPT—PUNISHMENT—JUDICIAL ACTION.

1. Pen. Code, § 1513, authorizing a coroner to punish a witness refusing to testify in like manner as on a subpoena issued by a justice of the peace, repeals St. 1872, p. 406, §§ 17, 18, which provide that coroners in the city and county of San Francisco shall have the same power as judges of courts of record to preserve order and punish witnesses for contempt; the latter being a special act, adopted before the Code went into effect.

2. Under St. 1872, p. 406, § 17, authorizing the coroner to order an arrest for contempt, and have accused brought before the county judge, to be punished according to law, the action of such court or judge in committing accused is judicial, and not ministerial.

3. Where a witness is adjudged guilty of contempt for refusing to testify, and ordered to prison by the coroner, under Pen. Code, § 1513, authorizing him to punish a recalcitrant witness in like manner as on a subpoena from a justice, the witness cannot be committed under St. 1872, p. 406, § 17, authorizing the coroner to order an arrest for contempt, and have accused brought before the police or county judge to be punished according to law, since this section applies to cases of contempt shown to the coroner directing an investigation, and to cases where the warrant of arrest only is issued by the coroner.

4. Under St. 1872, p. 406, § 17, authorizing a coroner to order an arrest for contempt, and have accused brought before the county judge, to be punished according to law, such judge has no authority to commit accused on an order of commitment made by the coroner, and without a trial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Petition by Charles G. Kuhlman for a writ of review to annul an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco committing petitioner for contempt. Order annulled.

J. B. Clarke, for petitioner. Lennon & Hawkins, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This proceeding is inaugurated by a writ of review to annul the action of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco (W. R. Daingerfield, judge) in a proceeding pending therein. It is based upon the following facts: Petitioner, Kuhlman, was regularly subpoenaed as a witness to give testimony in a case of inquest pending before the coroner of the city and county aforesaid. He appeared, and refused to testify, whereupon the coroner adjudged him guilty of contempt, and ordered that he be imprisoned in the county jail of the city and county of San Francisco until he complied with the order of the court requiring him to so testify. The coroner thereupon ordered the sheriff of said city and county to arrest Kuhlman, and bring him before the nearest judge of the police court or judge of the superior court of the city and county aforesaid, "to be punished according to law, and to have said judgment and sentence of imprisonment enforced." Kuhlman was arrested, and brought before the superior court (Daingerfield, judge); and, upon hearing had in that court, the following order was made: "It appearing to me from said order and warrant of said coroner that the said Charles G. Kuhlman has the ability, and that it is within his power, to be sworn as a witness at the said inquest then and there and now pending before said coroner as aforesaid, and after the hearing of said matter, being now fully advised in the premises, it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed in open court that he, the said Charles G. Kuhlman, for his said contempt of the authority of said William J. Hawkins, coroner of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, committed in the immediate presence of said coroner, in refusing to be sworn as a witness at the inquest then and now pending before said William J. Hawkins, coroner of the city and county of San Francisco, to determine the cause of death of * * *, be punished by imprisonment in the county jail of the city and county of San Francisco, of the state of California, until he complies with the order of said William J. Hawkins, coroner of the city and county of San Francisco." It is the aforesaid order that is sought to be reviewed by this proceeding.

It is now contended upon the part of the respondent, and in behalf of the coroner, that the action of the judge of the superior court was not judicial, but ministerial, and that for such reason review is not the proper remedy to right the wrong, as there can be no such thing as an excess of jurisdiction in such a case. We pass this contention of respondent for the moment without decision. Whatever action the judge of the superior court, or the superior court itself, took in the matter, its authority to act rests alone in sections 17 and 18 of the act of the legislature found in the Statutes of 1872 (page 406); and, if that act is not in force and effect, the action here taken, as outlined by the foregoing order, whether it be judicial or ministerial, must fall. Assuming, then, the order to be the result of judicial action, that action only has support under the aforesaid sections; and, if that support be taken away, the order, of necessity, must be null, as going outside of the law.

The act of 1872 is one pertaining solely to the duties of the coroner of the city and county of San Francisco; yet the coroner of the city and county of San Francisco is a county officer (Kahn v. Sutro, 114 Cal. 316, 46 Pac. 87), and general laws pertaining to the duties of coroners are as applicable to him as to any other coroner of the state. In the county government act and in the Penal Code, we find the general powers and duties of coroners quite fully set forth; and, clearly, those provisions are binding upon the coroner of the city and county of San Francisco. Whatever may be said as to the force and effect of the provisions of the act of 1872, not covered either by the county government act or the Penal Code, there can be no question but that all those provisions of the act which are covered by that general legislation are repealed. Upon inspection, we find section 1513 of the Penal Code providing as follows: "A witness served with a subpoena may be compelled to attend and testify, or punished by the coroner for disobedience, in like manner as upon a subpoena issued by a justice of the peace." Here is a provision of the general law directly applicable to the facts of the case at hand; and such provision of the Code must be held to repeal any special act in effect at the time the Codes went into effect. This section of the Code deals directly with witnesses refusing to attend and testify before the coroner, and, by implication, necessarily repeals all parts of the act of 1872 treating upon that subject. Carpenter v. Jones (Cal.) 53 Pac. 842. As to what particular parts of the act of 1872 are still in force, if any, it is not necessary to decide. The order of the superior court being based upon purported authority found in sections 17 and 18 of the act of 1872, and the law there found being repealed, the entire proceeding taken and had before the superior court must fall to the ground.

There is another reason why the proceeding taken in the superior court must be annulled. Clearly, section 18 of the act of 1872 has no application to this case, for the punishment there prescribed is limited to fine or imprisonment, and no such penalty has been administered here. It follows that section 17 of the act is the only one which has any application to the subject-matter covered by this proceeding. Yet that section only allows the coroner to issue a warrant of arrest for the recalcitrant witness, and thereupon the guilty party must be "brought before the police judge or county judge of his county, to be punished according to law." The particular proceeding contemplated by this section is not plain. Whether the section is intended to apply to contempts simply, or contemplates cases where a misdemeanor or felony has been committed, and upon the issuance of the warrant of arrest by the coroner a trial in the court having jurisdiction is to follow, is a matter of some doubt; but it is plain that the section gives the coroner no authority, to punish anybody, and whatever may be the nature of the proceeding, whether a simple contempt or a trial of a criminal case, the power rests alone in the court to try it, and adjudge the punishment. This construction of the law necessarily does away with the contention of respondent that whatever was done by the judge of the superior court in this matter was done purely in a ministerial capacity, and in no sense partook of judicial functions. Again, it cannot be successfully contended that this petitioner was punished under the aforesaid section of the Penal Code, and then the proceeding outlined in section 17 of the act of 1872 invoked, in order that a commitment might issue from a regularly constituted court. It is only in those special cases covered by section 17, and where the warrant of arrest alone is issued by the coroner, that the proceedings there laid down may be invoked. The measure of the power is found in the section itself. In conclusion upon this branch of the case, we find the superior court making an order adjudging this petitioner guilty of contempt, and decreeing that he be punished by imprisonment. This judgment and decree of the court in itself declares that it is based upon the warrant of arrest and order of commitment made by the coroner. It is evident, therefore, that the petitioner had no trial before the superior court, but was adjudged guilty upon the showing made by the face of the warrant and order of the coroner. Even conceding the legislature has the power to vest such unusual authority in the superior court, namely, to adjudge guilt without trial, still there is no attempt by the legislature to do such a thing here; for, as we have seen, the coroner had no right, under the section, to make any order declaring the petitioner guilty, and adjudging the punishment. Hence, the order upon which the superior court based its decree was one made by the coroner without any justification in section 17 of the act of 1872. It is therefore apparent that the court exceeded its authority in making the order of which complaint is here made, and that such order must be annulled.

In conclusion, we suggest that, if the aforesaid section 1513 of the Penal Code declared that a violation of its provisions would render the party so violating them guilty of a misdemeanor, thereby eliminating any question of contempt from the case, such legislation would probably do away with the complex and intricate questions of law involved in the consideration of matters of contempt claimed to have been committed before quasi judicial officers, such as the coroner. The order of the superior court is annulled.

CALIFORNIA NAV. & IMP. CO. v. UNION
TRANSP. CO. (Sac. 437.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1898.)

INJUNCTION—IRREPARABLE INJURY—MULTIPLICITY OF SUITS—PLEADING.

1. A petition for an injunction to restrain defendant from making landings on certain land bordering on a river averred that such entry caused plaintiff continuous and daily damages, which were irreparable, but no facts were stated showing how or why the injury was irreparable. Held insufficient.

2. A general averment, in a petition for injunction, that defendant by his acts causes plaintiff continuous and daily damage, being insufficient to show any irreparable injury, is not aided by a further averment that to recover such damages "will require a multiplicity of judicial proceedings."

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by the California Navigation & Improvement Company, a corporation, against the Union Transportation Company, a corporation, to obtain an injunction restraining the latter from making landings on certain land bordering on the San Joaquin river. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. S. M. Sparrier, Fairchild & Carroll, and Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff and defendant in this case are both corporations organized under the laws of this state, and engaged in the business of transporting freight and passengers by steamboats between the city and county of San Francisco and the city of Stockton, and intermediate points. The plaintiff brought this action to obtain an injunction restraining the defendant from making landings upon certain land bordering on the San Joaquin river, and receiving therefrom and delivering thereon freight and passengers. A general demurrer to the complaint was interposed and sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered that it take nothing by the action. From that judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It is alleged in the complaint that on November 30, 1896, one A. J. Larson was the owner of a tract of land in the county of San Joaquin containing 1,592.50 acres, and bounded in part by Black's slough, by a certain levee canal, and by the San Joaquin river, and that on the day named he contracted with J. D. Peters that he, the said Peters, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, "should have the sole and exclusive right and privilege, for the period and term of forty-three years from and after said date, to erect wharves, landings, piers, chutes, warehouses, and any and all buildings and structures in any way appertaining thereto, and shall have the exclusive right of landing with boats, barges, or other vessels on the said premises for said term, and shall have the exclusive right and privilege of making landings on any part or portion of the said lands, fronting on the 'water front,' so-called (that is, any part or portion of said lands facing upon any water surrounding the same, or any part or portion thereof)"; that on or about December 16, 1896, the said Peters, for a valuable consideration, assigned and transferred the said contract to the plaintiff, and that it is still the owner and holder thereof; "that the said defendant, without the consent and against the will of the said plaintiff, has for many days last past continuously entered upon the said land and premises, and used the same for the purpose of making landings, and receiving therefrom freight and passengers, and of delivering thereon freight and passengers, and that the said defendant, although requested so to do, has refused to cease from said use of the said land and premises, and threatens to, and will, unless restrained by this honorable court, continue to enter upon and use the said land and premises for the aforesaid purposes"; "that the said entry of the said defendant and its said use of the said land and premises as aforesaid has caused and does cause to this plaintiff continuous and daily damage, the amount whereof the plaintiff is not able to determine or calculate"; "that to recover the amount of damages suffered by the said plaintiff by reason of the said acts of the said defendant as aforesaid will require a multiplicity of judicial proceedings"; "that the continuance of the said acts of the said defendant as aforesaid will enable the said defendant, unless restrained therefrom, to acquire an easement in and upon the said land and premises, and the use thereof, for the said purposes, adverse to this plaintiff."

The only question presented for decision is, does the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? The rule is that pleadings are to be construed most strongly against the pleader, and, when so construed, we think the complaint in this case fails to state a cause of action. It will be observed that it contains only a general averment as to the injury caused or to be caused by the acts of the defendant. No facts are set out showing how or why the supposed injury would be irreparable. But to obtain an injunction, when irreparable injury is relied upon, such a showing is necessary. "It is not sufficient that the affidavit alleges that the injury would be irreparable. It must be shown to the court how and why it would be so; otherwise the extraordinary remedy of injunction will not be allowed." Waldron v. Marsh, 5 Cal. 120. "An injunction is never granted, unless the bill shows some vested right in the plaintiff, which is likely to suffer great or irreparable injury from the act complained of. The mere allegation of such injury is insufficient. The facts stated must satisfy the court that such apprehension is well founded." Branch Turnpike Co. v. Board of Sup'rs Yuba Co., 13 Cal. 190. See, also, Foundry v. Ryall, 75 Cal. 601, 17 Pac. 703, and High, Inj. §§ 34, 722. And the general averment that defendant, by its acts, "has caused and does cause to this plaintiff continuous and daily damage," being insufficient to show any irreparable damage or injury whatever, it cannot be said to be in any way aided or helped out by the further averment that to recover the amount of such damages "will require a multiplicity of judicial proceedings." For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

HARRISON v. McCORMICK et al. (S. F. 812.)<sup>1</sup>

PARTNERS—ACTIONS—LIMITATIONS—DISMISSAL AS TO ONE PARTNER—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—CHANGING CAUSE OF ACTION.

1. An action was commenced against two of three partners, and subsequently an amendment was filed making the third a party, but between the time of the commencement of the action and the filing of the amendment limitations ran in favor of the latter partner, who was discharged. Held, that his discharge did not affect the liability of the others.

2. Subsequently to the filing of a suit against two of three partners, an amendment was filed making the third a party, but the action was then barred. The two former partners claimed that, as the suit was on a contract with the three, it was not declared on until the filing of the amendment; hence it was barred also.

to them. Held, that as the effect of the amendment was not to state a new cause of action against the original defendants, but the original cause of action against a new defendant, the latter alone could plead limitations with effect.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by J. W. Harrison against John McCormick and others. There was a judgment for defendants, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Craig & Meredith and J. H. Meredith, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson and H. C. Firebaugh, for respondents.

BRITT, C. Action to recover a balance of the price of goods sold. The action was begun against John McCormick and Oscar Lewis, alleged to be partners under the name of McCormick & Lewis. Plaintiff had judgment, which was reversed on appeal for the reason that one T. A. McCormick was shown to be a co-partner with said defendants and a necessary party to the action. Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 616, 11 Pac. 456. Plaintiff then amended his complaint, joining said T. A. McCormick with the former defendants, and alleging, among other things, that the contract sued upon was made with the three as co-partners under the firm name of McCormick, Lewis & Co. Between the time of the commencement of the action and the amendment aforesaid the statute of limitations applicable to plaintiff's demand had run in favor of T. A. McCormick. He pleaded the same by demurrer to the amended complaint, the court sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the action as to him. On a subsequent trial between plaintiff and the two defendants originally sued, the court nonsuited the plaintiff at the close of his evidence. He moved for a new trial, which was denied; hence this appeal. There was an intermediate appeal of no present interest except as part of the history of the case. Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 327, 26 Pac. 830.

Most, if not all, of the considerations advanced by respondents, in support of the nonsuit ordered by the court, are resolvable into the single proposition that, since the right of action on the contract was barred by the statute as against T. A. McCormick, therefore it was lost also against his co-partners, on the principle that the release of one of two or more partners or other joint debtors is a release of all. Certain qualifications of the rule invoked are as fully established by the common law as the rule itself. "If the discharge do not relate to the merits of the contract, and only concerns the person of one of the promisors, as infancy, bankruptcy, etc., the other promisors are still holden. 'For,' in the language of the Mirror of Justice (page 215), 'satisfaction hath respect to the debt, and not to the person.' " Townsend v. Riddle, 2 N. H. 449, and cases cited. It is perfectly well settled that the discharge of one partner in bankruptcy, or the infancy of one partner pleaded to an action on a contract voidable by him for that reason, does not affect the liability of his co-partners for the joint debt. Pars. Partn. (4th Ed.) §§ 17, 376; Lindl. Partn. marg. page 224; Tooker v. Bennett, 3 Caines, 4; Woodward v. Newhall, 1 Pick. 500; Slocum v. Hooker, 13 Barb. 536, 541. The statute of limitations is also a defense peculiar to him who pleads it. As has been said here, it is a personal privilege of the debtor, to be asserted or waived at his option. Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 16. Its effect is not to satisfy the debt, but to bar the remedy; and we perceive no sufficient reason why this defense which, by operation of law, produces the personal discharge of one of two or more partners or other joint debtors, should be available to his co-defendants, who have not the same advantage.

Suppose John McCormick and Oscar Lewis had been absent from the state until the statute barred the action against their co-partner, and upon their return to the jurisdiction all were then sued; we should have the identical state of facts presented in Town v. Washburn, 14 Minn. 268 (Gil. 199), where it was held that a creditor might recover against two partners who had thus been beyond the reach of process, although his action was barred as against a third, who pleaded the statute. The doctrine of that case—if it was correctly decided, and we think it was—should obtain here; for an action actually brought against some, but not all, of the members of a partnership, must be as effective to preserve the liability of the persons sued as their absence from the state, which affords merely an excuse for not suing them.

It is further said that the action stands now upon a contract made with three partners, and that this contract was not declared on until the filing of the amended complaint; and hence that the action is barred as to all the defendants. the same as in the case of T. A. McCormick. It is, however, quite apparent from the pleadings that the effect of the amendment to the complaint was not to state a new cause of action against the original defendants, but only the original cause of action against a new defendant. The latter alone, therefore, could plead the statute with effect. Easton v. O'Reilly, 63 Cal. 308.

Counsel have made no reference in argument to section 1543, Civ. Code, which declares that "a release of one of two or more joint debtors does not extinguish the obligations of the others, unless they are mere guarantors, nor does it affect their right to contribution from him," and we have therefore not sought to ascertain its bearing in the case. It may be of consequence (Insurance Co. v. Potter, 63 Cal. 157); but, independently of its provisions, we are satisfied that the motion for nonsuit was improperly granted, and the order denying a new trial should be reversed.

I concur: CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order denying a new trial is reversed.

PEOPLE v. McKAY. (Cr. 430.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1898.
JURY—HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—PREMEDITATION—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—ACT OF BAD FAITH—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. An objection to the mode of service of the venire is not a ground of challenge to the panel.

2. Defendant, after having been engaged in a fight, went into the house of G., which was near by, and caught up a pistol belonging to G., and rushed away with it, and presented it in a threatening manner towards his adversary, when a third person attempted to take the pistol away from defendant, and in the scuffle was shot. Held, that evidence of G. that he attempted to prevent defendant from taking the pistol, and of the remarks then made by defendant, showing excitement, and that he took the weapon without leave and against the protest of G., was admissible to show defendant's state of mind.

3. Evidence of the previous relations between defendant and his adversary was admissible to show the cause of the immediate quarrel in which defendant killed deceased, though such evidence showed no malice.

4. An offer of the district attorney to prove that defendant had an abandoned and malignant heart, as tending to show that the homicide was the offspring of malice, and not of a sudden heat of passion, though excluded by the court, is not an act of bad faith, since there is good authority sustaining the admissibility of such evidence.

5. In a criminal case, where the jury asked for further instructions, it was immaterial that the court did not confine himself to the points on which information was asked, where the jury could not have been misled thereby.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county.

William Barron McKay was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. C. Ross, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of manslaughter, and appeals from the judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial.

1. The first point made on the appeal arises upon the challenge to the panel. The objection goes merely to the mode of service of the venire. It is not shown that the sheriff intentionally omitted to summon any juror drawn. In fact, it does not appear that the jurors drawn were not all in attendance. This objection constitutes no ground of challenge to the panel. The challenge to the panel formed under the special venire is not based upon any statutory ground.

2. It is contended that the court erred in admitting the evidence of the witness Gerke, as to what defendant said and did in procuring the pistol with which it is charged that he committed the homicide. Defendant was charged with killing Robert Curry. There was evidence tending to show that, a few minutes before the homicide, defendant had had an altercation with one Barron, who had beaten him; also, that he went immediately to Gerke's house, which was near by, caught up a pistol belonging to Gerke, and rushed back with it, had presented it in a threatening manner towards Barron, when Curry interfered, and attempted to take the pistol from defendant, and in the scuffle the pistol was discharged, and Curry was killed. The theory of the prosecution was that defendant procured the pistol for the purpose of killing Barron, and, when Curry interfered to protect Barron, defendant killed him to get rid of his interference. The evidence had reference to an attempt on the part of Gerke to prevent defendant from taking the pistol, and remarks of defendant tending to show excitement, and that he took the weapon without leave and against the protest of Gerke. I think the evidence was proper, as tending to show the state of mind of the defendant.

3. I discover nothing in the evidence in regard to the previous relations of defendant and Barron which tended to prove malice, but it was admissible to enable the jury to understand the immediate quarrel in which the homicide occurred.

4. We cannot say that the district attorney was acting in bad faith when he offered to prove that defendant had an abandoned and malignant heart, as tending to prove that the homicide was the offspring of malice, and not of a sudden heat of passion or an accident. I think the ruling of the court rejecting the offered evidence was correct; but, had a different ruling been made, authority sustaining the action of the court would have been found, in the celebrated case of U. S. v. Guiteau, 1 Mackay, 498, where much evidence was admitted which merely tended to show that Guiteau had a malicious and malignant disposition.

5. No injury was done to defendant by the refusal to give the elaborate and abstract definition of "character" offered by the defendant. It could have served no useful purpose.

6. It does not matter whether the court, when the jury asked for further instructions, confined itself to the points upon which information was asked or not. The language in which these instructions were given is not in all respects the best that might have been used, but the jury could not have been misled. The attention of the jury was called to the instructions already given upon the subject. In these, at the request of defendant, the court had elaborately distinguished "murder" from "manslaughter." The jury announced that they were agreed that the killing was not premeditated, and asked for a definition of manslaughter. The court referred to the former instruction, and added: "Whether such felonious homicide would be murder or manslaughter depends," etc. In the instruction already given, prepared by counsel for defendant, it had said: "Whether the unlawful killing of a human being is murder or manslaughter," etc. Evidently the phrase "such felonious homicide" was general, and did not apply specially to the case in hand. It was the equivalent to the expression already used, to which reference was made in the same sentence, and the jury could not have been misled. It is evident, also, that the jury desired to have restated the difference between murder and manslaughter. The defense was not that the homicide was in necessary self-defense, or that it was excusable, but that it was accidental. The announcement of the jury showed that they were agreed that it was not murder in the first degree, and implied that some of the jury were doubtful whether it was murder or manslaughter. If they had concluded that the killing was accidental, they would not have cared for a definition of manslaughter. All the elements of excusable or justifiable homicide had, however, been fully stated in other instructions.

7. It is discretionary with the court whether it will hear evidence in mitigation of the punishment. Pen. Code, § 1203. The evidence offered was incompetent, and the court properly refused to hear it. The judgment and order are affirmed.

DUNN v. SCHELL et al. (S. F. 793.)

MORTGAGE — INCUMBERING INTEREST AS DEVISEE.

It is no defense to the foreclosure of a mortgage of a debtor's interest as devisee to certain land that the will required the land to be kept "intact" and undivided until the majority of a certain other devisee, since, under Civ. Code, §§ 690, 694, 1341, the interest of the mortgagor became vested at the death of the testator, and under sections 699 and 2947 he could incur it the same as if it were an estate in possession; but under the foreclosure sale the purchaser would take the mortgagor's interest, subject to the directions of the will.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Bill by Sarah R. Dunn against Georgiana L. Schell and others. There was a decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Fisher Ames, for appellants. Gordon & Young, for respondent.

BRITT, C. In order to secure payment of a promissory note, the defendant Lawrence B. Schell conveyed to plaintiff by way of mortgage all his right, title, and interest "as an heir at law and as devisee by virtue of the last will of Theodore L. Schell, deceased, in and to" certain parcels of land particularly described. This is an action to foreclose the mortgage so created. By the terms of said will the testator devised to his wife, the defendant Georgiana L. Schell, and several children, of whom said Lawrence is one, all his real property, directing, however, that the same "shall be kept and shall remain intact and undivided and undistributed until my youngest son," one Arthur B. Schell, "shall have attained the age of twenty-one years," the income thereof meanwhile to be controlled and expended by said Georgiana for the support of herself and said children. There was a further provision that, in case of the death of the wife before said Arthur should reach the age mentioned, then the real property devised to the children should be at once distributed. It seems that the will was duly admitted to probate, and the estate of the testator is still in process of administration. Said Arthur was yet below the age of 21 years when this action was tried. Judgment went for plaintiff. The appeal is prosecuted by said Georgiana, the widow, and Lawrence W. Schell and the other surviving children of said testator.

The stress of appellants' argument is on the direction in the will that the real property of the deceased shall be "kept intact" until the majority of his youngest son. It is contended that until that period the power of any of said devisees to hypothecate his interest under the will was restrained, and that the effect of the sale of Lawrence W. Schell's interest under foreclosure will be to defeat the testator's intention in this particular. We discover no substantial ground for this view. On the death of the testator said Lawrence acquired under the will a vested future interest in the lands of the deceased (Civ. Code, §§ 690, 694, 1341; Williams v. Williams, 73 Cal. 99, 14 Pac. 394), which was subject to be transferred or incumbered by him in like manner as if it were an estate in possession (Civ. Code, §§ 699, 2947). It was competent for him to make the mortgage in suit, but upon a sale to satisfy the same the purchaser will take only the share and interest in the property of the decedent, which, but for the mortgage and the foreclosure, the mortgagor himself would have taken. It is impossible, therefore, that the "intact" quality (whatever that may have been) which the testator desired to impress on his real estate for the period mentioned in the will can be affected by the sale of Lawrence's interest therein.

The court made a finding to the effect that the interests of the co-devisees of said Lawrence are subordinate and subject to the claim and lien of the plaintiff created by the mortgage in suit. Appellants complain that this finding is contrary to the evidence. Within itself the finding does not show what interests are declared to be subordinate to the claims of the plaintiff; but, taking it in connection with the other findings and the admissions of the pleadings, we understand it to mean no more than that said co-devisees of Lawrence W. Schell have no right in the share of his father's estate mortgaged by him to the plaintiff which is not subordinate to the lien of the mortgage. This is consonant with the facts in evidence. All the appellants expressly admitted by their answers that they claimed an interest in the mortgaged property, and it was not improper that the findings should negative their asserted rights therein. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MCNEAR v. BOURN et al. (Sac. 422.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1898.)
WAREHOUSE RECEIPT — NOTICE TO BUYER — EVIDENCE—ERROR.

1. On the question whether the buyer of a warehouse receipt had notice that the warehouseman's employé signing it had theretofore ceased his employment, the latter testified that he told the buyer before the purchase that he was no longer in the warehouseman's employ, and later told him there was no wheat in the warehouse of the person selling the receipt. Another witness testified he was present at the last conversation, and the buyer admitted the employé had told him before of his discharge, but whether the admission referred to a conversation before the buying was not clear. The buyer denied having seen or talked with the employé after his discharge, and before the buying. Heid, that the finding of notice by the trial judge would not be disturbed.

2. Where, in an action on a warehouse receipt, the warehouse employé signing it had testified to the circumstances under which he signed it after his discharge, and to having notified the subsequent buyer of it of his discharge, error in permitting him to show there was no such lot of wheat in the warehouse as the receipt called for was harmless.

3. Where, on the issue of notice of an employé's discharge, there was evidence to support the notice, it was not error to permit the employé to testify that he was in fact discharged on the date alleged.

4. On the issue of notice to the buyer of a warehouse receipt of the previous discharge of the employé signing it, testimony of the employé that, after the buying, he told the buyer that the seller of the receipt had no wheat in the warehouse, was not prejudicial, it simply showing the buyer that something was wrong with his receipt.

5. On the issue of notice to the buyer of a warehouse receipt of the previous discharge of the employé signing it, there being evidence to support the notice, it was competent for the employé to show the circumstances under which he signed it, and that the body of it was later filled in by some one else.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Action by G. W. McNear against A. Bourn and D. N. Hershey. There was a judgment for defendants, and, from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hurst & Hurst and F. W. McNear, for appellant. F. E. Baker and R. Clark, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Defendants owned a warehouse at Ronda, near Woodland, and received grain on storage, issuing warehouse receipts therefor. Plaintiff purchased a receipt calling for 640 sacks of wheat, which defendants claimed was forged, and refused to deliver the wheat described in it upon demand of plaintiff. This action is to recover the sum of $765.05, paid by plaintiff as the value of this wheat. The trial was by the court, and defendants had judgment, from which, and from an order denying motion for new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

The court found that defendants were engaged in receiving grain on storage in the year 1895 up to August 6th of that year. Frank Gasteiger was defendants' agent in charge of their warehouse, and was authorized to issue warehouse receipts in the name of defendants for storage of grain. Robert Nethercott was plaintiff's agent, and authorized to buy wheat for plaintiff. Gasteiger ceased to receive grain in storage on August 6th, and defendants settled with and discharged him, after which time he had no authority to act for defendants in any capacity. On August 14th, Gasteiger was working at baling hay, eight miles from Ronda, for other employers. On that day one H. Burk took to Gasteiger a warehouse receipt theretofore made out by Gasteiger to one Emma C. Laugenour, which Burk represented was incorrect, and requested Gasteiger to sign a warehouse receipt in blank in the usual way, and he (Burk) would take the Laugenour receipt and the blank receipt thus signed to one Watkins, the agent of Mrs. Laugenour, and have him fill the blanks in the receipt. Gasteiger complied with Burk's request, and gave him the blank receipt, signed in the name of defendants by Gasteiger. Watkins was not in any way the agent of defendants. Burk presented the receipt to Nethercott, filled out as of date August 13th, and so as to show that he (Burk) had 640 sacks of wheat on storage in defendants' warehouse; and Nethercott purchased the receipt, and paid Burk the sum stated. Subsequently plaintiff presented the receipt to defendants, and demanded the wheat, which was refused. Finding 10 is that Gasteiger was discharged from defendants' employment on August 6th, and thereafter had no authority to act as their agent; and that on August 7th, the day following his discharge, Gasteiger saw and had a conversation with Nethercott in Woodland, "during which conversation he informed said Nethercott that he was no longer in defendants' employ; that he was paid up and discharged the day previous, and was then looking for a job. He also informed the said Nethercott that defendants had taken in all the wheat intended for storage during said year in said warehouse, and had no further use for an agent or weigher at their warehouse." Finding 11 is to the effect that, on August 19th, Gasteiger again met Nethercott at Woodland, and Nethercott told Gasteiger he had bought Burk's wheat in defendants' warehouse, whereupon Gasteiger told Nethercott there was no such wheat there, and that Burk had left no wheat there. Defendants knew nothing of the existence of this receipt until after Nethercott had bought it.

The plaintiff presents the following as the pivotal question in the case: "Did the defendants, by their want of ordinary care, cause or allow appellant's agent, Nethercott, to believe that Gasteiger was their (defendants') agent on August 13, 1895, the date of the warehouse receipt?" It is contended by plaintiff that it was the duty of defendants to give notice of their agent's discharge and the revocation of his authority. The provisions of the Civil Code and the general doctrine governing agencies, under circumstances such as appear here, are quite fully given by counsel for plaintiff. Section 3543, Civ. Code, is also cited to show that this is a case where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, and that the loss must fall on the defendants, because it happened through their negligence. If finding 10 is supported by the evidence, it becomes unnecessary to determine what the rule is as to giving notice where a principal discharges his agent, for it is found that plaintiff had notice. The evidence of Gasteiger tended to show that he met Nethercott in Woodland on August 7th, and said enough to him to leave the plain inference that he was no longer in defendants' employment. He met Nethercott again after the latter had purchased the receipt. Nethercott told Gasteiger of his purchase from Burk, whereupon Gasteiger told him that no such person had any wheat in the warehouse, and showed him a list of all the sacks in the warehouse. A witness was called, who was, it is claimed, present at this meeting, and testified that he and Gasteiger were talking together, when Nethercott came up and spoke to them, and said, "What are you doing here?" And Gasteiger said, "Didn't I tell you before that I was not working at the warehouse any more?" Mr. Nethercott said, "I believe you did." Some discussion is indulged as to whether Nethercott referred to the conversation of August 7th, between him and Gasteiger, or to another conversation he had with Gasteiger after Nethercott bought the receipt. It does not clearly appear to which conversation Nethercott referred. It is not material, however, because the court could accept Gasteiger's evidence without corroboration. Nethercott denies having seen Gasteiger on the 7th, or at any time after the 6th, and before he bought the receipt from Burk. In other respects he flatly contradicted Gasteiger, and testified that he had no notice that Gasteiger was discharged at the time he bought the receipt.

After a careful examination of the transcript, we are unable to say that there was not sufficient evidence to support the findings. It was the province of the trial judge to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses, and to accept or reject such portions of the evidence as to him seemed worthy or unworthy of credence. An examination of the testimony of the witnesses will show that the court might well have reached an opposite conclusion from the one arrived at; but we cannot say that it was bound to do so, or that the findings are unsupported by the evidence. Plaintiff was grossly imposed upon by the criminal act of Burk, and the more than careless conduct of Gasteiger; but the learned judge who tried the case found that plaintiff's agent had notice of Gasteiger's discharge seven days before the date of the receipt. It may be that when the receipt of a subsequent date was presented to Nethercott for sale, on the 13th or 14th of August, he believed that Gasteiger had resumed work for defendants; but, as defendants in no wise contributed to this belief, they should not suffer because of Nethercott's mistake. It is possible, too, that Nethercott was right, and Gasteiger wrong, as to the date when the latter first informed the former of his discharge by defendants; but the trial court accepted Gasteiger's version of the circumstance, and rejected that of Nethercott. The rule, well established, forbids us from interfering with the prerogative of the court in passing upon the credibility of these witnesses.

2. Plaintiff assigns certain errors of law occurring at the trial.

(a) It is claimed that error was committed in allowing defendants to show by Gasteiger that no lot of 640 sacks of wheat was in the warehouse when he was discharged. As Gasteiger had testified to the circumstances under which he signed the Burk receipt, and had also testified to having given Nethercott notice of his discharge, we think it was not prejudicial error to show by this witness that there was no such lot of wheat in the warehouse on the 6th, when Gasteiger quit work there.

(b) We think it was competent for defendants to show by Gasteiger that his employment ceased on August 6th, as there was evidence tending to show notice of that fact to plaintiff.

(c) We can discover no prejudice to plaintiff in the evidence of Gasteiger as to what was said between him and Nethercott on the 19th of August, conceding it to be immaterial. It amounted simply to his telling Nethercott there was something wrong about the Burk receipt.

(d) We think it was competent for defendants to show the circumstances under which Gasteiger signed the receipt, and that the body of it was filled in by some other person, inasmuch as there was evidence that Nethercott had notice that Gasteiger quit work on August 6th. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

BROWN v. SAN FRANCISCO SAV. UNION.
(Sac. 392.)

VENUE—DENIAL OF CHANGE—REVIEW.

Under Const. art. 12, § 16, providing that a corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made, or its principal place of business is, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, where the evidence is in direct conflict as to whether the contract in suit arose in the county where suit was brought, or defendant bank had done business there, the denial of a motion to transfer the place of trial will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county.

Action by Thomas Brown against the San Francisco Savings Union. Appeal from an order denying a motion to transfer the place of trial. Affirmed.

H. C. Campbell and S. Millington, for appellant. Ben. F. Geis, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This action was commenced in the superior court of Glenn county to recover damages for the alleged breach of an agreement, entered into between the parties, giving the plaintiff an option to purchase certain lands in that county between certain dates at a stated price. It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of this state as a banking corporation, and, at all the times mentioned in the complaint, was, and now is, "doing a general banking business in the said state of California, and in the county of Glenn thereof"; and that, "on or about the 21st day of April, 1896, the above plaintiff and defendant, at and in the said county of Glenn, California, made and entered into" the said agreement. The answer admits that defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and alleges that it was and is incorporated under the act of the legislature entitled "An act to provide for the formation of corporations for the accumulation and investment of funds and savings," approved April 11, 1862, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and that, since its organization and incorporation, it has done business as a savings bank corporation, according to the provisions of said acts, and not otherwise; "denies that at the times in the complaint mentioned, or at any time, defendant was, or at any time has been, or is, doing a general banking business in the county of Glenn, or elsewhere, in the state of California, and denies that it has ever done any business whatever in the said county of Glenn; alleges that, continuously since the date of its organization, its office and principal place of business has been, and is, in the city and county of San Francisco, said state, that all of its business has been, and is, transacted at said office and place of business, and that it has never had any other office or place of business; admits that on or about the 21st day of April, 1896, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement of option, etc., but denies that such or any agreement was made or entered into at said county of Glenn, or elsewhere than said city and county of San Francisco." The answer then sets up facts which, if true, would constitute a defense to the action. The complaint and answer were both duly verified. At the time it appeared and answered, defendant filed an affidavit of merits, and a demand in writing that the place of trial be changed to the city and county of San Francisco. The motion was subsequently heard and denied, and from that order the defendant appeals.

Section 16 of article 12 of the constitution provides: "A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases." Under these provisions of the constitution, the question submitted to the court below for decision was, where was the agreement in controversy made or to be performed? And it is clear that, if the averments of the complaint were true, the action was properly brought in the county of Glenn, and, if not, defendant's motion should have been granted. At the hearing, affidavits were read by both sides. Those read on behalf of defendant were made by Albert Miller, president, and Lovell White, cashier and secretary, of the defendant. They stated clearly and positively that defendant was incorporated to do business as a savings bank, and had always had its office and principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, as stated in its answer; that it never had any office or place of business in the county of Glenn, or transacted any business in that county; that plaintiff came to defendant's office and place of business in San Francisco, and there personally conducted the negotiations with the officers of defendant that led to the execution of said option agreement, which consisted only of letters written by the cashier of defendant to plaintiff; and that said agreement was to be, and could be, performed by defendant, if at all, only at its said place of business in San Francisco. The affidavits read on behalf of the plaintiff were made by Thomas Brown, plaintiff, and one David Brown. They reaffirm the averments of the complaint, and say "that the facts are that the said plaintiff and defendant, at and in the county of Glenn, state of California, made and entered into the agreement set out in plaintiff's verified complaint," and that all the statements contained in the answer and affidavits of defendant "denying that the contract was made in the county of Glenn, and that defendant never transacted any business in the said Glenn county, and the statements that the contract was made in the city and county of San Francisco, are absolutely false and untrue, the fact being that the contract of option sued upon was made and entered into at and in the said county of Glenn, state of California."

In view of these conflicting affidavits and the decisions of this court in similar cases, we do not think the action of the court below can be disturbed. Lakeshore Cattle Co. v. Modoc Land & Live-Stock Co., 108 Cal. 261, 41 Pac. 472; Bowers v. Same, 117 Cal. 50, 48 Pac. 979. We advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

Where, pending an appeal from a conviction of murder, accused escapes, the appeal will be dismissed, unless accused returns to custody within a time set by the court.

W. H. Elkins was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Dismissed.

Jas. F. Peck, Frank H. Farrer, and B. F. Fowler, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant, Elkins, was convicted of murder of the second degree, and has appealed from the judgment of conviction, and also from the order denying his motion for a new trial. This appeal is now pending before one of the departments of this court. The attorney general, by motion, asks the court to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that the defendant has escaped from custody, and is now at large. He supports his application by an affidavit of the sheriff in whose custody the defendant was held, to that effect. The interesting question as to the power of the appellate court under the facts here presented, and the proper procedure to be followed in such a case, has been carefully considered upon an identical state of facts arising in the case of People v. Redinger, 55 Cal. 290. Upon the authority of that case, it is ordered that the appeal in this case stand dismissed, unless the defendant shall, within 30 days from this date, return to the custody of the sheriff of the county of Merced, state of California. It is further ordered that a copy of the within order be served upon the attorneys of defendant within 5 days hereof.

VERMONT MARBLE CO. v. BLACK. (S. F. 1,207.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

ACTION—PENDENCY—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—NECESSITY OF PRESENTING PENDING CLAIMS IN ACTION.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, providing that an action is deemed pending from its commencement until its final determination on appeal unless the judgment is sooner satisfied, an action is pending which was prosecuted to a default judgment and to an execution sale against the judgment debtor's administratrix as substituted defendant, she having taken an appeal meanwhile.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1502, requiring plaintiff in an action pending against a decedent at the time of his death to present his claim to the executor or administrator of the estate, and providing that he may not recover in his action unless proof of such presentation be made, an intestate's judgment creditor, who, pending an appeal by the administratrix as substituted defendant, failed to present a claim against the estate for such judgment, cannot recover from the administratrix.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Vermont Marble Company against Annie Black, administratrix. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Reade, for appellant. Geo. C. Sargent, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought its action against William Black to recover on four promissory notes executed by the latter. Upon May 31, 1893, judgment by default was given against defendant, and execution was issued, and a levy made. William Black died on June 5, 1893, and on July 7, 1893, defendant was duly appointed administratrix of his estate, qualifying upon July 10, 1893. On the 14th day of the same month she was substituted as defendant in this action. On July 28, 1893, she moved the court to vacate the default judgment. Upon denial of her motion she appealed, and this court reversed the order of the trial court. Marble Co. v. Black, 38 Pac. 512. After the going down of the remittitur, the lower court, on defendant's motion, vacated the default, and permitted her to answer upon terms. Meanwhile, upon November 1, 1893, the sheriff had sold certain property of the estate under his execution levy. The moneys received from the sale were paid into court to await the final determination of the action. At the trial, after plaintiff had introduced its evidence, defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that plaintiff had not proved the presentation of a claim for its demand against the estate of deceased. It was admitted that no claim had been presented. The court granted the motion, and from the judgment which followed plaintiff appeals.

By section 1502 of the Code of Civil Procedure, plaintiff in an action pending against a decedent at the time of his death must duly present his claim to the executor or administrator of the estate of the deceased, and he may not recover in his action unless proof of such presentation be made. "An action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal * * * unless the judgment is sooner satisfied." Code Civ. Proc. § 1049. Appellant first contends that the judgment was "satisfied," within the meaning of section 1049, Code Civ. Proc., by the execution sale, but this position is not tenable. The judgment was not, in fact, satisfied, and a forced payment by execution sale against a nonconsenting judgment debtor cannot be held to abridge any of his rights upon or under appeal. Kenny v. Parks, 120 Cal. 22, 52 Pac. 40. The action, then, was certainly pending. In re Blythe's Estate, 99 Cal. 472, 34 Pac. 108. But appellant argues that, even if this be the fact, nevertheless it was not necessary for it to present its claim. Herein reliance is had upon In re Page, 50 Cal. 40, and Brennan v. Brennan, 65 Cal. 517, 4 Pac. 561; but in both of these cases an attempt was made to resist in the probate court the payment of a final judgment of a court of general jurisdiction. In neither of them had the objection of nonpresentation of the claim been advanced in the trial court. Both cases, then, resolved themselves into a question of collateral attack in the probate court upon final judgments rendered by courts of general and competent jurisdiction. In the case at bar the fact of nonpresentation was first raised in the trial court. It is in all essentials like the case of Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 49, 40 Pac. 21, 386, which is decisive of this question. Here, as there, while deploring the hardship, we find ourselves unable to save plaintiff from the consequences of its neglect. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

McDONALD v. MAYOR, ETC., OF CITY OF PLACERVILLE. (S. F. 938.)

JUDGMENT—DEFAULT.

Where plaintiff sues on a judgment, joining as defendants persons claiming adverse rights therein, demanding, in addition to the recovery on the judgment, a determination that the adverse claimants have no interest therein, and judgment is rendered against him on the latter contention, he is not entitled to judgment against the judgment debtor who is in default, under Code Civ. Proc. § 585, allowing judgment by default in actions arising on contract for the recovery of money only.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Marion J. McDonald against the mayor and common council of the city of Placerville. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Lynch and W. G. Bonta, for appellant. C. W. Cross, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff sued on a certain judgment against the city of Placerville, averring himself to be the owner of an undivided one-half thereof, and joining as defendants several persons alleged to claim rights in the same adverse to him. The court below held that he had no interest in the judgment, and its decision was affirmed on a former appeal in this case, entitled McDonald v. Cutter, 120 Cal. 44, 52 Pac. 120. The only point made here is that plaintiff should have recovered against the city of Placerville, which suffered default. Plaintiff, however, demanded relief in addition to a recovery of money due on the judgment, viz. a determination that the defendant Cutter has no interest in the same; and this on grounds such that a failure to sustain his case in that particular necessarily defeated it as to all the defendants. He was therefore beyond the provision of the statute allowing judgment by default in actions arising on contract for the recovery of money or damages only. Code Civ. Proc. § 585. This appeal seems to us frivolous. The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. WILLIAMS et al. (Sac. 147.)

WATER RIGHTS—DEED—CONSTRUCTION—EVIDENCE—REPETITION.

1. A deed by a prior appropriator of water conveyed "all of his right to the use of all the waters of D. creek. Said waters to be taken out at a point * * * about one mile above the head of S.'s old ditch, and tapping said creek where the B. Co. taps said D. creek. * * * To have and to hold * * * the first right to the use of all the waters" thereof. The grantor at that time owned five ditches tapping the stream below the named point of inflow, through which ditches he thereafter continued to divert water, with the grantee's acquiescence. Considerable water still flowed in the stream below the point named; it being from seepage, springs, and other sources. Held, that the intention was to convey a first right only to the point mentioned, and, hence, that the waters below did not become subject to appropriation.

2. It is not error to exclude a question calling for a mere repetition of testimony.

Beatty, C. J., and Temple and Henshaw, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county.

Action by William H. Smith against William Williams and Jacob Temple. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant Templey appeals. Affirmed.

Warren & Taylor and T. M. Osmont, for appellant. James F. Farraher, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. Appeal by defendant Templey from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial. The action was to enjoin defendants from diverting water from a small stream in Siskiyou county, known as "Ditch Creek," and for damages for such diversion. Plaintiff's claim was the exclusive right by prior appropriation to the waters of the stream, to the extent of 600 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, "when there is that quantity therein; and, when there is not such quantity, then all of the waters" of the stream "which rise or flow therein or thereinto between the point where the present ditch of the Blue Gravel Mining Company taps said creek, and a point about two miles below, on the line of said creek, where the present lower ditch of plaintiff taps said creek." He averred a wrongful diversion by defendants of 50 inches of the water at a time when there was less water in the stream than the maximum quantity to which he was entitled, to his damage in the sum of $350. Defendant Templey set up the right in himself by appropriation to "about twenty inches" of the water of the stream, and denied the diversion of any water belonging to plaintiff, or any damage. The court found that plaintiff was entitled to the exclusive use of the waters of the stream, to the extent of 500 inches; that defendant Templey in June, 1893, forcibly took possession of one of plaintiff's ditches and diverted through the same about 50 inches of water, and continued such diversion up to October, and again in like manner diverting it from May to October, 1894; that during the periods of such diversion there was less than 500 inches of water in the stream; that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $250. Judgment was entered enjoining the diversion, and for the damages found.

The main point urged is that the findings are not sustained by the evidence. There is evidence tending substantially to establish the facts as found by the court. The finding that plaintiff "is now, and for upwards of twenty years last past has been, the owner and entitled to the exclusive use to the extent of five hundred inches, measured under a four-inch pressure, when there is that quantity, and, when there is not such quantity, then to all of the waters flowing in Ditch creek, in Cottonwood mining district, county of Siskiyou, state of California, which rise or flow therein between the point where the present ditch of the Blue Gravel Mining Company taps said Ditch creek, and a point about two miles below, on the line of said creek, where the present lower ditch of plaintiff taps said creek," presents the principal point of attack. It is contended that the finding is wholly negatived by the fact, as claimed by appellant, that prior to the bringing of the action plaintiff had conveyed away all his rights and interest in the waters of Ditch creek. This claim is based upon the fact that in December, 1888, plaintiff made a deed to one McFarland, whereby he conveyed to the latter "all of his right to the use of all the waters of Ditch creek. Said waters to be taken out at a point in said creek about one mile above the head of William H. Smith's old ditch, and tapping said creek where the Blue Gravel Mining Company's ditch taps said Ditch creek." "To have and to hold, all and singular, the first right to the use of all the waters of said creek." We think this deed was correctly construed by the court below as conveying only plaintiff's rights to the quantity of water mentioned, taken out at the designated point, and as leaving unaffected in plaintiff his rights in the stream below that point. This intention is evident, not only from the language of the instrument, but by the practical construction put upon it by the parties to the deed. Plaintiff at the date of the conveyance owned some five ditches tapping the stream at points below the point of diversion specified in the deed to McFarland, through which he has since continued to divert waters from said creek without interference or adverse claim from his grantee, but with his knowledge and acquiescence. Plaintiff's grantee has taken the water from the stream by means of the same dam which existed in the stream at the point of his diversion when the deed was made; and there has since continued to flow below said dam a considerable quantity of water, part of which escapes past said dam, and part by seepage from the Blue Gravel Company's ditch, and part of which comes into the stream from springs and other sources below said dam; and plaintiff's right to the use of this water has never been questioned by his grantee, nor by any one else other than appellant. The claim of the latter was based upon the theory that plaintiff had parted with all his rights in the stream; that all the water that flowed below the point of diversion made by plaintiff's grantee was seepage water, which was unappropriated, and which appellant was therefore entitled to take. The court properly found against this claim.

The other points call for no particular notice. There was no material error in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the question asked him as to the damage done him. It had been clearly answered once, and could not be made stronger by repetition. Judgment and order affirmed.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

TEMPLE, J. I dissent. Plaintiff claims exclusive right by appropriation to 600 inches of water, or, when there is not that quantity, then to all the water in the creek, between two designated points on the creek. He avers that he now is, and for 20 years last past has been, the owner of, and entitled to the exclusive use of, said water. He charges that defendants forcibly took possession of one of his ditches June 15, 1893, and diverted, and continue to divert, 50 inches of water, to his damage in the sum of $300, and that they threaten to continue such diversion. Templey denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and set up a right in himself, by appropriation, to 20 inches of water, "being seepage water from a ditch taking all the waters of Ditch creek, in Cottonwood mining district, and extending from Ditch Creek to the 'Blue Gravel Mining Claim,' so called." Plaintiff testified at the trial that he owned five ditches by which water was taken from Ditch creek, and in 1878 he put upon record a notice describing his several claims to water. He also testified to the use of water from these various ditches down to the year 1892. In the notice, posted and recorded in 1878, he says: "Take notice that I own three ditches now taking waters of Ditch creek, a tributary of Cottonwood creek, and upon which this notice is posted,—one of them called the 'Crawford Ditch,' one the 'Haserick Ditch,' and the other constructed by me in 1870 to turn waters from this creek to the Steve Oysler ditch; and I claim the first right to the waters of this creek for said ditches to the full capacity, which ordinarily is all of the waters of this creek. I now claim surplus waters in high waters, after said ditches are supplied, and the waters below said ditches, to the extent of five hundred inches, under a four-inch pressure," etc. There was no evidence tending to prove any later appropriation by plaintiff. The court found "that plaintiff above named is now, and for twenty years last past has been, the owner, and entitled to the exclusive use, to the extent of five hundred inches, measured under a four-inch pressure, when there is that quantity, and, when there is not such quantity, then to all the water flowing in Ditch creek," etc. In 1888 the plaintiff made a conveyance to one McFarland, in which it is recited that in consideration of the sum of $6,000, and other considerations, the party of the first part "does by these presents bargain, sell, convey, and confirm unto said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns, forever, all of his right to the use of all of the waters of Ditch creek. Said waters to be taken out at a point on said creek about one mile above the head of the Wm. H. Smith's old ditch, and tapping said creek where the Blue Gravel Mining Company's ditch taps said Ditch creek, in the Cottonwood mining district, county of Siskiyou, state of California. To have and to hold, all and singular, the first right to the use of all of the waters of said creek, together with all rights appurtenant thereto," etc. The appellant contends that by this deed plaintiff parted with all his right to the waters of Ditch creek, and as there was no evidence tending to show that plaintiff had, by appropriation or otherwise, subsequently acquired any water rights in the stream, and, furthermore, as the court expressly based its finding in favor of plaintiff upon rights which had belonged to plaintiff for 20 years, the finding is wholly without support from the evidence. It seems that there was already a dam at the point indicated, and that the Blue Gravel miners were taking water for these mines. The deed was for the owners of that mine, or some of them; and it is argued that the deed was merely intended to settle and assure their right to take all the water at that point, and for their mine. A contrary intent is indicated in the deed, which provides that the grantee shall not sell water for one particular purpose. Whether this attempted limitation be valid or not, it shows that the use of the water was not to be confined to working the mine. That the deed conveys all the rights of the grantor is so plainly expressed that construction is neither called for nor proper. It is twice expressed without qualification: "All of his right to the use of all the waters of Ditch creek," and "the first right to the use of all the waters of said creek, with all rights appurtenant thereto." There being a clear grant of the water and water rights, a condition which would prevent the grantee from the full enjoyment of the estate granted would be void as repugnant; also, under section 1070 of the Civil Code. Wilcoxson v. Sprague, 51 Cal. 640; McLennan v. McDonnell, 78 Cal. 273, 20 Pac. 566; Dodge v. Walley, 22 Cal. 225. The case of Maker v. Lazell, 83 Me. 562, 22 Atl. 474, is a very instructive case on this subject. The cases are collated and reviewed, and the objection that the rule will sometimes defeat the intention plainly manifested is answered.

I think, however, that this language in the deed cannot be regarded as a limitation or as a condition. As to limitations and conditions, the language of a deed must be construed strictly against the grantor. It is otherwise as to a reservation. Civ. Code, § 1069. By a reservation the grantor reserves to himself some right or property which did not before exist, such as rents and easements. An exception withdraws from the operation of the deed some part of the subject-matter of the conveyance. However construed or understood, the statement that water is to be taken out at a certain point cannot be a reservation. And it is equally plain that it is not an exception. It is claimed that it must be construed as a grant only of such water as could be diverted at the point mentioned. Such conclusion is against the obvious and unambiguous language of the deed. All of plaintiffs' appropriation of water was from points below the Jillson's or Blue Gravel dam. He testified, and, indeed, the very reason of the contention is, that a great deal of water percolated into the stream below the dam. This water, so far as included in his appropriations, certainly passed by his deed. But he cannot sell the right to take water from the stream at a point above his appropriation, and still maintain, as against other appropriators, his water rights below. If he had not authorized the diversion, there might have been water enough for all. And, if the water diverted does not come out of his water right, how could he sell it? Again, Smith did not own the stream, or its bed or banks. It does not appear that he was a riparian proprietor on the stream. He had no power to fix the point of diversion, nor any apparent interest in the question. The grantee acquired title to the water from him, but could not also acquire a right to build a dam at any point. I think the finding in favor of the plaintiff's right to the water unsupported by the evidence.

The plaintiff, in his complaint, charged that the defendants forcibly and against his consent took possession of a ditch belonging to plaintiff, and through it diverted from Ditch creek 50 inches of water which belonged to the plaintiff. Appellant denied plaintiff's right to any water, and also his ownership to the ditch, and that he at any time diverted any water whatever from the creek, except what seeped through the dam and from the Jillson ditch, and averred that he claimed by appropriation 20 inches of water, all of which was seepage water from the Jillson ditch, but was not taken by him from Ditch creek. Jillson, as well as Templey and Williams, testified upon this point favorably to defendant. The court, however, found this issue, also, for the plaintiff. I can find no direct evidence in the record to the effect that appellant ever took any water from Ditch creek except as above stated.

Templey and his witnesses testified that he had dug a ditch below the Jillson ditch, and that all the water he took came by percolation from that ditch. Upon this it is contended that, upon the construction of the deed claimed by plaintiff, this was water which had been taken out of the stream at the point mentioned, and, therefore, water which he had sold. This would present the question whether an appropriator can prevent other parties from taking from the stream water which, left undisturbed, would percolate into the stream, and help to furnish the quantity to which he had acquired a right by appropriation. As this case now stands, it is not necessary to determine what the respective rights of the parties would be under such circumstances. It may possibly not be material upon a new trial, and, as it is an important question, which is involved in several other cases, I think it better that it should be passed for the present. I think the judgment and order should be reversed.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS—REASSESSMENT.

Street Improvement Act, § 9, authorizing a second assessment where a suit to foreclose a lien for street work has been defeated by some defect in the prior assessment, does not apply when such a suit is defeated by any defects other than in making the assessment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Marin county.

Application for mandamus by George T. Gray and others against George L. Richardson, as superintendent of streets. From an order denying the application and a motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Fisher Ames, for appellants. E. H. Bogen and E. B. Mahon, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiffs seek by this proceeding a writ of mandate compelling the defendant, as superintendent of streets in the city of San Rafael, to issue to them an assessment for certain street work done by them in that city. A contract for doing the work was awarded to the assignor of the plaintiffs, and, after the work had been completed to the satisfaction of the superintendent, an assessment therefor, with warrant and diagram attached, was made and issued to said assignor in February, 1894. After its issuance, the assessment and warrant were assigned to the plaintiffs, and they brought actions thereon to foreclose the lien of said assessment against certain parcels of the land that had been assessed. In these actions they were nonsuited, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendants therein. The present proceeding is instituted to obtain another assessment for the work, under the provisions of section 9 of the street improvement act. The superior court denied the application, and the plaintiffs have appealed therefrom.

Section 9 of the street improvement act provides: "Whenever it shall appear by any final judgment of any court in this state that any suit brought to foreclose the lien of any sum of money assessed to cover the expense of any street work done under the provisions of this act has been defeated by reason of any defect, error, informality, omission, irregularity or illegality in any assessment hereafter to be made and issued, or in the recording thereof, or in the return thereof made to or recorded by said superintendent of streets," the superintendent of streets may issue a second assessment therefor. In Gray v. Lucas, 115 Cal. 430, 47 Pac. 354, we had occasion to consider this provision of section 9, and we there said: "Under this provision of the statute, the right to a second assessment does not exist, unless it appear by the final judgment in a suit upon the prior assessment that the suit was defeated by reason of some infirmity in the 'assessment,' or in the recording thereof, or in some matter connected with the return of the warrant. If the suit is defeated by reason of a defect or infirmity in any other step taken in the proceedings, or by reason of a lack of evidence, or failure to prove any other fact essential to a recovery, the statute does not apply." In the present case the court finds "that it does not appear by said judgments, or any of them, or by any final judgment entered in any of said actions, that said suits, or any of them, brought to foreclose the lien of or for any sum of money assessed to cover the expenses of said street work, was or has been defeated by reason of any defect, error, informality, omission, irregularity, or illegality in any assessment made or issued, or in the recording thereof, or in the return thereof made or recorded by the superintendent of streets." No exception is taken to the correctness of this finding, or the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain it, and it follows that the superintendent was not authorized to issue a second assessment. The judgment and order are affirmed.

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—VACATION—APPEAL—DISCRETION.

The day after a case was set for trial on a later date according to the rules of court, defendant's attorney, who lived in another county, wrote to plaintiff's attorney, showing that he did not know that the case was set for trial, and the latter replied without giving any information on the subject. On the day the case was set for trial the former unsuccessfully tried to find the latter or to learn of his whereabouts, and a judgment was rendered against defendant in his absence, as his attorney discovered next day, when he promptly moved to vacate the judgment. Held, that it was not a plain abuse of discretion to deny the motion.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by Margaret F. Yancey against the National Benevolent Association. From an order refusing to vacate a judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. F. Getty, Haven & Haven, and F. E. Cook, for appellant. W. P. Thompson, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal from the order of the superior court refusing to vacate a judgment rendered against defendant. The grounds of the motion are that the judgment was given through the mistake and inadvertence and surprise of the defendant. The uncontradicted facts shown at the hearing were the following: The defendant is a foreign insurance company. The action was instituted by plaintiff against the defendant to recover upon one of its policies. It was commenced in the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant employed to represent it attorneys who were residents of the city and county of San Francisco. Thereafter plaintiff by her motion procured a change in the place of the trial of the action from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Fresno. The cause was at issue, and upon October 2d it was, under the rules of the court, set for trial upon October 27th following. The rule under which the cause was set has heretofore been considered by this court. It is as follows: "The trial calendar of either department will be called at such time as the judge of such department may appoint, and the cases thereon set for trial. The trial calendar shall consist of those cases in which an issue of fact has been joined before the day set for the calling of the same." Defendant's attorneys were at the time of the setting of the cause for trial in San Francisco, and had no actual notice of the fact. Upon October 3d defendant's attorneys by mail served upon plaintiff's attorney in Fresno notice of its motion for leave to amend its answer, and for the issuance of a commission to take testimony. Their motions were noticed for the 28th of October, the day following the date set for the trial of the action. At the same time they communicated with plaintiff's attorney by mail, writing to him that they had noticed their motions for the 28th of October, and concluding: "We should also be pleased at that time to agree with you upon a date for the trial of the case, provided the date can be set far enough off to allow us to have the depositions taken, and to arrange with Mr. Getty for his presence." To this plaintiff's attorney made reply upon October 10th, acknowledging the receipt of the letter, refusing his consent "at this time" to the filing of the amendments, or to the taking of the proposed deposition, and concluding: "As the case has been ready for trial several months, I must refuse to consent to continue the trial thereof until you can take or attempt to take any depositions." Upon the 27th of October, 1896, the day set for trial, one of defendant's attorneys was in the city of Fresno. He called at the office of plaintiff's attorney five times upon that day, and looked for him in other places, but was unable either to find him or to learn his whereabouts. The following day, upon going to attend the court at the hearing of his motions, he learned for the first time that the cause had been set for trial upon the day preceding, had been actually tried in his absence, and a judgment in favor of plaintiff rendered. His motion to vacate the judgment followed promptly, but was denied.

The sole question here presented is whether or not the court abused its discretion in refusing to vacate the judgment upon this showing. That the case is one of much hardship to the defendant there can be no doubt. There can be as little doubt but that, if plain tiff's attorney had held in any regard the amenities of the profession, he would not have permitted defendant's attorneys to remain in ignorance, when knowledge of that ignorance was so plainly brought home to him by their letter. But at the same time it cannot be said that there was any legal duty imposed upon plaintiff's attorney to notify defendant's attorneys of the fact that the case had been set for trial, and, this being so, he is in no way legally responsible for defendant's counsel's ignorance of the fact. Indeed, there was no legal duty cast upon anybody to notify defendant's attorneys of the fact. It was their duty to inform themselves of it, and it was their neglect that they did not do so. Eltzroth v. Ryan, 91 Cal. 584, 27 Pac. 932; Dusy v. Prudom, 95 Cal. 646, 30 Pac. 798. In the latter case the appeal was also from a decision of the superior court of Fresno county, and the case had been set under the identical rule above quoted. In the present instance the defendant's attorneys took no means to inform themselves whether or not the case had been set for trial, but assumed, either that it had not been set, or that it would not be tried until after the date fixed for the hearing of their motions. But neither of these assumptions affords such an excuse for the neglect that we can say that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to vacate the judgment. The case is one of admitted hardship, but where, as here, discretionary power is vested in the trial court, the exercise of that power may not be reversed, except for plain abuse. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

WITNESS — ACTIONS AGAINST ADMINISTRATORS—COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE —APPEAL—QUESTIONS OF FACT—REVIEW.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, making incompetent as witnesses (subdivision 3) parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, upon a claim against the estate of a decedent, as to any matter occurring before his death, does not disqualify a wife suing the administrator of her husband's estate to establish a conveyance of certain land from her husband to her and to quiet the title; since she does not seek to enforce a "claim," but merely to declare that the estate has no interest in the property.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 1, disqualifying as witnesses a husband or wife as to any communication made by one to the other during marriage, does not make a wife, suing her husband's administrator to establish a conveyance of land by her husband to her, incompetent to testify that he delivered the deed to her; that not being a "communication," within the statute.

3. Whether a wife's conduct after the time she claimed a deed was delivered to her by her husband to certain land raised the inference that it had not been delivered is a question of fact for the trial court, and is not reviewable.

4. A finding that a deed to the grantor's wife was not made to hinder creditors is one of fact, and not reviewable, the transaction having been made while Civ. Code, § 3442, provided that the question of fraudulent intent is one of fact, and that a transfer cannot be adjudged fraudulent solely because not made for a valuable consideration.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by Alice S. Poulson against James Stanley, administrator. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Sawyer and A. Morgenthal, for appellant. E. M. Gibson and Welles Whitmore, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff quieting her title to certain real estate. The plaintiff was the wife of Peter Wilhelm Poulson, who died April 23, 1894, and the defendant, Stanley, is the administrator of his estate. The plaintiff claims title to the land in question by virtue of a conveyance alleged to have been made to her by her husband. The instrument was never recorded, and she was unable to produce it at the trial, claiming that it had been abstracted from her desk and destroyed. Testimony was given that a conveyance to the plaintiff of the property in question had been signed and acknowledged by her husband, and that such a conveyance had been in her possession subsequent to the time it purported to have been made. For the purpose of proving its delivery to her, the plaintiff was asked whether she had ever received a deed of the property from her husband. The defendant objected to this question upon the ground that under section 1880, Code Civ. Proc., the plaintiff is incompetent to testify as to any fact occurring before the death of her husband, this being an action by her against his administrator upon a claim against his estate. The court overruled the objection, and the defendant excepted thereto.

The provision of section 1880 relied on by the appellant is as follows: "The following persons cannot be witnesses: * * * (3) Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person." Whether a person shall be competent as a witness upon the trial of a question of fact, either by virtue of the relation he bears to the opposite party, or his interest in the cause of action, and the degree of interest in the cause which will disqualify him as a witness, are questions of legislative policy, and the function of courts in reference thereto is to apply the rules prescribed by the legislature. Formerly a party to an action was not permitted to be a witness as to any fact in issue therein, and such was the law in this state under the procedure act first enacted. The strictness of this rule was gradually modified until the adoption of the Codes in 1872. The history of these changes prior to 1864, is given in Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 36. In 1870 (St. 1869-70, p. 662) the legislature repealed section 393 of the practice act, under which this decision was made, and thereafter a witness was not incompetent by reason of the relation which he bore to the cause of action, or to the adverse party, except in the case of certain confidential relations. In the Codes, as originally enacted, section 1880, Code Civ. Proc., preserved the same rule, but in 1874 this section was amended by adding thereto subdivision 3, including as persons who were incompetent as witnesses as follows: "Parties to an action or proceeding, or in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or an administrator, upon a claim or demand against the estate of the deceased;" and in 1880 this subdivision was still further amended by including the assignors of parties, and limiting the incompetency to matters of fact occurring before the death of the deceased person. Under section 1879, Code Civ. Proc., all persons are competent as witnesses except those enumerated in sections 1880 and 1881; and, before a person can be held incompetent or his testimony excluded, it must appear that he, or the matter upon which he is to be examined, is within the provisions of the exceptions. The exception in subdivision 3 of section 1880 requires, not only that the witness be a party to the action, and that the action be against the administrator of a decedent, but it must also appear that the action is upon a claim or demand against the estate of the decedent, and that the testimony sought from the witness is as to a matter of fact occurring before the death of the decedent. Unless all of the conditions exist, the witness cannot be held incompetent. In Booth v. Pendola, 88 Cal. 36, 23 Pac. 200, and 25 Pac. 1101, it was held that the exception did not apply in an action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien; that, as no personal judgment could be recovered in the action against the estate payable in due course of administration, it was not a "claim," within the meaning of subdivision 3 of the section. There is no difference in principle between an action to establish a lien upon property belonging to the estate and an action to declare that the estate has no interest in the property. In Myers v. Reinstein, 67 Cal. 89, 7 Pac. 192, it was held that this provision of the statute did not render the plaintiff incompetent in an action to establish a resulting trust in certain property held by the estate. The court, therefore, did not err in permitting the witness to give the testimony.

The provision of subdivision 1 of section 1881 is not applicable. The delivery of a deed is not a "communication," within the meaning of that section.

Whether the conduct and acts of the plaintiff after the time when she claimed to have received the deed were such as to authorize the inference that it had not been delivered to her was a question to be determined by the trial court upon the evidence before it, and is not open here for review. Neither can we review the finding of the court that the deed was not made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of the grantor. Such fraudulent intent is by the statute made a question of fact; and under section 3442, Civ. Code, as the section stood at the time of the transaction, the transfer could not be adjudged fraudulent solely on the ground that it was not made for a valuable consideration. See, also, Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 Pac. 303. The judgment and order are affirmed.

TOLAND v. TOLAND et al. (Sac. 449.)
 (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1898.)
WILLS — PERPETUITIES — ALIENATION — TRUSTS —
PLEADING—ERROR.

1. A will provided: "Should my death occur before the expiration of the leases of my landed estate, I desire [M.] to receive all rents. So soon as the leases of rented lands are canceled, I desire the land to be sold." Held not to suspend the power of alienation, in violation of Civ. Code, § 715, forbidding such suspension longer than during lives of persons in being; a prior alienation not being forbidden, and there being persons by whom an absolute interest in possession could be conveyed.

2. An express trust was not created by the provision, in contravention of Civ. Code, § 857, which requires the distribution of the proceeds of sale or lease of the trust estate to be provided for in the instrument; and this though, in a subsequent clause, the testatrix "commended all minor details" to M.

3. Where defendants in an action to quiet title claimed under a will which was held on appeal to be valid, it was error to strike as sham their answer denying plaintiff's interest in the land.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Solano county.

Action by William Gridley Toland against Hugo H. Toland and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

E. B. & G. H. Mastick, Wilson & Wilson, J. B. Mhoon, and Jno. M. Gregory, for appellants. Delmas & Shortridge, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brings this action against the defendants to quiet his title to the undivided half of certain land in the county of Solano; claiming the same by succession from Mary B. Toland, who died seised of said land November 14, 1895. In answer to the plaintiff's claim, the defendants allege that Mrs. Toland made a testamentary disposition of the land, and that they are the beneficiaries under her said will; setting forth in their answer a copy of the will. The plaintiff demurred to this answer, and, his demurrer having been sustained, judgment was entered in his favor, from which the defendants have appealed.

The will of Mrs. Toland is olographic, and is as follows: "Being in perfect health, and of sound mind, I, Mary Bertha Toland, make, publish, and declare this to be my last will and testament. Should my death occur before the expiration of the leases of my landed estate, I desire the firm of E. B. Mastick, Esq., and his partners, to receive all rents. So soon as the leases of rented lands are canceled, I desire the land to be sold, highlands and tules, with all improvements, to the best advantage." She then gives directions for the disposition of her personal property, and of the proceeds of said sale, in which are the following provisions: "The Toland vault, at Laurel Hill Cemetery, I wish to be provided with a sum for its care through future years. I will five hundred dollars to Grace Church, for pew number twenty, to be kept for my son and members of my family." No one is named by her as executor of the will, but at its close she says: "To the firm of E. B. Mastick I commend all minor details."

It is contended by the plaintiff in support of his demurrer that by the terms of the will a trust for the management and disposition of the land is created for a definite period of time, and that thereby the power of alienation is suspended, in contravention of the provisions of section 715, Civ. Code, which provides that the absolute power of alienation cannot be suspended by any limitation or condition whatever for a longer period than during the continuance of the lives of persons in being at the creation of the limitation or condition, with a single exception, which is not presented here. It will be observed that this section only forbids a suspension of the power of alienation, and that a provision for the exercise of that power at a future time is not within its provisions, unless such exercise is itself suspended beyond the period therein limited. The provision of section 749, that the delivery of the grant, when the limitation, condition, or future interest is created by grant, and the death of the decedent, when it is created by will, is to be deemed the time of the creation of the limitation, condition, or interest, shows that the suspension must be by virtue of some provision in the instrument by which the limitation, condition, or estate is created, and that the power is not suspended by a mere direction in the instrument to make a sale or other alienation of the land after a designated period of time, unless under the provision of the instrument an alienation prior to that date is also forbidden. The statute does not prohibit all limitations of estates by which the power of alienation is suspended, but permits a suspension of such power, with the restriction that the suspension shall not continue beyond the period of lives in being at the creation of the limitation, and in section 716 defines this restriction as follows: "Such power of alienation is suspended when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute interest in possession can be conveyed." Consequently, whenever there are persons in being by whom an absolute interest in possession in the land can be conveyed, the power of alienation is not suspended. In the will of Mrs. Toland there are no terms which forbid a sale or place the land beyond the power of those having interests therein to unite and convey an absolute interest in possession. The testatrix does not give any such direction, and the language used by her is susceptible of a different construction; and it is one of the cardinal rules of interpreting an instrument to give it such construction as will make it effective, rather than void. Civ. Code, §§ 1645, 3541. The words of a will are to be taken in their ordinary and grammatical sense, unless a clear intention to use them in another sense can be collected, and that other can be ascertained (section 1324); and, of two modes of interpreting a will, that is to be preferred which will prevent intestacy. Section 1326; Le Breton v. Cook, 107 Cal. 410, 40 Pac. 552. Her direction to sell the land "so soon as" the leases are canceled designates a point of time after which the beneficiaries might enforce a sale, but does not postpone the right to make the sale until the expiration of the terms created by those leases. It is equivalent to a direction to sell the land "whenever" the leases are "canceled." The word "canceled" is to be taken in its ordinary sense, and the use by her of that word instead of "expired" or "determined" justifies an inference that she had in her mind the possibility that the tenants might surrender the leases prior to the expiration of the term for which they were given. There was, therefore, no time after the death of the testatrix that an absolute interest in possession could not have been conveyed. The tenants could at any time, by agreement with the executor, cancel their leases, or unite with him in a conveyance, and give to the grantee the fee and possession of the land.

Neither can the plaintiff's contention that the will creates an express trust in contravention of section 857, Civ. Code, be maintained. It does not in terms create a trust for any purpose; nor does it give any estate in the land to be held in trust by any person until a sale should be made, or name any person who is to make such sale. That the testatrix had great confidence and trust in the firm of Mr. Mastick is evident from the terms of the will, but by "commending all minor details" to him she did not make him a trustee, or create an express trust in relation to the land; nor does her declaration that he should "receive" all rents have any greater effect than to make him a trustee of these rents. A trust in personal property may be created for any purpose for which a contract may lawfully be made (Id. § 2220), and the creation of a trust does not of itself suspend the power of alienation, unless a trust term in the property is created, within which a sale or other alienation by the trustee would be in contravention of the trust. The will does not purport to create an express trust in the land for the purpose of enabling him to receive these rents, but merely directs that he shall receive them. There is no direction to pay or apply to the use of any person the rents which he shall receive, or to accumulate them for any purpose. Whether this provision be construed as a legacy to him of these rents, or as a direction that he shall merely "receive" and account for them to the estate of the testatrix, is immaterial. If he be regarded as a trustee of the rents thus to be received by him, it cannot affect the validity of the will.

The validity of the bequests for the Toland vault and for the pew in Grace church is not involved in this litigation. Their validity or invalidity does not affect the will, if it is otherwise valid.

In addition to the above answer, the defendants, by a separate answer, denied that the plaintiff had any interest in the land, and upon motion of the plaintiff this answer was struck out on the ground that it was sham. Under the foregoing considerations of the character of the will, the court erred in this ruling. The judgment is reversed.

GRANGERS' BANK OF CALIFORNIA et al.
v. SHUEY et al. (S. F. 910.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1898.)

BANKS—OVERDRAFTS—NOTES—WAIVER OF MORTGAGE LIEN.

1. A bank took a mortgage as security for an overdraft, and later a note for the amount due on the draft, as a matter of bookkeeping, but with the agreement that it was not a payment of the account. The mortgage recited that it was to stand as security for whatever indebtedness to the bank might result from the account at any particular period. Held to justify a finding that the note was not given in final payment, and that the lien still subsisted.

2. Where evidence is conflicting on a vital question of fact, the appellate court cannot pass on the question of preponderance of the evidence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county.

Action by the Grangers' Bank of California and others against J. A. Shuey and others. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant the Union Savings Bank appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Moore and Thos. D. Corneal, for appellant. E. S. Pillsbury and F. D. Madison, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure. Defendants J. A. Shuey and his wife, Lelia, on January 20, 1893, executed to plaintiff bank (hereinafter referred to as respondent) a deed of trust, intended as a mortgage, duly recorded January 25, 1893, to secure the overdraft of defendant J. A. Shuey. At that time this overdraft amounted to $6,387.30. On February 27, 1895, Shuey executed to defendant bank (hereinafter referred to as appellant) a mortgage on the premises included in the deed of trust given respondent, which was duly recorded March 29, 1895, actual notice of which came to respondent April 19, 1895. On June 10, 1895, this action was brought to foreclose respondent's mortgage, the amount secured thereby then being $6,136.19. Appellant, by its cross complaint, put in issue the amount due respondent on the overdraft, and claimed that the lien of the respondent had been fully paid and satisfied. One of the items of respondent's account was a promissory note for $5,500, given to respondent August 5, 1893, on which date its overdraft account was credited by this amount. The running account in respondent's ledger "showed the following credit: '1893, August 5th, by note secured by deed of trust, $5,500,' and the following debit item: '1895, May 2d, note and int. of August 5, 1893, $5,883.80.'" The contention of appellant now is that this $5,500 note (amounting May 2, 1895, to $5,883.80) was given in final payment, and to that extent respondent's lien was discharged; and the only question presented is whether such was the effect of the note.

It appears in evidence that respondent took this note in compliance with certain previous resolves of the Clearing House of San Francisco to abandon and discontinue the practice of allowing current overdraft accounts. Respondent was a member of the clearing house, and agreed with its other members to carry out the new policy. This agreement, with some other facts and circumstances, is relied upon by appellant as showing that the note was taken in payment of the overdraft, thus discharging respondent's lien, and that the court erred in finding that the amount was secured by respondent's mortgage. Counsel on both sides agree to the well-settled proposition of law that the taking of a note for a pre-existing debt is not payment unless it be expressly agreed that it shall be so considered. Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 922; Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 380, 44 Pac. 727. The real question in the case, therefore, resolves itself into one of fact.

Mr. Montpellier, president of the respondent bank, testified that "at the time the note was taken it was expressly understood and agreed that it should not be considered as payment, in whole or in part, of the current account; that the note was a matter of accommodation for the books of the bank, and was secured by deed of trust." He was asked on cross-examination if he stated these things to Mr. Shuey in words, and he answered: "Yes, sir. Q. Did you state all those things to Shuey? A. Yes, sir, certainly; distinctly and clearly." It also appeared from the evidence that when Shuey gave the mortgage to appellant he informed the president of the appellant bank, and he also told its vice-president and cashier, that the respondent had a deed of trust to secure this note. Respondent's deed of trust contained the provision that "this conveyance shall stand as security for whatever indebtedness to the bank may be the result of said account at any particular period."

There was evidence to justify the court in finding that the note was not given in final payment, and in treating the overdraft account as unchanged. Having so concluded, the court very properly held that the lien still subsisted and was prior to appellant's lien. The principle is correctly stated in Jones, Mortg., at page 924: "No change in the form of indebtedness or in the mode of payment will discharge the lien. A mortgage secures the debt, and not the note or bond or other evidence of it. Nothing short of the actual payment of the debt, or an express release, will operate to discharge the mortgage. The mortgage remains a lien until the debt it was given to secure is satisfied, and is not affected by a change of the note or by giving a different instrument as evidence of the debt." The most that can be claimed by appellant is that the evidence is conflicting upon the vital question of fact here involved. In such case we are not at liberty to pass upon the question of preponderance of the evidence. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

TUOHY v. WOODS et al. (Sac. 361.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1898.)

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY — EXTENSION TO PRINCIPAL'S ASSIGNEE—ACTIONS—PLEADING—ISSUES—EVIDENCE—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. An extension of time granted by a mortgagee to the mortgagor's grantee, is an alteration of the contract which will discharge a surety thereon.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 2819, exempting a guarantor from liability where the creditor alters or impairs his rights or remedies against the debtor, without the surety's consent, a surety's allegation that the contract was changed "without his consent" is merely formal, and need not be proved, in the absence of proof that he consented.

3. An erroneous finding that a surety guaranteed payment of interest on a mortgage note only is immaterial where judgment was rendered discharging the surety, because of an extension granted to the debtor without his consent.

4. Where a surety was discharged by an extension of time granted to the debtor without his consent, the extent of his injury by such extension is immaterial.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by John Tuohy against J. N. Woods and another. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Wallace and Kile & Plummer, for appellant. Dudley & Buck and Woods & Levinsky, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The action was brought upon a promissory note, in the usual form, for $5,000 and interest, dated September 26, 1890, payable one year after date to plaintiff or order, and signed by defendants. In their answer, defendants, after some denials and averments not necessary to be here considered, allege that the note sued on was given solely as security for the payment of the principal and interest of a certain other note for $82,500 and interest, to be made by one John Herd, Jr., to the plaintiff, and which note was so made by Herd to plaintiff, dated October 21, 1890, and payable on or before October 1, 1894, which note was secured by mortgage given by Herd to plaintiff upon certain lands; and that the plaintiff afterwards extended the time for the payment of said note for a period of more than two years, and that by such extension defendants were released and exonerated from the payment of the note here sued on,—they, by signing said note, becoming merely sureties for the payment of said note of $82,500. The court found that the note sued on was signed by defendants merely as sureties, that the plaintiff did extend the time for the payment of the principal note and mortgage, and that thereby the defendants were exonerated, and their obligation as such sureties satisfied and extinguished.

The evidence was sufficient to justify the said findings of the court. At the time the note sued on was signed by defendants there was also a written agreement made by the plaintiff and the defendants to the effect that the note should be placed in escrow with the Bank of Visalia for so long as the annual interest on the $82,500 note should be paid, and that, if the said interest should not be paid, "or if at the maturity of said last-named note full payment of principal and interest due thereon be not paid, then said Bank of Visalia shall in either event deliver said first-named note to John Tuohy, or order, or otherwise to be returned to said Woods Bros." This written agreement, together with other testimony, warranted the court in finding that defendants, by signing said note, became merely sureties as aforesaid. There was also sufficient evidence to warrant the finding that plaintiff extended the payment of said note. Herd conveyed the mortgaged premises to one Linder, who expressly assumed payment of the note and mortgage which Herd had given to plaintiff; and afterwards the plaintiff, knowing that fact, entered into a written agreement with Linder not to foreclose the mortgage before the 6th day of September, 1898, if Linder would make him certain yearly payments, and would execute to him a crop mortgage on all the crops to be annually planted and raised on the land. It does not appear that any action has yet been brought upon the said note and mortgage for $82,500. Appellant contends that this extension cannot be taken advantage of by respondents, because it was not made directly with Herd, the maker of the note and mortgage. But Linder was not a mere stranger to the principal obligation. By becoming the grantee of the mortgaged premises and assuming the mortgage indebtedness he became a principal and controlling party to the obligation upon which the respondents had become sureties. He became the principal debtor, and Herd, the grantor, the surety. Bank v. Madden, 109 Cal. 313, 41 Pac. 1092; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. (2d Ed.) p. 1845. And as to the plaintiff, Herd, and Linder, "the doctrines concerning suretyship must control the dealings between these three parties." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur., supra.

Appellant contends that, as respondents aver in their answer that the extension was made without their consent, and, as there was no evidence introduced touching their consent, therefore they cannot take advantage of the extension, because the burden was on them to show that it was made without their consent. Appellant contends that every "necessary" averment in the pleadings must be proven. This is not universally true, because there are some necessary formal averments which need not be proven; but the averment in the answer that the extension was made without respondents' consent was an entirely unnecessary averment. When a surety has shown that the contract as to which he became surety has been changed, he has then shown that there has been an attempt to make him liable on a new and different contract; and the burden is then upon the other party to show that the surety has consented to the new contract. This principle is aptly stated in Stowell v. Goodenow, 31 Me. 540. In that case the jury was instructed: "That if the defendant [the surety] had proved that the plaintiff [the creditor] had made such an agreement to wait further time for a good consideration with Goodenow [the debtor], then the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show that the surety had knowledge of or consented to such agreement; and, if he failed to do so, the surety would be discharged;" and the appellate court held that the instruction was correct. The court said: "The wrong and injury to the surety consists in the change of the contract and of the relations between the creditor and the principal debtor. It is this which discharges the surety. And, when proof of it has been made, the creditor can be relieved from the effect of it upon his rights only by showing that the surety has assented or waived all objection to it. * * * The proof should come from the party who would be relieved from the consequences of his own wrongful acts." See, also, Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat. 701; Calvo v. Davies, 73 N. Y. 211; Riggins v. Brown, 12 Ga. 276; Taylor v. Johnson, 17 Ga. 531; Edwards v. Coleman, 6 T. B. Mon. 567; Baylies, Sur. p. 290; Gross v. Parrott, 16 Cal. 143. Section 2819 of the Civil Code does not state a rule of evidence.

The finding of the court that the respondents signed the note sued on as sureties "for the payment during the said term of five years of the interest on said note of $82,500," if construed as meaning that they were sureties for the interest only, and not for the principal, is inconsistent with the averment in the answer that the note sued on was intended to be a security for the interest and principal of the note of $82,500; but that finding, and the other finding that said interest had been fully paid, are immaterial, and in no way affect the correctness of the judgment. To what extent the respondents were injured by the extension is not a legitimate subject of inquiry in this action. Driscoll v. Winters (Cal.) 54 Pac. 387. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TURNER. (Cr. 493.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1898.)

PERJURY—INDICTMENT.

1. An indictment for perjury which fails to state that the false swearing was willful is insufficient, under Pen. Code, § 118, defining perjury as the willful stating as true of any material matter which the person stating it knows to be false, after having taken an oath to depose truly.

2. In an indictment for perjury, a recital, after the charging part, that thereby accused willfully swore falsely, and did commit willful perjury, is a mere conclusion of law, and does not cure an omission to charge in the charging part of the indictment that the perjury was willful.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

J. F. Turner was convicted of perjury, and from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant, convicted of perjury, appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying him a new trial. Of the propositions which he advances in support of his appeal, but one need be considered, since it is determinative of the question.

The indictment is fatally defective. It charged that the defendant did "falsely, feloniously, contrary to his said oath, and knowing the same to be false, swear, take oath, say, and give in evidence, among other things, in substance as follows." By our Penal Code, "every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify, declare, depose or certify truly before any competent tribunal, officer or person, in any of the cases in which such an oath may by law be administered, willfully and contrary to such oath, states as true any material matter which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury." Pen. Code, § 118. This indictment fails to charge that the false swearing was willful. At common law, where willfulness was an essential element of the crime, and in all the states of this country which by statute have adopted a definition of the crime making willfulness an element thereof, it is held uniformly and without exception that the defendant must be charged with willful false swearing, and the willfulness of the act must be proved. "It seemeth that no one ought to be found guilty of this offense without clear proof that the false oath alleged against him was taken with some degree of deliberation." 1 Hawk. P. C. (Curw. Ed.) p. 429, § 2. "It is a general rule that, unless the statute be recited, neither the words 'contra formam statuti,' nor any periphrasis, intendment, or conclusion, will make good an indictment which does not bring the offense within all the material words of the statute; as if * * * an indictment of perjury on 5 Eliz. c. 9, omit the words 'voluntarie et corrupte.'" 5 Bac. Abr. p. 90. In Rex v. Stephens, 5 Barn. & C. 246, it was charged against the defendant that he "then and there falsely and maliciously gave false testimony against J. H., by falsely deposing," etc. It was held in arrest of judgment that the indictment was bad for not alleging that the defendant willfully and corruptly swore falsely. By section 5392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, one is guilty of perjury "who willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true." In U. S. v. Edwards, 43 Fed. 67, it is said upon this statute, "Perjury cannot be committed, unless the person taking the oath not only swears to what is false, or what he does not believe to be true, but does so willfully." It was further held that to charge that the statement was falsely and corruptly made was not sufficient in an indictment. As to the rule in state courts under statutes similar to our own, there may be cited State v. Perry, 42 Tex. 238; Com. v. Taylor, 96 Ky. 394, 29 S. W. 138; State v. Day, 100 Mo. 242, 12 S. W. 365; State v. Carland, 14 N. C. 114; Green v. State, 41 Ala. 418; State v. Morse, 1 G. Greene, 503; State v. Delue, 1 Chand. 166. And, in further evidence of the universal recognition of the rule, reference may be had to the following learned writers: 2 Chit. Cr. Law, 315; 3 Russ. Crimes, 36; Whart. Cr. Law, 1245; 2 Bish. New Cr. Law, §§ 1045, 1046.

The indictment concluded in the following language: "Whereby he, the said J. F. Turner, did then and there, as aforesaid, willfully, corruptly, contrary to his oath, and knowing his testimony to be false, swear falsely and feloniously, commit willful perjury." This language is but a mere conclusion of law, and does not avail to cure the defect in the charging part of the indictment. State v. Carland, 14 N. C. 114; State v. Day, 100 Mo. 242, 12 S. W. 365; Com. v. Taylor, 96 Ky. 394, 29 S. W. 138; 2 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 903. The judgment and order are, therefore, reversed, and the cause remanded.

PEOPLE v. NATIONAL BANK OF D. O. MILLS & CO. (Sac. 467.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

NATIONAL BANKS—TAXATION—EXEMPTION—ASSESSMENT—REVIEW BY BOARD OF EQUALIZATION—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Where an assessment is proper, a refusal of the board of equalization to consider objections that it was arbitrarily made, and that the board had no power to review it, is harmless.

2. Pol. Code, § 3632, authorizing an assessor to issue a subpoena to a taxpayer, and hold an examination, if dissatisfied with the verified list furnished by the taxpayer, does not prevent him from adding to such list, without such subpoena and examination, property of the taxpayer not included in the list.

3. Under Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, providing that the legislature of each state may direct the manner and place of taxing all shares of national banking associations, and that nothing in the act shall exempt the real property of the association from state taxes, the personal assets of a national bank are exempt from taxation by the states.

4. The stock of a bank represents the value of all its assets.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by the people against the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People. Lloyd & Wood, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The action was brought to recover taxes assessed to respondent, a national banking association organized under the acts of congress. On the first Monday in March, 1895, it had real property in Sacramento, and also personal property, consisting of safes and fixtures, and money on hand and money on special deposit. The blank form for a statement, with demand for a list, was served on it by the assessor; and it was returned, with a description of certain real estate, and safes and fixtures, valued at $5,000. The assessor was dissatisfied with this, and returned it to the president of the bank, insisting that the personal assets of the bank were liable to taxation. After considerable conversation and discussion, during which the amount of the deposits as they were afterwards assessed was stated by the president and cashier, the list was changed by erasing the item as to the safes and fixtures, and in that condition was verified and returned to the assessor by the cashier. The assessor then proceeded, without issuing any subpoena to any officer or employé of the bank, or to any other person, to assess to and against the defendant the safes and fixtures, valued at $5,000, and deposits to the amount of $800,000. In due time the defendant tendered the amount of the tax upon the real estate, but it declines to pay the tax upon the personal property; claiming that it is exempt under the act of congress creating national banks, as an instrumentality of the federal government. All the findings, save one, were agreed upon by the parties. It is not found, and does not appear, that the assessor considered that defendant had, after demand, refused to make a statement as to its property, or that he made an entry to that effect on the assessment book, as authorized by section 3633 of the Political Code; but it does appear that the board of equalization refused to consider the objections made by the bank to the assessment on the ground that the "assessment had been arbitrarily made, and that the board of equalization had no power to review the same." It is admitted that the bank did have the property which was assessed to it, and also that, if it is not exempt from taxation, it ought to have been given in by the bank and assessed to it. The refusal of the board to consider defendant's objections has not injured it, if the assessment was proper and would have been maintained. Judgment was for the defendant, and the people appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

It is contended that the assessment was illegal, for two reasons:

1. After the taxpayer has returned to the assessor his verified list, although the assessor knows of other property belonging to the taxpayer; although, in fact, the taxpayer has had his attention called to the matter, and admits the possession and ownership of other property, as was the fact in this case,—still the assessor cannot include such property in the assessment without first issuing a subpoena and holding an examination, as he is authorized to do under section 3632 of the Political Code. The proposition is that an addition to the list furnished by the taxpayer, without the examination, renders the assessment void,—at least, as to the property thus added to the list. Unless the statute has given such effect to the list, this position cannot be maintained. The general duty of the assessor is to list all taxable property in his county or district. The law compelling the taxpayer to furnish the list is undoubtedly designed to assist the assessor in the performance of his duties. The assessment is not judicial, and must necessarily be summary. All property should be assessed, or the burden of taxation is not imposed alike upon all. The assessor must not knowingly permit any to escape. Must he, then, when he not only is fully informed as to the property, but the taxpayer admits and states to him all the facts in regard to it, but simply contends that it is by law exempt, resort to this—in that case—useless proceeding before he can lawfully assess such property? In many states the law does give the verified list some effect, but I think it has generally been held that, unless the statute provides otherwise, it does not in any way limit the powers of the assessor. Welty, Assessm. § 4; Cooley, Tax'n, 357; 1 Desty, Tax'n, p. 545. In Massachusetts it is made conclusive upon the assessor, although it has been held there that the commissioners who revise and equalize may add other property. In New York the taxpayer may make an affidavit which may have the effect to reduce his assessment, and the different states, as was to have been expected, have various schemes upon the subject. In Nevada a similar law was construed, and it was held that the statement was merely in aid of the assessor, and had no binding effect upon him. State v. Kruttschnitt, 4 Nev. 178. See, also, Railway Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ill. 1; Felsenthal v. Johnson, 104 Ill. 21; Morris v. Jones, 150 Ill. 542, 37 N. E. 928; Thompson v. Tinkcom, 15 Minn. 295 (Gil. 226). The last-named case is particularly interesting upon this point. The statute there considered was quite similar to ours, and it was held that the assessor was not only at liberty to add omitted property of which he had knowledge, but was bound by his oath so to do; and it was said that, when the statute "does not directly or by implication make the oath of the party conclusive, it is merely a step in the proceedings to enable the assessor to make a complete return of all the property in his district." I believe this to be a correct statement of the general current of decisions upon the subject.

The question, then, is, is there anything in our statute which will preclude the assessor from listing any property to the taxpayer, except such as he returns in his verified list, or shall admit on examination under oath after service of a subpoena upon him? The subpoena cannot be issued until after he has made his statement, and the statute does not expressly authorize the assessor to add to the list after the issuance of the subpoena, and the examination of the taxpayer under oath, even if further property should be discovered upon such examination. Under the statute, and upon the stricti juris theory of construction, so much insisted upon by respondent, the assessor has no more power to add to the list after the issuance of the subpoena and after the examination than he had before, and although the existence of other taxable property may have been admitted by the taxpayer. It must be observed, also, that this construction makes the taxpayer the judge of what property is exempt from taxation, quoad the assessor. Counsel for respondent say it must be intended that upon the discovery of other property upon such examination the assessor should list it. To this I agree, but I know of no reason why property so discovered should be listed, and property discovered through the unsworn admissions of the taxpayer should not be. The provision as to the examination is but an aid to the assessor to enable him to perform the duty enjoined upon him, and which, upon making his return, he is compelled to state under oath that he has done. Pol. Code, § 3652. In respect to this, reliance is placed upon Weyse v. Crawford, 85 Cal. 196, 24 Pac. 735, which, it is contended, holds that the assessor cannot add to a list returned by a taxpayer, unless he has been so subpoenaed and examined. I do not so understand that opinion. It holds that the assessor cannot make an assessment which shall not be revisable by the board of equalization, unless the taxpayer has refused to make out his list under oath, or has refused to comply with some other requirement of the law. Properly understood, I have no quarrel with that decision. Unless there has been some dereliction on the part of the taxpayer, unless he has failed to render the assistance to the assessor which the law requires him to render, he cannot be subjected to the penalty of a nonrevisable assessment. This, I think, is all that was decided upon this matter in Weyse v. Crawford. It denominates such an assessment "an arbitrary assessment." The term is not found in the statute. As used in the opinion, it evidently has reference only to an assessment which cannot be revised by the board of equalization. This is not a ruling that the assessor cannot assess property not found in the verified lists made by a property owner.

2. As a second reason for claiming that the assessment is illegal, it is contended that the personal assets of the bank are exempt from taxation by the terms of the national banking act. It is provided in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States that nothing in that act shall prevent all shares in any association from being included in the individual assessment of the owner, in assessments made for the purpose of state taxation, "but the legislature of each state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the state, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state," etc. It was also provided that shares owned by nonresidents should be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not otherwise. The original act required a list of shareholders to be kept open at the bank during business hours for the inspection of state officers, and no other visitatorial power was allowed. The attorney general does not deny that a national bank is a fiscal agent of the United States, created by it as a means of exercising its powers. Nor does he apparently question the power of congress to limit or deny the right of the state to tax its property; but he contends that, although the state cannot tax an agency of the United States, it may tax the property of its agents,—at least, where there is no express inhibition by congress,—and that taxation of the personal property of a bank, as other like property in the state is taxed, is not prohibited, either expressly or impliedly, by the act of congress. Upon all these questions the decisions of the supreme court of the United States are final, and accordingly counsel have most elaborately considered numerous cases decided by that tribunal. I think counsel really disagree, however, only on one point, viz. whether taxation of such property is prohibited by the act of congress. Appellant states his contention as follows: "An important question raised here is whether the inherent right rests in a state to tax the property of a federal corporation, unless prohibited by congress, or whether its right to tax the property of such corporation is derived from the federal government?" The respondent submits two propositions: (1) Congress has the power; and (2) has limited the power of the state to tax the property of national banks, and, of course, that it has denied to the states the right to tax any property of national banks, except their real estate, although permitting the taxation of the shares to the shareholders. Since, therefore, respondent bases its claim to exemption upon the proposition that congress has prohibited the tax, it is only important as a matter of argument to determine whether the state may tax such property, unless forbidden by congress, or whether it derives its power to tax from the permission given by congress. It is an important consideration in regard to this question that congress has expressly provided for the taxation of the shares of the bank to the shareholders, and has directed the mode in which this shall be done. It has been repeatedly declared by the supreme court of the United States that by this provision congress has not deprived the states of a resource from which it could properly derive a revenue. The shares of stock may be taxed, and it is hornbook law that the stock represents the value of all the assets of the bank. It has been so expressly adjudicated in this state. People v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594; Waterworks v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69; City of San Francisco v. Fry, 63 Cal. 470. It is assumed in Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 573; also in People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539, where it is asserted that the limitation was intended only "to protect the bank from anything beyond their general share of the public burdens." In many other cases the proposition is taken for granted, and it is, I think, quite obvious. Under our decisions, we cannot deny that when the capital stock is assessed the assets of the corporation are subjected to the tax. In the case of national banks the value of the shares was in part made up of United States bonds, in which a portion of the capital must be invested. The bonds are not subject to state taxation, yet no deduction is required from the assessment for the investment in the bonds. So the real estate may be assessed, as well as the stock, but the value of the shares is made up in part by the real estate. The trouble is that we do not tax to the individual shareholders the stock; but, on the other hand, we assess to the corporation all its assets, which, we have held, gives the value to the stock. Under our methods of classification, made for the purpose of equalizing the burdens of taxation, it has been held that we cannot assess the shares of stock in a national bank as other money capital is assessed. But, conceding that congress could direct the extent and mode of taxing the property of the bank, if the mode provided would, if pursued, subject the property of the bank to taxation to the same extent that other like property is taxed, the conclusion is irresistible that it was intended that the tax expressly permitted should be the only tax to which the property is to be subjected. But it seems to me that the precise question was determined in Rosenblatt v. Johnston, 104 U. S. 462. A state attempted to tax the personal assets of an insolvent national bank. It was quite naturally thought that it had then ceased to be a governmental instrumentality. In a short opinion by the chief justice it was held that, as the assets still belonged to the corporation, they were exempt, under section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. In Covington City Nat. Bank v. City of Covington, 21 Fed. 489, Mr. Justice Matthews refers to the case. After asserting the power of congress in the premises, he says: "It has in fact withdrawn them and their property from the domain of state taxation, except so far as it has expressly consented that they may be taxed. That consent, so far as it has been given, is contained in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes. It does not permit taxation of any property belonging to the bank, except only its real estate, as clearly appears from Rosenblatt v. Johnston, 104 U. S. 462." General and special deposits are assessable to the depositors. Yuba Co. v. Adams, 7 Cal. 35. The judgment and order are affirmed.

O'CONNOR v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO.
(L. A. 278.)

APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS—RAILROADS—RIGHT OF WAY IN STREETS—DAMAGES—INJUNCTION.

1. A finding that appellee's property was damaged by construction of a railroad in the street will be sustained, in the absence of the evidence, where, under any state of facts, the acts of appellant, as shown by the statement of facts, would result in damage.

2. A statement of facts showing the construction of a steam railroad so that an abutting owner has the use of only 31 feet of street between his property and the track, in the absence of which he would have the use of 72 feet, sustains a finding that such owner was damaged.

3. Injunction will lie to restrain the construction of a track of a steam railroad in a street to the damage of an abutter to whom no compensation has been offered.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Injunction by William O'Connor against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bicknell & Trask, for appellant. Towner & Fleming and A. W. Hutton, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action instituted by O'Connor in the superior court of Los Angeles county to restrain the defendant from constructing its railroad on White avenue, a public street of the city of Pomona. The plaintiff, O'Connor, is the owner of real property abutting on White avenue, and is the owner of the fee to the center line of the street. It is alleged that the threatened use and occupation of the street by the defendant for the purpose of a steam railroad will irreparably damage plaintiff, and it is further alleged that defendant has not tendered or made any compensation therefor. The defendant, by answer, denies the allegations of the complaint as to the damage, and as an affirmative defense alleges that it has entered upon the street under a franchise granted by the municipality of Pomona, etc. This case is here upon appeal from the judgment without the evidence, and the only question presented is, does the judgment find support in the findings of fact? The material findings of fact to be considered are: (1) "That heretofore, to wit, on or about the 11th day of November, 1895, the trustees of the said city of Pomona regularly passed and adopted the Ordinance No. 153, a copy of which ordinance is annexed to the defendant's answer herein. That the said ordinance has been duly and regularly assigned by J. A. Muir to the defendant. That, claiming to act under and in pursuance of said ordinance, and under the terms thereof, the defendant entered upon said White avenue as aforesaid for the purpose of constructing its railroad, and was proceeding to lay a single-track railroad along the center line of said avenue at the time of the filing of the complaint in this action. That said White avenue is one hundred feet wide. That the center line of said track, as being constructed, is upon the center line of said avenue. That the construction of said railroad was being carried on in the usual and ordinary manner. That the ties and tracks, when laid and completed, would occupy four feet on each side of said center line, but in the laying of said track the said defendant was excavating, and would have continued to excavate, a trench in and along a large portion of the said street in front of plaintiff's property to a depth of from eighteen inches to two feet, and of a width of about ten feet. Fourteen feet on each side of said White avenue was and is devoted to and used for the purpose of a sidewalk, leaving about thirty-one feet on each side of the center line of said railroad track for the use of the public as a roadway; the rails of said railroad when constructed would be flush with the established grade of said street." (2) "The occupation and use of said street as threatened by the defendant in the manner mentioned will irreparably injure and damage plaintiff, and will greatly endanger and obstruct the use of plaintiff's premises, and greatly lessen its value for a residence, or for any purpose, and, if not restrained, the defendant will so occupy and use the said street as hereinbefore found, and will, to the extent as heretofore found, prevent the necessary use of a portion of said street in front of plaintiff's premises."

As matter of law, this court cannot say that the facts set out in finding 1, under the conditions there pictured, may not have caused damage to defendant's property, as declared by finding 2. The court has declared that damage did result from the acts done under the conditions described in finding 1, and without the evidence before us it is impossible for this court to gainsay that declaration. The test would seem to be that if, under any conceivable state of facts, these acts might result in damage to plaintiff's property, then, in the absence of the evidence, such a state of facts must be assumed to have been shown at the trial of the case. By finding 1 plaintiff has the use of 31 feet of the street between the railroad track and his lot. Less the sidewalk, and in the absence of the railroad track, he would have the use of 72 feet. As matter of law, the court cannot say that 31 feet of this street will answer all the legitimate uses to which it might be put by plaintiff, an abutting owner, any more than it can say that 10 feet would be amply sufficient for all his legitimate uses. In the face of the findings of fact quoted, it becomes unnecessary to review the soundness of the doctrine laid down in the case of Montgomery v. Railway Co., 104 Cal. 189, 37 Pac. 786. Again, we are clear that the facts here disclosed clearly give plaintiff the right of invoking the remedy of injunction. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

MYERS et al. v. SIERRA VAL. STOCK & AGRICULTURAL ASS'N et al.

(Sac. 400.)

CORPORATIONS—NOTES—PAYMENT BY SURETIES—ACTION AGAINST STOCKHOLDERS—CONTRIBUTION—SUBROGATION—EQUITY—PLEADING—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Where several stockholders paid a company note, on which they were liable as sureties, each contributing the same amount, any liability of one of them to the others for a greater proportion, by reason of his owning more stock, is one arising entirely out of his relation as stockholder, and not as co-surety, and, therefore, must be determined in accordance with Civ. Code, § 322, which provides a legal remedy against stockholders.

2. Where the holder of a corporate note holds no security, and the action thereon against the stockholders is not barred, it is not necessary for stockholders who pay the note as sureties to bring an action in equity to enforce contribution from the other stockholders; but their remedy must be by an action at law, under Civ. Code, § 322, which gives a joint and several action against stockholders for their proportionate share of the corporate debt.

3. Where Civ. Code, § 322, gives a joint and several action at law against stockholders for their proportionate share of the corporate debt, but provides that the judgment must be several, a suit to enforce contribution by stockholders on a company's note cannot be maintained in equity under the guise of avoiding a multiplicity of suits.

4. Where subrogation in equity is sought, the burden is on the person claiming it to show that it is necessary for his protection.

5. Where sureties on a company's note are obliged to pay it, they have an action at law directly against the stockholders, and, therefore, cannot maintain a suit in equity to enforce subrogation to the rights of the payee of the note.

6. Where Code Civ. Proc. § 462, gives plaintiff in an action on a note the right to controvert by evidence any new matter set up in the answer, except as to the genuineness and due execution of the note, it is harmless error to allow plaintiff to file an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of a corporate note set up in the answer, after the time allowed by statute, where the note on its face does not purport to have been made by the corporation, as an admission of its due execution would not be an admission that it was the company's note.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county.

Action by J. D. Myers and others against the Sierra Valley Stock & Agricultural Association and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants M. Pritchard and the Sierra Valley Literary Society appeal. Reversed as to appellants, and affirmed as to other defendants.

Frank R. Wehe, for appellants. F. D. Soward, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. The complaint sets forth the following facts: Defendant corporation made its note to Charles and Margaret Perry for $1,500 December 24, 1892, payable two years after date. It was signed by plaintiffs and by defendants Pritchard, Dolley, Darling, and Newman, as sureties. The payees assigned the note to Mrs. King. She demanded payment at its maturity, and, the corporation being unable to pay, plaintiffs and Pritchard and Dolley, sureties, under a legitimate and fair effort to protect their interest in the corporation property, on May 27, 1895, paid the amount then due ($1,790), each paying $223.75 thereof; the other two sureties, Newman and Darling being unable to pay anything. The corporation had issued but 353½ of its 500 shares of capital stock, and all the parties plaintiff and defendant held shares, except defendant Darling, who held none. Appellant Pritchard held 75 shares, and appellant the Literary Society 12½ shares. No other person held more than 24 shares. The complaint alleges other unpaid indebtedness of the corporation, the amount of which, and the holders thereof, being unknown to plaintiffs; and plaintiffs allege that "they seek in equity to be subrogated to the rights and remedies of said Mrs. King, * * * and thus ask to enforce contribution against M. Pritchard, who owned seventy-five shares of the subscribed capital stock of said corporation, while plaintiffs owned but a small number (as aforesaid) of the shares thereof when said indebtedness of the said fifteen hundred dollar loan was so incurred by said corporation, * * * and pray that he pay to them his proportionate share of such indebtedness. These plaintiffs, also, for the same reasons, and after their subrogation to the rights and remedies of said Mrs. King, demand contribution in equity, that each of the defendants who owned stock in said corporation when said fifteen hundred dollar indebtedness was incurred pay them his proportionate share thereof." An accounting of the affairs of the corporation and a receiver are asked, and that the property of the corporation be sold, and the affairs of the corporation wound up, and that plaintiff be subrogated to the rights of Mrs. King, and "that they thus be enabled to enforce, by way of contribution, recovery from M. Pritchard, and the other owners of stock of said corporation, their proportionate share of said fifteen hundred dollar note and indebtedness of said corporation so paid by the sureties thereon as aforesaid." Defendants demurred on several grounds: "(1) For insufficiency of facts; * * * (4) want of jurisdiction, in that it does not appear that the demand of plaintiffs, or any of them, against each stockholder, amounts to three hundred dollars or over." The demurrer was overruled, and defendants answered. The answer sets up, among other things, certain unpaid indebtedness of the corporation to defendants Pritchard and Dolley (in addition to the said note of fifteen hundred dollars) for work and labor and for money advanced to the corporation, which they allege should be paid, but does not deny any of the material allegations of the complaint. The facts found are substantially as alleged in the complaint, and the court finds certain sums to be due defendants Pritchard and Dolley on account of matters alleged in the answer. The decree adjudges that plaintiffs recover from the corporation $1,483.44; that defendant Dolley recover from the corporation $623.24, and that Pritchard recover from the corporation $330.89; that plaintiffs and Pritchard and Dolley be subrogated to the rights and remedies of Mrs. King, to enable them to enforce by contribution from the stockholders of the corporation their proportionate share of its indebtedness. And, to effect such recovery, a joint judgment was given plaintiffs against the defendants, "severally, the respective amounts and the proportionate share of plaintiffs' costs set opposite their respective names, with legal interest thereon as follows: From M. Pritchard, the sum of $121.98, with eleven per cent., plaintiff's costs amounting to $3.87; from Sierra Valley Literary Association, the sum of $56.62, with * * * costs amounting to $1.23." (Here follows a statement that judgment was entered against each of the other defendants in favor of plaintiffs.) Judgment was also given for Dolley against Pritchard for $64.89, and 3 cents costs, and against the Literary Society for $29.60, and 46 cents costs, and also a judgment in favor of Dolley against each of the other defendants for the proportionate share of the indebtedness. Pritchard and the literary society each appeals from the several judgments against them, and from the order denying motion for new trial. No receiver was appointed, and no sale of the corporation property ordered. The court, however, seems to have inquired into the entire indebtedness of the corporation, and it found the amount due on the Perry-King note to be $1,977.94, of which $247.24 was due to each of the eight sureties who paid Mrs. King; also, $330.89 due Pritchard on his separate claims; and $628.64 due Dolley on his claims, or $2,442.99 in all; and that the liability per share was $6.92. The court found, also, that the stockholders whose payments have not satisfied the same "are, as to his co-stockholders, yet holden for the amount of said indebtedness, in the proportion that the amount of stock held by him as hereinbefore set out bears to the 353½ shares so issued"; and judgments against the stockholders seem to have followed accordingly.

1. The point upon which appellants chiefly rely is that the court had no jurisdiction, because the demand against each defendant, exclusive of interest, was less than $300. There was a right of action at law in Mrs. King, under section 322, Civ. Code, either joint or several, against all the stockholders for their proportionate share of the indebtedness, as prescribed by that section. But, whether she had brought the action against all, or each separately, the superior court had no jurisdiction as to those defendants against whom judgment was sought for a less sum than $300. Derby v. Stevens, 64 Cal. 287, 30 Pac. 820. She also had a right of action against the sureties, or any one of them, as they were jointly and severally liable. When the sureties paid the note, each paying $223.75, each of them then had an action against the stockholders jointly or severally, under section 322, supra, and this right of action was good against the co-sureties as stockholders, the same as against any other stockholders. But it was not an action arising out of the relation of surety. It was statutory, purely. Section 322, supra. In this action appellant Pritchard was liable for such proportion of the whole amount ($1,790) as his 75 shares bore to 353½ shares, or $5.06+ per share, making $379.50 due from Pritchard as a stockholder. But the complaint shows that Pritchard paid $223.75 on account of this indebtedness, and plaintiffs claim from him only his proportionate share after this credit is allowed, which left him debtor only for $155.75 of the alleged corporate indebtedness, under the allegations of the complaint. The literary society held 12½ shares, and its liability was only $63.25. Many of the defendants had but one share, and their liability was but $5.06 each. We need concern ourselves, however, only as to the appellants last above named. As to the rights of the co-sureties between themselves as such, we do not see that any question arises as to appellant Pritchard, for it is alleged that he paid equally with plaintiffs, and, if he was liable for a greater amount than either of plaintiffs, because he held more stock than they did, it was because he was a stockholder, and not because he was a surety; and, as a stockholder, the remedy against him was by an action under the statute, in which full relief was attainable. The literary society was liable only as a stockholder. The question as to whether all the plaintiffs could unite to bring the action is not raised, and need not be decided.

The theory of the complaint seems to be that it became necessary to bring the action on the equity side of the court in order to subrogate the plaintiffs to the rights and remedies of Mrs. King, and to secure contribution from the stockholders; and, having thus been compelled to go into the equity court, it then had jurisdiction to enter judgment against each stockholder, although the amount was less than $300. Mrs. King held no securities for the debt. The action against the stockholders was not barred by statute when this action was brought. There was no right or remedy in Mrs. King which required the interposition of an equity court in order to invest plaintiffs therewith, or entitle them to be subrogated. It was not necessary to go into equity for contribution from the stockholders, because the statute gave a clear and adequate legal remedy against them. The stockholders were liable as principals for the debt evidenced by the note. The sureties who paid it could look to them as principals. Civ. Code, § 322; Derby v. Stevens, supra; Hyman v. Coleman, 82 Cal. 650, 23 Pac. 62. And as principals they were liable to the sureties, under sections 2847, 2848, Civ. Code. Even among the sureties themselves the action for contribution is an action cognizable at law. Taylor v. Reynolds, 53 Cal. 686. We are unable to perceive any sufficient grounds for seeking equitable relief, and the decree shows that the whole purpose of the action was to obtain several judgments against the stockholders for their proportionate share of the indebtedness, under section 322, supra, which, in our opinion, could have been accomplished by a simple action at law against each. We do not think, under the guise of avoiding a multiplicity of suits, or to obviate an action by each plaintiff, that the present action should be sustained. In giving a joint and several action against the stockholders, multiplicity of suits is avoided by the statute. Civ. Code, § 322. Where subrogation in equity is sought, the burden is on the person claiming it to show that it is necessary for his protection. Sheld. Subr. §§ 11, 19. Here there was no such necessity, because the stockholders became principals; and plaintiffs, upon payment of the note, had their action in assumpsit, as sureties, directly against the stockholders, as principals. Brandt, Sur. § 205; Taylor v. Reynolds, supra. Respondents content that, although they had a remedy at law, still there was concurrent jurisdiction in equity,—and Mr. Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (section 139) is cited. But the author there says: "The fact that the legal remedy is not full, adequate, and complete is, therefore, the real foundation of this concurrent branch of the equity jurisdiction." Where the remedy is a mere recovery of money, the case does not come under the concurrent jurisdiction, but comes within the sole cognizance of the law, unless the right of action is dependent upon, or is in some way connected with, some equitable feature or incident, such as fraud, mistake, accident, trust, accounting, or contribution, and the like. Id. § 178. It was said in De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463, that, "to entitle the plaintiff to the equitable interposition of the court, he must show a proper case for the interference of a court of equity, and one in which he has no adequate or complete relief at law." And Mr. Pomeroy says at section 354: "If, therefore, the facts stated in the pleadings show that the primary rights, the cause of action, and the remedy to be obtained are legal, then the action is one at law, and falls within the jurisdiction at law." The action here was avowedly to obtain contribution from the stockholders, but this contribution, as we have seen, was a statutory right, which was enforceable by a simple action in assumpsit, in which full and adequate relief was obtainable. The complaint must be treated as stating an action at law, and the court, therefore, was without jurisdiction, the amount claimed against appellants being for less than $300 in each instance. The judgments obtained by Dolley against appellants, for like reasons, were erroneous.

2. In support of defendants' motion for a new trial, error is assigned in allowing plaintiffs to file an affidavit at the trial denying the genuineness and due execution of the promissory note of the corporation set forth in defendant Pritchard's answer; the objection being that section 448, Code Civ. Proc., requires the affidavit to be made "within ten days after receiving a copy of the answer," and that the court had no power to allow this to be done at the trial. Conceding, but not deciding, that the affidavit came too late, and that the court could not allow it to be filed, plaintiffs had the right, under section 462, Id., to controvert by evidence this new matter set up in the answer, except as to the genuineness and due execution of the note. With this exception, they could show any matters in confession or avoidance. In re Garcelon's Estate, 104 Cal. 570, 38 Pac. 414. The Pritchard note does not on its face purport to have been made by the corporation. Admitting its genuineness and due execution was not, therefore, an admission that it was the corporation note. We think the evidence tending to show that it had not been authorized by the directors, and that it was without consideration, was competent, as was other evidence tending to show the nonexistence of any indebtedness of the corporation to Pritchard on account of the note. This being so, if it was error to allow the affidavit it was without injury, for there was no evidence offered by plaintiffs controverting the genuineness or due execution of the note in the form it appears. The evidence was conflicting, but there was evidence tending to support the findings, and they cannot now be questioned. No reason is presented for disturbing any of the judgments not appealed from, and we see no error entitling appellants to a new trial. Our conclusion is that the judgments against Pritchard and the Sierra Literary Society, from which they appeal, should be reversed, and otherwise the judgments and the order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgments against Pritchard and the Sierra Literary Society, from which they appeal, are reversed, and otherwise the judgments and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HILL. (Cr. 417.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—INTENT—INTOXICATION.

On a trial for murder there was evidence that, shortly before the homicide, accused drank some liquor, and the inference was justified that he had drunk a great deal. Several witnesses testified that he was drunk within an hour of the homicide, and it was shown that between that time and the homicide he drank at least twice. Held to be sufficient proof of intoxication to require giving a requested charge thereon, under Pen. Code, § 22, providing that, where intent is a necessary element of the crime charged, the jury may consider the fact that accused was intoxicated.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Leon Hill was convicted of murder, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial he appeals. Reversed.

Frank H. Short, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and was sentenced to a life imprisonment in the state prison. He appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The appellant is a youth, and at the time of the homicide upon which the charge of murder was based he was only 18 years and some months old. The homicide occurred on a road about a mile and a half from a resort known as the "Fresno Hot Springs," at which place there was an hotel, saloon, croquet ground, etc. About 9 o'clock in the evening of June 27, 1897, the appellant left said springs in a buggy with a young companion, named Tony Loveall, to go to his home, which was about five or six miles distant. At the same time the deceased, Lloyd Duke, also left the springs in a buggy, in which were also two other persons, named Smoot and Taylor. All these persons had been together in the saloon at the springs, where something had been said about a bet on a wrestle between the defendant and the deceased, in which the deceased said that he would either wrestle or fight the defendant. Some months before that time the deceased had whipped the appellant at another place. After the parties had started, the buggies were brought close together several times, and each had passed the other, and there was considerable rough and angry talk between the parties. Smoot was left at his house, which was a short distance from the springs. At that time the buggy in which the appellant rode was ahead, and, some of the harness being disarranged or broken, the appellant had stopped his buggy, and had gone to the side of one of his horses to repair the harness. At this point, which was about one and a half miles from the springs, the deceased and Taylor overtook the appellant; and there is testimony that the deceased, in an angry manner, asked the appellant and his companion what they were doing, and said, "Stop, you sons of bitches, I will fix you." The deceased then jumped out of his buggy on the ground, when the appellant, who had returned to his buggy, also jumped to the ground, taking with him a gun which had been in the buggy, and hollered to the deceased, "Stop." The parties were then very close together, but it was dark and dusty, so that the movements of the deceased and the appellant could not be very distinctly seen. Immediately afterwards the appellant fired a shot, which caused the death of the deceased. The appellant testified that he thought the deceased, who was an older and larger man, was about to attack him, and that he shot in self-defense. The parties were all boisterous and noisy, and seemed to act with a good deal of recklessness. There was testimony to the effect that the defendant sought to prevent the deceased from passing him in his buggy, and there are many other circumstances not necessary to be detailed under the views we take of the case.

The defendant asked the court, in writing, to give the following instruction: "If you should believe from the evidence that at the time of the killing the defendant in this case was intoxicated, or under the influence of intoxicating liquors, you may and should take into consideration such fact, in determining the degree of the crime of which the defendant is guilty, if you believe him guilty of any crime." The court refused to give this instruction, and did not give any instruction at all on the subject of intoxication; and the refusal to give this instruction, or any other of a similar character, is one of the main errors relied on for a reversal. There is no doubt that this instruction was correct, and that appellant was entitled to have it given, unless some special reason appears, warranting its refusal. Section 22 of the Penal Code provides that "whenever the actual existence of any particular purpose, motive or intent is a necessary element to constitute any particular species or degree of crime, the jury may take into consideration the fact that the accused was intoxicated at the time, in determining the purpose, motive or intent with which he committed the act"; and it has been repeatedly held that, in a trial for murder, the jury, in determining whether there was that "willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing" which constitutes murder in the first degree, may consider the fact that the accused at the time of the homicide was intoxicated. A few of the cases to this point are the following: People v. Belencia, 21 Cal. 544; People v. King, 27 Cal. 507; People v. Ferris, 55 Cal. 588; People v. Jones, 63 Cal. 168; People v. Bruggs, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26; People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 425, 30 Pac. 581; People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 379, 34 Pac. 856.

The attorney general admits that the instruction is, upon its face, correct, and that it should be given in cases where the facts warrant it; but he claims that in the case at bar there was no sufficient evidence of the intoxication of the appellant at the time of the homicide to make the instruction applicable. But this contention cannot be maintained. There certainly was evidence strongly tending to show that appellant was intoxicated, and sufficient to put the question of his intoxication within the province of the jury. The defendant and Loveall had gone to the said hot springs for the first time, on the day of the homicide, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and had remained there until about 4 o'clock. During that time they were in the saloon a part of the time, although it does not appear affirmatively that the defendant drank at the bar; but when they left they purchased a bottle of whisky, and took it with them into the buggy in which they were riding. They then drove to appellant's home, and to other places, and returned to the springs somewhere between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening. Shortly before the homicide occurred, and while they were in the buggy, appellant drank the last whisky that was left in the bottle. These facts are not, perhaps, very conclusive evidence that the appellant and Loveall actually drank the whole contents of the bottle; but it was expressly testified to by witnesses that, a short time after they returned to the springs, appellant was intoxicated. Soon after they had returned to the springs the appellant and Loveall were walking along the road from the croquet ground to the hotel, and two boys named Crump were walking in front of them. A short distance ahead of them on the road were three ladies,—Mrs. Motley, Mrs. Gregory, and Mrs. Forsyth; and, as the appellant and his companion approached closely to the ladies, the latter stepped off the road a few feet, into the shadow of a cabin that stood there.

to let them pass. Mrs. Motley testified as follows: "We thought the gentlemen were intoxicated,—their manner was boisterous and loud; and we stepped in behind the cabin, to let them pass." And again: "We thought they were intoxicated, and we stepped behind a cabin." And again: "The parties who seemed to be intoxicated were behind, in the rear of the others. They were close enough before we stepped out that we could notice that they were intoxicated." And again: "As they were coming, Mr. Hill was staggering; but I did not notice Tony,—whether he was staggering or not." Mrs. Forsyth, having testified that the ladies stepped out to the cabin, said: "The occasion of our stepping beside that cottage was, we wanted to let them pass ahead of us. I thought they were all drunk." This occurred, according to the testimony of Mrs. Motley, about 8 o'clock, or between 8 and 9. She was not certain how long it was before the appellant and the deceased drove away from the springs in buggies, but she places it from a few minutes to a half hour, although in one part of the testimony she says that it might have been "nearly an hour." After this the appellant and his companions went immediately to the saloon, and there drank more. It does not appear how many drinks they took then at the saloon, although it clearly appears that the defendant took one drink, and there is some evidence that he took two. The parties then all started on the road in their buggies, and, before the homicide, appellant took the last drink out of the bottle, as before stated. Therefore it certainly cannot be truly said either that there was no evidence, or that there was only slight evidence, of appellant's intoxication at the time of the homicide. There was evidence that shortly before the homicide he actually drank some liquor; there was evidence from which it could be properly inferred that he had drank a great deal of liquor; and there was express testimony of witnesses that within an hour of the homicide he was drunk, which testimony was competent to prove the fact (People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 7, 14 Pac. 373; Town Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 77, 20 Pac. 372); and it was shown that between that time and the time of the homicide he drank at least twice, and perhaps oftener. The facts here are very different from those in People v. Kloss, 115 Cal. 567, 47 Pac. 459. In that case the homicide was committed on April 18th, and the only evidence as to the intoxication of the defendant in that case at the time of the homicide was that he was addicted to heavy drinking, and that "he had been drinking on April 17th"; and in the opinion of the court it is stated that the evidence "does not show how much or how often he had been drinking on the 17th, or at what hour, or that he had at any time reached the stage of intoxication." Of course, if a person kills another under such circumstances that the killing is neither manslaughter nor excusable or justifiable homicide, he is guilty of murder, although he may have been intoxicated at the time of the homicide; but murder is not necessarily murder in the first degree. In order to be of the first degree, the killing must have been "willful, deliberate, and premeditated." In determining whether or not the killing was so willful, deliberate, and premeditated as to constitute murder in the first degree, it is proper for the jury to consider how much his mental condition at the time was affected by intoxication; and, there being an express statutory declaration upon the subject of intoxication, a defendant in a murder case is entitled to have an instruction embracing such statutory declaration given by the court to the jury, where there is evidence which makes it applicable; and for the refusal of the court to give the instruction under discussion the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

There is not much else necessary to be said for the instruction of the court upon another trial. The appellant asked the court to give a great many instructions which were refused. Many of them were correct, but an examination of the record shows, we think, that they were all substantially embraced in other instructions which were given; and, therefore, we do not see, at present, any prejudicial error committed by refusing said instructions. The court did not err in overruling appellant's objections to testimony given by the witnesses Seacord, Motley, and Forsyth with respect to certain declarations made by the appellant. It is not necessary to discuss the point made by appellant as to the alleged misconduct of the assistant counsel for the prosecution in his closing argument. Such point will probably not arise upon another trial. And, as a new trial is to be ordered, it is, of course, not necessary to examine that ground of the motion which consists of newly-discovered evidence. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

 SCANLAN v. SAN FRANCISCO & S. J. V.
 RY. CO. (Sac. 393.)
 (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1898.)

JUDICIAL NOTICE — MATHEMATICS — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — ENGINEER'S ESTI-MATE — ACCEPTANCE.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 8, authorizing courts to take judicial notice of the laws of nature, the court judicially knows the rules of mensuration by which the cubic contents of an irregular prismoidal body are ascertained.

2. Where a contract for constructing a railroad embankment provided that additional dirt, not exceeding a certain quantity, should be added for shrinkage, the exact percentage to be specified by the company's engineer, and that payment for such embankment should be made by measurement of the material in the embankment, excluding that added for shrinkage, the amount designated by the engineer to be added for such shrinkage up to the limit specified is conclusive, even though the shrinkage be less.

3. Where the construction of a railroad embankment was to be paid for by an actual measurement of the cubic contents of the embankment, and the contractor completed it without making a survey, or objecting to the one made by the company's engineer, his neglect to make such survey before the surface of the ground, which was one of the necessary data for the measurement, was covered, was an admission that the company's survey was correct.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by A. V. Scanlan against the San Francisco & San Joaquin Valley Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. F. Preston, for appellant. Gould & Bogue and Woods & Levinsky, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. This is an action, brought by a contractor for the construction of a railway embankment to recover the contract price for the alleged cubic contents of the embankment. The defendant had paid to the plaintiff what it claimed to be the whole amount earned, except about $20, which it brought into court. The plaintiff had judgment for the balance claimed by him, and the defendant appeals.

The contract, among other things, contained the following provisions: "On embankments a percentage for shrinkage must be added to the fill, and said percentage will be as specified and marked out by the engineer [of the company], but will in no case exceed ten per cent. of height of bank." "Material will be measured in embankment, but no measurement will be made of the material added for shrinkage, nor payment made for same." Under this contract it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove the cubic contents of the material placed by him in the embankment, measured in the embankment, excluding the material added for shrinkage. The plaintiff produced as a witness an engineer, who testified that he had measured the embankment after its completion, and had found it to contain a certain number of cubic yards, which he stated; but he did not give the data upon which his computations (for he testified to two) were based. In his measurements and computations he made no allowance for any material added for shrinkage; nor did plaintiff in any way prove how much had been so added, though it was admitted that such additions had been made. The witness testified that his computations were made by measuring a certain number of cross sections, finding the average area of these cross sections, and multiplying this average area by the length of the embankment. One of the computations submitted by him was based entirely upon his own measurements, and the other, which was much less, upon the measurements of the defendant's engineer, except as to the heights, as to which the witness used his own measurements. The court, in its findings, adopted neither of these computations, but fixed the amount at an intermediate figure, for which we are unable to find any basis in the evidence. We think that there was no evidence before the court by which the contents of the embankment could be ascertained. The finding depends entirely upon the accuracy of the computations made by plaintiff's engineer, since the measurements themselves were not before the court, and it is evident that these computations were inaccurate.

1. The court takes judicial notice of the laws of nature (Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 8), among which are the principles of mathematics. The science of mensuration, which must control in this case, is a branch of pure mathematics, with which the court is presumed to be acquainted. By the rules of mensuration, the contents of an irregular prismoidal body, such as a railway embankment, is ascertained by dividing it by vertical planes at every change of contour of the underlying ground into a series of prismoids, and computing the contents of each of these prismoids by adding together its two end areas and four times its middle area, dividing this sum by six, and multiplying the quotient by the length of the prismoid. The product will be the actual contents of the prismoid. See ENC. Brit. (9th Ed.) art. "Mensuration." This method was not employed by the witness. His method was an approximation, which assumes that the middle area of a prismoid is equal to half the sum of its end areas. This is true only in the case of a prism, or in a prismoid consisting of the frustum of a regular pyramid. This approximation, it is true, will give results correct enough for practical purposes in very uniform embankments, where there is but little difference in height. But in other cases its results are always too large, and it would be easy to suppose cases in which the excess would be greater than the difference between the estimates of the respective parties in this case.

2. The plaintiff's computations made no allowance for the additional earth put on for shrinkage. It is true that there was some testimony tending to show that at the time of the measurement the embankment, to use the words of respondent's brief, "had settled or shrunk nearly, if not quite, all it would." This testimony was entirely too indefinite to take the place of actual measurement, to which defendant was entitled under the contract. Moreover, it did not reach the point; for the amount to be added for shrinkage, under the contract, was to be determined, within certain limits, by the defendant's engineer, and within those limits his judgment was conclusive, even if the shrinkage should turn out to be less than he had allowed for.

3. The plaintiff's engineer, working as he did after the embankment had been constructed, did not know the original condition of the ground; and, in order to supply that essential factor, he made certain assumptions, which may or may not have been justified by the facts, but which the evidence does not show to have been so justified. We do not think, however, that any such assumptions are allowable under this contract. Since the work is to be paid for by actual measurement, and the original surface of the ground is one of the necessary data for such measurement, the builder, if not satisfied with the survey made by the company's engineer, should, before commencing work, have that survey corrected, or make an accurate one for himself. A neglect to do this is equivalent to an admission of the correctness of the company's survey. The plaintiff should, therefore, have proved that survey; but he did not do this, and objected to the proof of it offered by defendant, and it was not in evidence in the case.

We would suggest that upon another trial of the case each side should put in evidence the measurements upon which any computation offered by it is founded, unless such proof is waived by the other side. If the measurements are before the court, errors in computation can be corrected.

Our conclusion upon this point renders it unnecessary to notice the other points made. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

HAWLEY v. KOCHER. (Sac. 470.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

1. On appeal on the judgment roll alone, without a bill of exceptions, an order striking out a portion of the complaint cannot be reviewed; it being no part of the judgment roll, under Code Civ. Proc. § 670.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 647, providing that an order striking a part or the whole of a pleading shall be deemed excepted to, does not make such order reviewable without being brought up by bill of exceptions.

3. On review of an order striking part of a complaint on a recital of the judgment that, at the time of demurring to the complaint, defendant moved to strike certain portions of the complaint, which was granted, the ruling on such motion must be held to be correct, since, conceding that such recital, not being essential to the validity of the judgment, can be considered in reviewing such order, it must affirmatively show that such order was erroneous.

4. In a replevin complaint, a description of the property by giving a list of items, each item containing several different articles, with the aggregate value of the items, and not of the specific articles, and without an allegation as to where the property is situate, is insufficient.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mariposa county.

Action by George T. Hawley, as assignee of Jacob Kocher, against Catharina Kocher. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. Kirk, J. W. Knox, and J. J. Trabucco, for appellant. F. H. Farrar and G. G. Goucher, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action is brought by the plaintiff, as assignee in insolvency of Jacob Kocher, against the defendant, to recover personal property, or "three thousand five hundred and ninety-seven and  $\frac{19}{100}$  dollars," the value thereof, in case delivery cannot be had, together with \$500 damages for the detention thereof, and for costs of suit. The action is what is usually called, under our system, "claim and delivery of personal property." Judgment was rendered for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions. The transcript commences with an "amended complaint." The respondent filed a demurrer to the amended complaint. The demurrer was general, and also special. The special grounds were that the complaint was uncertain, also that it was ambiguous, and also that it was unintelligible. The real ground of the demurrer was that the complaint did not contain any sufficient description of the property sought to be recovered. The court sustained the demurrer; and, the appellant not having filed another amended complaint within the time allowed, judgment was rendered against him, and from this judgment he appeals.

Appellant contends that the court below erred in striking out a portion of the amended complaint, but that contention cannot be considered on this appeal. It could be reviewed only upon a bill of exceptions. An order striking out part of the pleadings is not part of the judgment roll. Code Civ. Proc. § 670. This has frequently been determined by this court. In Feely v. Shirley, 43 Cal. 369, the court said: "The ruling of the court in striking out a portion of the answer cannot be reviewed upon this appeal, since it forms no part of the judgment roll,"—citing cases. In Morris v. Angle, 42 Cal. 240, the court say: "The notices of motions to strike out and to dismiss, and the orders of the courts upon such motions, * * * do not legitimately constitute a portion of the record in this case on appeal. They are not embodied in any statements or bill of exceptions, and constitute no part of the judgment roll in this case; hence cannot be regarded on this appeal." In Gancart v. Henry, 98 Cal. 281, 33 Pac. 92, the appellant sought to have reviewed an order of the court below refusing to strike out an amended answer, and the court said: "No bill of exceptions was prepared embodying the action of the court in the premises, without which the notice, motion to strike out, and order of the court refusing such motion, did not become a part of the judgment roll, under section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure." It is true that there was the further objection in that case that there was no exception to the refusal of the court to strike out, and an order refusing to strike out is not one of the orders which are deemed to have been excepted to by section 647, Code Civ. Proc.; but it was held that, in any event, the point could be raised only upon a bill of exceptions. In Barber v. Mulford, 117 Cal. 356, 49 Pac. 206, the court say: "There is printed in the transcript a notice of motion to strike out part of the complaint, also an order of the court refusing the same, and error is assigned thereon. These proceedings are not part of the judgment roll, and are not embodied in any bill of exceptions. This court cannot, therefore, take any notice of them." In Canal Co. v. Kidd, 43 Cal. 180, the court say: "Upon motion of the defendants an order was entered striking out a portion of the complaint. The appeal is taken from the judgment, and from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. That an order striking out a portion of a pleading may be reviewed here upon appeal from the judgment is true; but it is no less true that such an order, being in itself no part of the judgment roll (section 203), cannot be so reviewed, except it be supported by a statement on appeal, and here there is none." See, also, Wilson v. Wilson, 64 Cal. 92, 27 Pac. 861; 1 Freem. Judgm. par. 79. Counsel for appellant seems to attach some importance to the fact that section 647, Code Civ. Proc., provides that an order "striking out a pleading or a portion thereof" is deemed to have been excepted to; but an order which is not made a part of the judgment roll, no matter how an exception to it may be taken, must be presented by a bill of exceptions. In Nash v. Harris, 57 Cal. 242, the court say: "A party who has excepted to a decision of a court, whether he except in person at the time the decision was made, or is deemed in law to have excepted, must in statutory or reasonable time after his exception avail himself of the right to reduce the same to writing, and take the steps required by law to have the bill of exceptions settled and signed by the judge." In the transcript there is printed what is called an "Order Sustaining Demurrer," in which it is said as follows: "Motion to strike out the amended complaint lines from 10 to 28 on page 4, and lines from 1 to 8 on page 5, allowed, and said lines are hereby stricken from the amended complaint." But this matter printed in the transcript is of no consequence, because the ruling of the court upon the motion to strike out is no part of the record, unless made so by bill of exceptions.

Appellant contends that a bill of exceptions was not necessary, because the judgment contains a recital that a motion to strike out parts of the complaint was made and granted. The recital is merely of the bare facts that at the time of the filing of the demurrer to the amended complaint the defendant "filed and served her motion to strike out certain portions of said amended complaint," and that after hearing argument, etc., "an order was duly given and made granting said defendant's motion to strike out certain portions of plaintiff's complaint." No other facts are stated. The grounds of the motion are not given, nor is there even any designation of the parts of the complaint which were stricken out. Appellant relies in support of this contention upon two cases: Abbott v. Douglass, 28 Cal. 296, and Derby v. Jackman, 89 Cal. 1, 26 Pac. 610. In the former case the facts were very peculiar, and the decision was made by a bare majority of the court; two of the justices strongly dissenting. There the judgment recited that after witnesses were sworn and examined, and the case was being tried upon its merits, the court struck out the answer; and the majority of the court proceeded upon the theory that it was impossible to imagine any just theory upon which the order could be sustained. The court say: "Now, upon what ground, if any, could the order have properly been made during the progress of the trial? If there be any, lying within the scope of legal conjecture, the order must be considered as having been properly made." In the dissenting opinion of Sawyer, J., concurred in by Sanderson, C. J., it was held that there should have been a bill of exceptions or statement showing the facts upon which the order was made, and it is said: "There is nothing in the record which shows the grounds upon which the order was based, and we cannot tell whether it was properly made or not," and suggestions are made of facts which may have existed which would have warranted the order made. But, assuming that case to have been correctly decided, still the decision went upon the theory that the recitals in the judgment affirmatively showed error, and that it was not "within the scope of legal conjecture" to imagine that the ruling was not erroneous. That cannot certainly be said of the ruling in question in the case at bar. In Derby v. Jackman the order sought to be reviewed was an order granting plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings, and it was contended that it could not be reviewed, because there was no bill of exceptions. The court held that the ruling of the court could be reviewed without the bill of exceptions, because the recitals of the judgment set forth everything which a bill of exceptions could have shown. The court say: "As a matter of fact, the judgment includes all that the bill of exceptions could show,—all that is necessary for a review of this action of the court. The motion, and the grounds of it, are specifically recited, and the ruling upon it, and the entry of judgment as a consequence." The facts in that case, therefore, were materially different from those in the case at bar. Here nothing appears except the naked fact that a ruling striking out some portions of the complaint, not named, was made. There is nothing to show that the ruling of the court was erroneous, and in the absence of such showing it must be presumed to have been correct. It appears, also, from the recitals in the judgment, that a demurrer to the original complaint was sustained, and leave given to amend; but it does not appear upon what ground the demurrer to the original complaint was sustained, or upon what conditions leave to amend was granted. In Dimick v. Campbell, 31 Cal. 239, the court say: "Looking to the judgment roll alone, it cannot be determined upon what ground the district court struck out the defendant's answer. We cannot presume error, and the record does not show that the court erred in striking out the answer. The judgment, therefore, cannot be reversed on this ground." Assuming, therefore, for the purposes of this case, that recitals in a judgment not necessary to the validity of the judgment itself can be considered as statements of matters necessary to the review of intermediate orders, which, as a general rule, should be in a bill of exceptions, still such recitals must certainly show affirmatively that the order sought to be reviewed was erroneous; and, such not being the case here, the ruling of the court striking out portions of the complaint must be held to have been correct.

2. The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained upon the ground that there was not a sufficient description of the property sought to be recovered. In any kind of a suit involving personal property, it should be described with a reasonable degree of certainty; and this rule is especially applicable to an action of claim and delivery because the property is to be specifically returned to the plaintiff on the execution, if return can be made, and the defendant in such action has the right to make such return in the event of a judgment against him. The complaint avers that on or about the 29th day of August, 1896, the insolvent transferred "a large portion" of his property to the defendant; that he was then the owner and in the possession of the following described personal property, to wit, "a stock of merchandise, consisting principally of hardware, situated and being in the store premises of said Jacob Kocher, at said Merced, Merced county, Cal."; "and that he then and there transferred and conveyed to the defendant" the greater part or portion of the aforesaid merchandise, to wit, "the following articles, of the following value." Then follows a list of articles, nearly each item of which contains items of property of different kinds, with an aggregate value attached,—as, for instance: "Paints, oils, brushes, and glass, $625.38;" "Pumps, pipe, and plow implements, $322.55;" "Tools, shelf ware, bucksaws, etc., $105.21;" "Milk pans, saws, and belting, $122.80;" "Belting, steel bits, etc., $108.95." One of the items is "Sundries," and the balance of the list is of a similar character. There is no quality, quantity, value, or price given to any particular kind of property named. The action was commenced, apparently, long after the time of the alleged transfer from the insolvent to the defendant, and there is no averment as to where the property was at the time of the commencement of the suit; so that it cannot even be claimed that a lump description of personal property situated in a certain building, or at a certain place, if such a description could be held to be good, applies here. The description here is certainly not as good as that held bad in the following cases: Welch v. Smith, 45 Cal. 230; Kelly v. Murphy, 70 Cal. 560, 12 Pac. 467; Cooke v. Aguirre, 86 Cal. 479, 25 Pac. 5. See, also, Pierce v. Langdon (Idaho) 28 Pac. 401; Smith v. McCoolle (Kan. App.) 46 Pac. 988; Stevens v. Osman, 1 Mich. 92; Lockhart v. Little (S. C.) 9 S. E. 511. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. Where the court notified the prosecuting attorney, about to prove confessions of accused, that, if he did not afterwards prove the corpus delicti, the confessions would be stricken, it was not an abuse of discretion to admit proof of confessions before that of the corpus.

2. On a trial for arson, to prove the corpus delicti, and to corroborate confessions of accused that on a certain night he and another drove a buggy to the front fence, and his companion got out and burned the house, barn, granary, and chicken house, there was evidence that the fire occurred about that night, and that the buildings were 60 to 150 feet apart. There was no definite description of the buildings, and no estimate of their value; nor could their relative locations be gathered from the evidence. One witness testified that he saw where a buggy had been hitched near the roadside, and saw the tracks of two men leading from there to the house, and back. Held to be sufficient to justify admission of confessions.

3. Under an information charging accused with burning a dwelling house, evidence that other buildings were also burned was admissible in proof of the corpus delicti, and also to corroborate accused's confession that the other buildings were burned.

4. Evidence is not insufficient to sustain a verdict of arson because it tends to show that the burning was done at the instance of the owner, and therefore was lawful, in the absence of an intent to defraud, where the owner denied that he had anything to do with it.

5. There was evidence that accused confessed that his accomplice told him one H. procured the burning, and was to pay them $100. Accused offered to prove by H. that this was not so, which was refused. Held, that since H.'s denial would not show that the accomplice had not so told accused, and his admitting it would tend to prove accused guilty, the latter was not injured by the ruling.

6. Where the examination in chief of a witness was confined to what occurred when one accused of a crime was arraigned, a question on cross-examination as to what accused said at his preliminary examination several days later was properly excluded.

7. Where one accused of arson testified positively that he had nothing to do with the burning, and knew nothing about it, he was not prejudiced by a refusal to permit him to testify that on his preliminary examination he had so stated.

8. A charge was not erroneous, as leaving out the element that the burning must have been done by accused, where his connection therewith was properly and fully presented in other charges.

9. A charge was not erroneous as leaving out the element that the burning might have been authorized by the owner, there being no evidence that the owner did authorize it.

10. Where one accused of arson was told by his accomplice of their object in going to the premises, and held the horse while the other set fire to the buildings, he was guilty.

11. In a trial for arson, the court charged that if the jury should find that accused was informed by his accomplice of the object in going to the premises, and held the horse while he set fire to the house, they should find them guilty. Held not to be a charge on the facts, but on the conclusion to be drawn from them.

12. In a trial for arson, a charge was properly refused which contained matter which might have misled the jury into the belief that accused did the burning himself; thus eliminating the proposition that if he were present, aiding another, he would be guilty.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Walter Jones was convicted of arson, and from the judgment of conviction, and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

M. K. Harris and S. L. Carter, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HAYNES, C. The defendant was convicted of the crime of arson in the second degree and sentenced to imprisonment in the state's prison for the term of five years, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information charged that Walter Jones and L. B. Spivey on March 6, 1897, did willfully, unlawfully, etc., set fire to and burn a certain dwelling house, the property of one W. A. Cosby. The first witness called for the prosecution was S. S. Crutcher, the deputy constable who arrested the defendant, and who, it appears, had acted as a detective in working up the case; and it was proposed to prove by him certain statements in the nature of confessions made by defendant Jones, who was then being tried, the defendants having severed. It was objected that the corpus delicti had not been proved. Ordinarily the corpus delicti should be the first point to which the evidence should be directed; but the order of proof is usually in the discretion of the court, and, unless it clearly appears that the defendant has been prejudiced by the manner in which that discretion has been exercised, it will not justify a reversal of the judgment. We see no such prejudice; the court having then notified the district attorney that, if he did not afterwards introduce evidence upon that point, the evidence of confessions would be stricken out.

The evidence of the corpus delicti was, in substance, that four detached buildings were burned, consisting of a dwelling house, barn, granary, and chicken coop. These buildings were upon a 40-acre lot belonging to Mr. Cosby, and situated in the country, some 12 miles from Fresno. Luther Spivey, who was jointly charged with defendant Jones, had taken a lease of the premises about a month before the fire, but for what term does not appear; the only statement in that regard being that it had not expired. Spivey testified he had slept there perhaps 8 or 10 or 12 times; that he came from the ranch to his father's house, in or near Fresno, on Friday evening, and did not go back until Monday, at which time he found the buildings burned. A farmer living two or three miles away testified that he saw a fire in the direction of the Cosby place about 9 or 10 o'clock on Saturday night, March 6th, but could not tell what it was, owing to intervening trees. Another witness testified: That he drove by the Cosby place on Monday morning, and there was a little steam or smoke from the moisture and heat, and thought the fire had occurred about two days before. That he saw where a horse and buggy had been hitched near the roadside. That he drove on, and when he returned he drove in and shot some pigeons, and saw the tracks of two men leading from where the buggy stood towards the house and back to the roadside. He estimated the distance from the house to the barn at 150 feet; from the house to the granary "about sixty or eighty feet,—forty or sixty feet." That another building was about 100 feet from the house, but not 100 feet from the granary, which was between it and the house, and about 40 or 60 feet from the house and the other buildings. J. M. Schier, also called for the prosecution, testified that the barn was about 15 or 20 paces from the house; that the granary was the nearest building to the house, and about 10 or 15 paces from it, and the chicken coop a few paces more. No description was given of any of these buildings, except that the house had five rooms; nor was any estimate given of their value, or whether there was or was not inflammable material about them which might be ignited from sparks; nor can the relative location of the several buildings be ascertained from the evidence, though the direction and distance of each from the house was capable of exact ascertainment and proof. The only additional facts appearing are that it rained either Friday night or Saturday night, and that Cosby had an insurance of $300 on the house, and $100 on the barn. On behalf of the prosecution it is urged that each of these buildings must have been separately fired, and that, therefore, the incendiary character of the fire is sufficiently shown to admit evidence of the confessions. "The corpus delicti is made up of two things: First, certain facts forming its basis; and, secondly, the existence of criminal agency as the cause of them." Best, Ev. (Am. Ed. 1883) § 442. See, also, People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 861 et seq., under title "Corpus Delicti," and 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 582, "Confessions," and numerous cases cited in the notes. As to the degree of evidence required to show criminal agency, a distinction must be taken between the evidence which upon the whole case would justify a conviction, and that degree of proof of criminal agency in the burning of the buildings for the purpose of letting in evidence of the confessions or admissions of the defendant. To justify a conviction, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the existence of every fact necessary to constitute the offense, and to identify the defendant as the perpetrator; but it is not necessary that the evidence of the criminal act should be of that conclusive character in order to justify the admission of the defendant's confessions. The rule is well established that a conviction cannot be had on the extrajudicial confessions of the defendant, unless corroborated by proof aliunde of the corpus delicti. People v. Jones, 31 Cal. 566; People v. Thrall, 50 Cal. 415; People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440. But it is not necessary that the evidence of the corpus delicti should itself connect the defendant with its perpetration, in order to make the confession admissible. Mr. Justice Clifford, commenting upon the language used in Greenleaf on Evidence, said: "Considering the language employed by that author, it is somewhat doubtful how far he would carry the doctrine; and, if it is to the extent that the corpus delicti must be fully proved independently of the confession, we are not prepared to adopt it, as in that view the admission of the confession would be useless, except to prove the agency of the accused, and would operate as an exclusion of the confession for any other purpose, whereas, if freely and voluntarily made, it is clearly admissible as evidence in support of any element in the charge to which it applies. Full proof of the body of the crime, the corpus delicti, independently of the confession, is not required, says Nelson, C. J., in People v. Badgley, 16 Wend. 59, by any of the cases; and in many of them slight corroborating facts were held sufficient." U. S. v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 5, 24, Fed. Cas. No. 16,707. So in People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 347, 40 Pac. 440, it was said, in illustration of the case there under consideration: "A building may be burned under such suspicious circumstances as to indicate the act of an incendiary, and thus a corpus delicti established, and the doors opened for the defendant's admissions and confessions; but there must be some evidence of some kind tending to show the incendiary character of the fire, aside from these admissions and confessions." In the case before us, I think the evidence, though weak and unsatisfactory in particulars capable of more explicit statement, is sufficient to justify the admission of the confessions. The buildings were in fact burned, and the circumstances tended in some degree to indicate that the fire was of incendiary origin, and, therefore, the confessions were in some degree corroborated.

The defendant objected to the admission of evidence that any building was burned other than the one specified in the information. The evidence was admissible in proof of the corpus delicti, and also in corroboration of the confession of the defendant that Spivey, after setting fire to the house, set fire to the barn.

The substance of the alleged confession of the defendant, as testified by Crutcher, was that on Saturday night, about 9 o'clock, he met Spivey, who was in a buggy on the street; that Spivey asked him to take a ride with him into the country; that he got a bottle of whisky, and went with him; that after they had gone some distance he asked Spivey where he was going, and Spivey said he was going out to burn Mr. Cosby's house; that he asked Spivey if he was not afraid of getting into trouble; that Spivey replied, "No; that is all right; Owen Holmes keeps me straight;" that he held the horse while Spivey got out and started to burn the buildings, and set fire to one, and then he got out and tied the horse, and went to where Spivey was; that on the way, either going or returning (the witness did not remember which), Spivey told defendant "that he was to get one hundred dollars from Holmes; that Mr. Cosby was to give Mr. Holmes one hundred dollars, and Holmes was to hire Spivey to do the work." On cross-examination the witness admitted that he expected to get a reward of $300 in case of conviction. L. P. Timmins, a deputy sheriff and keeper of the jail, testified to a statement made to him by the defendant, and which was substantially the same as that testified to by Crutcher, with the addition that, after he got out of the buggy, Spivey set fire to the barn. It is contended that the verdict is not justified by the evidence. Conceding that confessions made to officers after arrest, even when made without solicitation, are evidence of a weak and unsatisfactory character, and conceding further, as to Crutcher, that he not only had the inducement of a reward as a stimulus towards a successful prosecution, but an unfortunate memory as to details, yet defendant's confessions were to some extent corroborated; and there was evidence which, if believed by the jury, justified the verdict.

It is contended, however, that these confessions contained the statement that Spivey was employed by Owen Holmes, Holmes having been employed by Cosby, the owner of the buildings, and that Cosby, the owner, and Spivey, the tenant, had a right to burn the buildings, unless they were burned to defraud some one, and, the intention to defraud not appearing, the alleged confession shows a lawful burning, and that, therefore, the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. It is true, the evidence does not show the value of the buildings, nor whether the insurance had been paid, or the insurance company released. Mr. Cosby was called as a witness on behalf of the prosecution, and testified to his ownership of the property, that Spivey was his tenant, and that the house and barn were insured, but was not asked whether he authorized the buildings to be burned; but on cross-examination he denied that he employed Holmes to procure any one to burn the buildings, or that he suggested the burning, or had anything to do with it. If the jury believed Cosby, they were authorized to conclude that, as he had nothing to do with the fire, it was necessarily unlawful and malicious, unless it was accidental or spontaneous. Holmes was not called by the prosecution, but was called by the defendant, and asked whether he ever offered Spivey or Jones, or procured either of them, or any person, to burn said buildings, or that he would give them $100, or any other sum, to do it. The district attorney objected that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. The court sustained the objection. The defendant then offered "to prove affirmatively the matters stated in the form of a question to the witness," and the court sustained an objection thereto. And to each of these rulings defendant excepted. If the witness had answered the question in the negative, it would not have shown that Spivey did not tell the defendant that Holmes had promised him $100 to burn the building; and, if answered in the affirmative, it would have tended to prove both Spivey and defendant to be guilty; and in that case the defendant was not injured by the ruling. What counsel meant by his offer to "prove affirmatively the matters stated in the question" is not quite clear. If it was to prove that Holmes did agree to pay Spivey for burning the buildings, the evidence would have tended strongly against the defendant, as above suggested, unless the defendant could go further, and prove that Cosby had in fact employed Holmes for that purpose; but defendant had already closed that door by making Cosby his own witness, and proving that he had not authorized Holmes to do any such thing. If it be conceded that the court erred in these rulings, the defendant was not prejudiced.

The testimony of S. C. St. John, the justice of the peace, upon his examination in chief by the district attorney, was confined to what occurred when defendant was arraigned. The question put to the witness as to what the defendant said at the time of his preliminary examination, some days afterwards, was not proper cross-examination, and was properly excluded.

The question put to the defendant upon his examination in chief, whether upon his preliminary examination he did not state that he had nothing to do with the burning of the buildings, and had never told anybody that he had, was admissible, in view of the testimony of Crutcher. But he had already testified positively that he had nothing to do with the burning, and had never told anybody that he had, and knew nothing about it. This covered the ground embraced in the question, and he was not prejudiced by not being permitted to repeat it.

We think the court did not abuse its discretion in directing defendant Jones to be first tried, nor in refusing to permit more than one counsel to argue the case for the defendant. Section 1093 of the Penal Code expressly authorizes the court to restrict the argument to one counsel on each side, except in cases where the offense charged is punishable with death.

Appellant excepts to instructions numbered 22 and 23; to the first, that it leaves out the element that the burning must have been done by the defendant, and that it may have been authorized by the owner without any intention to defraud. Everything which is proper to be said to the jury by the court cannot be well embodied in a single sentence. The question of defendant's agency in the burning was properly and fully presented in other parts of the instruction, which must be taken as a whole, and read together; nor was there any evidence tending to show that Cosby authorized the buildings, or any of them, to be burned, and hence there was no occasion for an instruction of the character suggested.

To the second of said instructions (No. 23) it is objected that "it is error to charge upon the facts of the case," and that the jury are instructed that remaining in the buggy while another applied the match was aiding in the commission of the offense. The court properly instructed the jury that if they found from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant was informed of the object of Spivey in going to the premises, and did hold the horse while he or another set fire to the house, they should find him guilty. This was not an instruction as to how the jury should find the facts to be, but an instruction as to the conclusion that should be drawn if they found the facts stated to be true. It is said that "there is evidence showing that the burning was against defendant's will." We find no evidence of that character.

It is also contended that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions requested by the defendant. All of these, except one, are covered by instructions given, so far as they contain matter that should be given, and were properly refused. One (No. 26) referred to the circumstance, which appeared incidentally, that defendant was under arrest upon some charge, the nature of which was not stated, at the time he was arrested upon the present charge. This specific matter was not embraced expressly in any instruction given, though instructions given so fully and carefully guarded the defendant that it would seem impossible that he should have been injured by the omission. Besides, the instruction requested contained matter which might have misled the jury into the belief that in order to convict they must find that the "defendant burned the dwelling house," thus eliminating the proposition that if he were present, aiding another, he would be guilty.

Other exceptions appear in the record, but, after careful examination, we find none that would justify a reversal of the judgment, or which requires special notice. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v.
THORNTON. (S. F. 1375.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

BILLS AND NOTES—PLEADING—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE.

Where a complaint alleged a cause of action on a note only, a judgment foreclosing a mortgage given to secure the note is not supported by averments in the answer that the note was given in renewal of former notes given by a married woman in her separate business, and secured by mortgage on her separate estate, and is, therefore, erroneous.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society against R. S. Thornton, executor. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

B. B. Newman, for appellant. Tobin & Tobin and Francis Pope, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Upon a former appeal in this case (109 Cal. 427, 42 Pac. 447) a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the promissory note sued on was reversed. After this reversal the cause was again tried, upon the issues presented by the original pleadings and a supplemental answer setting forth the death of the former defendant and the appointment of the appellant as his executor; and the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the foreclosure of a mortgage, and directing a sale of the property therein described, from which the defendant has appealed.

By the complaint herein the plaintiff seeks merely to recover the amount of the promissory note set forth therein, and the appellant contends that a judgment of foreclosure was not authorized. The rule is firmly established in this state that an action cannot be maintained upon a promissory note secured by a mortgage, independent of an action to foreclose the mortgage. The respondent does not dispute this proposition, but seeks to uphold the judgment by reason of certain averments in the answer. It is alleged in the answer that the note sued upon was given in renewal of former notes executed by Elizabeth O'Neill to the plaintiff in transactions relating to the purchases of real estate by her for her own account, and "that, for the purpose of securing the payment of said several promissory notes, the said Elizabeth O'Neill made, executed, and acknowledged, and delivered to the plaintiff, its officers, agents, attorneys, and servants, her several and respective indentures of mortgage upon her said separate real estate so acquired and owned by her." It is contended by the respondent that by this averment the defendant has supplied the defect in the complaint which was requisite to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and has thereby authorized a judgment in foreclosure as fully as though such judgment had been originally sought by the plaintiff; citing in support thereof Cohen v. Knox, 90 Cal. 266, 27 Pac. 215, Shively v. Water Co., 99 Cal. 259, 33 Pac. 848, and other cases. The rule invoked by the respondent does not, however, have any application to the present case. The allegation in the answer is not of a fact which supplies the omission of the plaintiff to aver such fact in the complaint, or which helps out a defective allegation in the complaint, but is of a fact which negatives the plaintiff's right to maintain the action set forth in its complaint. The plaintiff seeks by the complaint herein to recover a general money judgment upon a promissory note, and not to subject any particular property to sale therefor. No particular property is described in either the complaint or the answer; nor does the answer aver that any particular mortgage was executed as security for the note set forth in the complaint, and it does aver that the mortgages which it alleges were executed by Elizabeth O'Neill were upon "her separate real estate." The finding of the court that she "left" no separate estate at her death is not inconsistent with the fact that she executed mortgages upon her separate estate. The answer, moreover, avers that the mortgages therein referred to were made by Elizabeth, while the court finds that the mortgage which it orders to be foreclosed was made by Charles and Elizabeth. Mr. Pomeroy says (Code Rem. § 579), "This rule should properly be confined to the case where the answer affirmatively alleges the very fact that is missing from the complaint." The allegation in the answer can have no greater effect than if the same allegation were placed in the complaint; and it is very evident that, if the complaint had alleged the fact as it is averred in the answer herein, a judgment thereon foreclosing a mortgage upon the property described in the decree could not be sustained. The court, therefore, erred in receiving in evidence the mortgage when it was offered by the plaintiff, and in rendering judgment for its foreclosure. The case of Harden v. Ware, 5 Pac. Coast Law J. 317, cited by the respondent, cannot be regarded as an authority for the proposition contended for by the respondent, since, after the opinion there given was filed, a rehearing in the cause was granted, and subsequently, without any further action by this court, the appeal was dismissed upon the stipulation of the parties. The judgment is reversed.

HOLLIDAY v. HOLLIDAY et al. (L. A. 328.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—PLEADING—FAVORABLE TERMINATION—PROBABLE CAUSE—DISMISSAL OF PROSECUTION—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS—ADVICE OF COUNSEL—DISCLOSURE OF FACTS—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. An allegation in malicious prosecution that plaintiff was discharged on a writ of habeas corpus duly issued and returned, and that the prosecution was wholly ended, sufficiently pleads a final termination of the prosecution favorable to plaintiff, without showing the jurisdiction of the judge to issue the habeas corpus.

2. Under Pen. Code, §§ 701-714, giving a justice of the peace final jurisdiction to bind persons to keep the peace on complaint filed, his finding that there was just reason to fear the commission of the offense threatened, and binding the defendant to keep the peace, is conclusive, in the absence of evidence that the judgment was fraudulently procured, that there was probable cause for the prosecution.

3. Where the court in malicious prosecution stated facts by plaintiff's request which would constitute want of probable cause, and also, by defendant's request, those which constituted probable cause, and instructed the jury that, if they found the former to be true, the plaintiff should recover, and, if the latter were true, then defendant should recover, the insufficiency of the facts stated to constitute lack of probable cause was not misleading, because the jury must have understood that, if the other statement of facts was not proved, then there was a want of probable cause.

4. A dismissal of a prosecution to keep the peace at the suggestion of the district attorney, on being assured by the defendant that she would not molest complainant, and by her attorney that he anticipated no purpose on defendant's part to harm complainants, is not such a dismissal by defendant's procurement as not to be a final termination in her favor.

5. In order that an advice of counsel shall be a defense to malicious prosecution, it is unnecessary that all facts which the prosecutor "could have ascertained by reasonable diligence" should have been disclosed to counsel.

Temple, J., dissenting.

In bank. Reversed.

For opinion in department, see 53 Pac. 43.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover damages for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, based on a proceeding instituted by defendants against plaintiff before a justice of the peace, under the provisions of sections 701-714 of the Penal Code. The complaint contains four counts. The first count alleges that on the 19th day of August, 1895, in the city of Los Angeles, the defendants falsely and maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, charged plaintiff before William Young, a justice of the peace within and for the township of Los Angeles, with having threatened to burn the personal property of defendants, and to shoot, stab, and kill defendants; and that said defendants had just cause to fear the said threats would be carried into execution by said plaintiff if she was not restrained by the court; and procured said justice to issue a warrant for the arrest of plaintiff on said charge; and thereupon plaintiff was arrested under said warrant, and imprisoned in the county jail of Los Angeles county for the space of eight days. It is then alleged "that on the 27th day of August, 1895, upon petition of plaintiff for discharge upon a writ of habeas corpus, which was duly issued and returned, the said plaintiff was discharged from custody, and the said prosecution is wholly ended and determined." The second count alleges that on the 27th day of August, and immediately after plaintiff's discharge, as alleged in the first count, the defendants again procured the said justice to issue a warrant for the arrest of plaintiff upon the same charge set out in the first cause of action, and thereupon she was arrested under said warrant, and imprisoned for three hours until released upon her own recognizance to thereafter appear and answer said charge; and "that on the 31st day of August, at the request of counsel for defendants, and on motion of the district attorney, the plaintiff was discharged from custody without examination, and said prosecution is wholly ended and determined." The third and fourth counts, by the instruction of the court, were withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, and they need not, therefore, be considered. Defendants demurred to each of the counts contained in the complaint, and their demurrer was overruled. They then answered, denying the allegations of the first and second counts relating to malice, want of probable cause, and damage; and, as a further defense to the first count, alleged that after an examination of the charge before the justice of the peace the proceeding was finally determined on August 20th, and, as showing such final determination, set up the following order made by the justice: "It appears to me that there is just reason to fear the commission of the offense within mentioned. I order that you, the said defendant, enter into an undertaking in the sum of one thousand dollars, with two sufficient sureties, to keep the peace towards the people of the state of California, and particularly towards the affiants. Done in open court, this 20th day of August, 1895. Wm. Young, Justice of the Peace." And, in addition to the denials of the allegations of the second count, defendants alleged that they consented to the dismissal of the second proceeding solely for the reason that they and their counsel were assured by the counsel for the plaintiff in this action (the defendant in said proceeding) that she would not carry the threats, for the making of which she was charged, into execution, or otherwise harm or molest the persons or property of defendants. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $500, on which judgment was entered. From that judgment, and an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants have appealed.

The law is well settled that to maintain an action of this kind the plaintiff must allege and affirmatively prove malice and want of probable cause on the part of the defendant in instituting the proceeding which is made the basis of the action, and that the same has been finally determined in favor of the plaintiff. Appellants contend that the allegations in the first count of the complaint—that upon a writ of habeas corpus, which was duly issued and returned, plaintiff was discharged from custody, and the prosecution was wholly ended and determined—were not sufficient to show that the proceeding had been finally determined in favor of the plaintiff, and therefore their demurrer to that count should have been sustained. The argument is that it does not appear that the petition for the writ was presented to any court or judge having jurisdiction to issue the writ, or that an order was made by any court or judge directing the discharge of plaintiff. But it was only necessary to allege that the prosecution had been finally determined, and not the means by which that end was accomplished. The statement that plaintiff was discharged upon a writ of habeas corpus which was duly issued and returned, and the prosecution was wholly ended, should, therefore, we think, be held sufficient. Newell, Mal. Pros. p. 353.

It is further contended that the order of the justice of the peace made August 20th, requiring the plaintiff to enter into an undertaking to keep the peace, was a conclusive determination that there was probable cause for the institution of the proceeding which resulted in the making of such order, and was not subject to collateral attack. And, in accordance with this contention, defendants requested the court to instruct the jury that the order referred to, made by the justice upon the information before him, was "conclusive evidence that there was probable cause for lodging said information and prosecuting said proceeding." The court refused to give the instruction asked, and, at the request of the plaintiff, instructed the jury that "the fact that Justice Young rendered judgment requiring the plaintiff in this action to give bail in the sum of one thousand dollars to keep the peace is no bar to this action by the plaintiff," and that "the defendants cannot shield themselves on the first and second causes of action behind the action of Justice Young in issuing the warrants of arrest and committing plaintiff, if the facts stated in the information were false, and not believed by the defendants to be true." It is insisted by appellants that the court erred in refusing to give the instruction requested by them, and in giving the instruction requested by respondent, and many cases are cited on both sides as to the effect, as conclusive evidence, of judgments and orders of courts. Without reviewing the cases cited, we deem it enough to say that, while there is some apparent conflict in the decisions, the prevailing rule is that when a person is charged before a competent court having jurisdiction of the matter, and is tried and found guilty, the judgment rendered, unless it is shown to have been obtained by means of fraud, is conclusive evidence of probable cause for making the charge, even though it is afterwards held to be unauthorized, and reversed on appeal. See Crescent City Live-Stock Co. v. Butchers' Union Slaughter-House Co., 120 U. S. 141, 7 Sup. Ct. 472, where the cases are reviewed at considerable length. Where, however, the court has not full jurisdiction to try the matter, and to render a judgment upon the merits, as where a justice sits as a committing magistrate with power merely to discharge a defendant or to hold him to answer for trial before a higher tribunal, the order made by the magistrate in such cases, lacking the essentials of a final judgment, is not held conclusive upon the question of probable cause. At the most it is but prima facie evidence. Ganea v. Railroad Co., 51 Cal. 140; Diemer v. Herber, 75 Cal. 287, 17 Pac. 205. In this state, under the proceeding laid down in our Penal Code, the justice of the peace has full and complete jurisdiction over that peculiar form of preventive justice known as the proceeding for security to keep the peace. Pen. Code, §§ 701-714. The magistrate's determination that there is just reason to fear the commission of the offense justifies his order in putting the accused person under bonds to keep the peace, and, in the event of his failure to give the required bonds, then to order him committed to jail. From this order no appeal lies. The justice's jurisdiction is as complete as it is in cases of battery, petty larceny, and other like misdemeanors. His conclusion is, so far as the defendant is concerned, a final determination upon the merits of the controversy, and his order that the accused person stand committed contains all the essentials of a final judgment. In a sense the proceeding is an examination, but it is confusing so to employ the word which, under our system, is regularly used to denote the mere preliminary inquiry by a magistrate into the circumstances of a felonious charge concerning which his sole power is to hold the defendant over to answer. Respondent, however, relies upon the case of Johnston v. Meaghr, 14 Utah, 426, 47 Pac. 861, where a contrary rule is announced; but the cases cited by the court to support the proposition fail to do so. They refer either to examinations upon charges amounting to felony, or to a different procedure, which prevails in some of the states, where the justice sits in a peace proceeding strictly as a committing magistrate. Such is the case of Hyde v. Greuch, 62 Md. 577. Under the Maryland procedure, when proper affidavit is made before a justice in a peace proceeding, it becomes that officer's duty at once to cause the arrest of the accused person, and without examination to bind him over to make his appearance before the next circuit court, there to receive what the court may impose on him. Where such a system obtains it is quite obvious that the order of the justice of the peace is precisely similar to the order of a justice with us in holding an accused person to answer upon a charge of felony, and that it contains none of the elements of a final judgment. The appellants' contention on this point, therefore, must be sustained, as there was no evidence that the order of the justice was procured by fraud, and without such evidence it conclusively established the existence of probable cause for the prosecution of the first proceeding, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff was afterwards discharged from her imprisonment under a writ of habeas corpus.

In actions of this character, what constitutes probable cause is always a question of law for the court. As said in Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937: "Malice is always a question of fact for the jury, but whether the defendant had or had not probable cause for instituting the prosecution is always a matter of law to be determined by the court. If the facts upon which the defendant acted are undisputed, the court, according as it shall be of the opinion that they constituted probable cause or not, either will order a nonsuit (or direct a verdict for the defendant), or it will submit the other issues to the jury; but, whether admitted or disputed, the question is still one of law to be determined by the court from the facts established in the case. If the facts are controverted, they must be passed upon by the jury before the court can determine the issue of probable cause; but the question of probable cause can never be left to the determination of the jury. * * * The court cannot divest itself of its duty to determine this question, however complicated or numerous may be the facts. It must instruct the jury upon this subject in the concrete, and not in the abstract, and must not leave to that body the office of determining the question, but must itself determine it, and direct the jury to find its verdict in accordance with such determination. The court should group in its instructions the facts which the evidence tends to prove, and then instruct the jury that, if they find such facts to be established, there was or was not probable cause, as the case may be, and that their verdict must be accordingly." In accordance with the law as above declared, the court, at the request of plaintiff, very briefly and meagerly grouped the facts which would constitute a want of probable cause, and instructed the jury that, if they found those facts to be true, the verdict should be in favor of the plaintiff. And at the request of defendants the court very fully grouped the facts which the evidence tended to prove, and instructed the jury that, if they found those facts to be true, then they constituted probable cause for lodging the information against plaintiff and her arrest and prosecution, and the verdict should be for defendants on both causes of action. It is objected that the facts, as grouped at request of plaintiff, were insufficient to show a want of probable cause, and that this was a fatal error, which calls for a reversal. But all of the instructions must be read together, and, when so read, we fail to see that the jury could have been misled. The jury must be presumed to have understood that if the facts, as grouped at the request of defendants, were not found to be true, then there necessarily must have been a want of probable cause. It is essential to the maintenance of an action such as this that the proceeding complained of should have been finally terminated, and terminated in plaintiff's favor. The court instructed the jury that the dismissal by the justice on the motion of the district attorney, on August 31, 1895, was a sufficient termination of the second prosecution for the purposes of the action. Appellants complain of this instruction, and insist that the evidence discloses that the dismissal of the second proceeding was at the procurement of the accused, and under her promise to refrain from committing the injuries which she had threatened. It is, of course, true that the dismissal of a charge at the procurement of the accused cannot be construed as such a final determination of the matter in her favor as to support an action for malicious prosecution. Langford v. Railroad Co., 144 Mass. 431, 11 N. E. 697; McCormick v. Sisson, 7 Cow. 715. But, as we read the evidence, it cannot be successfully contended that the dismissal of the second prosecution was by the procurement of the plaintiff. The testimony upon the matter is the testimony of the attorney who represented her in the peace proceeding. The deputy district attorney asked if the accused could give bail, and her attorney replied "No," that she could not give a dollar of bail. The deputy district attorney then said: "Mr. Jones, if you will answer that the woman will not do any damage, we will let her go on her own recognizance." To this Mr. Jones replied (quoting from his testimony): "Why, certainly, I have no idea that she has any intention of harming these defendants, and I will make that answer for her," and I did. I then asked her to state, and I think she did state to Justice Young, that she would not do any harm at all, and thereupon Justice Young released her on her own recognizance." Some days later the proceeding was dismissed upon the motion of the complainants represented by the deputy district attorney, upon the mere statement of this plaintiff's attorney that "Mrs. Holliday would not molest the defendants or their property, and that they need not have any fears of her doing so." As the facts which we have recited stand in the record without conflict, we think the court was justified as matter of law in instructing the jury that there was a sufficient determination of the second prosecution in plaintiff's favor.

The court also, at the request of plaintiff, instructed the jury as follows: "The defendants rely upon the advice of counsel as one of their defenses to the causes of action for malicious prosecution, and upon this point the court instructs the jury that whether or not the defendants did, before instituting the proceedings, make a full, fair, and honest statement to their attorneys of all the material facts bearing upon the facts stated in the informations laid before Justice Young, of which they had knowledge, or which they could have ascertained by reasonable diligence, and whether in commencing such proceedings the defendants were acting in good faith upon the advice of their counsel, are questions of fact to be determined by the jury from all the evidence and circumstances proven in the case; and, if the jury believe from the evidence that the defendants did not make a full, fair, and honest statement of such facts to their counsel, then such advice cannot avail them anything in this suit." By this instruction the court, in effect, charged the jury that when, in an action for malicious prosecution, the defendant relies upon the advice of counsel as a defense for instituting the proceedings complained of, he must, in order to avail himself of that defense, prove to the satisfaction of the jury that before instituting the proceeding he made a full, fair, and honest statement to his counsel of all the material facts bearing upon the charge of which he had knowledge, or which he could have ascertained by reasonable diligence, and that he acted in good faith upon the advice of the counsel. In Dunlap v. Insurance Co., 109 Cal. 365, 42 Pac. 29, instructions of similar import were given by the court, and held to be erroneous, and for the error in giving them the judgment was reversed. The court, after a review of the authorities, said: "Assuming that in seeking the advice of counsel, and in acting thereon, he has acted in good faith, and has disclosed all the facts within his knowledge relating to the defense and the accusation, his defense of probable cause will be established, even though the defendant should show at the trial other facts sufficient to secure his acquittal, and which might have been ascertained by the prosecuting witness if he had made diligent inquiry therefor. It is not necessary that he shall institute an investigation of the crime itself, or seek to ascertain whether there are other facts relating to the offense, or try to find out whether the accused has any defense to the charge. He is not required to exhaust all sources of information bearing upon the facts which have come to his knowledge, for that would be to require him to perform the office of the committing magistrate, and thus thwart the very purpose of the law in inducing him to seek its immediate vindication for crimes committed against it. There are expressions in some opinions to the effect that, in addition to the facts within his knowledge, he must also have exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain whether there are any other facts bearing upon the charge; but in an extended examination of the authorities we have not been able to find any case in which it has been decided that such diligence must be exercised, or where the prosecuting witness has been held liable for failure to ascertain whether there were any other facts bearing upon the case." The case of Sandell v. Sherman, 107 Cal. 391, 40 Pac. 493, cited by counsel for respondent, does not sustain their claim that the instruction under review was not erroneous. In that case an instruction was given which stated that if the defendants "made a full and fair statement of all the facts of that case to their counsel," and he advised, etc., and they acted on his advice, "it is a good defense in this case." It was urged that the instruction was erroneous, for the reason, among others, "that it does not charge that they should have stated to the attorney all the facts within their knowledge, or which they reasonably could have obtained." But, tested by the general rule in such cases, the court failed to see any serious objection to the instruction, and held it to be sufficient.

Following the law as declared in the Dunlap Case, it must be held here that the instruction under review was erroneous in so far as it charged, in effect, that the defendants could not avail themselves of the advice of counsel unless the jury should find from all the evidence and circumstances proven in the case that before instituting the proceedings they made a full, fair, and honest statement to their attorneys of all the material facts bearing upon the case "which they could have ascertained by reasonable diligence." For the errors above noted, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

McCALL v. PACIFIC MAIL S. S. CO. et al.
(S. F. 741.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1898.)

PERSONAL INJURY—MASTER AND SERVANT—CONTRACTOR'S LIABILITY—APPLIANCES—REASONABLE CARE.

1. Where a steamship company furnished appliances to a contractor with which to load its vessels, it is liable to the contractor's servants for injuries caused by its failure to use reasonable care in the selection of such appliances.

2. A contractor is not liable to his employes for injuries resulting from the use of defective appliances, unless he had the right to select them.

3. A steamship company furnished a contractor with slings with which to load its ships. The contractor's employes, who were experienced, examined the slings, using such care as is usually exercised by men in that employment, rejected two as defective, and accepted the others. In using one of those accepted, a rope broke, because of a latent defect in the sling, and injured an employe. Held that, since ordinary care had been exercised in selecting the slings before they were used, neither the company nor the contractor was liable for the injury.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court of city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Thomas McCall against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and Henry Bingham. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants separately appeal. Reversed.

T. C. Coogan, for appellants. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company and Henry Bingham had contracted, the latter to load and discharge the cargoes of the company's ships, the former to furnish the power and appliances necessary for the work. Pursuant to their contract, Bingham was loading flour on one of the company's vessels, when a sling in which the flour was hoisted onto and lowered into the ship gave way; and plaintiff, who was stowing cargo in the hold, was severely injured by falling sacks. Plaintiff was a stevedore in the employ of Bingham. He sued Bingham and the company jointly, and obtained a judgment against both. They prosecute separate appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying a new trial.

In accordance with the contract, the steamship company had furnished Bingham's employes (Bingham not being personally present) with six slings to be used in hoisting the cargo. Upon receiving the slings, Bingham's men, according to their habit, examined them, and, rejecting two as defective, accepted four as fit for use. It was one of these four slings so accepted, which, breaking, caused plaintiff's injuries. The cause of the break was a latent defect in the rope attached to the sling. This rope, while sound to superficial observation, was for a foot or more of its length affected by a dry rot, which greatly impaired its strength. Bingham had absolute control over his employes, and over the conduct of the work.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant the Pacific Mail Steamship Company that these facts exonerate it from liability to the plaintiff in this action; that, even if it failed to exercise the due amount of care in the selection and furnishing of appliances, it was a breach only of its contract with Bingham; that there was no contractual privity between it and this plaintiff, and no duty owing by it to plaintiff, since between it and plaintiff the relation of employer and employe did not exist. But the rule is too firmly settled to be open to successful attack, that, where one agrees to furnish to a contractor material or appliances which he is to use in the performance of his task, the principal is liable to the servants and agents of the contractor for injuries which may result to them from his negligence or inadequate performance of his contract in this regard. The liability is not based upon the relationship of employer and employe, but it is considered by some courts that the contract is made with the contractor for the benefit of his employes, who have, therefore, their right to a recovery for any breach of it which results in their injury. By other courts the contractor is considered to be the dependent agent of his employer in these respects, and the doctrine of respondent superior is brought into application. By still others it is placed upon the ground of the failure of the principal to exercise the ordinary care which is due to everybody, without regard to contract, under the principles announced in sections 1708, 1714, and 3281 of the Civil Code, and this seems to be the true reason for the rule. But, however that may be, the principle itself is settled beyond the possibility of successful controversy. Mecham, Ag. § 666, thus declares the doctrine: "If the principal was by the terms of the contract under obligations to the contractor to furnish the necessary machinery or appliances, or to supply a portion of the labor, he would be liable to the servant or agent of the contractor for an injury sustained by reason of his neglect to use due and reasonable care in selecting and supplying the proper machinery or appliances." In further support of the principle may be cited the cases of Mulchey v. Society, 125 Mass. 487; Lee v. Railway Co., 116 Cal. 97, 47 Pac. 932; McKenna v. The Carolina, 30 Fed. 199; Coughlan v. The Rhelola, 19 Fed. 926; Hamilton v. The Wm. Branfoot, 48 Fed. 914; Roddy v. Railway Co., 104 Mo. 234, 15 S. W. 1112; Steel v. McNeil, 8 C. C. A. 512, 60 Fed. 105; Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 Mich. 492; Kelly v. Howell, 41 Ohio St. 438; Coughtry v. Woolen Co., 56 N. Y. 124.

Upon behalf of appellant Bingham it is first insisted that, under the contract shown, if liability attaches to anyone for the injury sustained by plaintiff, it is to the steamship company, and not to himself, or that, if liability attaches to him, it does not to the steamship company, and that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant. This gives rise to a question whose determination, though far from unimportant, we think unnecessary in this consideration; but upon it this much may be said: It has been pointed out in Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017, that a contractor can be held liable by his employes for injury resulting from the use of defective materials in the work only when he has the right of selecting the materials. "If he is to perform the contract with only such materials as may have been previously selected and furnished by his employer, he cannot be held liable for any defect in such materials. These principles are, however, subject to the rule that this right of selection and control is to be determined by the terms of the contract of employment, and that, unless by the contract this right is reserved to the employer, the contractor will be presumed to have the right of selection and control." Applying this well-settled principle to the contract in the case at bar, if it was the duty of the steamship company to furnish these appliances, and the corresponding duty of the contractor to use the appliances furnished, without discretion as to their fitness or suitability, then, for the reasons which we have been considering, there would be no joint liability, and the steamship company alone would be responsible; the contractor being considered in this regard as its dependent agent, or the employé of the stevedore being held to have the right to complain of the steamship company for any tort upon himself or his property occasioned by the company's negligent performance of its contract, or, finally, the steamship company being held liable for the breach of an obligation imposed by law,—that of exercising due care to prevent injury to the person or property of another in the management of its affairs. But if, however, a discretion was left to the contractor, Bingham, and, while the steamship company was obliged to furnish suitable appliances, Bingham reserved the right of examination and rejection, and of compelling the company to supply proper appliances, then, clearly, Bingham would not be exonerated from liability to his employés for his failure to exercise due care in this respect. Du Pratt v. Lick, 38 Cal. 692. It appears from the evidence that the construction put upon the contract by the parties to it gave to Bingham the right of selection and rejection, and that in the case of these slings such right was actually exercised. In this respect, then, the case would be very similar to that of Riley v. Steamship Co., 29 La. Ann. 791. The steamship company had hired an experienced stevedore under a contract to load and unload its vessel. He had full control of the work, and employed and absolutely controlled his own laborers. The vessel, as in this case, furnished the hoisting apparatus, which broke, and killed one of the stevedore's employés. In an action against the steamship company for damages, it was insisted that, as the vessel, under its contract, was to furnish and did furnish the hoisting apparatus, the company was responsible for any loss or damage resulting from its defects, and that in point of fact it was old, worn-out, and unfit for use. The court say: "In a case like this, we think the utmost extent of the liability of the company would be that they should employ a stevedore of experience and good repute, and that the tackle furnished on his requisition should be apparently good, satisfactory to the stevedore, and such as is usually furnished for like purposes." See, also, the cases of Power v. Benbrack, 33 Fed. 687; Kenny v. The Dago, 31 Fed. 574; King v. Railroad Co., 66 N. Y. 181; Roddy v. Railway Co., 104 Mo. 234, 15 S. W. 1112.

But, without pursuing this inquiry further, we are satisfied that the judgment must be reversed for a total failure of the evidence to show negligence upon the part of either of the defendants. By all the testimony in the case, the slings were examined by competent and experienced stevedores in Bingham's employ. The manner of examination was that usually adopted, and the care bestowed was that usually exercised by men in the like character of employment, and, in the experience of those men, was shown to be sufficient to avoid accident, though upon this last point some offered evidence was rejected which should have been admitted. Ordinary care, then, was exercised in the selection of the sling before it was put into use. It broke, as has been said, because of a latent defect, not discernible under an examination conducted with ordinary care. These facts would entirely exonerate Bingham from responsibility, conceding that he was properly chargeable in this action; and these facts would also exonerate the steamship company, for it would matter not whether it had or had not examined the slings before they were put into use, if in fact the slings were properly examined by competent persons and approved. An ordinary examination by the steamship company's agents would have disclosed no more than was disclosed by the examination made by the stevedores, and, for all that appears in the record, such an examination may have in fact been made (there is no proof to the contrary) before the slings were tendered to Bingham's men. And it is still to be remembered that the slings were merely tendered with the right of rejection to Bingham's men, which right was freely exercised without objection upon the part of the steamship company in this very case. The judgment and order are, therefore, reversed, and the cause remanded.

SAN FRANCISCO SAV. UNION v. LONG et al. (S. F. 1,041.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1893.)

INTERPLEADER—DISMISSAL OF PLAINTIFF—ATTORNEYS—APPEARANCE—PRESUMPTION OF AUTHORITY—LIFE INSURANCE—RESERVE FUND—RIGHTS OF BENEFICIARIES—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

1. Where a bank interpleaded several parties in relation to the ownership of a fund in its hands, and defendants, without taking issue with plaintiff as to its right to compel them to interplead, litigated their claims thereto, and an interlocutory decree dismissing plaintiff from the cause was entered, plaintiff was released from performance of any contract in relation thereto, and defendants could not afterwards object to plaintiff's dismissal on payment of the fund into court.

2. Until the contrary appears, an attorney's authority is always presumed where he appears in a party's behalf.

3. Though an attorney's authority is presumed on his appearance in a party's behalf, the court may always require evidence thereof.

4. St. 1891, p. 126, § 2, of the act relating to assessment insurance companies, provides, inter alia, that a mutual assessment life insurance company shall not do business until 200 applicants for membership or insurance have paid the company's treasurer $5,000, which shall be invested, and placed with the state treasurer, and the principal sum held in trust for the contract holders of the company. Section 4 provides that the amounts due on policies shall be a lien on the company's property, with priority over all subsequent debts, except as hereinafter provided in cases of insolvency. Section 5 requires it to create a reserve fund, to be invested as directed in section 2, and, when the company discontinued business, to be returned to the corporation, or disposed of as the court might determine. There is no provision regarding its insolvency, but section 10 revokes its power to insure for failure to carry out its "terms of contract," or for failure to pay its obligations within three months from notice of default. Held, that sections 2 and 5 provide for the creation of a reserve fund for the security of beneficiaries only in case of a company's insolvency, with the intention that it should then go to them regardless of general creditors.

5. Beneficiaries equally entitled to a reserve fund on the insolvency of a company are not concluded from asserting their rights thereto by a judgment against the company establishing a lien thereon in favor of a beneficiary.

In bank.

For opinion in department, see 53 Pac. 907.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action of interpleader brought by the plaintiff, a savings bank, to have sundry claimants to a deposit in the bank litigate among themselves, and have determined to whom the money should be paid. In such cases there may always be a twofold contest: First, as to the right of the plaintiff to bring the suit and to force the defendants to interplead; and, if such right is maintained, the litigation among the defendants. There may be two sets of pleadings: First, those having reference only to the right of the plaintiff to compel the defendants to interplead; and the several complaints of the defendants, in which their respective rights to the subject in controversy are set up. These may be, and usually are, included in the answer to the bill of interpleader. Such answer is then in the nature of a cross complaint, and should be served upon each defendant, who may answer the same. Whether the plaintiff shall be permitted to maintain such an action is first determined, and, if his right is sustained, an interlocutory decree is entered, requiring the defendants to litigate their claims inter sese.

In this case no defendant in his pleadings took issue with the plaintiff as to its right to compel the parties to interplead. Some allegations of fact were controverted because not sufficiently favorable to some special defendant. But those who appeared set out their respective rights as against the others, and upon this state of facts the interlocutory decree was entered, and the plaintiff, having deposited the money in court, was dismissed from the case. Now, certain defendants object that a proper case, showing the right of plaintiff to compel the defendants to interplead, is not stated in the complaint, and that it was error to allow the plaintiff to pay the money into court, and thereupon to be dismissed from the case; and it is contended that to dismiss the plaintiff from the case works a discontinuance of the action. The complaint shows that "conflicting claims," are made with reference to the deposit, and there can be no doubt of the right of plaintiff to maintain an action, under section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have them determined. The bank was not, however, a mere stakeholder. It was a party to a contract, which is shown by the certificate issued by it, by the statutes relating to such corporations, and by its by-laws and rules. The certificate was on its face payable "at the expiration of a term of not less than six months from the time that notice of demand of payment thereof shall have been given to said corporation in writing at its office." Of course, the plaintiff could not aver that any such notice or demand had been made by the owner of the certificate, for it averred that it was unable to determine such ownership. But when, as here, all parties come in, and, without objection, make up their pleadings and litigate their claims, we feel warranted in holding that all consent to the remedy sought, and to the payment into court and consequent dismissal as to plaintiff. They have consented to release plaintiff from the further performance of its contract, and have given it the position of a mere stakeholder.

The controversy is between beneficiaries and members of the defendant corporation, the Home Benefit Life Association, which was organized in 1880, and until 1894 was continuously engaged in a life insurance business upon the assessment plan. In 1891, at which time the corporation had a great many members and numerous contracts or policies outstanding, an act was passed by the legislature entitled "An act relating to life, health, accident and annuity or endowment insurance on the assessment plan and the conduct of the business of insurance" (St. 1891, p. 126), which contained the following provisions:

"Sec. 2. Corporations may be formed under the general laws of this state to carry on the business of mutual insurance upon the assessment plan, and shall be subject only to the provisions of this act. No such corporation shall issue contracts of insurance until at least two hundred (200) persons have applied, in writing, for membership or insurance therein, and have paid the treasurer of such corporation the sum of five thousand (5,000) dollars. This sum shall be invested in bonds or securities, approved by the insurance commissioner of this state, or deposited in some bank in this state where it will earn interest. Said bonds or securities, or evidences of such deposit, shall be placed, through the insurance commissioner of this state, with the state treasurer, and the principal sum shall be held in trust for the contract holders of such corporation, with the right in the corporation to exchange such bonds, securities or evidence of bank deposit for others of like value. Such corporation shall also, as a condition precedent to issuing any contracts of insurance, obtain the written certificate of the insurance commissioner that it has complied with the requirements of this act; and that the name of the corporation is not the same as that of any other corporation of this or other states, as indicated by the insurance department reports in his office; nor shall the commissioner approve any name or title so closely resembling another as to mislead the public. No corporation formed hereunder shall have legal existence after one year from the date of its articles, unless its organization has been completed and business commenced; nor shall any corporation or individual solicit, or cause to be solicited, any business, until such corporation shall have complied with the provisions of section six hundred and thirty-three of the Political Code of this state.

"Sec. 3. Any existing corporation engaged in transacting the business of life, health, accident or endowment insurance, on the assessment plan, may reincorporate under the provisions of the Civil Code of this state, and under the provisions of this act: provided, that it shall not be obligatory upon such corporation to re-incorporate; and any such existing corporation may continue to exercise all rights, powers and privileges conferred by this act, the same as if incorporated hereunder."

In section 4 it is provided that the amounts specified in the contracts (policies) shall be paid as therein named, "and such indebtedness shall be a lien upon all the property of such corporation with priority over all indebtedness thereafter incurred, except as hereinafter provided in case of insolvency." Furthermore, a failure to make such payment within 30 days after notice provided would constitute a forfeiture of the right to do business.

In section 5 the corporation is required, within one year after the passage of the act, to create an emergency or reserve fund, not less than the largest benefit contracted to be paid, to be invested as directed in section 2. When the corporation should discontinue business, this fund was to be returned to the corporation, or disposed of "as may be determined by the superior court of the county."

The act contains no provision in regard to the insolvency of the corporation, but in section 10 a procedure is provided for revoking its authority to do business, when it is carrying on a fraudulent or unlawful business, is not carrying out "its terms of contract," or cannot within three months from the notice of default pay its obligations.

Pursuant to the act, the corporation, on March 15, 1892, deposited with plaintiff $5,000, and took a special certificate of deposit, and caused the same, through the insurance commissioner, to be placed in the state treasury, and plaintiff was immediately notified of the assignment to the state treasurer. In September, 1894, the corporation defendant ceased to do business, being then indebted to the beneficiaries of deceased members in the sum of $55,000, and having more than 100 living members. Many suits were then pending against it, and some judgments had been obtained, and each sought to establish his right to the fund, which was about all the property the association had. This action was then brought against about 125 defendants, including the insurance association, the insurance commissioner, and the state treasurer. Answers and cross complaints were put in by some of the defendants. Mr. Spelling appeared and answered for a great number of them. Other attorneys subsequently appeared, and answered for some of these defendants, without having been substituted. As to Mrs. Mills and the defendant corporation, it is now contended on the part of Meisel and Gower, who were at the time also clients of Spelling, that they were not represented at the trial. Of course, this involves the proposition that Spelling was not authorized to appear as their attorney. It is now practically admitted that Meisel is but a representative of Mrs. Koneke, who is still represented by Spelling; and Gower, so far as the conduct of the case is concerned, seems also in accord, although having an apparently adverse claim.

It is always presumed, until the contrary appears, that an attorney is duly authorized to appear for and represent any parties for whom he assumes to act. This confidence, which underlies all judicial action in this country, rests not only upon a belief in the honor and integrity of the attorney, but upon the fact that he is a sworn officer of the court. There can scarcely be a more gross violation of the duty of an attorney than knowingly and willfully to appear for and represent a party to an action without authority. And it is especially so if the person for whom the unauthorized appearance is made has not been served, and does not know that an attempt is being made to obtain a judgment against him. In this case we are satisfied that the unauthorized appearance was unintentional, and, as we are assured, resulted from a mistake made in copying and filling out the rough draft of the answer. I think the judgment must be reversed on other grounds, and it is not necessary to pursue this matter further. Although the authority of an attorney is taken for granted, yet the court can always require evidence of his authorization, and in the trial court these matters may all be put right.

An appeal is taken by the defendant corporation. It is hinted by indirection that the attorney assuming to act for the corporation was not and could not have been authorized to appear for the association. If a direct charge to that effect were made, this court might feel called upon to require the attorney to show his employment. Unless parties are prepared to do so, such grave insinuations should not be made.

The insurance association on May 1, 1886, issued to one Samuel T. Murrey a certificate of membership by which, conditioned upon previous performance on the part of the member, it contracted to pay at his death $6,000 to Mrs. Murrey. Murrey died September 29, 1886, and in 1888 Mrs. Murrey commenced an action against the corporation on the contract of insurance. Mrs. Murrey, then Mrs. Mills, recovered judgment May 17, 1892, for $8,255.08. An appeal was taken to this court, and W. H. Chickering and F. C. Havens were sureties on the appeal bond. The judgment was affirmed, on appeal, December 26, 1894. After the remittitur was sent down the judgment was paid, $4,310.10 being paid by the sureties. October 8, 1896, Chickering and Havens assigned to one Shoup all their right and title to the judgment and their claim and lien upon the assets of the corporation. Neither Shoup, Chickering, nor Havens was made defendant in the original complaint, nor does the record here show how Shoup became a party defendant, or was entitled to file a cross complaint, or to be heard in regard to the disposition of the fund. The court found, however, that Mrs. Mills "acquired a lien, securing her claim, arising, as aforesaid, upon the money paid into court by the plaintiff immediately upon its deposit with the plaintiff by said Home Benefit Life Association," etc. The fund, to the extent of $4,310.10, with interest from the date of payment by Chickering and Havens, was awarded to Shoup. The residue was given to Mrs. Koneke. Mrs. Koneke recovered a judgment against the association March 23, 1896, establishing and foreclosing a lien upon the money in bank and upon the certificate of deposit. Under this decree a receiver was appointed to take and sell the property, and the certificate of deposit was actually delivered to the receiver, and such receiver then, under the order of the court, assigned and delivered the certificate to Mrs. Koneke, upon condition that she would credit the full amount due upon the certificate upon her judgment. This was done; but subsequently, by some means, the receiver again came into possession of the certificate, and formally sold it as personal property is sold under execution, and appellant Meisel became the purchaser. Both Koneke and Meisel now claim the entire fund, and each has appealed from the judgment. Meisel and Gower also appeal from the order refusing a new trial.

Quite a number of appellants were members of the corporation at the time it suspended business. They contend that the fund was solely for the benefit of members, and not for the creditors, and therefore could not be subject to a lien for debts or to execution for the debts of the corporation. Many appellants are beneficiaries of deceased members. The aggregate amount of such claims is about $55,000. They contend that the fund was for the benefit of such creditors, but not subject to execution or to the lien provided in section 4, but, in case the corporation became insolvent, it was to be disposed of by the court to the beneficiaries of the fund. They contend for a pro rata division among the creditors.

It is claimed that Gower has a lien second only to that of Mrs. Koneke. Shoup, of course, contends that his assignors were subrogated to the rights of Mrs. Mills, when, as sureties upon the appeal taken by the corporation, they were compelled to pay a portion of Mrs. Mills' judgment against the corporation. Their right to be thus subrogated is strenuously resisted. But, under the view I take of the matter, it is not necessary to determine the very many difficult and much argued points involved in the contention in regard to priority of the Mills and the Koneke claimants; for, in my judgment, neither has any claim to priority over the other or over other beneficiaries. Included in the act are health, accident, annuity, and endowment companies, as well as life insurance. In all except life insurance, the corporation contracts, in certain events, to pay money to living contract holders or members. The statute does not otherwise designate the purpose for which the fund is designed, than that it "shall be held in trust for the contract holders of such corporation, with the right in the corporation to exchange such bonds, securities, or evidence of bank deposits for others of like value." No mode is provided by which the fund can be subjected to the payment of any demands of the contract holders, nor is there a mode for replenishing the fund when it has once been depleted. In all the corporations which come within the purview of the act, a fund is provided for the payment of benefits, annuities, or insurances; that provided in the life insurance companies being, as the terms of the act indicate, by assessments upon the surviving members. Since, therefore, the special fund provided was to be held by the state treasurer for the benefit of contract holders, and no provision was made for a resort to it in any event, and no mode provided for keeping it up, it is to be presumed that it was not to be resorted to, under ordinary circumstances, by those whose claims are made payable only out of other specified funds. For this reason it was placed out of the reach of the officers of the corporation. It was set apart for a specific purpose, and taken out of the available assets of the corporation.

In section 5 of the act the corporation is required to accumulate an emergency or reserve fund "not less than the largest benefit contracted to be paid any one person." It must be invested as directed in section 2, and the fund there provided may be added to and made part of the emergency or reserve fund. Of course, under this permit, it always would be made a part of the last-named fund, and when the largest benefit does not exceed $5,000 there would be no other fund. The statute does not state for what emergency this fund is provided, nor does it provide a mode by which it can be used, except that when the corporation shall discontinue business this fund shall be returned to such corporation, or so disposed of as may be determined by the superior court of the county. It is evident that this fund, which might, and therefore would, include the fund provided for in section 2, was provided solely for the emergency arising when the corporation should cease to do business. This express provision as to the mode in which it could be made available negatives all claim that there was any other. Of course, the lien provided for in section 4 could not extend to it, notwithstanding the very general language of that section. In case of insolvency, by the very terms of the statute, the priority of the lien claimants should cease. If the corporation was not insolvent, there could be no occasion for the enforcement of a lien; for by the terms of the contract the beneficiary was to be paid by the assessment to be levied upon the death of a member. The failure of the corporation to pay, as provided by section 4, must be the insolvency provided for, as it is also the occasion upon which the funds can be resorted to as provided in section 5.

As to existing corporations and contracts, it may well be doubted whether the legislature could provide such a fund for the payment of benefits in a going concern. The scheme is the reverse of the tontine system. The contract holder first to die will have paid no death assessment. The one who survives to the last will pay many assessments. If the fund could be reached by the first beneficiary, contract holders will be forced to contribute contrary to the terms of their contracts. Whether the legislature could require the creation of a reserve fund to be available in case of insolvency is a different question. But if it can be used to pay benefits due from the corporation while solvent, instead of resorting to assessment, it impairs the obligation of contracts between the members and the corporation. It is not to be presumed that the legislature intended to do this. It is said that in the case of Kruger v. Association, 106 Cal. 98, 39 Pac. 213, this court held that the lien of such a claim did extend to this fund. The only appellant there was the state treasurer, who insisted that the suit was in effect an action against the state, and could not be maintained. Other points were not maturely considered. The court says that it does not there appear that there were other contract holders; that is, that there were other beneficiaries. If there were no other beneficiaries, and the corporation had ceased to do business, why should plaintiff not have the money, as directed by the superior court? It was not necessary in such a case to establish a lien. I think no lien was created upon this fund. It was placed in the state treasury, subject to be disposed of only by the superior court upon the happening of the emergency provided for, to wit, when the corporation should cease to do business. If, when it ceased to do business, there were no outstanding liabilities, the fund would be returned to the corporation.

If these views are correct, it must follow that Mrs. Mills had no lien upon the fund to which the assignors of Shoup could be subrogated. It also must follow that Koneke had no lien to foreclose. Her judgment would, however, not having been appealed from, be conclusive of her rights so far as the corporation was concerned. Does it bind also the beneficiaries of deceased members? A judgment against a going corporation necessarily concludes every one, as to the property of the corporation, so far as the property can be reached by ordinary process. But when the corporation has ceased to do business, and the proceeding is to appropriate funds which are for the security of creditors only in case of insolvency, it is a different matter. The corporation, as such, has no interest in the question as to which creditor shall have the fund. The creditors have several interests, and must be brought in. Koneke's judgment establishing her lien does not, therefore, bind the other beneficiaries. The state treasurer could assert the existence of their claims, and ask that they be brought in for his protection, but he cannot represent them in a suit to dispose of the fund.

There is nothing in the contracts appearing here, nor in the rules and by-laws of the association, providing for any payments in any event by the corporation to the living contract holders. To divide the fund among the members per capita would not be to apply it for their benefit as contract holders. The fund must be for the purpose of securing, wholly or partially, in some event, the performance of their contracts by the corporation. In the case of endowments or annuities, it would then be divided among living contract holders. In this case it must go to their beneficiaries. They are the persons for whose benefit the contracts were made. Although the fund here is created in quite another mode, yet the rights of the claimants to an equal or pro rata distribution of it are precisely like those of the creditors in the case of Winchester v. Mabury (recently decided by this court) 55 Pac. 393. There being no provision giving any creditor priority or preference, it should be divided in proportion to their respective claims. The general creditors, of course, cannot share in the division, the fund being for policy holders only. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with this opinion. If all the necessary parties are not before the court, they should be brought in.

GLOCK v. HOWARD & WILSON COLONY CO. (Sac. 367.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1898.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES—RESCISSION—RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS.

1. Civ. Code, §§ 2306, 2307, declaring the damages recoverable for breach of a contract to convey land, apply only to the legal redress to which the parties are entitled, and do not affect their rights to equitable relief. Per Henshaw, McFarland, and Temple, JJ.

2. A vendor of land is entitled to retain money paid by the vendee on account of the price as liquidated damages, after the vendee's breach, whether they are so designated in the contract or not. Per Henshaw, McFarland, and Temple, JJ.

3. A purchaser of land in default for failure to pay the purchase price as stipulated cannot rescind the contract in the absence of equitable grounds entitling him so to do, so as to entitle him to recover installments paid, without the vendor's consent. Per Henshaw, McFarland, and Temple, JJ.

4. Where the purchaser of land failed to pay within the stipulated time, which was declared to be of the essence of the contract, he cannot acquire a right to recover the payments made by a subsequent tender of the amount due, which the vendor refused, without showing equitable grounds excusing his breach of contract.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Madera county.

Action by Charles A. Glock against the Howard & Wilson Colony Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. E. Rhodes, for appellant. R. L. Hargrove, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to recover from the corporation defendant moneys paid by plaintiff on a contract for the purchase and sale of a tract of land situated in the then county of Fresno, now in the county of Madera. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals therefrom, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial. The appeal is supported by a bill of exceptions. The facts, briefly stated, are the following: On the 21st day of February, 1891, the defendant, as party of the first part, entered into a written agreement with the plaintiff, as the party of the second part, whereby said party of the first part agreed that upon the performance of the covenants to be kept by the plaintiff it would convey to him a tract of five acres of land situate in the county of Fresno, and certain water rights, all of which are fully described. Plaintiff was to pay therefor $625, as follows: $125 down, the receipt whereof was acknowledged; $125 on or before February 21, 1892; and a like sum annually until and including February 21, 1895, with interest payable annually on all deferred payments at 6 per cent. per annum. Plaintiff, also, by the agreement, requested the defendant to plant the tract of land to fruit trees, and to cultivate them for three years from February 21, 1891, for all of which plaintiff was to pay $375, as follows: $62.50 on execution of the agreement, the receipt whereof was acknowledged, and a like sum semiannually on the 21st days of August and February, until and including August 21, 1892. Plaintiff further agreed to pay all taxes, state and local, and all water rates and dues, assessed or due and payable on said property from and after the date of the agreement. Time was made of the essence of the contract, and performance by the plaintiff was made a condition precedent whereof depended the agreement of defendant to convey; and, if plaintiff failed to perform his covenants, the party of the first part (defendant) was to be released from all obligations to convey, and plaintiff was to forfeit all moneys paid and all rights under the agreement, and the sums so paid were to be treated, not as a penalty, but as liquidated damages. Plaintiff paid on account of the agreement the sum of $382.50, viz. two payments of $125 and interest, as provided in the agreement, and two payments of $62.50 and interest, on account of the planting and care of the trees, which sums were accepted by defendant. On the 9th day of August, 1895, plaintiff, in writing, tendered to defendant all sums due the latter on account of the agreement, and offered to comply with all the terms and conditions of his contract, demanded a deed, and tendered to defendant a deed for its execution. The tender also contained a further demand that, if defendant refused to accept the sum of $1,000, tendered, and to execute a deed, defendant return to plaintiff the sum of $382.50 paid it on account of the contract, all of which was refused by defendant. Plaintiff has never been in possession of the property, or any part thereof.

The complaint contains two counts. The foregoing facts are pleaded in the first count. By the second count the plaintiff seeks a recovery as for money had and received. By the first count, which seems to have been framed upon some theory of equitable relief, the averments of the plaintiff amount to this, and to no more: That he entered into a contract for the purchase of land; that he made certain payments according to his covenants; that he defaulted in later payments; that 3½ years after his first default, and more than 6 months after default in the time of final payment, he made a tender to defendant of the full amount due under the contract, which tender was refused; that by the express declaration of the parties time was made essential in the contract, and that payment of the moneys upon time was a condition precedent to the right to a conveyance; that, for failure to pay upon time, defendant, by the terms of the agreement, is released from all obligation to convey, and the moneys paid are forfeited as liquidated damages; yet, notwithstanding these covenants, by a tender made and refused long after plaintiff's default, defendant is itself in some way placed in default, and plaintiff may recover his money. This, moreover, without the slightest averment or the shadowiest proof in excuse of plaintiff's breach of contract. The case stands, then, upon this proposition: that under a contract for the sale of realty, where time is of the essence, a vendee, after breach of covenant to pay, performance of which is made a condition precedent to his right to a conveyance, may, without excusing his default, by a tender of the amount due, acquire some legal or equitable right which warrants his recovery of the moneys he has paid. Respondent insists that his position finds abundant support in the line of cases beginning with Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 Pac. 749. The trial judge evidently entertained the same view. If this be the law, it is important that it be so declared without equivocation. If it be not, then it is equally important that the misunderstanding and doubts of the profession should be promptly removed. Land is one of the very highest forms of property. Contracts for its sale are required to be solemnly evidenced by signed writings. The value of such sales amounts to untold millions of dollars annually. It becomes a matter of the utmost consequence, then, that the reciprocal rights and duties of vendors and vendees under the conditions and covenants usually found in such contracts—conditions and covenants in such general use that their employment may be said to be universal—should be clearly defined and understood. It is in this view alone that this case becomes important, for the amount involved is only about $380. But the doubts which seem to exist concerning legal and equitable rights under such contracts demand for their removal a somewhat extended examination of the subject.

It may be as well at the outset to quote the code provisions bearing upon the question. Their consideration will arise as the discussion proceeds. Civ. Code, § 3306: "The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to convey an estate in real property is deemed to be the price paid, and the expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon; but adding thereto in case of bad faith the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed at the time of the breach, and the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land." Id. § 3307: "The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to purchase an estate in real property is deemed to be the excess, if any, of the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract over the value of the property to him." Id. § 1670: "Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section." Id. § 1671: "The parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage." Id. § 3384: "Except as otherwise provided in this article, the specific performance of an obligation may be compelled." Id. § 3387: "It is to be presumed that the breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation, and that the breach of an agreement to transfer personal property can be thus relieved." Id. § 3389: "A contract, otherwise proper to be specifically enforced, may be thus enforced, though a penalty is imposed or the damages are liquidated for its breach, and the party in default is willing to pay the same."

Of any contract for the sale of land there may be a breach, either by the vendee refusing to pay, or by the vendor refusing to convey. Actions at law for the breach of contracts are as old as the law itself. As the common law long antedated the system of equity jurisprudence, there was a time when the only recovery available to the injured party was a recovery in damages,—money, for money is the only recompense which the law affords for a private injury. The establishment of equity jurisprudence afforded a different redress, one unknown to the law. Acting upon the wrongdoer, it forced him specifically to perform his contract. This, however, but increased the suitor's remedies, and left it optional with him in proper cases either to rest upon his legal action for damages, or to seek in equity the relief of compulsory performance. Even so, however, there still were, and there must always be, breaches of such contracts for which equity is powerless to afford redress. Thus, if a vendor contracts to convey land to which he has no title, equity cannot compel him to obtain title, and the vendee must of necessity be limited to his action at law. If there were not such an action, and a rule and measure of damage under it, he would be remediless. Again, it is to be remembered that equity, designed but to supplement the deficiencies of the law, will withhold its aid where the law affords full redress. For both these classes of cases, then,—that is to say, for those where the law is sufficient, and for those where equity is powerless to aid,—the injured party must seek legal redress.

The two sections of the Code first above quoted deal with the legal redress to which the party is entitled, either at his option or from the compulsion of circumstances. It is true that under our system the court of law and the court of equity are merged into one, and that a party is awarded such legal or equitable redress as a simple pleading of ultimate facts shows that he merits; but, nevertheless, the distinctions between the kinds of redress and the modes in which they are administered cannot and are not sought to be obliterated. It was well recognized, however, that the damages of the law afforded inadequate compensation for the breach of many contracts. In contracts for the sale of chattels, for a breach the vendee usually (though not always) received adequate compensation in money, since with the money he could buy another article identical in kind and value. In contracts for the sale of land it was otherwise. No other piece of land upon the earth could duplicate that which the purchaser desired. Pretium affectionis was an important element of the vendee's contract, and this could not be measured. A pecuniary recompense, then, failed to meet the case. On the part of the vendor, since he is selling his land for a money price, it would appear logically that an action at law for the recovery of damages would answer the requirements of his case upon a breach by the vendee, and that he should not be allowed, therefore, to resort to equity for relief. But mutuality is an essential element in contracts for which specific performance may be decreed. In other words, before a contract may be specifically enforced against the one party to it, it must be enforceable against the other; and, moreover, as was said by Lord Eldon in expressing his dissatisfaction with the relief against forfeitures granted by equity: "The result of experience is that, where a man, having contracted to sell his estate, is placed in this situation: that he cannot know whether he is to receive the price when it ought to be paid,—the very circumstance that the condition is not performed at the time stipulated may prove his ruin, notwithstanding all the court can offer as compensation." Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 59. It may frequently be of the utmost consequence to the vendor that he should have the right to enforce the contract and receive payment for his land in money, since he may much prefer the full purchase price to retaining the estate and receiving smaller monetary compensation by way of damages. And, finally, it is to be considered that during the life of such contracts the vendor foregoes his right to convey to another. He may thus lose an opportunity to make an advantageous sale, and, while this right is admittedly valuable, it is extremely difficult to put a price upon it. For these reasons the equitable action for specific performance is as available to the vendor as to the vendee. Pom. Spec. Perf. §§ 6-12.

From this difficulty in meting out adequate compensation at law arose two things: First. The parties, by convention, were allowed to agree upon the value of the injury occasioned by the breach as liquidated or stipulated damages. These damages were not only recoverable at law, but courts of equity would not and could not relieve against them. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1318; Williams v. Green, 14 Ark. 315; Westerman v. Means, 12 Pa. St. 97. Second. Equity immediately took cognizance of the violation of such contracts, and made whole the injured party by decreeing specific performance. It also did the same in the case of contracts for the sale of chattels, where the peculiar circumstances warranted it. Thus, in Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450, it is said: "The jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree specific performance does not turn at all upon the question whether the contract relates to real or personal property, but altogether upon the question whether the breach complained of can be adequately compensated in damages. If it can, the plaintiff's remedy is at law only; if not, he may go into a court of equity, which will grant full redress by compelling specific performance on the part of the defendant. Accordingly, while it is a general rule that contracts for the sale and transfer of personal property will not be specifically enforced, yet, if there are circumstances in view of which a judgment for damages would fall short of the redress which the plaintiff's situation demands, * * * equity will decree specific performance." In Krouse v. Woodward, 110 Cal. 638, 42 Pac. 1085, this court was again called upon to consider the question, and decreed the return of specific stock pledged, refusing to allow compensation in money in lieu thereof, because of the peculiar circumstances which rendered damages inadequate and equitable relief necessary. But the presumption is that damages are adequate for the breach of a contract to transfer personal property, and are inadequate, for the reasons we have been considering, for the breach of a contract to convey real property. This is the precise declaration of section 3387 of our Civil Code. It presents the sole reason why liquidated damages are countenanced under section 1671 of the Civil Code, and specific performance is decreed. In further confirmation is found section 3389 of the Civil Code, recognizing the universal rule that liquidated damages are proper in such contracts, and, notwithstanding the fact that damages may be thus stipulated, specific performance will be decreed. This declaration was to set at rest a question which somewhat vexed the courts, namely, that, as the parties made their damages certain by stipulation, uncertainty, which alone justified the interposition of equity, was removed, and therefore only redress at law remained. Whitney v. Stone, 23 Cal. 275; Bagley v. Peddie, 16 N. Y. 469; Williams v. Dakin, 22 Wend. 201; Hahn v. Society, 42 Md. 460; Chilliner v. Chilliner, 2 Ves. Sr. 528; McCaull v. Braham, 16 Fed. 37; Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 13 N. E. 419. Thus, so far as this state is concerned, the question is concluded by the Code, and a party may either rest satisfied with a recovery of stipulated damages, or, waiving them, may resort to equity for specific performance.

One other point invites brief attention before application is made of these well-settled principles to the contract and facts in the case at bar. In this, as is usual in such contracts, time is expressly declared to be essential. It was always considered essential at law, but it has sometimes been said that equity will not or does not so regard it. This, however, means no more than that, if equitable grounds in excuse of the default are shown, equity, to avoid forfeiture, will relieve the vendee, and uphold a tender made after time. It is the more willing to do this since, the price having been agreed upon, the vendor can usually be compensated for the delay by adding interest. In no other sense is the expression true. Where time is expressly made of the essence of the contract, equity will not ignore the provision, for equity follows the law, and will neither make a new contract for the parties nor violate that which they have freely and advisedly entered into. Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359; Martin v. Morgan, 87 Cal. 203, 25 Pac. 350; Woodruff v. Water Co., 87 Cal. 275, 25 Pac. 354; Vorwerk v. Nolte, 87 Cal. 236, 25 Pac. 412; Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487, 27 Pac. 429; Bennett v. Hyde, 92 Cal. 131, 28 Pac. 104. The equitable rule where time is not of the essence is succinctly stated in section 1492 of the Civil Code. Now, in such contracts, upon a breach by the vendor of the covenant to convey, what courses are open to the vendee? Obviously these: He may stand upon the contract, and sue at law for damages for the breach. Here his recovery will be governed by section 3306 of the Civil Code. Or, still standing upon his contract, he may go into equity, seeking its specific performance; or he may sue at law to recover the amount that may have been agreed upon as stipulated damages; or, finally, treating the vendor's breach as an abandonment, he may himself abandon it, when, the contract having thus come to an end, he may sue at law to recover what he has paid, in an action for money had and received, for, the contract being at an end, the vendor holds money of the vendee to which he has no right, and to repay which, therefore, the law implies his promise. Upon the other hand, after the vendee's breach of the covenant to pay, what are the vendor's rights? First, to stand upon the terms of his contract, and sue for its breach under section 3307 of the Civil Code; second, still resting upon the contract, he may remain inactive, yet retain to his own use the moneys paid by the vendee, so that it is of no moment whether or not the contract declares that such moneys shall upon the breach be forfeited as liquidated damages; third, going into equity, still upon his contract, he may seek specific performance; or, finally, if his generosity prompts him so to do, he may agree with the vendee for a mutual abandonment and rescission, in which last case, and in which last case alone, the vendee in default would be entitled to a repayment of his money. One thing more he may do, but this is rather incidental to the fact that he has made the contract than a right growing out of it. It has heretofore been said that in certain cases equity will relieve the vendee from the effect of a breach of his covenant to pay upon a day certain. When such relief is granted, it is only after a showing of fraud, mistake, surprise, or other ground of purely equitable cognizance, excusing the breach. Now, as the vendee in default may maintain such an action, so may the vendor call the defaulting vendee into a court of equity, and compel him to show why all his rights under the contract should not be held to be at an end. The vendor, when he prosecutes such an action, does so to cut off the possibility of any future claim by the vendee to equitable relief, which might embarrass or cloud his title. In some forums this is designated an action for rescission. With us it is commonly called an action to foreclose the vendee's rights. Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113; Fairchild v. Mullan, 90 Cal. 190, 27 Pac. 201.

In the foregoing statement of the rights of the vendor and vendee it has been said that the vendee, upon the breach of the vendor, is entitled to recover the moneys stipulated as liquidated damages. The foregoing discussion sets forth the reason: the inability of the law to afford adequate compensation in money, and the right consequently accorded to the contracting parties to stipulate what should be the measure and amount of the detriment caused by the default,—a reason recognized by sections 3387 and 3389 of the Civil Code. In the case of the vendor, where the vendee's breach is merely a failure to pay money, under the general principle that damages for a failure to pay money can usually be accurately measured, and compensation made by the allowance of interest, courts have inclined to disallow stipulated damages to the vendor, and have limited him to compensatory damages actually proved. But, where the breach of the vendee is of some act not thus readily to be measured, stipulated damages will be allowed the vendor. Tinglee v. Cutler, 7 Conn. 297; Leggett v. Insurance Co., 53 N. Y. 394; Decamp v. Feay, & Serg. & R. 322; Remington v. Irwin, 14 Pa. St. 143; Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494. But while equity will thus, in the cases indicated, refuse to recognize stipulated damages, and will often permit a vendee in default to excuse his breach as to the time of payment, and, after excuse made, compel the vendor to perform, it does not do so arbitrarily. The vendee must always show equitable grounds for relief before equity will interpose. Pom. Spec. Perf. § 335. When an equitable showing is not made to excuse the breach, the vendor has the right in equity, as he always has at law, to retain the moneys paid by the vendee. Therefore we have said that it matters not in such contracts that the parties have declared that the vendor may retain the moneys paid as stipulated damages. The name which the parties thus give does not alter the fact nor change the vendor's rights. If it be said that the clause for stipulated damages is void, still the vendor is entitled to retain the money. Thus, in Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 497, the supreme court of the United States, having under consideration this identical question, say: "No rule in respect to the contract is better settled than this: that the party who has advanced money or done an act in part performance of the agreement, and then stops short, and refuses to proceed to its ultimate conclusion, the other party being ready and willing to proceed and fulfill all his stipulations according to the contract, will not be permitted to recover back what has thus been advanced or done." In precise illustration of the proposition may be quoted the language of the learned Chancellor Walworth in Edgerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige, 352: "The contract, it is true, contains a general provision that, if default be made in either of the payments, Strobeck shall forfeit all the previous payments, and give up the possession of the premises. This, however, is but the legal effect of the contract without such a provision; for, if no such provision had been contained in the agreement, the defendant might have brought an action of ejectment to recover the possession of the premises, which ejectment suit this court would not have restrained, except upon the terms of paying the balance of the purchase money and the costs of suit. Nor could the payments already made pursuant to the terms of the contract have been recovered back if the vendee had refused to complete his purchase, even if this clause of forfeiture had not been inserted in the contract. The question here presented, then, is whether this clause was intended by the parties to deprive the purchaser of all legal and equitable right to the premises, or to the previous payments, if for any cause the last payment should not be made at the precise moment when it became due and payable; and, if so, whether it is not the duty of this court to relieve against such a forfeiture." Prof. Pomeroy, in his Equity Jurisprudence (section 455), thus considers the matter: "Where an ordinary contract for the sale of land is so drawn that the vendee's estate, interest, and right under it are liable to be forfeited and lost upon his failure to pay the price at the time specified, the question whether equity will relieve him ought to be a very plain and simple one; but in the face of the authorities it is impossible to be answered in any general and certain manner. I shall therefore simply state the general conclusion derived from the decided cases. It is well settled that where the parties have so stipulated as to make the time of payment of the essence of the contract, within the view of equity as well as of the law, a court of equity cannot relieve a vendee who has made default. With respect to this rule there is no doubt. The only difficulty is in determining when time has thus been made essential. It is also equally certain that when the contract is made to depend upon a condition precedent,—in other words, when no right shall vest until certain acts have been done; as, for example, until the vendee has paid certain sums at certain specified times,—then, also, a court of equity will not relieve the vendee against the forfeiture incurred by a breach of such condition precedent."

It has been said that after the vendee's breach the vendor may agree to a mutual abandonment and rescission, in which last instance, and in which alone, the vendee in default would be entitled to a repayment of his money. Such was the precise condition of affairs pleaded, and not denied, in Drew v. Pedlar, where it is said: "Both the complaint and answer admitted that the agreement had been rescinded and annulled by the parties, and, as the judgment on the pleadings partly rests upon this fact, it is conclusive evidence of the fact." And again: "From the time the defendants elected to rescind the contract, or to consider and treat it as rescinded, it was their duty to refund the money they had received under the contract, and no demand before suit was necessary." Such, indeed, is the law, and, if Drew v. Pedlar be confined to cases in the condition thus represented,—that is to say, to cases where the vendor has rescinded after vendee's breach,—then no misunderstanding need arise, and no confusion will result. What is there said as to the covenant for liquidated damages being void is, as we have seen, of no consequence in contracts such as that and the one at bar, where the liquidated damages are expressed as the moneys paid by the vendee; for in all such cases, as has been shown, the vendor is entitled to retain these moneys, whether designated as liquidated damages or not. Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572, 30 Pac. 774, affords a typical instance of such rescission by the vendor. There the vendee was in default, but the vendor elected to rescind, and, notwithstanding the default, refunded to the real-estate agent the moneys that had been paid by the vendee under the contract. The action was against the real-estate agent, and it was correctly decided—and, indeed, over the decision there could be no question—that in such a case the vendee is entitled to recover his money. But while it is essentially true that in case of a rescission the vendee may demand that he be restored to his original condition, it does not follow that a vendor who refuses to convey after such breach by the vendee thereby rescinds. To the contrary, in refusing to convey after the vendee's default he is not treating the contract as at an end, but is expressly standing upon it, and basing his rights upon its terms, covenants, and conditions. The misleading feature in Drew v. Pedlar comes from the long statement of facts, from which it appears that all the plaintiff vendee did was to make tender long after his default, which tender the vendor refused to accept. But the vendee likewise pleaded a mutual abandonment and rescission, and, as appears from the opinion, the pleading as to these matters was not denied. It would be to the last degree unjust and inequitable to allow a vendee, after his default under such a contract, to put the vendor in default by a mere tender. The practical effect of such a rule would be that a vendee, without risk, could speculate indefinitely in the land of the unfortunate vendor. The vendee would enter into a contract in which time would be declared of the essence, and stipulate under condition precedent, as in this case, to make payment at a certain time. Failing to make payment, he would, three months, six months, one year, or, as in this case, over three years, after the date of the failure, make an offer to perform, and, if the land had risen in value, according to the theory of respondent here, could compel performance; but in every case he could recover the moneys paid. Lord Loughborough, in Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Brown, Ch. 469, well says: "There is nothing of more importance than that the ordinary contracts between man and man, which are so necessary in their intercourse with each other, should be certain and fixed, and that it should certainly be known when a man is bound and when he is not. There is a difficulty to comprehend how the essentials of a contract should be different in equity and at law. It is one thing to say that time is so essential that in no case in which the day has been by any means suffered to lapse the court would relieve against it, and decree performance. The conduct of the parties, inevitable accident, etc., might induce the court to relieve. But it is a different thing to say that the appointment of a day is to have no effect at all, and that it is not in the power of the parties to contract that, if the agreement is not executed at a particular time, they shall be at liberty to rescind it. * * * I want a case to prove that, where nothing has been done by the parties, this court will hold, in a contract of buying and selling, a rule that the time is not an essential part of the contract. Here no step had been taken from the day of the sale for six months after the expiration of the time at which the contract was to be completed. If a given default will not do, what length of time will do? An equity arising out of one's own neglect! It is a singular head of equity." In Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 102, 30 Pac. 1106, this court, having under consideration Drew v. Pedlar, said: "That case does not go to the extent of holding that a vendee can elect to consider the contract at an end, and recover what he has paid, when the vendor has not abandoned the contract." In Merrill v. Mer- rill, 103 Cal. 287, 35 Pac. 768, and 37 Pac. 592, Drew v. Pedlar was again under review, and it is said: "Nor do I think it was held in any of the cases cited that a rescission was effected simply by the act of a vendor in claiming a forfeiture. In some of the cases the contract provided that the vendor might rescind upon default of the vendee. In such cases the rescission is by consent of the parties. In others it seems to be held that when the vendor refuses further performance, and claims the damages according to the contract, he abandons the contract, and thereupon the vendee may also abandon it, and reclaim his money. Whether the conclusion be correct or not is not a question here. Unless the rescission is by consent, it is difficult to understand how it has been brought about; for, as respondent justly says, it is, in effect, enacted in section 1691 of the Civil Code that rescission cannot be otherwise effected without a compliance with that section. The idea must be that the abandonment of the contract by the vendor is equivalent to a claim of rescission on his part which may be acquiesced in by the vendee. In Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 24 Pac. 280, it was simply held that the vendor was also in default, in that he did not tender a deed on the very day it was due on the contract. Both being in default, either could treat the contract as rescinded. It was not there held that when a vendor refuses to complete performance because of a breach on the part of the vendee, and claims damages as stipulated in the contract, he thereby rescinds or consents to a rescission. It has been said in several cases that this doctrine was announced in Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 449, 25 Pac. 749. Perhaps it does so hold, but such conclusion seems to be based in that case partly upon the pleadings in which both parties recognize the fact of a rescission; in other words, it was a rescission by mutual consent."

In the case at bar the payment of the final amount under the contract, at the time and in the manner agreed upon, was a condition precedent to the right of the vendee to demand a conveyance. Upon his failure to make payment the vendee committed a breach, and no affirmative act upon the part of the vendor was necessary to bring about this result. Months after, and without any equitable showing to relieve the default, the vendee makes tender, and because of its refusal claims the right of recovery. But the vendor, in refusing to accept the tender and to repay the money, is neither violating his contract nor rescinding it, nor treating it as at an end. He is standing squarely upon its terms. The vendee is within the rule declared by Pomeroy, and above quoted. The contract is made to depend upon a condition precedent. By its terms no right is to vest in the vendee until certain acts of payment have been done by him, and a court of equity no more than a court at law will relieve a vendee, under such circumstances, from the penalties arising from the breach of such condition, in the absence of an equitable showing to excuse his default. None is here even attempted to be made. It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded, and it is ordered accordingly.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; TEMPLE, J.

HARRISON, J. I concur in reversing the judgment and order appealed from upon the following grounds:

The plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written agreement February 21, 1891, whereby the defendant agreed that "in consideration of, subject to, and upon the full and due performance of the covenants and agreements on the part of the party of the second part hereinbefore contained," it would convey to the plaintiff a certain tract of land; and whereby the plaintiff, in consideration of said agreement, agreed to pay to the defendant the sum of $625, as follows: $125 upon the execution and delivery of the agreement, $125 on or before the 21st day of February, 1892, and $125 on or before the 21st day of each succeeding February, the last of said payments to be made on or before the 21st day of February, 1895, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., payable annually on the 21st day of February of each year on each and all deferred payments. The agreement also contained the following provisions: "It is expressly understood and agreed between the parties hereto that in all matters and things hereunder to be done, and all payments hereunder to be made, time is and shall be of the very essence of this agreement. The due performance of all covenants and agreements on the part of the party of the second part is a condition precedent, whereon depends the performance of the agreements on the part of the party of the first part. In the event of a failure of the party of the second part to comply with the covenants and agreements, or any thereof, on his part entered into, the party of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or in equity to transfer and convey said properties, or any thereof, and the said party of the second part shall forfeit all rights under this agreement, and all rights to any and all moneys which he shall theretofore have paid hereunder, as liquidated damages for such default, and not as a penalty." Other provisions, not necessary to be considered herein, are also found in the agreement. At the execution of the instrument the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum of $125 therein provided for, and on February 21, 1892, paid the further sum of $125, together with $7.50 for interest. No other installment of the purchase price of the land, or interest thereon, was paid. The plaintiff did not enter into possession of the land. August 9, 1895, the plaintiff tendered to the defendant the full amount then unpaid upon the said agreement, and demanded a conveyance of the land, tendering at the same time a deed for execution proper in form. The defendant refused to make the deed, and thereupon the plaintiff brought the present action to recover the money which he had paid to the defendant under the provisions of the contract. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff as prayed for in his complaint, from which the defendant has appealed.

Under the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant neither could maintain an action thereon against the other without having performed all of the conditions previously to be performed by himself. The plaintiff could not maintain an action for a conveyance of the land until he had paid or tendered the money which he was to pay therefor. By the terms of the agreement he agreed to pay certain installments of the purchase price at designated times, and although the defendant could have brought an action for each of these installments except the last, at its maturity, without tendering a conveyance, yet, if it failed to bring such action until after the maturity of the last installment, it could not maintain an action therefor without a previous tender of the conveyance. McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 455, 31 Pac. 558. Each of the parties to the contract had the right to compel the other to comply with its terms, and any action of this nature would be an action upon the contract, and to enforce it according to its terms. A contract for the purchase and sale of real estate does not differ from any other contract so far as the rights of the parties under its terms are affected. Parties have the right to make their contracts in such form and with such terms as they desire, and it is the function of courts to construe and enforce them as they have been made by the parties. Each has the right to the enforcement of the obligations of the other, and neither can free himself from his obligation against the will of the other, so long as the contract remains in force. Whether the action be to enforce the contract or to recover damages for its breach, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff in such action to show a performance on his part of all the acts required to be performed by him before he can call upon the other to comply with his part of the agreement, or to respond in damages for a failure so to do. Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280.

There have been many cases before this court involving the rights of parties to agreements for the sale and purchase of real estate, in which it has been held that after the parties have rescinded the agreement, or mutually agreed to abandon it, the vendee may recover the money which he had paid in part performance of his contract (Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 Pac. 749; Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572, 30 Pac. 774; Shively v. Water Co., 99 Cal. 259, 33 Pac. 848); but it has never been held that while the contract was insisted upon by the vendor, and he had done no act by which it might be contended that he had abandoned the contract, or was

In any respect in default, the vendee could recover the money paid by him in part performance of the contract. On the contrary, it has been held that the vendee, who was himself in default in the payment of a portion of the money, could not, against the will of the vendor, repudiate the contract, and recover the portion already paid. Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 102, 30 Pac. 1106; Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335, 32 Pac. 320; Garberino v. Roberts, 109 Cal. 125, 41 Pac. 857. In the present case the parties have made their agreement in clear and definite terms. The plaintiff agreed with the defendant that he would pay to it certain sums of money at certain times, and the agreement of the defendant is equally explicit and clear that in consideration of the full and due performance of the agreements on the part of the plaintiff it would execute to him a conveyance of the land. That there might be no misunderstanding of these respective obligations, they further declared that it was expressly understood and agreed between them that in all matters and things to be done, and all payments to be made, by virtue of the contract, "time shall be of the very essence of this agreement"; and, further, that the due performance of all covenants and agreements on the part of the plaintiff was a condition precedent to the obligation of the defendant to perform its agreement. The plaintiff does not claim that he performed his covenants and agreements according to the terms of the contract, but by express allegation shows that he did not do so; nor does he offer any excuse for their nonperformance. Neither does he allege nor contend that the defendant has violated any of the obligations assumed by it under the contract. By the terms of the agreement the defendant was not required to make the conveyance except upon the full payment of the purchase price by the 21st of February, 1895, and it is not alleged in the complaint that such purchase price was then paid, or that it was tendered until many months thereafter. The plaintiff could not maintain an action against the defendant to recover the money paid by him, unless there had been a breach of the contract by the defendant; and the defendant was not guilty of a breach of its obligation by failing to execute the conveyance, when the plaintiff was himself in default, or by refusing to comply with the demand of the plaintiff made many months after he had lost his right to the enforcement of the contract. Section 1490, Civ. Code, provides: "Where an obligation fixes a time for its performance, an offer of performance must be made at that time, within reasonable hours, and not before nor afterwards." The time for the performance of the obligation by the plaintiff was fixed by the contract, and under the provisions of this section he was required to perform his contract at that time, and not before or afterwards. As the contract also declared that time was of the essence of the obligation, the provisions of section 1492, Civ. Code, are inapplicable, and the offer of performance subsequent to the time fixed by the contract was unavailing.

The provision that in case of default by the plaintiff to comply with his agreement he should forfeit his right to whatever moneys he might theretofore have paid, and that the defendant should be released from all obligation to convey the property, was but a declaration in express terms of what would have been the legal rights of the parties without such provision. The plaintiff had agreed to pay the money to the defendant as a condition precedent to his right to demand a conveyance of the land, and as the consideration for the defendant's agreement to make the conveyance, and he could not, by his mere default, become entitled to repossess himself of the money which he had paid under this express agreement. Whether the money thus paid was styled by the parties as penalty, or forfeiture, or liquidated damages, is immaterial. This provision was not an executory agreement for "damage to be paid or compensation to be made for the breach of an obligation," for which provision is made in section 1670, Civ. Code, but the money therein referred to was money that had been paid by the plaintiff in discharge of an obligation which he had assumed, and the right of the defendant to receive and retain it was not impaired by the terms in which it was styled in the agreement.

HAMILTON v. BELL et al. (Sac. 432.)

ATTACHMENT—REDELIVERY BOND—NONSUIT—RELEASE OF SURETIES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 553, provides that in attachment, if the defendant recover judgment, any undertaking received in the action and all property attached must be delivered to the defendant and "the order of attachment shall be discharged." Section 554 prescribes the proceeding to be taken to release attached property by giving a bond that "in case the plaintiff recover judgment in the action" the property shall be redelivered, or the value thereof paid, to the proper officer. Held, that a nonsuit discharges the sureties on such bond, notwithstanding the judgment of nonsuit is reversed on appeal and plaintiff finally recovers "judgment in the action" on a retrial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action by George W. Hamilton against M. C. Bell and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

John M. Fulweiler, for appellants. Jo Hamilton and G. W. Hamilton, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. The question for decision arises out of the following facts: In May, 1891, the Auburn Opera House & Pavilion Association brought suit against George M. Hill to recover the sum of $1,000, claimed to be due upon contract, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued therein under which money and other property were attached. On September 22, 1891, on the application of the defendant in said action, the court fixed the amount of the bond or undertaking for the redelivery of the attached property at $1,500, and the defendants in this action became the sureties on such bond, and the attached property was released and delivered to the defendant. In November, 1891, the cause came on for trial, and at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence the court granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit. From that judgment and an order denying a new trial the plaintiff appealed, and this court on March 9, 1893, reversed said judgment and order. 32 Pac. 587. On January 9, 1895, said cause was again tried, and the plaintiff had judgment for the full amount of its claim and interest. Thereafter, in September, 1895, execution was issued thereon, and was returned wholly unsatisfied, and on November 25, 1895, said Auburn Opera House & Pavilion Association assigned to George W. Hamilton, the plaintiff in this action, its said judgment and said redelivery bond, and said Hamilton, after due demand for the delivery of said property or payment of its value, brought this action against the sureties on said bond, and obtained judgment against them, and this appeal is from that judgment and an order denying a new trial.

Appellants contend that the judgment of nonsuit entered against the plaintiff in the action in which the attachment was issued operated to discharge them from all liability upon said bond which was given to release the property attached in that case. They base this contention upon section 553 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "If the defendant recover judgment against the plaintiff, any undertaking received in the action, all the proceeds of sales and moneys collected by the sheriff, and all the property attached remaining in the sheriff's hands, must be delivered to the defendant or his agent. The order of attachment shall be discharged and the property released therefrom." Section 554, Code Civ. Proc., prescribes the proceedings to be taken to release property seized under the writ from the operation of the attachment, which is accomplished by giving the undertaking prescribed in section 555, Id., in an amount fixed by the court, conditioned "to the effect, that in case the plaintiff recover judgment in the action, defendant will, on demand, re-deliver the attached property so released to the proper officer, to be applied to the payment of the judgment, or, in default thereof, that the defendant and sureties will, on demand, pay to the plaintiff the full value of the property released." Respondent's contention is, in effect, that the judgment of nonsuit having been reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, and having obtained a judgment upon such new trial, it was a judgment recovered "in the action" in which the undertaking was given, and that therefore the defendants are liable upon the undertaking. But, while it is true that the judgment rendered upon the second trial was rendered in the same action, it does not follow that the liability of the sureties upon said undertaking continued until the second judgment was rendered. Indeed, it is quite clear that it did not. In Loveland v. Mining Co., 76 Cal. 562, 18 Pac. 682, it was held that, "an attachment being merely a creature of statute, its existence and operation in any case can continue no longer than the statute provides it may"; and it therefore devolves upon the respondent here to point out some provision of the statute, sustaining the existence of the attachment after judgment against the plaintiff, which was not complied with. In Loveland v. Mining Co., supra, an attachment in an action in justice's court was levied upon stock owned by the defendant in a corporation. Upon the trial judgment was rendered against the plaintiff, and he appealed to the superior court, where he recovered judgment. After the appeal was taken, and before judgment, the defendant sold the stock to a third party, and it was duly transferred on the books of the corporation. After judgment in superior court execution was issued and levied upon the shares which had been attached, and they were sold. This court held that the judgment against the plaintiff in justice's court dissolved the attachment, and that the defendant had legal right to sell his stock. The fact that in the case at bar the appellants gave an undertaking for the redelivery of the property to the sheriff in case the opera house association should recover judgment against the defendant in that action, or would pay the value of the property so released, does not affect the question. The dissolution of the attachment by the judgment of nonsuit discharged the obligation of the sureties upon the bond. Drake, Attachm. §§ 341b-341d, and cases there cited. In Gass v. Williams, 46 Ind. 253, it was held that "where an attachment was dissolved all the proceedings in attachment are quashed and become of no effect, and a delivery bond in such case falls with the writ on which it is based." The conditions of the bond in that case were the same as in this. The supreme court of the United States, in Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 403, held that property once levied on remains in the custody of the law, and is not liable to be taken under another execution in the hands of a different officer, though it has been delivered into the possession of the claimant on his giving bond and security that he will deliver it to the officer if it shall be found subject to the execution. See, also, Drake, Attachm. § 331, and cases there cited. If the attached property had remained in the hands of the sheriff it is perfectly clear that upon judgment being rendered against the plaintiff it would have been the duty of that officer to surrender the property to the defendant; and it is equally clear that in such case he was bound by the provisions of section 553, Code Civ. Proc., to deliver to the defendant the "undertaking received in the action" for the redelivery of the attached property. The Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. intervened in the action, having served process of garnishment upon appellants, and Crowell and Safford also intervened, as assignees of a part of plaintiff's demand; but, in view of our conclusion that appellants are not liable upon said undertaking, questions made in regard to said interveners need not be noticed. We advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

BERNHEIM et al. v. CERF. (S. F. 742.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1898.)

JUDGMENT—HOW CORRECTED—REMEDY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that on application and notice the court may in furtherance of justice and on proper terms relieve a party from a judgment or other proceeding taken through inadvertence, a decree of foreclosure after sale is properly set aside where an answer had been inadvertently stricken because not verified, when in fact the complaint itself was falsely assumed to be verified.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Action by Carl Bernheim and another against M. Cerf. From an order in plaintiffs' favor vacating a decree, reinstating an answer, and restoring the cause to the calendar, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Burt, for appellant. Spalsbury & Burke, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiffs brought their action to foreclose a mortgage upon realty executed to them by the defendant, Cerf. The complaint was unverified. The defendant filed an unverified answer. At the trial defendant did not appear. Plaintiffs' attorneys moved the court to strike the answer from the files for lack of verification, upon the somewhat negligent assumption that the complaint was a verified pleading. The motion was inadvertently granted by the court. A decree for plaintiffs was given upon May 26, 1896. The property was sold upon June 24, 1896, and was bought by plaintiffs. After this the discovery was made that the answer had been improperly stricken from the files, and upon July 6, 1896, plaintiffs moved the court to vacate the judgment, reinstate the answer, and restore the cause to the calendar for trial. The motion was granted, and Cerf appeals. His contention is that, as plaintiffs were present at the trial and induced the error, their remedy was not under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., but by motion for a new trial. In this, however, he is mistaken. The course pursued by respondents was the appropriate one. "Courts of equity are ever ready to relieve from sales made upon their decrees where there has been irregularity in the proceedings, * * * provided application be made to them in the suits in which such decrees are entered, within a reasonable time, and the relief sought will not operate to the prejudice of the just rights of others." Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc., is in recognition of this equitable principle. Its aid may be invoked by one in whose favor the judgment is rendered, even though he was present at the trial. Brackett v. Banegas, 99 Cal. 623, 34 Pac. 344. In this case the injury worked by the inadvertent order of the court striking out defendant's answer is apparent. The application for relief was timely made. Its allowance did not prejudice any of defendant's just rights. The order appealed from is affirmed.

TARKE v. BINGHAM et al. (Sac. 465.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1898.)

REFORMATION OF MORTGAGE—MISTAKE—DISCOVERY—DILIGENCE—LIMITATIONS.

1. Where a note payable in three years was, through a clerical error, set out in the mortgage given to secure it as payable in one year, the mortgage may be reformed to correspond to the note.

2. That the holder of a mortgage, which, by mistake, set out an incorrect copy of the note it was given to secure, had possession of the mortgage, and therefore had opportunity to discover the mistake, does not import such lack of diligence as would bar an action for reformation in three years from its date, instead of within three years from the discovery of the mistake, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county.

Action by Louis Tarke against William J. Bingham and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

M. Shepardson and E. A. Bridgeford, for appellants. M. E. Sanborn, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was to re-form, and, as reformed, to foreclose, a mortgage upon real estate. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The note to secure which the mortgage was given was a note payable three years after date, and was signed, "James Dunne, William J. Bingham, Anne Bingham." The note described in the mortgage for which the security was given was made payable "one year after date," and was signed, "James Dunne, William J. Bingham, Anne Dunne." The complaint set forth the note and mortgage, and alleged that the copy of the promissory note set out in the mortgage was intended by all the parties to the mortgage to be a true copy of the promissory note actually made by the parties, and that the mortgage was intended to secure the payment of the promissory note so executed, but that, by a clerical error of the scrivener, the terms of the promissory note were incorrectly copied into the mortgage. Defendants do not deny any of the material allegations of the amended complaint, except that they allege that the note intended to be secured was correctly described in the mortgage, saving as to the name "Anne Dunne," which they admit was signed "Anne Bingham," as alleged in the amended complaint. The note was given for a loan of $10,000 to Bingham, which has never been repaid. The mortgage was signed in the same manner as the note and at the same time. The action was commenced more than three years after the execution of the mortgage, and by answer defendants pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations, relying upon subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon sufficient evidence, the court found that the copy of the promissory note set out in the mortgage was intended by all the parties to the mortgage to be a true copy of the promissory note actually executed by the defendants, and that the misdescription in the mortgage was a clerical misprision. There is in this finding sufficient to support the reformation upon the ground of mutual mistake.

Plaintiff's complaint failed to plead a discovery of the mistake within the three years limited by subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Advantage was taken of this by the defendants, and the statute of limitations was pleaded. As this new matter set up in the answer is, under our code system, taken as denied by the plaintiff, it became incumbent upon him to bring himself within the terms of the exception of the statute. His evidence upon this point was to the effect that he did not discover the mistake until a few days before the commencement of his action, and that up to the time of the discovery he had always thought that the mortgage contained an accurate copy of the note to secure which it was given. The court found generally that none of the allegations of defendants' answer was true, and specifically that the discovery was not made by plaintiff until within three years before the commencement of his action. We think, under the facts, that plaintiff has brought himself within the exception of the statute permitting an action for relief upon the ground of fraud or mistake to be brought within three years after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake. It is very true, as the cases relied upon by appellants declare, that it is not sufficient for the plaintiff in such an action merely to plead or prove his ignorance at one time and his discovery or knowledge at another, and that where he is required to plead it is incumbent upon him to show diligence, and that he has not failed to avail himself of avenues of information of which he had knowledge, and to follow which was a duty incumbent upon him. This is but the declaration of the equitable rule enunciated in section 19 of the Civil Code: "Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which by prosecuting such inquiry he might have learned such fact." But the converse of the proposition is equally true. Where no duty is imposed by law upon a person to make inquiry, and where, under the circumstances, "a prudent man" would not be put upon inquiry, the mere fact that means of knowledge are open to a plaintiff, and he has not availed himself of them, does not debar him from relief when thereafter he shall make actual discovery. The circumstances must be such that the inquiry becomes a duty, and the failure to make it a negligent omission. Bank v. Baker, 82 Cal. 114, 22 Pac. 1037; Prouty v. Devin, 118 Cal. 258, 50 Pac. 380. In this case, though means of information were open to the plaintiff, it does not appear that there was any duty devolving upon him to make use of them. Nothing had occurred to excite his suspicion, or to put him upon inquiry, and for these reasons, under the facts of this case, we think the finding of the court sufficient and sufficiently supported by the evidence. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

McFARLAND v. HOLCOMB et al. (S. F. 1,349.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1898.)

WORK AND LABOR—PLEADING—DEMURRER—UNCERTAINTY—ACTIONS—JOINDER—LIMITATIONS—APPEAL.

1. A complaint showing that plaintiff nursed and cared for defendant, and furnished him board and lodging, entitles plaintiff to their reasonable value, on general demurrer, though it does not aver that the services were rendered, or the board and lodging furnished, at defendant's request.

2. A complaint alleging that plaintiff nursed and cared for defendant, and furnished him board and lodging "almost continuously," between certain dates, is not demurrable as uncertain for failure to show the amounts claimed for nursing, care, and board and lodging, respectively.

3. Nor for failure to state the time when the services were rendered, or when the claim for the items thereof accrued.

4. Nor does such complaint unite different causes of action.

5. A complaint for services extending over a period of 25 years is not demurrable for uncertainty because it does not show whether any of the claim is barred by limitations.

6. The statute of limitations cannot be urged on demurrer to a complaint, unless it is specifically stated as a ground of demurrer.

7. The objection of uncertainty in a complaint must be taken by demurrer, in view of the fact that Code Civ. Proc. § 430, makes it ground of demurrer.

8. Since a motion to make a complaint more definite will not lie, no appeal can be taken from an order granting such a motion.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by Sophia McFarland against Lullie Carr Holcomb and others, executors. From an order requiring plaintiff to make the complaint more definite, and from a judgment for defendants on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

B. B. Newman, for appellant. Metcalf & Metcalf, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brought this action to establish a claim against the estate of the defendants' testator, which she had previously presented to them for allowance, and which they had rejected. In her complaint she alleges, as the basis of her claim, "that William A. Holcomb was at the time of his death indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars as a balance due to plaintiff for nursing, boarding, lodging, counseling, advising, and taking care of the said William A. Holcomb almost continuously from the 29th day of November, 1870, down to the 4th day of November, 1895, in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California." The defendants demurred to the complaint upon the grounds of want of facts and uncertainty, and, their demurrer having been sustained, the plaintiff has appealed from the judgment entered therein against her.

In support of their demurrer for want of facts to constitute a want of action, the respondents contend that, as the complaint does not aver that the services of the plaintiff were rendered at the request of their testator, it fails to state a cause of action against his estate.

Under the system of pleading at the common law, it was requisite that the declaration in an action of assumpsit upon an executed consideration should show that the consideration for the promise by the defendant was sufficient to support his promise, and it was sufficient to aver that the consideration was executed at his request; but this averment was unnecessary when the consideration as well as the promise were implied from the nature of the transaction set forth in the declaration, as in an action for goods sold and delivered to the defendant, or for money loaned to him by the plaintiff. Fisher v. Pyne, 1 Man. & G. 265, note. Under our system of pleading, where only the facts which constitute the cause of action are to be alleged, it is not requisite to aver either the consideration or the promise, when they are implied as a legal conclusion from the facts which are alleged. While counsel and advice are frequently given without any request, and may be of no benefit to the party to whom they are given, yet a complaint which shows that the plaintiff rendered services to the decedent which were received by him in person, and were presumptively at his request, and of which he has enjoyed the benefit, states facts from which the liability of the decedent therefore is presumed, and is good as against a general demurrer. In the present case the nursing of the decedent by the plaintiff, and his acceptance from her of his board and lodging during the time specified, was a consideration sufficient to support the promise for compensation therefor which is implied in law, and to render him liable therefor.

The demurrer to the complaint for uncertainty in failing to show how much is claimed for nursing, and how much for boarding and lodging, and how much for taking care of the deceased, and also in failing to show to what extent the defendants are liable on the different causes of action contained therein, should not have been sustained. It sufficiently appears from the complaint that the plaintiff's cause of action is for services rendered by her to the deceased. The nature of the services alleged to have been rendered, and the averment that they were rendered "almost continuously" between certain dates, sufficiently show that she has but a single claim therefor, and the enumeration in the complaint of the different kinds of services does not constitute a uniting of different causes of action any more than a complaint for goods sold and delivered is a union of different causes of action for each item that was sold. It does not appear from the complaint that the plaintiff makes separate claims for the different kinds of services rendered, and they are not of such a nature as presumptively to indicate that separate compensation should be made for them. If the defendants desired to ascertain the items of the claim, they could have obtained the same under the provisions of section 454, Code Civ. Proc.

The failure to state the times at which the services were rendered, or when the claim for the items thereof accrued, or the amount claimed for each kind of service, does not authorize a demurrer for uncertainty or ambiguity. Wise v. Hogan, 77 Cal. 184, 19 Pac. 278; Pleasant v. Samuels, 114 Cal. 34, 45 Pac. 998. Neither is the complaint uncertain because it cannot be determined therefrom whether any portion of the claim is barred by the statute of limitations. The statute of limitations is an affirmative defense, and, if relied upon, must be asserted by the defendant. It cannot be raised by demurrer unless it affirmatively appears upon the face of the complaint that the defense exists, and, even in that case, it must be specifically stated in the demurrer as the ground relied upon to show that no cause of action exists against the defendant from the averments in the complaint. Wise v. Williams, 72 Cal. 544, 14 Pac. 204; Pleasant v. Samuels, supra.

At the time of filing their demurrer the defendants moved the court that the plaintiff make her complaint more definite and certain. The court granted their motion, and made an order May 3, 1897, that she make her complaint more definite and certain, and that she state her cause of action for services rendered and for board and lodging separately from each other, and that she so amend her complaint within 10 days, and at the same time continued the hearing of the demurrer until the 7th of June. On this last day the court made its order sustaining the demurrer upon which the judgment appealed from was entered. In New York and in other states where the reform procedure prevails, uncertainty and ambiguity are not made grounds of demurrer to the complaint, but by a section of the Code authorizing the same the court may require the plaintiff to make his complaint more definite and certain. In this state, however, the legislature in 1877 added to section 430, Code Civ. Proc., as one of the grounds of demurrer to the complaint, "that the complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible, or uncertain," and by reason of this provision any objection to the complaint upon these grounds must be taken by demurrer. There was no authority, therefore, for the court to make the order of May 3d, and its subsequent action sustaining the demurrer must be regarded as the action upon which the judgment was entered. The plaintiff has appealed from the order of May 3d, but that order is not appealable. The judgment is reversed, and the superior court is directed to overrule the demurrer, and give to the defendants leave to answer the complaint within such time as it may deem proper.

CITY ST. IMP. CO. v. BABCOCK. (S. F. 845.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1898.)

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS—OBJECTIONS OF ABUTTING OWNERS.

St. 1891, p. 196, § 3, provides that the owners of a majority of the frontage of the property on proposed street improvement may make a written objection to the same, and that such objection "shall be a bar, for six months, to any further proceedings in relation to making said improvement." Held, that such objection not only suspends the right of the board of supervisors to make the improvement, but that, after the six months have expired, the work cannot be ordered without again passing a resolution of intention, and taking such other steps as were necessary in the first instance.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by City Street-Improvement Company against one Babcock. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Geo. D. Collins, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action upon a street assessment. The proceedings for the work covered by the assessment were taken under the street-improvement act as amended in 1891. Section 3 of the act (St. 1891, p. 196) contained the following provisions: "The owners of a majority of the frontage of the property fronting on said proposed work or improvement, where the same is for one block or more, may make a written objection to the same within ten days after the expiration of the time of the publication and posting of said notices, which objection shall be delivered to the clerk of the city council, who shall endorse thereon the date of its reception by him, and such objection, so delivered and endorsed, shall be a bar for six months to any further proceedings in relation to the doing of said work or making said improvement, unless the owners of the one-half or more of the frontage as aforesaid shall meanwhile petition for the same to be done."

In the present case the board of supervisors passed a resolution of intention to order the work February 26, 1894, and the court finds that within 10 days after the expiration of the time of the publication and posting of the notice of said resolution the owners of a majority of the frontage filed their protest and objection to the doing of said work. Without passing any other resolution of intention, the board of supervisors passed a resolution ordering the work on the 22d day of October, and the work for which the assessment was made was done in pursuance of proceedings taken by virtue of this order. The superior court held that the board had no jurisdiction to order the work, and that the assessment created no lien upon the land of the defendant, and gave judgment in his favor.
